This formula requires much less time to use, and the difference from the first one in probable and mean errors is small. The addition of more elements to the formula does not always improve it. The product (P) of the three head measurements is the foundation of the formula, for it should be remembered that the volume of an eclipsoid is proportional to the product of its three diameters. three diameters.

The Lee-Pearson formula for estimating cranial capacity from outside measurements of the head is (head length-11) \times (head breadth-11) \times (head height-11) \times 0.000337+406.01.

MODIFICATION OF THE LEE-PEARSON FORMULA

The author tested this formula, based on the results of 117 autopsies, and found it necessary to change the formula as follows: (head length-6) × (head breadth-7) × (head height-5) × 0.000337+406.01=cranial capacity in cubic centimeters.

Then Welcker's method is used to estimate the brain weight

Then Welcker's method is used to estimate the brain weight from the cranial capacity, thus:

When the cranial capacity is—
1,200 to 1,300 cu. cent. (78 to 78 cu. in.), it is multiplied by 0.91
1,300 to 1,400 cu. cent. (78 to 85 cu. in.), it is multiplied by 92

1,500 to 1,600 cu. cent. (90 to 96 cu. in.), it is multiplied by 1,600 to 1,700 cu. cent. (96 to 100 cu. in.), it is multiplied by
The reasons for subtracting 5 millimeters instead of 11 millimeters from head length, and 6 millimeters instead of 11 from head breadth, and 4 from head height instead of 11 are based upon measurements made at 117 autopsies on white males.

These changes of the Lee-Pearson formula are based upon the following table:

following table:

Length of head minus length of skull=4.9 millimeters (0.192 Breadth of head minus breadth of skull=6.2 millimeters (0.243

Height of head minus height of skull=5.3 millimeters (0.202

In the Lee-Pearson formula 11 millimeters (0.433 inches) are subtracted from each of the three head measurements, which is theoretically correct, the assumption being that the thickness of the scalp being approximately the same for each side of the head, and at the points from which the length and height are measured, whently be described. should be doubled.

But at the autopsy table, first, the head and then the skull (after turning down the scalp) are measured. The results here are much less, as shown in Table 20; that is, instead of 11 millimeters, about half of 11 should be subtracted from the outside head measurements. To show the cause of this discrepancy, the author used a little pressure in menting the thickness of the scalp directly in seven autopsy cases at the usual points for taking the three head measurements upon the living with the following results:

in taking the measurements.

The patients in the Government hospital for the insane come from all sections of the United States. As is well known, most all brain estimates are based upon general hospital populations, which are not very representative of the general population of a country, as they are mostly from the lower middle classes. In addition, they are somewhat deteriorated from disease (especially chronic cases) and other various causes. In answering lay questions the author has humorously said: "Why, I find it almost impossible to get the brains of decent people."

It is probable, therefore, that most of the formulas to estimate cranial capacity and brain weight upon the living from outside measurements of the head give results below the actual weight, especially when applied to the higher classes.

For estimating the cranial capacity from the skull circumference, instead of the diametrical product, the Lee-Pearson formula is:

mula is:

¹ A number of specialists have given various formulas to estimate cranial capacity and brain weight upon the living. Pearl, Todd, Gladstone, in addition to Blakeman, Lee, and Pearson, would be useful to consult, as indicated in literature at the end of this capacity = 7.060 × circumference - 220.98; probable Cranial error=47.72 Vn

For females: Cranial cap capacity = $5.974 \times \text{circumference} - 1,705.73$; probable error=38.78

CEREBRAL LOCALIZATION

To consider properly the subject of cerebral localization would take us far beyond the limits of this article. Still, certain things might be noted in the way of refreshing our memory. The cerebral cortex makes its first appearance in reptiles; the first appearance of the fissure of Rollando is in the carnivora.

The significance of various fissures and convolutions in the human brain has been determined mainly by the investigation of the brain in the higher animals, where the brain has same general form as in man. The fissures and convolution pattern in a certain species of small monkeys show the surface of the hemispheres to be nearly smooth. Between the brain of this monkey species, and that of man, a series of brains show a gradual increase in the number and complexity of the convolutions and fissures of similar types. Thus, the orang-outang, chimpanzee, and gorilla have much larger and more numerous fissures than the other species of apes. While the gorilla's brain approaches the human brain more than any of the other apes, it is, however, very much nearer to the apes than to man.

Those areas of the brain whose office is known embrace such functions as are considered primary, common to all animals, and necessary in some way to natural existence. There then remain the unknown regions, the superior development of which distinguishes the human brain, and which may include those functions which place man far above all other animals. The sunken or concealed surface of the brain is twice that of the exposed surface. These fissures or sulci (200 in number) between the convolutions vary much in depth; some are 25 millimeters (1 inch) or more deep, others are shallow; the average is about 10 to 12 millimeters (one-third to one-half inch).

There are considerable variations of the fissures and convolutions on the opposite sides of the same brain, as well as in different persons.

In different regions of the cortex there is much variation in size, form, and arrangement of the cells. The most striking differences are seen in the motor cortex of the frontal lobe, which has very large giant cells. has very large giant cells.

It seems to be generally held (Mingazzini) that the speech area in the third left frontal convolution is liable to be well developed in orators. Thus Gambetta's third left frontal convolution was greatly developed, though his brain was a small one. So, in the case of Professor La Borde and other orators and jurists the speech area was highly developed but is often very much reduced in deaf and dumb persons.

The author noted a case of a man in the Government hospital The author noted a case of a man in the Government hospital for the insane who continually cried out for weeks "My God." Certain brain cells or brain areas must have been exercised to great excess. There should be a histological study of such cases after death, to determine the effect on the brain. It would be a great discovery to localize the cells affected, which, with all due respect, might be called the "My God" cells or areas of the brain. All cases in which the patient keeps repeating the same words should be studied after death, with a view to cerebral localization. In men the tumor of the brain can help to show the function

In man the tumor of the brain can help to show the function of the part of brain where it is; also, if other pathological conditions destroy or affect certain parts of the brain, the functions affected or stopped indicate the office of this part of the brain.

In persons of high intelligence the whole frontal region is generally large. This was especially true of the mathematicians Wright and Oliver (see Table 12). Moreover, in genius in general it is the parietal lobe that seems to be highly developed, as in the chemist Liebig and anatomist Doellinger. So the sight on the chemist Liebig and anatomist Doellinger. So the sight center of great painters was thought to be well developed; thus Raphael's skull was greatly developed in this region. Flechsig compared the brains of distinguished men and believes that the sensory centers are not directly connected with each other, but indirectly through association areas. Injury and disease in these indirectly through association areas. Injury and disease in these areas tend to show that the function of these areas is higher intellectual activity. Thus, the frontal area, when injured, causes weakness in attention, in reflection, and in control over anger, self-appreciation, and other personal volitions and emotions. In many cases in which brains of great men have been studied there is complexity, due partly to the greater development of second and tertiary fissures, and partly to the more curved surfaces of the sulci, especially in the frontal and parietal regions, and there may be even a relationship of a particular type of mind in a special part on the brain. Also, in some great mathematicians the supramarginal convolution is particularly well developed. In skilled artisans the part of the brain connected with voluntary movements of hands and fingers has been noted in several cases.

Flechsig thinks the posterior area is concerned with experiences

Flechsig thinks the posterior area is concerned with experiences recasing thinks the posterior area is concerned with experiences founded upon visual and auditory sensations, showing especially musical development. The anterior area, being in closer connection with the body sense area, may be concerned with experiences based upon internal sensations (bodily appetites and desires), and in alterations or defective development of this part of the brain may give a physical explanation of mental or moral degeneracy. Thus, histological studies of the brains of those mentally deficient bear this idea out; here the brain shows a distinct thinning of the cortex, and the maximum focus of this change is found in the prefontal lobes (anterior association area). In idiots this area distinctly undeveloped, and in the inane the atrophy appears to be marked in proportion to the degrees of dementia.

DEMONSTRATION OF CEREBRAL LOCALIZATION

If the cerebrum in the frog be removed, but care be taken not to interfere with the optic nerves or the thalami, the frog attempts to catch files and shows other signs of initiative; it will avoid objects. But the cerebrum of the frog is very low in the scale of development compared with the other vertebrates. Thus, in the removal of the cerebrum of the pigeon, leaving the basal nuclei intent the carried and control of the cerebrum of the pigeon, leaving the basal nuclei intent the carried and control of the cerebrum of the pigeon. in the removal of the cerebrum of the pigeon, leaving the basal nuclei intact, the animal can carry on many coordinate activities; it can stand and perch without difficulty; if placed on its back, it gains its equilibrium at once; if pushed off its perch, it flies till it reaches a firm support; if disturbed on its perch, it will walk away, showing it can coordinate its leg muscles. If left undisturbed, it will occasionally open its eyes, move its head and pick its feathers. But it spends most of its time sitting quietly as though asleep. If aroused, it shows little or no excitement or fright. At De Boi-Reymond's lecture in Berlin the author saw a pigeon, whose brain had been removed, which did not pay the least attention to light flashed into its eyes, or to the sound of a pistol shot off near it; but when pushed off its perch flew around the lecture room without hitting anything until it fell to the floor exhausted. Results of experiments on rabbits, rats, and dogs are somewhat similar. Goltz's dog, without brain, showed complete loss of memory and intelligence, being a mere automaton. Such experiments show what the function of the cerebral cortex is in connection with the mentality of the animal.

The author witnessed another demonstration on a monkey (by Horseley) on the outer surface stimulation of the upper part Horseley) on the outer surface stimulation of the upper part around the fissure of Rolando, causing movements of the leg; and stimulation of the middle part, causing movements of the arm, and of the lower part, causing face and mouth movements. A lesion in the third frontal convolution on the left side is always A lesion in the third frontal convolution on the left side is always associated in man with the loss of the power of speech called motor aphasia; this part is close to the motor center for muscles of tongue and mouth, and is called speech center. In most persons (right-handed people) the speech movements are regulated from a particular part of the left hemisphere, the corresponding part of the right hemisphere remaining dormant. When this part of the brain is injured in man there is loss of voluntary worsh, the refint can not uttra words at all or week the world. speech, the patient can not utter words at all or uses the wrong words. With lesion of the posterior part of the first temporal convolution on the left side is associated word deafness. With lesion of the cortex of the hinder part of the parietal lobe (near the visual center) is associated word blindness.

After transection of spinal cord or of brain behind the fore-brain mental actions do not belong to the reactions of the nervous arcs posterior to the transection, but they do accompany the reac-tions of the nervous arcs in front and still connected with the fore brain; thus, if the spinal cord is severed, one does not have consciousness of his limbs, whose afferent nerves lie behind the point of spinal severance, but he can see them with his eyes. In the higher animals there is no consciousness in any part of the nervous system from which the fore brain has been cut off.

CONCLUSIONS AS TO THE BRAIN

These conclusions are based upon the studies of specialistic scientists, most all of whom are recognized as authorities in their

A few of these conclusions may not always be in accord, but this A few of these conclusions may not always be in accord, but this is to be expected in a subject about which comparatively little of a fundamental nature is definitely determined. Yet all general statements concerning a developing subject, which may be, so to speak, four-fifths true and one-fifth untrue (due to exceptions), are important because they indicate the trend or direction in which to look for future research.

which to look for future research.

1. From the point of view of nature the brain is an accidental extension of the spinal cord and is dependent upon the necessities of the animal in the use of the higher nervous functions. But,

2. From the human point of view the brain is all important, being the organ of mind, the highest function in man. Yet,

3. According to nature, the extreme end of the frontal lobe (though the seat of the higher mental processes) is the last to be evolved and the first to undergo dissolution in mental decadence. And, in consonance with this,

And, in consonance with this,

4. The brain in the early stages of evolution was much smaller than the spinal cord, being most subordinate, if not barely existing. But,

5. This accidental character of the brain, as a mere offshoot of the spinal cord, has its parallel in the realm of mind, the furthest development of which is said to consist in philosophical and metaphysical thinking and theories, which are likewise most com-

metaphysical thinking and theories, which are likewise most complicated (like the brain), uncertain and unstable. Briefly, 6. All intellectual activities, being a distinctive expression through the brain as the organ of the mind, are, nevertheless, absolutely dependent upon the brain. Thus, 7. In the higher animals, including man, there is no consciousness in any part of the nervous system from which the fore brain has been cut off. That is to say, 8. The power of thought is absolutely limited to the fore brain, which can exist without mind, but no mind can exist without a brain. Thus the subordination of mind in nature's realm is further suggested by the fact that. ther suggested by the fact that, unconscious organic functions endure until the end.

9. In the dying hour thought is usually the first to go, while the unconscious organic functions endure until the end.

10. The brain probably reaches its full growth between ages 15 and 20, remaining constant to about age 50, and then gradually becomes less in weight at the rate of about 1 ounce in 10 years.

11. The weight of brain, relative to body weight, is greater in the girl than in the boy, but after the age of 15 the absolute weight of brain is always greater in man than in woman.

12. In the world in general the average weight of the brain varies from 1,350 grams (47 ounces) to 1,450 grams (51 ounces). As smaller men have relatively heavier brains, so women with smaller bodies have larger brains relative to their body weight.

13. Brains under 1,250 grams (44 ounces) are abnormally small and those more than 1,550 grams (55 ounces) are abnormally large.

14. The average maximum brain weight is 1,810 grams (64 ounces) and the average minimum brain weight is 960 grams (34 ounces).

15. Between the ages of 20 and 40 the mean male brain weight 10. Between the ages of 20 and 40 the mean male brain weight is 1,360 grams (48 ounces) and the mean female brain weight is 1,230 grams (43 ounces) and the brain appears to be heaviest between ages 14 and 20. But,

16. At the age of 80 the brain has lost, on an average, 90 grams (3 ounces), except, it has been shown, that in distinguished men the senile decrease in brain weight is delayed about 10 years, as compared with the average men.

17. It has been found that the gray matter constitutes about 54 per cent, the white matter 43 per cent, and the nuclei 3 per cent of the entire cerebrum, and that the weight of the cortex is 33 per cent of the entire cerebrum, and that the weight of the cortex is 33 per cent of the total weight of the brain.

- 20. In a skull with a volume of 1,400 cubic centimeters (85 cubic inches) there is about 100 cubic centimeters (6 cubic inches) of free space outside of the brain, and after the age of 70 this space approaches 200 cubic centimeters (12 cubic inches).

21. The larger the animal, the smaller the relative size of brain, and the smaller the animal, the larger the relative size of brain.

This is generally true in man.

22. Brain weight, relative to body weight, is much greater in young animals than when they reach adulthood, which also is true of man.

23. There is a certain parallelism in animals between brain weight and intelligence, notwithstanding variations.

24. The brain weight of the gorilla, though nearest man, is only 416 grams (13 ounces), which is less than one-third of the human brain (1,400 grams=49 ounces).

25. The higher the mentality of the animal, especially man, the greater is the brain, in comparison with the rest of the cerebro-

- 26. The influence of stature on brain weight extends throughout the animal kingdom in such a way that with equal intelligence small species have a relatively superior brain weight to the large species, and to such a degree that species with very small stature can excel species of very great stature who are much superior in intelligence.
- 27. The nutrition of the brain seems greatly independent of the general nutrition of the body; thus very delicate children are often
- well developed cerebrally.

 28. The brain receives in superior animals more numerous, various, and complex sensations than in inferior animals, and also in taller animals as compared with those small in stature; and
- 29. As to the motor center, the brain controls less numerous, less various, and less complicated movements in the lower species.

 30. The surface of the brain relative to its volume is much greater in small than in large mammals.

 31. As to the relation of brain weight to intelligence in man, some mathematical specialists claim it is slight; but,

- 32. Since no human brain in a head less than 11 inches in circumference has been known to function normally, and since no brain weighing less than 32 ounces has been normal, it is evident that size and weight of brain must have very much to do with intelligence within certain limits, and it is difficult to believe that such relationship suddenly stops, for such a saltus is not in accordance with nature.

33. It seems to be generally true that those occupations which require more thinking show heavier brain weight.

34. The most advanced nations appear in general to have superior brain weight. Likewise,

35. Distinguished men, as compared with average persons, have distinctly heavier brains.

36. In 20,000 Washington school children the average head circumference of the bright was larger than in the dull for every age.

37. The great and superior Cro-Magnon race, existing 25,000 or more years ago, shows a higher cranial capacity than other races, and even higher than modern man, indicating that since that time, the human brain has been growing less in weight.

38. The complexity and depth of the convolutions of the brain, indicating area of gray matter, correspond with intelligence.

39. Naturally, skull capacity and brain weight are closely related in about a ratio of 100 to 90. This accords with the fact that the difference between skull capacity and brain volume is 10 to 16 per cent; more means atrophy, less means swelling.

40. Cranial capacity is less in races of small growth, and in the same race is proportional to size of body; but body size reaches its

40. Cranial capacity is less in races of small growth, and in the same race is proportional to size of body; but body size reaches its maximum much sooner than cranial capacity.

41. Cranial capacity may be estimated from its outside measurements almost as well as by direct methods of anthropologists, showing what mathematics can do. Likewise,

42. Brain weight of living persons may be estimated from outside measurements of the head by the following equation:

(Head length - 6) × (head breadth - 7) × (head height - 5) × 0.000337 + 406.01, which multiplied by 0.90 gives the brain weight in grams. Thus by this equation

43. Measurements of 89 Members of Congress show their average brain weight to be 1,550 grams (55 ounces), which is very much above that of men in general.

44. To determine the functions of different parts of the brain depends mainly on the investigation of animals. Thus,

45. If the frog's brain be removed, it tries to catch flies, will avoid an object and shows other signs of initiative. Likewise,

46. After the brain of the pigeon is removed it can stand on the perch easily; if placed on its back, it rights itself at once. If pushed off its perch, it may fly until exhausted. If left undisturbed, it will occasionally open its eyes, move its head, and pick its feathers, but it spends most of its time as though asleep.

47. Results of experiments on rabbits, rats, and dogs are somewhat similar to the pigeon. One dog with brain removed showed complete loss of memory.

49. While the monkey brain in size approaches the human brain more than the brain of other animals, it is, however, very much nearer to the other animals than to man.

50. Those parts of the brain whose function is known are considered primary and are common to all animals, and also necessary in some way to their existence; but

A lesion in the third left frontal convolution is always associated in man with the loss of speech, being close to the motor center for muscles of the tongue and mouth called the speech center for miscles of the tongue and mouth cancer the speech center, which has been found well developed in orators, as in Gambetta's brain, though otherwise a small brain; and 54. WHAT IS WRONG, AND WHAT SHALL WE DO ABOUT IT?

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a speech by Hon. Homer T. Bone before Delegates Seattle Unemployed Organizations.

There being no objection, the speech was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

HON. HOMER T. BONE'S PROGRAM

You have asked me to speak to you, the unemployed, on What Is Wrong and What Shall we Do About It.

The mere fact that you are here as part of the great organization of the unemployed who must depend on food furnished at public depots shows that there is a great deal wrong.

Concentration of wealth and the control of business processes are building a huge new feudal system, a heartless industrial feudalism in which the common man is the uncared-for serf. They are bringing about the destruction of free competion and the end of all independent business operations. This means the the end of all independent business operations. This means the end of hope, of individual opportunity for your children and mine; it means that periods of starvation in the midst of plenty such as we are now facing will come more and more frequently unless this concentration of wealth is brought to an abrupt stop.

PLAYTHINGS OF BIG BUSINESS

PLAYTHINGS OF BIG BUSINESS

The economic destinies and life of the Nation are in the control of a small group of men, who deflate and inflate at pleasure. This process is a deliberate one. We have all become playthings of big business. The power of these men to play with the welfare and happiness of the American people, a game designed to increase their own power and wealth, must be curbed. Unless it is curbed we will emerge from this crash—which lays the whole Nation prostrate—to find that a few men own nearly everything. Control that is now well-nigh supreme will have been transformed into absolute ownership. Nowhere is this process more apparent than in the operations of the great public-utility corporations—the Power Trust.

SAFETY OF REPUBLIC THREATENED

Continuation of this process means that the plight of the farmer, the workingman, the small business man will grow continually worse. There is vast wealth in the Nation—its natural wealth will continue to be here but a few will own it all. When that day comes it means the end of the Republic. The concentration of wealth has proceeded at such a rate that to-day 550 corporations do 80 per cent of the total volume of the Nation's business. Six per cent of the corporations hire 70 per cent of the wage workers. When these few corporations fire their workers they make no provision to feed and clothe them. The market of the farmer is destroyed. We then face what you are facing to-day.

MUST CARE FOR COMMON MAN

MUST CARE FOR COMMON MAN

When such a situation arises—and it has arisen—it is the function of government to see to it that the common man is not permitted to starve in the midst of plenty, that he is given an opportunity to work and to sell the products of his labor whether that product be of the farm or factory. But what actually has happened? While pointing out that direct aid to farmers and unemployed would demoralize these men and injure the country the reactionaries in Congress have established a pernicious system of doles for big business. The responsibility of the Government—of our Government—can not be permitted to end there. The farmer and the workingman and the small business man are entitled to as much consideration as is Wall Street.

A system of old-age pensions and unemployment insurance should be enacted. The program of farm relief including the debenture plan espoused by those Senators in Congress who actually speak for the farmer should be enacted rather than any program of so-called farm relief designed by big business. We must have farm relief for the farmer, not farm relief for the banker.

DEFLATE MENACING FORTUNES

A system of income inheritance and gift taxes should be established as a part of the public policy of the Nation—taxes that would in themselves deflate the vast superfortunes that constitute a menace to the social welfare of the Nation. This should be done not as part of a mere tax program—not merely to balance the Budget for a single year—but as a deliberate public policy. Some of these superfortunes are the result of war profiteering. War profiteering is treason. In time of war private property, as well as men, should be drafted. By taxation we can return to the Nation some of the swollen fortunes which grew out of the last war. By the draft of private property in war time in the future we can prevent what happened in the World War when to each casualty list could be appended the name of a new millionaire. lionaire.

PAY THE SOLDIERS' BONUS

The Government of the United States has promised to pay a bonus to the veterans of the Great War. It has actually said how much it will pay each man. This solemn promise to pay is part of the public debt. But the reactionaries in Congress, headed by the man in the White House, simply refuse to pay now when these men are out of work and hungry through no fault of their own. A ragged army of veterans is even now encamped in Washington, D. C., pleading with the Government to pay them their money now. This money must be paid sooner or later. But the reactionaries say: "They'll only spend it if we give it to them." That is true. They will spend the money for food, helping the farmer; for clothes, for shelter, helping the workingman and helping business. The Government should be as eager to pay its debts to poor veterans as to grant loans and give doles to big business. The Government of the United States has promised to pay a

STOP BUSINESS RACKETEERING

All forms of doles to private business grafters and racketeers should be abolished. Subsidies to financiers who get Government ships for a song and then sell watered stock in the shipping lines to those who have managed to save a few dollars; graft in the form of post-office leases; every form of dole and largesse to big business should be stopped. The present era of graft on the National Treasury is like the frenzied grafting of the French court prior to the revolution. The tremendous frenzy to balance the Budget—it is probably balanced by now—will result in validating the public securities issued by the Nation and will help creditors at the expense of debtors. This may be all very well, but what about validating the billions in securities dumped upon unfortunate people by these same big bankers who now are the principal creditors of the Nation; what about the billions in watered stocks of public utility and other companies which were sold to the people in the Coolidge-Hoover "new era." They apparently are to be left high and dry while the international bankers who defrauded our people are not only to go unwhipped of justice but are to be "taken care of." Compared with these so-called magnates of big business Al Capone is only a small-time racketeer.

ABOLISH CHILD LABOR

While you sit here considering how you shall get work and bread, thousands of children are working in the factories of America. They are in competition with you. The reactionaries in Congress and the State legislature who serve big business call this freedom. Every child, they claim, should have the freedom to work at low wages in competition with its parents or the parents of other children. We must put a stop to this sort of freedom—the freedom of corporations to exploit little children when men and women with families go hungry. Collective bargaining between capital and labor should include the major aspects of industrial conditions including the abolition of child labor by agreement as well as by law.

PUBLIC OWNERSHIP OF UTILITIES

Our laws are filled with jokers that enable private utility combines to evade taxes and mercilessly skin the consuming public. You know that the public-utility corporations of our own State pay taxes on small valuations and, because the laws permit, charge rates based on valuations several times as large. This defrauds every taxpayer as well as every consumer. But this is only the beginning of the iniquity of these utility corporations. So great has been their profit, so greedy have they been to consolidate their control over an essential of modern living which they own that they have bribed legislators, injected their propaganda into our schools, defrauded our investors, made a mockery of every law on the statute books and of every law of common decency. In Seattle and Tacoma we find the answer to all this. It is public ownership of public utilities. The right to selze our rivers, our waterfalls, and to use them first as a means of swindling people out of their savings and next as a means of forever paying profits on watered stock can be abolished only by this method.

BANKS MUST BE MADE SAFE

Many of you were not stuck by stock salesmen. You were thrifty, putting your money into a savings account. So many savings accounts are valueless to their owners because the institutions in which they were placed are either closed or bankrupt that some form of assurance of stability of banks must be given by law. The refusal of the bankers to meet the issue of unemployment by loans to cities and public bodies—their evasion of their responsibility as bankers calls for an addition to our system of public banking by which savings may be kept liquid for emergencies. The functions of postal-savings banks should be vastly widened and checking priviliges extended to postal-saving depositors.

LIQUOR AND PROSPERITY

I do not think that the mere repeal of the eighteenth amendment would guarantee lasting prosperity. The big issue is jobs, not jags. But the people have a right to vote on prohibition. If the people vote to restore liquor—if they do—then that business with all of its profits should go direct into the Public Treasury, not into the pockets of the Mellons and the Schlitz's.

END UNEMPLOYMENT FOR PROSPERITY

End unemployment and you end the depression. You help the farmer and the business man, Unemployment can be ended. There is still work to be done in this Nation. And if the bankers and industrial leaders have proven that their methods will not work then the people must elect men to the Government who will have the wit to start the wheels moving again and take such steps as are possible to see to it that they are not stopped again

TRADE RECOVERY AND RELIEF OF UNEMPLOYMENT

Mr. PITTMAN presented a letter from Robert D. Kohn, chairman executive committee, National Committee for Trade Recovery, New York City, N. Y., which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the Record, as follows:

NATIONAL COMMITTEE FOR TRADE RECOVERY,
New York City, June 6, 1932.

The Hon. Key Pittman,
The Senate, Washington, D. C.

My Dear Senator: The National Committee for Trade Recovery sponsored by the Construction League of the United States represents the prominent national organizations of the construction industry. These member societies include approximately 120,000 individuals or firms engaged in construction work normally employing at least 2,000,000 men.

We have studied the legislation now pending in the Congress with reference to public works and strongly favor the plan proposed in the bill introduced by Senators Wagner, Robinson, Pittman, Walsh, and Bulkley, and known as S. 4755.

We urge your support for this bill, knowing as we do by experience that construction work amounting to at least one billion and a half dollars would thus be made possible and would employ directly over 1,000,000 men in the course of the year. In addition, collateral industrial, farming, and related employment would be afforded to great numbers by the expenditure of this amount of money by the workers.

The allocation of the credit facilities which would be provided by this bill should, in our opinion, be guided by technical advisers—engineers and architects—who would select such projects as would afford the maximum employment of workers who need it at the earliest possible date on a balanced program of works of the greatest usefulness.

We strongly urge upon you the support of S. 4755 as being most likely to carry this desirable end into effect.

Very truly yours,

Robert D. Kohn,

Chairman Executive Committee.

INVESTIGATION OF CONTINENTAL TRADING CO. (LTD.)

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, a few days ago information was carried by the press of an adjustment by the Treasury Department of the Government's claim against Henry M. Blackmer for delinquent taxes, the facts about the matter having been brought to the attention of the department through the investigation of the Continental Trading

I have a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, telling of the settlement and of the recovery consequent upon that investigation. I ask that it be incorporated in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY,

Washington, June 8, 1932.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Receipt is acknowledged of your letter dated May 27, 1932, in which you ask to be advised as to the adjustment of the Government's claim against Henry M. Blackmer for back taxes, and that you be furnished with a statement of collections made in consequence of disclosures in the Senate investigation of taxes, and that you be furnished with a statement of collections made in consequence of disclosures in the Senate investigation of the operations of the Continental Trading Co. (Ltd.), and of inquiries induced thereby.

The disposition of the income-tax case against Henry M. Blackmer in the Board of Tax Appeals, which has been pending since May, 1928, when jeopardy assessments were made to prevent the taxpayer from withdrawing his assets from the United States, resulted in payment to the Government of $3,669,784.47. This is $1,080,000 in excess of the amount paid into the collector for the New York district as a result of the jeopardy assessments, or some $844,000 more than the total amount of funds of Mr. Blackmer in this country which the Government had succeeded in impounding. As to taxes and penalties asserted for the years 1920 to 1923, inclusive, which years included the Continental Trading Co. transactions, but also involved a number of other taxable transactions, the taxpayer in effect confessed judgment, paying the full amount maintained to be due amounting to $1,049,254.17 tax and $1,121,-530.30 in penalties and interest. It is for these years of 1920–1923 that criminal indictments are pending under which Mr. Blackmer will be prosecuted if he returns to this country.

In the cases covering 1916, 1917, and 1919 the possibility of recovery by the Government depended upon proving fraud not connected in any way with Continental Trading Co. transactions. In addition to the difficulty of proving fraud for these years, the Government was faced with the contention that even though fraud could be proved, collection of the years 1916 and 1917 was barred by the 3-year statute of limitations of the 1916 revenue act. Disposition of the cases relating to the years 1916-1919 was accomplished by a compromise under which $1,500,000 was paid against the finally asserted liability for tax, penalties, and interest of $2,626,354.22.

The total payment made by Mr. Blackmer on May 13, 1932, to dispose of the civil cases was

The total payment made by Mr. Blackmer on May 13, 1932, to dispose of the civil cases was therefore as follows:

As to the total amount of tax collections effected by the Government in consequence of the Senate committee's investigation, the letter of May 23, 1928, to which you refer, addressed to the chairman of the joint committee, states, as you will recall, that there was collected from the transferees of the Continental Trading Co. as income taxes, penalties, and interest assessed against that company for the years 1922 and 1923 the aggregate amount of $606,097.19; that letter also reports the collection from another source of additional taxes and interest in the total amount of $1.398,910.99.

The Blackmer investigation led to the investigation of a number

The Blackmer investigation led to the investigation of a number of corporations and individuals with respect to transactions having no connection with the Continental Trading Co. These investigations have resulted in the collection of additional taxes from 11 individuals in the total amount of $17,667.71.

Cases of other individuals who received assets of the Continental Trading Co. are pending before the General Counsel for the Bureau of Internal Revenue in connection with protests and briefs which have been filed. It is anticipated that decisions will be reached in these cases in the near future.

Very truly yours,

A. A. BALLANTINE, Acting Secretary of the Treasury.

TIMBER CONSERVATION

Mr. WALCOTT presented a statement submitted to the Timber Conservation Board at its meeting in Washington, D. C., June 8, 1932, by George D. Pratt, president of the American Forestry Association, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

A FOREST EMERGENCY

(Statement submitted to the Timber Conservation Board at its meeting in Washington, D. C., June 8, 1932, by George D. Pratt, president of the American Forestry Association)

The Timber Conservation Board was created by President Hoover to propose measures to aid in the stabilization of the forest industries and the ownership of forest land, and to assure the perpetuation of the country's forest resources. All the more important and long-standing economic problems involving public interests in forest conservation have been studied. Since the board began its labors, however, the general economic situation of the Nation has become so acute that, in my judgment, the board is to-day confronted with an emergency situation that it can not ignore. I refer to the gradual disintegration of forest protection that has refer to the gradual disintegration of forest protection that has already set in and that threatens to expose to incalculable destruction the very resource the board is charged with perpetuating.

We can not evade the fact that a curtailment of forest activities along all lines, both public and private, has taken place, and that, due to the depletion of public and private funds, the protection of our forest resources against fire, insects, disease, and other natural enemies has been seriously weakened. The Federal Government and the States are being forced to economize on forest protection. Owners of private lands, driven by financial conditions beyond their control, are likewise curtailing or abandoning adequate protection of their resources. We are confronted with a breakdown in our whole established system of resource protection. If the process is permitted to continue, it will lay wide open to destruction forests and other renewable resources that are the very foundation of industrial stability and public welfare. It exposes to loss not only our forest assets but virtually all the complementary values inherent in stable forest-land administration, such as forage, wild life, soil fertility, scenic beauty, water supply, and the beneficial influences of forests upon floods and erosion.

This struction has become scute in many sections of the countries of the c and erosion.

This situation has become acute in many sections of the country, particularly in the South and the Northwest. The Governors of Idaho and Montana, for example, deem the outlook for the coming summer so critical as to warrant the issuance of proclamations calling upon their citizens for voluntary service to help protect the natural resources of their States. Destruction of forests and the natural resources of their States. Destruction of forests and other renewable resources in the South during the past winter as a result of fires has been the greatest on record.

To my mind, adequate protection of our forest wealth, through this trying and dangerous period of economic chaos, is the great outstanding challenge to-day to conservation stability. As a Nation we must see our way through the present storm without throwing protection to the winds and giving fire a free run upon the bank of nature. I desire to urge with all possible emphasis that the Timber Conservation Board give this situation its earnest consideration and that it give vigorous expression to the need of incorporating adequate protection of our forests and other renewable resources as a definite and urgent project in National and State programs of reconstruction.

From a purely social standpoint the situation merits emphasis.

able resources as a definite and urgent project in National and State programs of reconstruction.

From a purely social standpoint the situation merits emphasis. The forest industries as a group are a source of employment next in importance to agriculture. Unemployment throughout the forest industries is now widespread and alarming. If the resources upon which these industries are dependent are permitted to be depleted and destroyed by a breakdown in protective systems, where shall these millions of dependents turn for a livelihood when more normal conditions of industry and trade are restored? In my opinion, American statesmanship to-day in its effort to lift our country out of its distress is failing to give proper recognition to the social and economic importance of protecting and maintaining the integrity of our forest assets during this period of forced economic readjustment.

Within recent weeks we have heard much of reconstruction programs to relieve unemployment and to start the wheels of industry. Various suggestions of public works calling for Federal appropriations and Federal loans have been proposed. Wisely and soundly, I believe, President Hoover has pointed out that such proposals, if they are really to be helpful, must distinguish between public works that are income producing or self-liquidating and public works which are nonproductive and which, therefore, and public works which are nonproductive and which, therefore, place a charge upon the taxpayer and upon the Federal Budget.

The protection of our forest resources against fire and other place a charge upon the taxpayer and upon the Federal Budget.

The protection of our forest resources against fire and other destructive agencies is, to my mind, clearly an income-producing and self-liquidating project. It should qualify under the operation of the Finance Corporation just as much as protection of our banking institutions, for in the last analysis these institutions are dependent upon the natural wealth of the communities and States which they serve. As one of his relief proposals, President Hoover suggests a broadening of the authority of the Finance Corporation so as to authorize it to loan up to $300,000,000 to States in order to finance themselves through the period of distress. I believe it would be a wise and sound policy for the States and subdivisions thereof and for private owners to borrow money through the Finance Corporation to protect their forest assets, and that it would be a wise policy for the Federal Government to loan money through the Finance Corporation for this purpose.

The possible field of activities is a large and constructive one. It would include (1) necessary protection of private and public resources against fire, insects, and disease; (2) enlarged forest planting in those regions of the country where there is now a shortage of forest supply and where expansion of forest cover for watershed influence is merited by public and industrial considerations; (3) cooperation of Federal Government, States, and private individuals in works to control soil erosion and to maintain the flow and purity of our inland waters, particularly at the headwaters of streams; and (4) an expansion of forest research along those lines that will aid protection and the stabilization of the waters of streams; and (4) an expansion of forest research along those lines that will aid protection and the stabilization of the forest-employing industries.

As an illustration of the diverse possibilities for constructive endeavor, the national forests as a 160,000,000-acre forest property may be cited. Adequate protection of these public forests from fire alone calls for the construction of several thousands of miles of forest roads and trails, hundreds of lookout towers, thousands of miles of telephone line, networks of firebreaks, etc. Adequate protection also calls for the control of tree diseases and insect pests, such as the white-pine blister rust, bark borers, and leaf miners. In addition to the direct labor involved, the equipment, supplies, and material called for would aid in creating employment in fectories on ferree and on the creating employment in fectories. ployment in factories, on farms, and on the great transportation systems. What is true of the national forests is equally true of the State and privately owned forest lands. Greater areas and less completely developed systems of protection on such lands magnify the possibilities of constructive work.

A rough estimate indicates that well over $100,000,000 could be profitably spent in the group of activities mentioned. It would be money well spent in that it would supply needed protection of basic resources, and it would furnish employment to upward of 200,000 people and relief to more than double that number of dependents. Protection of our natural resources, furthermore, is basic to our national credit at home and abroad. The project would help to stabilize land ownership and thereby afford some protection to local government against land abandonment and loss of taxes. It would aid in strengthening the foundation of agriculture by preserving the soil against erosion and property against destruction due to floods. And, above all, it would assure the preservation and enhancement of the natural capital upon which our basic industries and institutions depend and upon which future employment of labor depends.

AGRICULTURAL RELIEF

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. President, I am in receipt of a letter from a prominent farmer of Lincoln County, Minn., which I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

IVANHOE, MINN., June 3, 1932.

Mr. THOMAS D. SCHALL

DEAR SIE: There can't be any doubt to any fair-minded Senator that something must be done at this session of Congress to aid the rural districts—the Frazier bill or some other measure to aid

Lincoln County consists of only 15 townships, and in 1931 eighty-seven farmers lost their farms under foreclosure sales, and in 1932 there will be about double that amount. So it can readily be seen that in a few more years there won't be one-third of the farm homes in the hands of the farmers. Some radical action must be taken at once. Have farmed in Lincoln County since May 3, 1881, and never lived through such times before.

Yours truly,

MARTIN NELSON.

Estermed Senator: We, the officers and members of Hamlin Local, No. 103, Farmers Educational and Cooperative Union of America, desire to emphasize resolutions which have been sent to our representatives in Washington, and add the following:

One farmer in Lac qui Parle County sold a 540-pound hog on the South St. Paul livestock market. The net proceeds from the sale of this hog was $1.08 for the entire hog. One question we wish Congress to decide, In this deal who was the hog?

One veal calf on the South St. Paul market actually netted the farmer who raised the calf the sum of 2 cents.

We report above facts as proof of the unpleasant truth that the farmers of the Northwest are being robbed, and to call attention to the unavoidable results which will be the bankruptcy of the entire Northwest. In order to avert this calamity we plead for the passage of the following three bills at once:

First, the Frazier bill, to effect speedy though temporary relief. Second, the Swank-Thomas marketing bill, designed to protect the 500-pound hog. Third, the Wheeler bill, to correct the stringency in the national currency as it exists to-day.

Dear Senator: I hope that you can be depended upon to use your best efforts to defeat the present program of the financial "high binders" in putting over on the country in these trying times an entire new banking structure, as far as State banks are concerned. I doubt that you have any sympathy with this gang and that you will be found on the lines working to preserve some samplement of State rights.

and that you will be found on the lines working to preserve some semblance of State rights.

When the Federal people control the whole banking structure I am afraid the small business is going by the boards; who knows how many bank failures have been caused by the distrust engendered in the minds of the public by the great group banking interests. More power to Tom Davis, that we have at least a few men who have courage to get up and tell those financial pirates what they have done to the public and what they intend to do. It is my opinion that the present difficulties in the whole world

It is my opinion that the present difficulties in the whole world have been more or less caused by financial greed. We have it right in our own small communities, where the representatives of the big bank interests are busily hammering away on how good the great group banks are and how poor the small country banks are, and in most cases if they had to liquidate their deposits to-day I actually believe the small banks now surviving would very likely measure up dollar for dollar with the great group institution loaded up to the gills with bonds of a lot of their own affiliates. affiliates

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD and appropriately referred a letter I have just received from one of my constituents.

Senator Thomas Schall,

Washington, D. C.

Dear Senator: The Lincoln Park Board and the South Park Board of Chicago, Ill., have up to date spent several million dollars on the outer drive along the shore of Lake Michigan to take care of the congestion of motor traffic in Chicago. There is at present a gap of some four or six blocks at and around the Chicago River in this outer drive. Part of this construction work in this gap is now under contract, but owing to the bond market the two park boards have not been able to finance the completion of this work without paying excessive premiums for the bonds for finance.

work without paying excessive premiums for the bonds for financing. This work is now at a standstill.

It would take somewhere between four and six million dollars to complete this link in the outer drive and relieve the congestion especially in the loop where it is at its worst. To complete this work within this coming year would be a help to unemployment.

in Chicago, and to leave it uncompleted would be a calamity to Chicago with the world's fair next year.

The two park boards, I believe, have applied to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for a loan of money to complete this work, giving bonds of the two park boards as security. While the bond market is temporarily off and the tax situation in Chicago is in a muddle, I believe these bonds, guaranteed by taxes from these two political subdivisions, are a sound investment for the future, which will, no doubt, be bought and sold at par by the public within a reasonably short time.

I would appreciate any efforts that you can conscientiously make to see that the temporary financing of this project is included in the Reconstruction Finance Corporation activities, or by some other method of temporarily financing by Congress.

Thanking you for your kind consideration of the above, I beg to remain,

POPULAR VOTE IN PRIMARIES FOR FORMER SENATOR FRANCE

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a letter from former Senator Jonathan Bourne, jr., relating to the votes for former Senator France in the presidential preferential primaries.

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Washington, D. C., June 6, 1932.
To the Delegates and Alternates of the Republican National Convention.

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN: All must concede that confidence in government is a prerequisite for national contentment, happiness, and business efficiency.

The inclosed summary of the popular votes in the nine presidential preferential primary States in which Senator France filed, compiled up to June 3, clearly demonstrates the unpopularity of Mr. Hoover and his administration, but not necessarily of the great fundamental principles upon which the Republican Party was founded.

The theory that a President is entitled to a second nomination regardless of whether his first stewardship has been successful and beneficial to our country is fallacious, asinine, and suicidal. If in war, would we retain a commander in chief who never won a battle and whose vaporous predictions for improvement were all failures? Certainly not. The Army would mutiny and substitute another commander in chief.

If ill would we retain a dector whose diagnosis had proven en-

If ill, would we retain a doctor whose diagnosis had proven entirely wrong, whose remedies had all proven failures, with the result that the patient steadily grew worse? Certainly not.

No party subordinating the principles upon which it was founded to the personal ambition of any individual can or should succeed or hope to retain its entity.

You are burdened with a graver responsibility than any members of any previous national convention in our party's history in your selection of the party's nominees for the Presidency and Vice Presidency this month Presidency this month.

Mr. Hoover's renomination must result in his inevitable defeat and the resultant surrender to the Democratic Party of both Houses of our legislative branch as well as the administrative branch of our Government, including Federal patronage.

No party appreciating the evident unparalleled unpopularity and weakness of the candidate that it may nominate and hoping apparently for possible success through the mistakes that may be made and dissensions that may arise in the great Democratic Party can or should succeed.

The elimination by your convention of Mr. Hoover and the

The elimination by your convention of Mr. Hoover and the substitution of any other person would result in a beginning of the restoration of confidence, and hope would replace the despair now existing in the hearts of so many of the great masses of our population.

In your deliberations it is well to remember that should you renominate Mr. Hoover, notwithstanding your belief that he would be inevitably defeated in November, he would unquestionwould be inevitably defeated in November, he would unquestlonably organize the national, senatorial, and congressional committees and thereby place his blighting influence for four years longer on the political organization of our party, thus preventing its possible resurrection for a further four years and until another man be nominated as our presidential candidate, or the committees themselves demonstrate sufficient independence to wrest from a presidential nominee any opportunity whatever to name the officers or dictate the policies of the great party organizations, which supposedly go on for all time, while presidential candidates come and go.

Any person you members of the convention in your wisdom

Any person you members of the convention in your wisdom may nominate would be preferable to the renomination of Mr.

All of you must concede that Senator Joseph I. France, during the past few months, has made the best single-handed campaign in our political history. The popular verdict as set forth in the accompanying summary demonstrates he has a message appealing to the American people.

The reaction from the audiences he has addressed that he impresses them rather as a "crusader for a cause than a candidate for an office" is one of the highest tributes ever paid any public man.

In my humble opinion, should you in your deliberative and collective wisdom select Joe France as our party's standard bearer he will lead the party to success and, when elected, prove himself one of the few really great Presidents our Nation has enjoyed in our history.

Very respectfully yours,

JONATHAN BOURNE, Jr.

WAR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 11897) making appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, and for other purposes.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under Title I-Military activities and other expenses of the War Department incident thereto-Salaries, War Department, on page 2, line 20, after the designation "Judge Advocate General," to strike out "$110,929" and insert "$113.294," so as to read:

Office of the Judge Advocate General, $113,294.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, line 4, after the word "causes," to insert a comma and the words "and for necessary per diem and traveling expenses in connection therewith," so as to make the proviso read:

Provided, That not to exceed $29,122 may be used for the employment of such experts, at rates of pay to be fixed by the Secretary of War, and other employees as may be required by the Judge Advocate General of the Army for the preparation of evidence for use in behalf of the Government in claims or suits filed. in Federal courts on account of alleged patent infringements and other causes and for like services in connection with other patent matters and other causes, and for necessary per diem and traveling expenses in connection therewith, as authorized by law.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, at the end of line 4, to change the total appropriation for salaries, War Department, from $5,098,889 to $5,101,254.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Military activities, contingencies of the Army," on page 6, line 18, after the word "proper," to strike out "$8,000" and insert " and for examination of estimates of appropriations and of military activities in the field, $9,500," so as to read:

For all contingent expenses of the War Department and of the Army not otherwise provided for and embracing all branches of the military service, including the office of the Chief of Staff; for the military service, including the office of the Chief of Staff; for all emergencies and extraordinary expenses, including the employment of translators and exclusive of all other personal services in the War Department or any of its subordinate bureaus or offices in the District of Columbia, or in the Army at large, but impossible to be anticipated or classified, to be expended on the approval or authority of the Secretary of War, and for such purposes as he may deem proper, and for examination of estimates of appropriations and of military activities in the field, $9,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Welfare of enlisted men," on page 8, line 14, after the words "salaries," to insert "and travel," and in line 21, to strike out "$69,-540" and insert "$70,365," so as to read:

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 9, line 21, after the word "available," to strike out "$4,648,006" and insert "$6,281,824," so as to read:

Rental allowances, including allowances for quarters for enlisted men on duty where public quarters are not available, $6,281,824.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Pennsylvania should give the Senate an explanation of this amendment.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, most of the amendments which have already been agreed to relate to travel and are not actual increases in the appropriations. The House committee adopted a new plan, which will be found at the bottom of page 14. In a new item which they call "travel, military and civil personnel," they gathered together all of the travel items that occurred throughout the bill, including the travel items in river and harbor work, and other civilian activities. The net effect of that was to increase the apparent spending of the Nation for military purposes without there being any actual increase in that regard. The Appropriations Committee thought that that was not a wise innovation, and consequently we have entirely stricken out the provision that begins at the bottom of page 14 and have reinstated the travel items, without increasing them in the slightest, in the several provisions of the bill where they properly belong. That will account for a large number of the apparent increases on which the Senate has already acted and on which it will be asked to act. They do not represent real increases in the appropriation.

However, there is an item which has just been acted upon which does involve an increase, and that is the item beginning on page 8, line 24. The House of Representatives, by a fairly close vote, sustained the action of their Appropriations Committee in cutting from the Army 2,000 of its 12,000 commissioned officers. The Senate committee unanimously decided to reinstate those 2,000 officers, and that action causes an increase in the item of pay of the Army, which is found in the last line of page 8, but it also results in a corresponding decrease in retired pay, which is found on page 9, line 11. About $4,000,000 is added in the one place and about $3,000,000 is cut out in the other place.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The net difference, then, is about a million dollars?

Mr. REED. The net difference in these two items is about a million dollars.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. And, under the arrangement made by the Senate committee, the matter will go to conference?

Mr. REED. Yes; the matter will go to conference.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I confess that a cursory examination of the report accompanying the pending bill affords me considerable disappointment. I had supposed that we were going to be able to find some economies in this measure, and that in the Army bill and the Navy bill there would be an opportunity for a reduction of at least $100,000,000. I am amazed to find that the committee has increased the amount of the bill as it passed the other House and that the bill as reported to the Senate carries an appropriation of $389,578,513.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, the Senator from Utah surely can not mean that this bill carries a larger appropriation than as it was passed by the other House? The Senate committee effected a net reduction of $3,000,000, and the House had effected a reduction of more than $50,000,000 under the appropriations for the current year. There has been a reduction in the military expenditures of the Government by this bill of 17 per cent. I doubt if any other department of the Federal service, carrying on its full activities as this one is, can show such a reduction.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Pennsylvania a question?

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Is it correct to state that the appropriations in the bill as it passed the other House have been reduced by the Senate committee $3,007,633?

Mr. REED. That is correct, Mr. President, and the House bill was $21,000,000 under the estimates, and the estimates were about $35,000,000 under this year's spending. Since this bill was reported to the Senate day before yesterday we have passed the economy bill, which, if enacted, will effect a further reduction of nearly $11,000,000 in the pay of the Army. When one takes that into account and realizes that we are cutting about $67,000,000 out of the military activities of the Army, I think it may be said that the Army has more than stood its share. The estimates for the Army—

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to me?

Mr. REED. If the Senator will permit me to finish this statement in one paragraph, then I will yield. The estimates for the Army submitted by the Budget Bureau for this year have been cut $80,000,000 under their request. There is no question but that the Army has taken a very savage cut.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator from Pennsylvania compares the appropriations for 1932 with those contained in the pending bill to that amount?

Mr. REED. Yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. The appropriations in that bill were $445,000,000.

Mr. REED. That is right.

Mr. McKELLAR. But the Senator will recall that between $50,000,000 and $100,000,000 of those appropriations, as I remember, were for building purposes; in order to put men to work last year, enormous sums of money were spent in the erection of barracks and quarters and in other ways under the emergency arrangement.

Mr. REED. No, Mr. President, there were not "enormous sums" expended.

Mr. McKELLAR. Well, very large sums were spent; we increased the appropriation very much last year on account of the President's plan to furnish work by means of building operations.

Mr. REED. But there are many such appropriations still retained in this bill. It carries an appropriation of $54,000,000 for rivers and harbors, thirty-one and one-half million dollars for Mississippi River flood control, and all that is charged against the Army.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is true; but, at the same time, I can not understand why practically all other items in the bill were, at any rate, maintained and many of them increased, whereas a 10 per cent cut was made in the item for rivers and harbors, which keeps men at work.

It seems to me, Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me to say so, that this bill is one of the most extravagant bills that was ever brought before the Congress in the history of time. We spent before the war on the Army something like $100,000,000, and, with an expenditure of such a sum, we maintained an excellent Army, and we had nearly as many men in the Army then as at this time. Now, however, under the various operations of the War Department, we have a bill carrying the enormous sum this year of

It is said that the House brought about some reductions, and that is true; but I want to say to the Senate that there is no effort in this bill to bring about the same reductions that have already been adopted in the case of the Interior Department appropriation bill and in the case of the bill making appropriations for the Departments of State, Justice, Commerce, and Labor, which have already been passed. When we consider the restoration of the 2,000 officers who were eliminated by the House-and I think there is great doubt whether such action would really bring about economy, because if 2,000 officers, many of them young men, are retired for life at three-quarters pay, it will be an immense burden on the Government-as a matter of fact, the reduction in this bill at the most can not be said to be more than 1 per cent, even taking the committee's report; and, when the furlough plan is considered in connection with it, if that plan shall finally be adopted, the reduction will not amount to more than 4 per cent; in fact, I doubt if it will amount to much over 3 per cent; indeed, I doubt if it will amount to more than 2 per cent. It is unfair to other departments to reduce their appropriations, as has been done by the Senate and the House in bills, some of which have become laws, whereas in the Army appropriation bill the appropriation is left practically where it was last year.

Mr. President, as I stated yesterday, I am going to offer a motion at the proper time in the consideration of this bill to recommit it to the committee with instructions to bring about further reductions.

Let me refer to some of the items in this bill.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. McKELLAR. I will yield in just a moment. We are sending vast numbers of civilians to citizens' training camps; we are spending, I think, between two and three million dollars for that purpose; we are spending something like $6,000,000 for the Reserve Officers' Training Corps. Both these activities may be very excellent in times when the Government has plenty with which to operate, but at a time when there are eight or ten million people out of employment in this country the Government ought not to be giving civilians instruction in citizens' training camps, even if the work is of some value to the country. I do not think it ought to be contributing these sums to that purpose at this time. I think they ought to be cut out. We can easily effect a 10 per cent reduction, if we go about it in a proper way, without hurting the Army at all.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. I understood the Senator from Pennsylvania to say that the House reduced the Army appropriations below the Budget estimate by about $20,000,000.

Mr. REED. No. Mr. President; by about $21,000,000.

Mr. BORAH. And the Senate added to that $3,000,000? Mr. REED. No; the Senate reduced it $3,000,000 further.

Mr. BORAH. That is, added to the reduction?

Mr. REED. It added to the reduction.

Mr. McKELLAR. While ostensibly it reduces the appropriation $3,000,000, what becomes of the pay of the 2,000 officers who are restored? They have got to be accounted for in some way in considering the $3,000,000 reduction.

Mr. REED. No; Mr. President, that is taken care of bythe increase in the pay of the Army in line 1, page 9.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, while the Senator from Pennsylvania is on the floor, I should like to ask him a question purely for information.

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield to the Senator for that purpose; indeed, I yield the floor.

Mr. BORAH. On page 3, there is an appropriation for the office of the Chief of Finance. What is the office of Chief of Finance of the Army?

Mr. REED. That is the office that has charge of the Army accounting; practically it is the auditing department of the Army.

Mr. BORAH. Does the work of that office necessitate an appropriation of $382,720?

Mr. REED. Yes.

Mr. BORAH. What does the appropriation for that office include-merely pay of officials and items of that kind?

Mr. REED. No; it covers the entire process of auditing that goes with the expenditure of all the appropriations contained in the bill. Compared with the size of the appropriation administered the amount expended for the purpose is about one-tenth of 1 per cent.

Mr. BORAH. It does seem to me extraordinary, though perhaps I speak with a lack of information, that it would take $382,720 to run the auditing department of the Army. I do not know what the items are which would constitute that $382,000 in which I am interested.

Mr. REED. I will try to get the individual items if the Senator desires.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator can give them in a general way; I do not care to go into details; but it would seem that the entire amount expended by the Army scarcely calls for a Finance Department which will expend $382,720 in administering it.

Mr. REED. I will try to get the Senator the breakdown of that item.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, the Senator from Tennessee speaks about moving to recommit the bill with the idea of offering his usual 10 per cent reduction resolution. I desire to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that this bill comes here with a reduction of 17 per cent to begin with.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, that is through the cutting down of the extraordinary appropriations that were made last year for the purpose of furnishing work to our unemployed citizens. It did not seem to furnish much work. It was not very effective, and so that is why it has been cut down by the House. But so far as the military activities of the Government are concerned, virtually they have not been cut down a cent. They have been increased rather than cut down.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I think it is conceded that we have all been so busy in hurrying along, trying to conform to the desires of our leaders and our President to enact the necessary legislation that would balance the Budget, and such things as that, that we have not all had time to give consideration to the details of some of these appropriation bills.

We are confronted now with the statement of the Senator in charge of the bill that he expects to pass the bill in a couple of hours, and it may be necessary that we lay aside everything and let that happen; but in this hour of emergency, under existing conditions, when all of us are trying to reduce expenses, I am wondering why some of these things, good though they may be-and I think some of them have a great deal of good in them-should not be cut out entirely.

We have officers' training camps, civilian training camps, for the purpose of educating the young men of the country along lines laid down by the military department of our Government. I hold in my hand a training manual. It is an official document, as I understand. It has 156 pages in it, showing how the young men of the country are trained, how and what they are taught. There is a lot of good in it, I think. There are a great many good things in it; but intermingled with them are some things for the teaching of which public funds never ought to be appropriated under any circumstances.

We may disagree, for instance, as honest men do, about very many principles of government. We may disagree as to whether public ownership of public utilities is the right thing. There is ample room for honest men on each side of the question. There is a fair judicial place for patriotic men and women on either side of, for instance, the public ownership of public utilities, whether a municipality should own its own electric-light plant or its street-car system or its waterworks; but I take it that it is no business of the Army to try to teach our people where they should stand on those controverted questions. Yet we are appropriating money out of the Federal Treasury for that very purpose, according to this official schoolbook that is used in training the young men.

Let me read a little from the introduction of it:

INTRODUCTION

National defense. Under the national defense act as amended

This is issued by the War Department November 30, 1928, and, as I said, is a manual used in these schools by the officers of the War Department in teaching the young men of the country citizenship. That is the heading of it-

Under the national defense act as amended in 1920, the War Department, among its many other duties, is charged with the task of recruiting and training the young men of our Nation through enlistments in the Regular Army, voluntary enlistment in the Reserve Officers' Training Corps of high schools, colleges, universities, and in the 30-day training period in citizens' military training camps throughout the nine corps areas of the United States. The combined average yearly strength of these various units approximates some 260,000 young men between the ages of 16 and 25 years, the most critical period in the determination of their real value as citizens of our country.

It is therefore essential that the training of these young men embody, with their instruction in military science, at least a basic course in the science of government and the privileges, duties, and responsibilities of the individual citizen, in order that they may be returned to civilian life better equipped as the defenders of the institutions of our Government in time of peace as well as in time of war. Under the national defense act as amended in 1920, the War in time of war.

Training in citizenship is the most vital of all subjects to that nation whose system of government, security of property, and full power to express individual initiative are based upon the intelligence, education, and character of each individual citizen. Individual initiative is the product of slow progress in the development of the idea and ideals of self-government. It was cherished in the minds of the early Germanic tribes, transmitted by them in the fifth century to the conquered British Isles, there developed, and finally transferred in principle to the shores of America 300 years

All beautiful, all fine, Mr. President; but under the guise of that beautiful introduction it goes on, page after page. They have, in these schools, tried to educate these young men that they say are in the most critical period in the determination of their real value as citizens. They have tried to teach them, for instance, that government ownership ought to be avoided; that it is ruinous. Now, they may believe that. I do not want anybody to misunderstand me. I do not criticize the man who does not believe in it. That is his right; but I say that it is no business of the Army to take our young men and try to teach them that, for instance, if they had a contest in their home towns over the question as to whether the city or the village should build an electriclight plant, good citizenship demands that they should be against any such poisonous thing as that.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President-

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from New York.

Mr. COPELAND. Does the Senator find that doctrine taught in the pamphlet from which he is reading?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; I am going to come to that.

Mr. COPELAND. I shall be very much interested to hear it.

Mr. NORRIS. This is the schoolbook used in teaching these young men, and we pay for it out of Federal funds.

On page 99-

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Is it true that the textbook of the Army teaches propaganda adverse to public own-

Mr. NORRIS. This is the citizenship that is taught, as I understand, in these training camps that are conducted for 30 days, and we pay for it out of our Federal funds.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. That is under the jurisdiction of the War Department?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. How does the War Department harmonize that sort of teaching with their now-developing policy of building on the various reservations these large department stores, where they do everything and sell everything to their own people, to the exclusion of the surrounding communities?

Mr. NORRIS. Of course, that is where the War Department puts the shoe on the other foot. When it works with them, they like it. When it does not, they are against

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President-

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Is there in this pamphlet any defense of the War Department's own practices in running Government stores?

Mr. NORRIS. None that I know of.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Is that not part of the propaganda

Mr. NORRIS. Oh, the way they handle these department stores is not in here; no.

Mr. COSTIGAN. On what authority has the publication, to which the Senator from Nebraska directs our attention. been published?

Mr. NORRIS. It tells right here on the face of it that "this manual supersedes Manual of Citizenship Training, prepared under direction of the Chief of Staff." We pay for it.

I presume the holding of these training camps is provided for in the bill that is now before us out of public funds, and I think there is a lot of good in it. I would not have any objection to these training camps, so far as I am concerned, if they would confine themselves to what is legitimately theirs; but when, under the guise of making good citizens, they take up the functions partially of the public schools and partially of the public press, and try to teach these young men what their duty as citizens may be on various public questions that may arise, they are questions with which the War Department has no business on earth to interfere, and they ought to keep their hands out of them.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President-

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Will the Senator also tell us whether there is any indication in the pamphlet that the present administration disapproves such indefensible propaganda?

Mr. NORRIS. Oh, no; nothing that I have found. I have not read all of it, because, as I said, we are all too busy: but I am going to read you a few extracts.

I started to say, when I was interrupted, that my understanding is that in all these training camps, including colleges and others, there are 260,000 of our young men between 16 and 25 years trained, and the expense of that training is paid out of public funds. This is their textbook. and they have an examination like they do in schools. They have questions submitted to them in the form of questionnaires, and their answers will convey whether they have read and remembered the doctrine that has been promulgated here.

On page 99 of this official document, paragraph 134, I find this:

Dangers to representative government: Whenever the republican form of government has not achieved success the difficulty has not been with the system but with its faulty application.

Several dangerous experiments have been proposed, such as the initiative, referendum, recall, and the election of judges.

Take that to your homes. Do you elect your judges? Do you have the initiative in your constitution? Do you have the recall? I remember not so very many years ago when that was a new step, when the progressive-minded people of practically all the States were denounced and laughed at for advocating such a thing; but now we have in nearly all our State constitutions, I think, provisions for things of this kind. Our War Department, with money that they take from the taxpayers of the country, are running schools all over the country and teaching our young men that such doctrines are dangerous and injurious to a republic; and the item for the payment of that kind of teaching is included in the appropriation bill which is now before us.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, the language just read by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Norris] impresses me as nothing less than an attack on popular government in this country.

Mr. NORRIS. I will say to the Senator that I agree with I do not believe we can put any other construction on it. Whether we ought to have the recall and the initiative, or whether we ought to elect our judges or appoint them, are questions which have two sides. Within the lives of those who are now living the recall of judges, the initiative and referendum, have grown from nothing until now, as I said, those things are provided in the constitution of practically every State in the Union. Whether they ought to be in those constitutions or whether they ought to be out, whether we ought to appoint our judges for life, whether we ought to elect them, whether we ought to elect them for life, whether we ought to elect them for only a term, or whether they ought to be appointed for specific terms, are all debatable questions. What business is it of the War Department to teach the young men of this country that those are false doctrines, and line them up on one side or the other of economic, domestic, and political questions which arise to confront the citizen of every State in the Union? But we are asked to pay for it in this bill, at a time when millions of men are unemployed. When we are bending every energy, when we are sitting up nights, when we are trying from day to day to devise the best means to meet the unemployment situation, when we are trying to devise the best means by which the expenditures and the income of our Government may be equalized, we are confronted with one of the great departments of the Government, under the guise of teaching citizenship, trying to explain to the young men who go to training camps that public ownership, that the initiative, that the election of judges, are injurious things to a republic. Remember, that is in this paragraph headed "Dangers to Representative Government," a beautiful introduction.

Whenever the republican form of government has not achieved success the difficulty has not been with the system but with its faulty application.

A beautiful sentiment.

Several dangerous experiments have been proposed, such as the initiative, referendum, recall, and the election of judges. De-partures from constitutional principles threaten to impair the efficiency of our representative form of government, and if continued will ultimately destroy it.

That is what those young men are taught, that if the things I have just mentioned are not stopped they will destroy this Government.

If I took the other side, and advocated that a lack of Government ownership by municipalities of public utilities would bring destruction to our country, what would happen? I would be denounced as a Bolshevik, as a "red," as an enemy to the country. Yet, under the Chief of Staff of the Army of the United States, these young men are told that the initiative, the referendum, the recall, the election of judges, are dangers in a republic. Let me quote the words:

And, if continued, will ultimately destroy it.

Will destroy the Government, that means.

Now, at a time when we are trying to save every penny, when we are trying to balance the Budget, our great War Department comes here with an appropriation bill and asks us to appropriate money so that they may carry on that propaganda.

Mr. President, the people who advocate that kind of a thing in a free government as coming from the War Department, paid for by public taxation, are in the same class with the communists, with the "reds," with the fellows they are denouncing, and such doctrine, if carried on, will deny the right of free speech, will deny the right of citizens who are in favor of a change in the form of government to advocate, for instance, the election of judges instead of their appointment. They will be classed as enemies to our country, we are told by the War Department.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. COSTIGAN. In the judgment of the Senator from Nebraska, is there any sound reason why our people should not be permitted to initiate legislation when unfaithful public servants fail to represent them?

Mr. NORRIS. I know of no reason.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Is there any reason why an unfaithful public official should not be recalled by the voters who elect him to public office?

Mr. NORRIS. I know of no reason. I represent, in part, a State which has the referendum, which has the initiative, and we obtained those things after a bitter struggle. We obtained them after several years of agitation. But we obtained them legally, we obtained them honorably, we obtained them openly, in the open form of debate. If one went into that State now and sought to take away from the people those rights, he would not get a corporal's guard to follow him; and, in the name of people who believe in those safeguards of Republican form of government, I denounce this attempt to teach the young men of our country what are falsehoods, in my judgment, the things the War Department is trying to teach them, and asking us to pay the bill out of the Public Treasury of the United States.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield again?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Under the ancient law of agency an unfaithful agent may be discharged by his principal and the principal may resume control over his own business. The initiative, referendum, and recall in governmental affairs are in line with this established legal doctrine.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I agree with the Senator

Here is another thing I want to read, on page 100 of this same official document.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me? Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. LEWIS. Observing this colloquy between these two eminent Senators, the Senator from Colorado and the Senator from Nebraska, may I not advert to the conclusion that the remedies referred to by the Senators are brought about by ballots at special elections?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes. Mr. LEWIS. Then do not the Senators both recognize that the time has come when this Government should enact a law compelling citizens to go to the ballot boxes and vote, and also to impose a liability, to fix some form of penalty on one who will not vote, even to the point of forfeiting his privilege for constant failure?

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, of course, that brings into the debate a question which so far has been entirely out of it, and I do not care to enter into it. Personally I would not favor a law which would compel everybody to vote.

Mr. LEWIS. How would the Senator call the people to the ballot box and make them perform their duty, those who are favoring a measure that is good, or to make others disclose their activities in the Government if we did not do so by some law?

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator that I realize the importance of his question, but I do not believe it is involved in this debate.

Mr. LEWIS. I will not divert the Senator from what he is discussing. The thought occurred to me as a result of the colloguy between the able Senator from Nebraska and the equally able Senator from Colorado.

Mr. NORRIS. I only pause to say that, in my own humble judgment, I do not believe it would be wise to pass a law which would compel citizens to vote. I recognize that is a question which has two sides, however. I might say to the Senator that if the Army finds that out, they may take one side or the other of it, and tell all these young men that if they do not favor that kind of a law they are enemies of their country.

Mr. LEWIS. The Government reports that only 33 per cent of those in the country entitled to vote went to the ballot boxes in a presidential election.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes. Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nebraska yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. Does not the Senator from Illinois think that a ballot cast under compulsion would not be a very instructive or a very intelligent ballot?

Mr. LEWIS. No: my idea is that a man who is forced to serve on a jury, when he is called to his duty, begins to consider the duty, and that if compelled to vote a man would consider the obligation and give it attention. Otherwise those of a certain class who assume themselves, in the language of the Holy Scripture, "holier than thou," play golf or polo instead of voting, while others of less social eminence escape responsibility by simply using the election day as a holiday, and these never go to the ballot box.

Mr. BORAH. Does the Senator think that it would help the services of the Government very much to force such a man away from his polo game?

Mr. LEWIS. There is something to be said as to how far that gentleman is capable of measuring the value of government as between such and the pleasure of a polo game. But as these special scientists in social engagements of polo teas are a class to whom I have borne no intimate relation, and as they want none with me, I am unable to give the Senator any further information.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I realize the importance of the question, as I said before, but I do not want to be diverted into a discussion of it because, as I see it, it is not involved in this appropriation bill.

On page 100 of the same official textbook are some more beautiful things, with a little poison wedged in between.

That is one of the ways these fellows who are 200 per cent patriotic always start out when they want to poison a youthful mind, and they wedge it in between a lot of beautiful savings.

Some Senator near me asks who wrote this book. It is prepared under the direction of the Chief of Staff of the Army of the United States. It is a textbook they use in training camps in the training of young men of the United States in proper ideas about citizenship and government. I will read this heading again:

Socialism, communism, anarchy. The problem of capital and labor, employer and employee, can not be solved by unrepubli-

I suppose probably if the writer of that elucidated it and disclosed the hidden meaning that is in it, he would say that we must not interfere with the courts when they issue injunctions in labor disputes.

The problems of capital and labor, employer and employee, can not be solved by unrepublican methods. The suggestion of special legislation is socialistic.

That is a slap at us. We passed the anti-injunction bill. That is socialistic.

Listen to this:

The suggestion of special legislation is socialistic and com-

We are communists in the Senate if we voted for that bill, and practically every one of us did.

The suggestion of special legislation is socialistic and communistic in its theory and wholly repugnant to the American character.

Socialism or communism, which negates property rights; anarchy, which negates law; the substitution of "direct action" for representative government; a Government ownership—all should be avoided as perils that threaten the very foundation of this Republic.

That is our school of thought. I want to digress again to say that I find no fault with the man who honestly believes that statement is true, but if he is an honest man he must agree with me that there are thousands and millions of citizens, honest as we are, who believe that Government ownership of public utilities is a proper thing. In other words, it is a debatable question.

What business is it of the Army to try to teach the citizen that Government ownership "should be viewed as a peril that threatens the very foundation of this Republic "? That is what the Army is teaching our boys in these citizens' training camps. Before they go away from the training camps they have to take an examination on what they have learned. Let me read a little to show this is not forgotten when the examination is held. Here is one of the questions:

Name and define several dangers to representative government.

I have read the answers. The young man who studies his manual rightly and listens to the instructors who elucidate it, when he comes to the examination and is asked the question, "Name and define several dangers to representative government," will say that one of them is the initiative, one of them is the recall, one of them is the election of judges, one of them is public ownership of utilities. That is what he will say if he answers the question according to the doctrine that has been taught him when he was studying his lessons, and we pay for it out of public funds.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. On the other hand, if the student at this training camp should give any other answer to the question, I presume it logically follows that the instructor would mark him as having failed in his examination.

Mr. NORRIS. Why, certainly. He would not pass. He would fail. He would not get the certificate written on a beautiful parchment that comes to him if he answers the questions rightly. The word to him would be, "You have flunked, you have failed to pass." Then they would say to him, "Why, you yourself are an unworthy citizen."

Here is another place on page 111 of this official document. "Preservation of Philosophy of Government" is the heading of the paragraph, from which I read:

Some interpret American liberty as the opportunity to exploit the Nation's resources and people by propaganda that aims to destroy American institutions. Under the guise of freedom of speech and press every possible effort is being made to undermine and destroy the blessings of liberty.

What conclusion must you draw from that—that you must not have freedom of speech, you must not have a freedom of press, because, as they say:

Under the guise of freedom of speech and press every possible effort is being made to undermine and destroy the blessings of liberty. The problem of national defense deals not only with the question of elements but it is also the question of that philosophy of government devised by the founders of this Republic.

Beautiful! 'In other words, these young men are told that the question of national defense deals with the elements that enter into the question of the preservation of the philosophy of government devised by our forefathers. They did not have the initiative. They had no public-ownership question, because they had no public utilities, and hence we can easily say that the Constitution of the United States made no provision for public ownership of public utilities, and therefore it is wrong, and we must not believe in it; we must fight it, not on the field of battle, but at home in the ballot box. In your own locality, in your own municipality, you must oppose these things; otherwise you are not following the training that you got at this Federal training camp.

Mr. CUTTING. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. George in the chair). Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

one of those pamphlets. About how much of it is devoted to civic affairs of this sort?

Mr. NORRIS. I have not had the time to read it all, but it is entitled "Citizenship." I will give the Senator an outline of the first section. First is the introduction, divided into these subheads: National Defense, Citizenship Training, Individual Initiative, Foundation of Citizenship, Social Phases of Citizenship, Economic Phases of Citizenship, Philosophy of American Government.

Mr. CUTTING. In other words, there is nothing in the pamphlet about military training?

Mr. NORRIS. Nothing so far. I can give the Senator a little further information along that line, though I must say to the Senator that I have not had the time to read it all myself. Here is the examination. As I understand it, this is what happens. These young men go there and stay 30 days. They are taught these things. They are trained in military affairs by actual training as I understand it. Then they are taught these lessons and when they get through they have a questionnaire submitted to them. The questions will give the Senator some idea about it:

Define "citizenship." Describe the development of the idea of "citizenship." What is the source of "American citizenship"? How is "American citizenship" acquired? What is the status of the children of domiciled aliens born in the United States? Who has power over immigration and naturalization? * * * Why has power over immigration and naturalization? should every citizen vote?

Here is another subdivision of section 2:

Independent relationships. Development of civilization. Mutual relationships. Community of relationships. Coordinated action. National relationships. Articles of Confederation. Constitution. Interstate commerce. International relationships.

Mr. CUTTING. Of course, it seems to me, that questions of that sort are entirely outside of the scope of the War Department and that they should not form a part of the curriculum of the citizens' military training camp. I do not see how there could be any argument about that at all.

The Senator himself, on the other hand, has said that these camps do a great deal of good to the young men of the country, and I think most of us agree in that respect. I wonder if the Senator might not be able to prepare an amendment providing that no part of the appropriation for the training camps should be used for the promulgation of views on civics or the philosophy of government, or something of that sort, so that we could maintain the benefits of the camps without subjecting young men to that sort of

Mr. NORRIS. I see the point the Senator has in mind. and I think it is an excellent one, but at the same time I want to say to the Senator that we are stopping a great many things because of the necessity of the situation that we would like to keep going. My own idea is, not because I am opposed to the training camps if they are properly conducted, not because I am opposed to using public funds for carrying them on, but right now until we regain our foothold, until we can see the end of this depression, I think we could well afford to abolish them entirely and take them up again when prosperity returns to our country. In other words, I think this is one item of appropriation that is not a necessity. I say again that training camps such as we have all over the country, if properly conducted, it seems to me would be a good thing not from the military standpoint but from the physical and mental benefits that these young men get from the camps of that kind if they are properly conducted. I think they do a great deal of good. But there are a great many things we would like to carry on that we are now laying aside. It seems to me this might well be one of them. If we laid it aside now, it would be regarded as a sort of punishment partially of the people who have misused these funds.

I want to read another paragraph:

Destructive idealism. The attempt to undermine the Nation from within is more serious than the threat of armed force from

That reminds me that I had a letter some time ago, referring to the Army appropriation bill, from a very emi-

Mr. CUTTING. I have never had the privilege of seeing | nent citizen in one of our States holding a State office. He made a very good argument, and from his standpoint a logical argument in favor of increasing the appropriations for the Army and the Navy and the National Guard. It was a very fine letter, but he wound up by saying just what is said here. Perhaps he had been there and learned these things at the training camp:

> The attempt to undermine the Nation from within is more serious than the threat of armed force from without.

You must know from your position that the danger to our Government is from within. This awful depression that is going on, and in my judgment is going to get worse. Unemployment is going to increase, and we are going to need a bigger army at home to protect our property and our people against mob violence.

That is what he was looking forward to happening.

In order to protect ourselves from mob violence, in order to protect ourselves from communism, from any danger from within, the best remedy on earth is to give the people a good Government, an honest Government. Make our people satisfied with our Government, and the dangers of communism and all the other dangers from within will disappear overnight. A satisfied people are not going to make trouble from within. A dissatisfied, hungry people will ultimately lose their reason. We would lose ours. We would lose our power to differentiate even right from wrong. Hungry men are not reasonable; hungry children are not reasonable, never have been, never will be. It is contrary to human

I read on:

An impractical and destructive idealism called internationalism is being propagated by certain foreign agitators

I wish all you people who believe in the League of Nations would listen to this-and is being echoed and reechoed by many of the Nation's "intellectuals." Its efforts are to combat the spirit of patriotism, to destroy that spirit of nationalism without which no people can long endure. History teaches that in proportion as nations lose their sense of nationalism they become decadent. Having lost their sense of pride in the traditions of the past, their respect for national standards, their love for country, their spirit of patriotime the and is past. ism-the end is near.

I was not a follower of those who believed in the World Court; I am not one who is willing without some very stringent reservations to take our country into the World Court. However, I concede to those who do not agreed with me the same honesty of opinion, the same right to express it, the same right to agitate the question as I have to express my ideas; and I would defend them as quickly in that right, even though I did not agree with them, as I would ask that I be defended in my honest right. But the Army of the United States has no business to interfere with us in the controversy as to whether we will join the League of Nations; whether we will go into the World Court is no business of the officers of our Army. That is a civilian's business, and that question, upon which our people are divided, ought to be let alone by our Army. There should be no authority in the Army to use the funds paid by the taxpayers of the United States to try to teach the young men of our country the ideas of the Army on any side of any of these political questions. They ought to keep their hands off; and when they do not keep their hands off it is time that we draw the purse strings of the Government and see that this kind of propaganda, which would be enlightening even to those over in Russia, should be stopped; at least, that they should not have public money with which to carry it on.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nebraska yield to me?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Are not most of the young men who go to these camps high-school graduates?

Mr. NORRIS. As a rule, I think, they are.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Are they not assumed to have had the necessary course in citizenship and American history and political science?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Why supplement that course with these additional courses?

Mr. NORRIS. I myself am trying to prevent it. This | kind of teaching is going into our colleges and into our high schools and training camps, and the Army is asking money from the Congress of the United States to continue it.

Mr. President, while it does not have a direct bearing upon the subject, I want to read a newspaper report showing the treatment which is accorded by the representatives of big interests when they speak before the people to men who oppose this propaganda. I am sorry the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. Shipstead] and the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] are not present. I should like to have them hear what I am about to read. I hold in my hand a clipping from the Pioneer Press, of St. Paul, dated April 8, 1932. It contains a report of a speech made by C. R. Gray, who is vice president and general manager of the Omaha Railway, which is a large railway system running from St. Paul and Minneapolis to Omaha, Sioux City, and other places in the West. Of course Mr. Gray is a leader in his line, and to what he says people pay a great deal of attention. He made a speech in St. Paul before the Lions Club and the Women's Club. Let me read from the press report:

United States Senator Henrik Shipstead was charged with spreading communistic propaganda by Col. Carl R. Gray, jr., vice president and general manager of the Omaha Railway, in an address before the Business and Professional Women's and Lions Clubs in the Hotel St. Paul, Thursday.

Other prominent Americans who were accused by Mr. Gray of disseminating propaganda that emanated from the headquarters of the Third International in Russia included United States Sen-WILLIAM E. BORAH, of Idaho, and GEORGE W. NORRIS, of

Now here is a quotation from his speech:

It has been proved-

Mark the words-

It has been proved-

I was not at the trial, but it seems I was tried and "it was proved "-

"It has been proved," Mr. Gray asserted, "that these persons, besides thousands of others, are connected with activities which in turn can be traced directly to the Third International. This organization was formed for the express purpose of spreading 'red' propaganda in foreign countries, especially the United States."

He is quoted further as saving:

There is a mass of evidence available to support a charge that communists are making a determined effort against the national defense act.

That is the act by virtue of which these training camps are held-

Americans should be on guard against propaganda tending to destroy the spirit of this act, which is being spread by pacifists who do not realize they are dupes of the Communist Party.

Mr. Gray asserted that the proposed elimination of the reserve—

Now we come right to this bill-

Mr. Gray asserted that the proposed elimination of the reserve officers' training and citizens' military training camps in a congressional bill now in the making, besides a reduction in the size of the Regular Army, will seriously affect the national defense of the United States

"The world of to-day and to-morrow," he said, "is going to follow the principles of the past, and so long as there is selfishness in human nature, and therefore in nations, wars will continue. Unless we keep on with our program for national defense America will find herself sooner or later at the mercy of a strong nation that will trample us into the dust."

Support these training camps—that is the lesson—and send letters to your Senators and Representatives to continue appropriations from the public purse for these training camps, where the youth of our land are taught this poisonous doctrine, where the youth of our land are made to believe that the initiative, the referendum, the recall, the election of judges, and public ownership are all inimical to the interests of the Republic.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. And free speech.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; free speech and a free press, all are contrary to the principles of the Republic in which we live and, if continued, will bring about its destruction. That is what they teach; and this man says to the women and to the Lions Club of St. Paul that men who advocate such things are dangerous, and he uses the names of three United States Senators and says, to use his exact language, "it has been proved" that these Senators and thousands of other people are connected with organizations that follow the Third International declaration.

I have an account from another paper of the speech delivered by Mr. Gray in which exactly the same language is quoted between quotation marks, so that I take it the report is correct of the speech which denounces, in effect, the Members of the United States Senate as being communists, and says it has been proved that they are.

I denounce the statement as a falsehood, not only for myself but on behalf of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD] and the Senator from Idaho [Mr. Borah], and I defy Mr. Gray or anyone else to submit such proof. Of course, he has no proof; he knows and everyone else knows that the statement is a falsehood; and yet such falsehoods are carried to business and professional clubs of which honest men and honest women are members, and they are taught, in effect, that the salvation of this country depends upon a continuance of these activities of the War Department, and that if one is opposed to them he is not a patriot, but belongs to the Russian Government instead of to the American Government.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President-

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Perhaps Mr. Gray has been to one of the citizens' training camps and has learned his lesson well from the manual issued by the War Department, and has since learned that the Senator from Nebraska and the Senator from Minnesota and the Senator from Idaho voted for the bill of the Senator from Nebraska providing for the Government operation of the Muscle Shoals plant; and, therefore, he thinks he has "proved," in view of the teachings of the War Department, that the Senators referred to are advocating measures which are subversive of our institutions.

Mr. NORRIS. I suppose under his theory probably that would be true, but he does not even give the poor defendants an opportunity to be present when the trial takes place. He ought to be at least fair enough to let the poor devils whom he denounces and who are so helpless in his hands have an opportunity to face the witnesses who are going to testify against them.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. If the Senator will yield further, I have been following the manual of the War Department, which is used in teaching citizens attending the training camps, and I judge from some of the things which the Senator has read that the department would not be in favor of the Senator having the right of free speech or the privilege of being heard and that it would not be in favor of a free press, all of which, according to the teachings of the manual, are subversive of our institutions.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes. I do not know how many States have the initiative and referendum; I do not know how many States elect their judges instead of appointing them, but most of the States do.

This doctrine is taught by our War Department to our young men under a beautiful guise, under beautiful descriptions that are circulated over the country with beautiful sentiments of patriotism, by which they are induced to come to these training camps; and then they are taught a lot of very good things, I think, that nobody would find fault with. They have to do that to disguise the real intent of the thing they are trying to do. Covered up under those beautiful things is the poison that is intended to go into the minds and the hearts of the coming generations of American citizens.

It is very much like the propaganda that the Power Trust spread over the country when they got into the schools, they got into the commercial clubs, they got into the Lions Clubs, they got into the women's clubs, and told them some beautiful things; but interspersed with them here and there was a sentence that dropped the poison that they wanted to plant in human minds. All of them had been deceived when they were brought there, and some of them went away perhaps without knowing that their minds had been poisoned secretly, dishonestly, falsely, because 90 per cent of it was false, without any opportunity for anybody to refute it. Those things were taught the children in school, and that is what the Army is teaching in its school, and we are called upon to expend the money to do it.

Let me say before I finish that I should like to have Senators read this pamphlet. I am going to read more of it. I have picked out almost at random the extracts which I have read. I think it has between the lines, on nearly every page, some poison of the kind I have narrated. If Congress, representing the American people, is going to permit that kind of thing to go on, then I have an erroneous idea of Members of Congress. If we are going to permit that kind of doctrine to be taught by the War Department to our private citizens, then it seems to me that we are derelict in our duty.

I am not pleading that any of the things criticized in this pamphlet are right. I am not now advocating any of them; but I am saying that under our form of government I have a right and you have a right to advocate them, and that we can do that without being traitors. I think that the man who is so anxious to criticize the patriotism of some one who believes in a theory of government that he does not agree with is himself lacking either in patriotism or in When they undertake to put across some of these disreputable schemes, they always start out by prefacing what they say with some beautiful patriotic thought that pleases everybody; and when the hearer has been won over by an outburst of patriotism, they carefully put in the drops of poison that they hope to sink into the minds and into the hearts and into the souls of coming generations.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I announce the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll. The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-three Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present. The question is on the committee amendment on line 22, page 9.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, I wish to enter a motion to reconsider the committee amendments on pages 8 and 9 in regard to the reinstating of the 2,000 Army officers left out of the bill by the House. I will take that up now, if it is agreeable to the Senator in charge of the bill.

Mr. REED. I shall be very glad to have that done.

Mr. FRAZIER. I ask unanimous consent to reconsider the amendment on page 8, lines 24 and 25, and page 9, line 1, and also the amendment having to do with the same provision on page 9, line 11.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I think the Senator had better move to reconsider, and let us have a vote on that motion. It comes to the same thing.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the committee amendment was adopted on page 8, lines 24 and 25, and page 9, line 1, and the amendment on page 9, line 11, having to do with the same matter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The committee amendment on line 22, page 9, is the pending question. The motion may be entered now; and, of course, without objection, the motion may now be placed before the Senate.

Mr. REED. I have no objection to the motion being made at this time and setting aside the committee amendment which is pending.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the committee amendment will be set aside. The question is on the motion made by the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, a motion to reconsider can cover only one amendment. I suggest that the Senator take the first one of the three.

Mr. FRAZIER. They all concern exactly the same thing. Mr. REED. That is true; but a motion to reconsider can cover only a single vote.

Mr. FRAZIER. I was just trying to save a little time; that is all.

Mr. REED. The question can be decided on the first one. and we will not have to have roll calls on the others if the Senator is successful on the first.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, the first amendment is on page 8, line 24. The committee inserts "not to exceed an average of 12,000," which makes the paragraph read:

For the pay of not to exceed an average of 12,000 commissioned

Then the amount of money was raised by $4,523,500.

In the House of Representatives, when this provision was up for discussion, there was quite a little debate in regard to it; and there has been a great deal of propaganda spread from various sources against reducing the number of Army officers by 2,000. I received a letter this morning from the national headquarters of the Reserve Officers' Association of the United States here in Washington in regard to this matter. It states:

With reference to the Army appropriation bill (H. R. 11897) we respectfully request that you support the measure as passed by the House, and further that you support the amendment to reinstate the 2,000 officers of the Regular Army omitted from the bill by the House of Representatives. If these officers are lost to the Army, irreparable damage will be done to our national defense, and it can be conservatively stated that it will emasculate the national defense act.

We base this on the fact that our military policy as enunciated

We base this on the fact that our military policy as enunciated in the national defense act places 75 per cent of the burden of our defense upon the civilian components. There are at the present time approximately 1,653 officers of the Regular Army on duty with the National Guard, the Organized Reserves, and the Reserve Officers' Training Corps serving as instructors in educating and giving both theoretical and practical training to the civilian

I want to say to the Senator from Nebraska that the 1,653 officers are the ones who are training our youth and other citizens the military idea of things which may be dangerous to the Government, such as public ownership, the recall, the initiative, the election of judges, and things of that kind. I continue reading from the letter:

It is obvious that if the Regular Army personnel is reduced officers will be taken from those now assigned to important duty with the civilian components. We view this situation with alarm, as we see in it the major thrust of organized pacifism. We bespeak your favorable consideration of these points and ask you to support the amendment to restore these officers to the Regular Army. Very sincerely yours,

BENNETT A. MOLTER, Major, Air Reserve, National Secretary.

A few days ago I received a letter from the president general of the National Society of the Daughters of the American Revolution along the same lines. The letter reads:

As president general of the National Society Daughters of the American Revolution, an organization of 170,000 members, we view with extreme anxiety the action of our House of Representatives in reducing by 2,000 the officer personnel of the Regular Army. We women view with approval the plans of our United States Congress for providing for the Nation's defense.

Mr. President, I am a little at a loss to know just what the president of the Daughters of the American Revolution means by that policy. I presume she refers to a policy laid down in the past, however. The letter continues:

We believe they are compatible with the history and ideals of our people. It is self-evident that were our Regular Army officer personnel reduced to this extent our present plans must fall.

our people. It is self-evident that were our Regular Army officer personnel reduced to this extent our present plans must fail.

We trust our Senators appreciate the seriousness of the proposal and that they will take the necessary action to prevent removal of these officers.

I am submitting to you copy of a letter to General Pershing from General Foch, who commanded our American boys in France. This letter appears to me to be so pertinent and applicable to the situation that I am inclosing this copy, asking you to read it carefully. carefully.

Trusting that each Senator is convinced of the advisability of retaining these 2,000 officers, I am

Very sincerely yours,

Mrs. Russell William Magna, President General

National Society Daughters of the American Revolution.

The letter written by General Foch was dated January 18, 1922, and a copy of it is sent along to prove that we need these 2,000 Army officers retained in the bill at the present time.

I am in receipt of another letter from the Military Order of the World War, the headquarters located here in Washington. It reads:

The Military Order of the World War is an organization of officers, the larger part of whom left their civilian pursuits and en-tered the service during the World War and who have now returned to civil life-

And so forth. They wind up by saying:

We ask you to see that these officers be not reduced below the present 12,000 which is considered the irreducible minimum.

I have another letter from the Hennepin County Republican Club, of Minneapolis, Minn. Even the politicians are getting interested in this proposition. The letter reads:

DEAR SENATOR: The following expression of our stand on measures affecting national defense has been sent to the Senators from Minnesota.

Respectfully yours,

HENNEPIN COUNTY REPUBLICAN CLUB (INC.), By HENRY C. MALCHOW, Secretary.

"MY DEAR SENATOR: The Hennepin County Republican Club has

"My Dear Senator: The Hennepin County Republican Club has noted the vote by the House of Representatives to reduce the Regular Army by 2,000 officers. This organization has always supported national defense and wishes to urge that you vote and work against this measure when it comes before the Senate.

"The United States maintains a smaller standing Army in proportion to population and wealth than any other nation. A surplus of officers is provided for the purpose of training the reserve and civilian components. The reduction in Regular Army officer strength would result in a practical cessation of this training, and the saving of $4,000,000 a year is negligible in comparison to the loss of defense strength involved.

"We shall appreciate an expression of opinion from you on the matter and trust that you will use your influence in the maintenance of our present defense plan.

"Sincerely yours,

"Hennepin County Republican Club (Inc.),

"By Heney C. Malchow, Secretary."

That is what the surplus of Army officers is for. I want the Senator from Nebraska to understand that. The surplus of the Army officers is to train these boys in the training camps, to train our boys in the universities and colleges, to give them the military idea, the idea of the War Department. I want to call to the attention of the Senator from Nebraska that there is not a boy in his State, the son of a farmer there, who wants to go to the agricultural college of that great State to get a training in agriculture who can take the course there unless he takes two years' compulsory military training. No son of any merchant in that State. or of any professional man there, can get a university training in that great State without taking two years of compulsory military training, where they get the kind of information the Senator has been reading this morning. The letter continues:

The reduction in Regular Army officer strength would result in the practical cessation of this training, and the saving of $4,000,-000 a year is negligible in comparison to the loss of defense 000 a year is neg strength involved.

We shall appreciate an expression of opinion from you on the matter and trust that you will use your influence in the maintenance of the present defense plan.

I apologize to the Senators from Minnesota for reading a copy of a letter that was sent to them, but it is pertinent to the question before the Senate. I have also had a number of other letters, some from people in my own State, from organizations, and from individuals. I will not take the time to read them at present.

Mr. President, there are a little over 12,000 Regular Army officers at the present time. According to the figures I have, just a little over 5,000 of them are on duty with the Army of the United States. Of the other 7,000 of them, according to the statement here, 1,600 plus are with the National Guard, the Reserve Officers' Training Corps, and other organizations of that kind. I do not know where the other five or six thousand are or what they do. I would like to ask the Senator from Pennsylvania, the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, who has charge of this bill, what the duty of these others officers is? As I understand it, there are only a little over 5,000 in active service with the Army, and a little over 1,600 with the National Guard and the training camps, and so forth. What do the other five or six thousand do?

Mr. REED. The separation of the duties of the different officers is shown in the House hearings. If the Senator will indulge me for a moment, I will look it up.

Mr. FRAZIER. I will be glad to have the Senator look that up.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FRAZIER. I yield. Mr. FLETCHER. May I venture to say that there is at Leavenworth a school for training officers, there is the War College in this city, there is a training school at Fort Benning, Ga., and I think there are some other training schools. Some of the officers to whom the Senator has referred are engaged in those schools, at Leavenworth, at Fort Benning, in the War College, and I think some other school. Down at Fort Monroe there is a post, and some officers are stationed there. They are included in the list not accounted for by reason of being assigned to duty with troops and the Reserve Officers' Training Corps.

Mr. FRAZIER. I understand that, but according to this letter from the Reserve Officers' Association, it is said that-

One thousand six hundred and fifty-three officers of the Regular Army are on duty with the National Guard, the Organized Reserves, and the Reserve Officers' Training Corps, serving as instructors in educating and giving both theoretical and practical training to the civilian components.

That would include those in the universities and colleges and the so-called military institutions.

Mr. FLETCHER. It does not include those at Leavenworth, Fort Benning, Fort Monroe, and the War College.

Mr. FRAZIER. I presume it would include them; I do not know. That is what I would like to find out. There are 1,653 of them, according to these figures.

Mr. President, if my figures are correct, with only between five and six thousand of the Army officers now with the Regular Army, and with less than 2,000 with the National Guard and on duty in schools, and so forth, I think we can well afford to reduce the appropriation and the number of Army officers by the 2,000 by which it was reduced in the House.

Last year our Army and Navy appropriations amounted, in round numbers, to $800,000,000. They were a little less than that, but in round numbers they amounted to $800,-000,000. According to the best figures I have been able to find, that is one-sixth of all the money expended in the world last year for Army and Navy purposes. Yet we are admittedly mighty hard up, and have had a difficult time in trying to balance the Budget, and we do not know whether it is balanced yet or not. I am sure that the extra two or three million which might be saved by cutting out these 2,000 Army officers would be a welcome addition in the cutting down of our expenses and balancing the Budget.

Mr. President, it seems to me there are a great many other cuts which should be made in this bill. I went over the amendments hurriedly. There are 46 increases by the Senate committee in various items of appropriations in this bill. There are a few decreases. While it is true, as the Senator from Pennsylvania said, that the total is decreased a little, the decrease comes in what might be called the nonmilitary part of the appropriation in regard to rivers and harbors. That does not really belong in this bill anyway, or should be separated from it, in my opinion.

Mr. President, I believe the retirement age for Army offi-

Mr. REED. Sixty-four.

Mr. FRAZIER. In the discussion of the measure in the House, Congressman Collins commented upon the question on May 10, at page 9935 of the Congressional Record.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield in order that I may get this matter straightened out?

Mr. FRAZIER. I yield. Mr. FLETCHER. The Secretary said in the hearings before the Committee on Appropriations:

Of the 12,000 officers that we have who are absolutely essential for the operation of our defense system, only 5,031 are serving this moment actually with troops. The others are serving on rivers and harbors, on civilian work of a military nature, in training the citizen soldiery of the Nation, and on similar duties.

There is the General Staff School at Leavenworth, Kans.; the Infantry School at Benning, Ga.; School of Field Artillery, Fort Sill, Okla.; the Tank School is at Meade, Md.; the Coast Defense School is at Fort Monroe, Va.; the War College, of course, is here

Mr. FRAZIER. Does that give the number of officers engaged in the schools?

Mr. FLETCHER. All those not engaged on active duty are engaged either on river and harbor work or in schools.

Mr. FRAZIER. In active Army work there were 5,031. There are 12,100 officers altogether. That would leave 7,069 officers on some other duty than with the Regular Army. It seems to me they ought to be able to spare at least 2,000 out of that more than 7,000 in these hard times when we are making such a desperate attempt to balance the Budget and cut down the expenses of the Government.

A moment ago I started to quote from Congressman COLLINS'S statement on page 9935 of the RECORD. He said:

We have lieutenants 62 years old in our Army. We have captains 61 years old.

A little farther down he said:

What are the proper ages for Army officers? West Point graduates should be first lieutenants in 3 years, captains in 10 years, majors in 17 years, lieutenant colonels in 22 years, and colonels

I judge from this statement that we have Army officers who are older than they should be for the positions they occupy. Congressman Collins also quoted from some Army officer, as he said, though he did not mention his name, who said, in reply to an inquiry of how the expenses of the Army appropriation bill could be reduced, that it could well be done by cutting out 2,000 of the Army officers and putting them on the retired list.

Of course, it would be no great hardship to those officers to be put on the retired list. I do not know how much they are doing in civilian work, the 7,000 or more, for the benefit of the country, and whether they are all earning their money or not. I am frank to say I am doubtful whether they are all earning their money. As to some of those who are spreading propaganda, such as the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Norris] read from an official booklet put out by the War Department would seem to indicate that it is doubtful whether or not men of that type are earning their money, whether they are carrying out the policy that should be carried out by the majority of the people of our country.

When they advocate militarism and preach against any progressive idea that they believe is against militarism, it is doubtful in my mind whether they are a benefit to the country and whether at least 2,000 of them should not be retired from the active service.

The amendment putting back those 2,000 Army officers would increase the appropriation of $27,709,927 as passed by the House to $31,833,427, or an increase of $4,523,500. It is true, as the Senator from Pennsylvania explained, that in the other amendment in line 11, pay of officers on the retired list, it is cut down by $3,467,625, but the saving would be, under those two or three amendments, $1,055,875. Even that amount of money is worth while in these hard times, when we are attempting to balance the Budget. We have argued and debated for days on items involving less than that amount of saving.

Mr. President, it seems to me this amendment should not be agreed to, but that the 2,000 Army officers who were put on the retired list by the vote of the House of Representatives should not be put back on the active list by the vote of the Senate. Only a little over 5,000 of them-to be exact, according to the Senator from Florida, 5,031—are in the Army service proper, and over 7,000 of them are in some other service. I would like to ask the Senator from Pennsylvania if he has the figures?

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I have the figures showing the distribution of officers in the different branches of the Army, and I would be glad to put them in the RECORD, but the figures do not show exactly how many were on duty with troops. The Senator must understand that the figures for those on duty with troops of the 5,000 officers included only those with regular troops.

In addition to that there is a very large number of regular officers on duty with troops of the National Guard, another large number serving with the headquarters of the reserve division, and, as was said by the Senator from Florida, there is a very considerable number in training all the time in the various schools like the Artillery School at Fort Sill, the Infantry School at Benning, and the Tank School at Camp Meade. There are several hundred officers all the time on duty at the War College. It is the only way to keep the officer up to the utmost professional fitness. I can assure the Senator that we have not any more than we need. We ought to have 14,000.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, the Secretary of the Reserve Officers' Association here in Washington gives the figures for the National Guard and other similar organizations as 1,653. That number deducted from 7,069 leaves 5,416 Army officers.

Mr. REED. But remember that over a thousand of those are doctors. I can get the breakdown from the War Department if the Senator thinks it would be helpful. When we take out the doctors and veterinarians and the dentists, the number comes down very fast. Many of the doctors are at Walter Reed Hospital. They are not loafing. I can assure the Senator they are all working.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, it may be true the Army officers are gainfully employed. I hope they are. Many of them are so-called Army engineers, but I notice a provision in the bill on page 36 that the Secretary of War, if he deems it necessary, may hire expert engineers at rates of pay to be fixed by him not to exceed $50 per day and not exceeding 50 days each and necessary traveling expenses. take it those are civilian engineers. I think probably the Army engineers do need some expert advice once in a while, and have to go to civilian engineers to get it. From my experience with Army engineers in the river and harbor work and flood-control work, I would judge that they have made a dismal failure of it and are still hanging on to these jobs and do not want to be retired because it would cut down their pay a little. That is why the fight is being put up to put back into the bill the appropriation for the 2,000 additional Army officers over and above the number provided by the House.

When the farmers of the Nation are going broke or have gone broke by the millions, when business men throughout the Nation have gone broke along with the farmers, when we have 8,000,000 and more unemployed in the various cities in the United States, when we have an army estimated at anywhere from 5,000 to 10,000 unemployed World War veterans here in the city of Washington, we must stop and think. According to the newspapers these men here in and around Washington are being fed at a cost of 6 cents a day. In the bill the provision for food for the Regular Army has been reduced from 37 to 36 cents a day. I suppose the reduction of the price of food products generally would warrant at least that reduction of 1 cent a day, but that is six times as much as these poor fellows out in the suburbs of Washington are getting, who volunteered or were drafted in the World War, many of whom were sent to France and fought in the trenches, many of whom were gassed or crippled and maimed and are now back here asking for a little money that is due them from the United States Government, asking Congress to make a little appropriation to take care of them. It is generally conceded that something has to be done to take care of the unemployed by appropriations of money or sale of bonds or some such way. We have an army of men here and more on the way, some coming from the west coast, demanding the payment of their bonus.

Mr. President, instead of passing the bonus measure providing the money for the unemployed World War veterans, who, in many instances, are half starved and half clothed, who are sleeping out here on the ground with Congress denying an appropriation to furnish them proper food and proper shelter, it seems to me it is time that a more drastic cut be made in the Army bill than is now proposed.

Under this bill as reported to the Senate there will be a total appropriation of $389,578,513. Of course, some of thata few million dollars—is to be used for river and harbor work and other items of that kind that really do not belong to the Army appropriation bill; but, Mr. President, even at that it is the highest amount appropriated by any government on the face of the earth in peace times for its army. Here in the United States, where we try to make people believe we are for disarmament, that we are for cutting down all war forces, and are for the Kellogg peace pact, and all that, we have been for several years past appropriating more money for war purposes for the Army and the Navy than has any other civilized nation on the face of the earth in peace times, and we are doing it again this year. While it is true that our standing Army is not so large, according to our population, as are the standing armies of some of the other nations, yet a great many troops are provided for in this bill when we include the Reserve Officers' Corps, the National Guard, and numerous other organizations, which bring what might be termed a standing army, and what amounts to a standing army, at least to a larger number than is commonly stated to be the military force of the United States.

Mr. President, I want to refer again to these poor fellows who are camped on vacant lots around the edge of the city, herded there by the police force of the District. Some of them have shelter and some of them have none. An extra policeman is put on on every floor of the Senate Office Building. We have not had them before, but additional policemen are now employed to guard against what? To guard Members of the United States Senate in their offices over here, I do not know against what?

I do not believe, Mr. President, that there are any in the group that have come here belonging to the army of unemployed war veterans who would harm any Member of the United States Senate or any other public official. All they want is a square deal, Mr. President; all they want is the payment of money that the Government has promised them, that is due them; and to which I believe they are entitled. Yet extra policemen are put on; the unemployed veterans are guarded and watched as if they were a bunch of highway robbers, and it is even thought necessary to protect Members of Congress from those ex-service men who went into the war, who offered their very lives for their country, who worked for $30 a month at a time when millions were made here by the war profiteers.

In talking with a friend of mine who was in the city of Washington during the war time, who is well informed and knew the situation and had something to do with some investigations that went on before the war closed, in regard to some of the reported graft that was going on, he said there were many men at that time who were supposed to be patriotic in serving the Government at a dollar a year or for nothing who made a great deal of money. He said, "I could name a number of those men who told me they were going to get all the money they could during the war time"; and they got it. Some of them are now in prominent positions, and undoubtedly they did make a great deal of money during the World War—blood money, if you please—at the expense of the poor fellows who are camping on vacant lots around the city of Washington asking the United States Congress to appropriate a little money to keep body and soul together.

One poor fellow, whose wife had died, according to the newspapers, brought his little child, about 2 years old, clear across the continent, carrying the child on his back.

Mr. President, it is time the United States Congress should wake up; it is time that we reduce appropriations, especially those for the Army and Navy, and keep down expenses. We can do more toward balancing the Budget by cutting down the appropriation bill that is now before us than by any other one measure that has been considered, the economy bill or almost any other bill, without any detriment to the welfare of the United States Government or the welfare of its people.

Mr. President, I hope the motion to reconsider will prevail, and that the amendment will be rejected. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HATFIELD in the chair). The Clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-four Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I am perfectly well aware that most of the Senators have not had a chance to consider the pros and cons of this matter of the reduction in the number of officers.

The question involved comes down to this—whether it is a real economy to give up the full-time service of 2,000 officers upon whose training we have spent a very large amount of Government money, whether it is wise to throw away the services of those men in order to save something less than one-quarter of their pay, because the House bill provides not that we shall save the salaries of these officers who are dropped from the Army, but that we shall retire them on three-quarters pay, and, consequently, we would be paying hereafter 75 per cent of what we are paying now, and getting nothing whatever in return for it.

That is the proposition in a nutshell. Not only is it as bad as that but it is worse, because of the $3,800,000 which we would save in their pay we would immediately lose $900,000 because of the extra travel required to bring them back to their homes and to send officers to replace them in their present stations, which would be necessary to a large extent. So that from the standpoint of economy it seemed to us that there was nothing whatsoever gained.

Furthermore, a large number of those who would be thus retired are very young men; and they would be on the retired list for the rest of their lives, and we would have to count on paying them three-quarters of their pay for many years more than the average expectancy of an officer on the retired list at present.

Not only is that true, but we would have no one at all to use in training the National Guard, in training the reserve components, in the Reserve Officers' Training Corps and in the citizens' military training camps. All of those activities would cease to have the benefit of the training of regular officers; and they would be driven back upon the more dubious training that they might receive from reserve officers, who themselves would not be under the supervision of regulars.

According to the forces that we now have in the Regular Army of the United States, it is estimated by the General Staff that 14,000 officers are needed properly to exercise the functions of that body of troops. We have only 12,000. We have made drastic cuts since the World War. After our war-time Army was disbanded in 1919, when we had got down to what we thought was a peace-time footing, we had nearly 20,000 officers. Then in 1922 Congress compelled a cut from 20,000 down to 12,000, and, in order to make that cut, put in the system which all of us remember who were here at that time, the Class B proceedings.

The corridors of the Capitol and of the Senate Office Building were filled with grief-stricken men and weeping women for months, trying to get relief from that enforced retirement from the Army. Men who had given up all prospect of success in civil life and had made the Army their career, were thrown out then ruthlessly. Now the House of Representatives and the Senator from North Dakota [Mr.

FRAZIER] propose to do it again.

I saw a list of the officers of the Army according to efficiency. I am sorry that I have not the figures before me; but it shows that out of the 12,000 officers now in the Army, all but 28, as I recall the figures, were classed satisfactory, excellent, or superior. Only 28 were classed unsatisfactory or inferior. That was as of the end of the last fiscal year; and it is safe to say that by the regular processes of attrition all of those 28 have now been dropped. So that the proposal now made of cutting an additional 2,000 officers means that we are to take officers who are graded by their superiors with the utmost care as being wholly satisfactory or excellent or superior. It does not mean that we are getting rid of the unfit. They have been weeded out already. It is safe to say that practically every man in the 12,000 today is efficient professionally, is fitted for the position that he occupies, the career that he has taken unto himself, and has fitted himself for its able performance.

And how does the House propose to do it? By creating a body of five generals who, between now and the 30th of next September, are to pass on these 2,000 cases, and drop the 2,000 least efficient. Could any five human beings between June 9 and September 30, pass judgment not only upon the 2,000 who are to be dropped but upon al. the others?—because naturally all the 12,600 have to be passed upon in order to pick out the 2,000 least efficient. It is a human impossibility to do it. They would have to pass on more than 100 officers a day in order to accomplish that result.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. In the event that it becomes necessary to effect some economies in the military bill over those now contemplated, may I ask the opinion of the Senator as to what provision in the bill could be taken out with the least possible damage to the national defense?

Mr. REED. Rivers and harbors.

Mr. TYDINGS. As between the citizens' military training camps and the reduction of 2,000 officers, would the Senator care to express an opinion?

Mr. REED. I think it would be an unmixed calamity if either were dropped.

Mr. TYDINGS. If I may transgress on the Senator's time, I have always voted for what I hoped would promote the national defense; but I do feel that if there is anything we could get along without now without serious impairment of our national defense, this is the time to adopt it, at least for a year.

Mr. REED. I agree with the Senator.

Mr. TYDINGS. Therefore my question had this thought in mind:

The 2,000 Army officers who would go out if this proposition were adopted could not be brought back again after a year. They would be gone for good; but if the citizens' military training camps were discontinued for a year, we could, of course, start those all over again without changing the general set-up of the Army. There will be separate votes on some of those things; and if the Senator cares to do so, I should appreciate it if he would point out, not that he favors it, but what things might be eliminated with the least damage to the whole picture, because some of us feel that if there is any real chance to vote for any economy in this bill without seriously handicapping the national defense we should do it.

Mr. REED. I quite understand the Senator's view. Let me say a word about that.

The bill as it stands to-day represents a cut of $80,000,000 under the estimates submitted by the department to the Director of the Budget. For military activities the amount now carried by the bill is only $290,000,000, which is 17 per cent less than the same item in this year's appropriations. The estimates of the Bureau of the Budget were reduced under the department's estimates by about $30,000,000. That is the saving the Budget made. When those estimates came to the House, the House reduced the Budget estimates $21,000,000 more. When the bill came to us, we reduced its aggregate $3,000,000 more. The total cuts, therefore, up to the present time under last year's appropriations are $51,000,000, and under the Budget estimates some twenty-odd million.

On top of that, last night in passing the economy bill we made a further reduction which will amount to between nine and ten million dollars. We have not had time to estimate it accurately. So, taking our action of last night on the economy bill, we have cut the Army appropriations about $65,000,000 under last year's appropriations. At every place where they have been acted on they have suffered a cut; and I do believe, in all sincerity, that we have them down to the bare bones of the proposal.

I know the country demands economy, and we have been trying to give it; but it is not an economy, and I am sure the Senator must agree with me, to give up 100 per cent of the value of the service of these officers and save only 25 per cent of their pay.

Mr. TYDINGS. I agree with the Senator that that does not seem to me to be wise. Will the Senator yield for another question?

Mr. REED. Gladly.

Mr. TYDINGS. How much is the amount appropriated for rivers and harbors under the Senate bill?

Mr. REED. Fifty-four million dollars. That is a 10 per cent cut under last year.

Mr. TYDINGS. In the event there is a public-works program, which probably will be financed in some way, it is quite likely that if that item is taken out of the Army bill it will be reinserted in the public-works proposal.

Mr. REED. I should think it is likely; yes.

Mr. TYDINGS. That being so, if we could reduce the Army appropriation by taking that out, it strikes me that if there are to be public works this provision could very well be inserted in that bill as sound and constructive and meeting most of the criticism which has been offered to public-works propositions.

Mr. REED. In other words, to take it out of this bill as a running expense and put it into the other bill as a capital expense.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is it.

The thought I had in mind is that we know now, roughly, what the economy bill is going to save. We also know that the Budget is probably underbalanced over $400,000,000; but, assuming that it is only $200,000,000 underbalanced, with the depression increasing I have got to the point where I want to cut everything that can be cut, so that we can put as much money as possible into the relief program, because I am of the opinion that if we do not get the relief measure over very quickly it will not make any difference about a lot of these cuts, for they will be ancient history. Therefore I feel that now we ought to start to build up this relief program as much as we can, or else we will have a more serious situation than we have now.

Therefore I would much rather cut out the training camps for citizens, at least for the time being, and turn that money over to feed the unemployed and the hungry, and provide some work for them, than to take care of these boys in this altogether splendid way, in view of the fact that I think the need for it now is not as great as in other years.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me? Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I have been very much interested in the colloquy which has been going on between the two Senators. I want to suggest to both of them that from an economy standpoint I do not see how anything can be gained by taking an appropriation out of one bill and putting it in another.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, if I may interject, except that one would be financed over a longer period of time, and this would be financed in one year.

Mr. NORRIS. That would be along the line the Senator from Oklahoma suggested some time ago, and I agree with the suggestion, but that would mean the issuing of bonds very likely.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is true.

Mr. NORRIS. I can see the viewpoint of the Senator from Pennsylvania when he answers the Senator from Maryland, saying that appropriations for rivers and harbors could be cut out with less effect on the Military Establishment than any other thing. I have no doubt the Senator is right about that. At the same time, unless we do follow the suggestion of the Senator from Oklahoma and lift these things out and put them in some appropriation for which we are going to issue bonds, I do not see that there would be any benefit in doing it. On the other hand, the officers' training camp, or the citizens' training camp—I do not know which is the right term, or whether there are two—

Mr. REED. There are two—one the Reserve Officers' Training Corps and the other the citizens' military training camps.

Mr. NORRIS. It seems to me this must appeal to the Senator from Pennsylvania, as the Senator from Maryland said it appealed to him, and it seems to me it must appeal to everybody, that if we are going to be short of money and can not do all the things we want to do now, we could stop these training camps for a year without any material injury to the set-up of the Army, as I understand it. It would be different from cutting out the officers. I can see that point quite easily, because if we wanted the officers back we probably could not get them, but taking out these training camps temporarily, the Army would go on just the same. In case of difficulty the organization of the Army would be unimpaired and there would not be anything lacking, except that the citizens who go to the training camps to be trained would not get the training. That, I think, we ought to be willing to surrender in these times of distress, when we need the money for other things.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to me?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I just want to say to the Senator from Nebraska that I entertained exactly the same views he has expressed. I did not see how we would get very much by a suspension for one year, especially when we know that already for this year we are more than $2,600,000,000 in the hole. Therefore I made a motion in the committee considering the military appropriations to strike out this language for citizens' military training camps. I got one vote, and that was my own; that was all.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator was fortunate-

Mr. McKELLAR. To get my own vote?

Mr. NORRIS. To get his own vote, with such a terrible majority against him.

Mr. McKELLAR. I suppose so.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, the citizens' military training camps item is found on page 62. It is not involved in the question we are expected to act upon now.

I have from the staff a rough statement of the present duties of the 12,000 officers of the Regular Army, and that distribution is as follows: With troops of the Regular Army, including overhead at camps and posts, 7,000.

At arsenals and depots, 500.

At general hospitals, 300.

At the service schools, including the War College, 1,500.

With civilian components; that is to say, the National Guard, the Reserve Officers' Training Corps, and the reserve, 1,600.

General overhead, including on duty in the War Department here, corps area headquarters, and so on; on river and harbor work, on flood-control work, and so on, 1,100.

Total, 12,000.

Mr. President, there is one other matter which ought to be borne in mind in considering this proposed reduction in the number of officers, and that is the investment we already have in the 2,000 officers. About 35 per cent of the 2,000 in all likelihood will be West Pointers. We have spent on each one of them during the four years he was at West Point over $9,000, and there, it will be seen, we would suffer a loss of investment of $6,000,000, which we would have put into the education of those officers, in order to save about $3,000,-000 on their pay.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Would it not be much more advantageous to the Government to reduce the number of appointees to the Military Academy, rather than drop these highly trained and experienced officers?

Mr. REED. I think so.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. If we are going to make a saving in the number of officers, the Senator would prefer a saving by reducing the number of new officers, rather than by dropping the experienced and trained officers?

Mr. REED. Very much so. After all, a new officer just out of West Point is a pretty green specimen in many ways, necessarily. He has not had any experience in the command of men, which is the most important thing in the training of a rounded-out officer. A West Pointer necessarily has had practically no experience in that regard.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, on that very point, is it not a fact that we have such a large number of officers in the Army now that, on the average, they get with troops only about once in six years?

Mr. REED. Oh, no, Mr. President. On the average they spend about seven months per officer per year with troops, and under the Manchu law they have to go back to troops after every four years of possibly staff duty. So that with practically no exception the officers on the promotion list are constantly having experience with troops.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, has not the Manchu law been repealed?

Mr. REED. No; in effect it has not.

Mr. McKELLAR. I thought in effect it had been. That is my construction of the act.

Mr. REED. My impression is that, whether it is due to the Manchu law or some successor provision, no officer is permitted to remain away from troops more than four years.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator vield?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I merely wish to direct the attention of the Senator to the source of the information which I obtained, which was a statement made by Representative Collins, chairman of the Subcommittee on Appropriations in the House. On page 9936 of the Congressional Record of May 10, I find this:

Now, then, do you not know that we do not need more than 2,500 officers for the troops we have? A man is lucky if he has an opportunity to serve with troops every six or seven years, and, therefore, every year he is away from them he is going backward rather than forward, and we are permitting the entire mass to become more inefficient day by day.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I should say that whoever gave Mr. Collins that information did not know anything at all about the facts. We could not possibly officer 118,750 enlisted men with 2,500 officers, as he suggests there. It could not possibly be done. As 7,000 out of 12,000 officers of the Army are constantly on duty with troops, it is obvious that at least seven-twelfths of the time—seven months out of each year, on the average—an officer is serving with troops

When we exclude from the total number the 1,500 who are at the service schools acquiring professional fitness through intense study there, we can see that for the balance the proportion of the time spent with troops is that much greater

I can not think of any less effective economy than this proposal to save $2,900,000, net, at the expense of the retirement of 2,000 perfectly competent officers of the Army. That is not economy; it is waste; waste of the most shocking kind; and if and when war comes again—and we have had a war in every generation of our history—we shall need those 2,000 officers, and we shall need them desperately, because a trained officer is the one thing that can not be improvised in war time in a hurry.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. FRAZIER. Can not these retired officers be called back into service at any time?

Mr. REED. They can be.

Mr. FRAZIER. Why does the Senator say we would lose them? Are they going to die because they are retired?

Mr. REED. No; they are going to become rusty, just as all of us who served in the World War became rusty. We have lost about 10 per cent of our efficiency every year that has passed. The retired officer does not keep up with the march of events.

Mr. FRAZIER. If the Senator's theory is correct, that it is going to be the young men who are retired, it does not seem to me that it will affect the efficiency so fast.

Mr. REED. I do not mean that they will lose their physical health—not at all—but they will lose their professional knowledge. They will not keep abreast of the times, and things are changing faster now than they have ever changed in peace time. All the ordnance is improved. An officer who went out of the Army 10 years ago is almost an ignoramus about the weapons that are used to-day. I know, because I feel my own loss of efficiency in that respect.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, I can not see much difference between this appropriation bill and other appropriation bills for the Army since I have been here. They all have had practically the same appropriations for buying more horses for the Cavalry, and very little for tanks, very little for the Air Service, very little for the Chemical Warfare Service. It is the same old "bunk," the militia two miles and a half an hour, and all that sort of thing, that we have always had.

Mr. REED. It may be "bunk," but the Senator would be paying his taxes to the Kaiser to-day if it had not been for men who thought differently.

Mr. FRAZIER. Of course, there is a difference of opinion about that. I do not agree with the Senator from Pennsylvania in that particular at all.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. Frazier].

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, we should have a quorum, it seems to me, if we are to vote.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

LEGISLATIVE APPROPRIATIONS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11267) making appropriations for the legislative branch of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, and for other purposes, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. JONES. I move that the Senate insist on its amendments, agree to the conference asked by the House, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. Jones, Mr. Smoot, Mr. Hale, Mr. Broussard, and Mr. Bratton conferees on the part of the Senate.

WAR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 11897) making appropriations for the military and non-military activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, and for other purposes.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, the vote about to be taken is to reconsider the vote by which the Senate amendment on page 8, line 24, inserting "not to exceed an average of 12,000," was agreed to. That means an addition of 2,000 Army officers who have been stricken out by the House provision. I want to make just a brief comment on the statement made by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Reed].

The difference between the regular salary of these 2,000 officers and their retirement pay at three-quarters of their regular pay amounts to a saving of $1,055,875. That would mean a saving per man of $527.93. I call attention to the fact that that is more than the average net earning of the average farm family in the United States. It is $1.44 per day. The army of war veterans now gathered in Washington would be glad to take jobs right now, practically every one of them that is able-bodied would be willing to work, at $1.44 per day, which is the saving that will be made on these 2,000 Army officers per day.

More than that, of the retired pay—which I admit is too much and ought to be cut down—the average pay is $1,690.31. That is more than the gross income of the average farm family in the United States last year. These men would be taken out of active service and put on the retired list. That does not mean they are barred out of the Army. They can be called back at any time their services may be needed. That is why they are kept on the retired list. This would mean a saving of $1,055,875.

Mr. President, I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, as I understand it, through the economy program nothing has been taken from the Army officers at all.

Mr. REED. Oh, yes, Mr. President; the furlough plan we adopted last night will cut down their active pay and their retired pay.

Mr. WHEELER. It will furlough the Army officers as well as others?

Mr. REED. Yes; it affects them just the same as it affects us.

Let me say that a vote "yea" is in favor of a reconsideration and therefore in favor of reducing the number of Army officers. A vote "nay," which I shall cast, means the retention of the present number of 12,000 Army officers.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from North Dakota to reconsider, upon which he has demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GLENN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. Long], who is necessarily absent. Being advised that if present he would vote as I shall vote, I feel at liberty to vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. HATFIELD (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. Morrison]. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote. If permitted to vote, I would vote "nay."

Mr. JONES (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. Swanson]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Colorado [Mr. Waterman] and vote "nay."

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. Stephens]. In his absence, not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote. If I were permitted to vote, I would vote "nay."

Mr. SCHALL (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. Black], who is unavoidably absent. In his absence I withhold my vote. If I were permitted to vote, I would vote "nay."

Mr. TYDINGS (when his name was called). On this vote I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. Metcalf]. I understand that if he were present he would vote the same as I shall vote, and therefore I am free to vote. I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BARKLEY. Has the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. Dickinson] voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. That Senator has not voted.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am paired with him, and not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote. If permitted to vote, I would vote "nay."

Mr. BINGHAM (after having voting in the negative). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. Glass], who is necessarily absent. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. Metcalf], and permit my vote to stand.

Mr. KING. I have a pair with the senior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. Norbeck], and in his absence withhold my vote.

Mr. WAGNER. My colleague the senior Senator from New York [Mr. Copeland] is unavoidably absent. Upon this vote he is paired with the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. FESS].

Mr. SHIPSTEAD (after having voted in the affirmative). On this vote I am paired with the junior Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN], and therefore, withdraw my vote.

Mr. McNARY. I desire to announce that the Senator from Delaware [Mr. Hastings], who is necessarily absent, is paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY].

Mr. SHEPPARD. I desire to announce that the Senator from Arizona [Mr. Hayden], the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. Bulow], and the Senator from Illinois [Mr. Lewis] are detained on official business.

I also desire to announce that the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND], the Senator from Alabama [Mr.

the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. Long], and the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY] are necessarily out of the city.

I also announce that the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. Swanson] is absent in attendance upon the disarmament conference at Geneva.

The result was announced—yeas 16, nays 51, as follows:

So Mr. Frazier's motion to reconsider was rejected. The VICE PRESIDENT. The next amendment of the committee will be stated.

The next amendment was, on page 9, line 22, after the word "allowances," to strike out "$5,122,479" and insert "$5,928,389, and the rental and subsistence allowances for the fiscal year 1933 shall be the same as for the fiscal year 1932, subject to such reduction therein as may be necessary under the provisions of section 102, Part II, of the legislative appropriation-act for the fiscal year 1933," so as to read:

Subsistence allowances, $5,928,389, and the rental and subsistence allowances for the fiscal year 1933 shall be the same as for the fiscal year 1932, subject to such reduction therein as may be necessary under the provisions of section 102, Part II, of the legislative appropriation act for the fiscal year 1933.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I want to call the attention of the Senate to the report on this bill which states the net reduction reported by the Senate committee as being $3,007,633. I want also to call attention to the fact that substantially none of the saving is made in the appropriations for the military activities of the Army; but practically the entire saving is made by reducing the appropriation for river and harbor improvements by more than $5,000,000; in other words, only the appropriations for nonmilitary activities are reduced, while some of the appropriations for military activities are increased very considerably, over $2,000,000, as I read the report.

At such a time as this, it seems to me we ought not to increase the appropriations for military activities provided for in the bill; we ought to reduce them. I want to call attention to how these appropriations have increased for

In 1916 the Congress appropriated for the Army $164,546,-866.95; in 1924, long after the war, we appropriated $348,-629,778.55 for the Army; in 1925 we appropriated $361,887,-888.84 for the Army; in 1926 we appropriated $355,072,225.92 for the Army; in 1927 we appropriated $318,909,096.28 for the Army; in 1928 we appropriated $298,999,534.09 for the Army; in 1929 the appropriation was increased by more than 25 per cent; it was increased to $416,901,546.42; in 1930 it was increased to $453,524,973.41; in 1931 to $478,418,974.73; and in 1932 to $445,773,235. Now in the pending bill it is proposed to appropriate $389,578,513, notwithstanding the fact that prices of practically all articles entering into the item of subsistence of the Army, indeed the prices of everything incident to the maintenance of the Army, are down

BLACK], the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. Morrison], something like 50 per cent. In this bill, however, the appropriations for military activities are substantially the same as in the bill as passed by the House.

Mr. President, I want to call attention to the figures; and if Senators will follow me a moment with the bill, they can see for themselves-

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. KING. I ask the Senator if he will again state, if he has the figures separated, the appropriation for the military activities of the Army for 1932?

Mr. McKELLAR. That item is found in the report. As I say, the appropriations in this bill for military activitiesthat is, activities pertaining purely to the Army itself-are not reduced but are increased; but, in order to show an apparent decrease in the appropriation, $5,000,000 plus was cut off the river and harbor appropriation, and therefore, taking that into account, there is a reduction of $3,000,000. As a matter of fact, however, the appropriations for the military activities of the Army have been increased over those provided by the House rather than decreased.

On page 20 of the bill, under the head of Quartermaster Corps, there is an appropriation for the purchase of subsistence supplies. There is not a Member of the Senate who does not know that subsistence supplies can be purchased all the way from 25 to 50 per cent less than they could a year or two ago. I think, by all means, there ought to be a reduction of at least 25 per cent in that item; and if it shall be necessary, I am going to propose an amendment reducing that item to $9,172,242.

I turn to page 23, to the item for clothing and equipage of the Army. There is no reason in the world why that appropriation may not be reduced 25 per cent and the Army get along just as well.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator from Tennessee yield to me?

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes.

Mr. REED. That appropriation has been reduced 25 per cent. It was eight and a half million for the present fiscal

Mr. McKELLAR. It has not been reduced 25 per cent below the appropriation made by the House, and I am talking now about the House bill. The House provides for an appropriation of $6,776,519. There is no reason in the world why subsistence supplies can not be bought for 25 per cent under that sum, in my judgment, and I expect to propose an amendment to that effect.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, does the Senator think that the cost of clothing has gone down 25 per cent since the 20th of May, when the House passed this bill?

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, no; but I think that the House did not reduce the appropriations sufficiently, and I think that, as compared with a year or so ago, the cost of many kinds of clothing has gone down 50 per cent. I think Senators will realize when they recall the cost of their own clothes, except in the case of very unusual clothes, that the price has gone down at least 50 per cent. As to the particular item to which I was referring, prices have gone down at least 25 per cent, and, in my opinion, the appropriation carried by the bill as it passed the House should be reduced that much.

I turn next to the item on page 23, "Incidental expenses of the Army." In that item I think a reduction of 10 per cent ought to be made.

On page 28, under the item "Military posts," including the improvement of military posts and building construction, in view of the extraordinary expenditures of last year, surely we ought to cut the appropriation down. We ought to slow down on those expenditures.

I turn next to page 30.
Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes.

Mr. REED. The item the Senator has just spoken of, expenses of military posts, for which two and a quarter million dollars are proposed to be appropriated, has been reduced from $15,864,000, carried in the appropriation bill for the current year.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is exactly why we ought to reduce the amount below that provided by the House. In 1931, as I stated a few moments ago, we spent for the Army the enormous sum of $478,000,000, and a very considerable amount of that appropriation was used for the purpose of building posts, and for the fiscal year 1932, $445,000,000 was appropriated, and now it is undertaken to appropriate $2,250,000 for construction at military posts. I am going to move to strike that out and insert in lieu thereof $1,687,500.

I turn next to the item for "barracks and quarters, and other buildings and utilities," which is found on page 28, and for which $13,595,017 is appropriated. In a period of distress such as that now existing we are proposing to appropriate this enormous sum for "barracks and quarters and other buildings and utilities." I say that appropriation ought to be cut at least 10 per cent, and it would be perfectly proper if it were cut 25 per cent, or even 50 per cent, and the work slowed down on these utilities.

As a matter of fact the Army itself has recommended, as I understand, the discontinuance of a number of military posts. Yet we are building barracks and quarters at a proposed cost this year of $13,000,000 plus. The testimony before our committee the other day—

Mr. REED. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. McKellar. I will yield in just a moment. The testimony before our committee the other day was that a post in North Dakota, Wyoming, or some other State in the West—I have forgotten the exact location—a splendid post, with excellent permanent brick buildings, had been recommended by the War Department to be discontinued entirely. Senators representing that particular State came before the committee and testified that it was a perfectly splendid post, a permanent post, needing practically no repairs; and yet we are abandoning posts of that kind and proposing to spend this year on other posts for quarters, and so forth, $13,000,000; and much more than that, as the Senator from Pennsylvania has said, was spent last year. It is a profligate waste of the people's money.

Let me call attention to the fact that the year before the war—and, by the way, it was in anticipation of the war, and I was serving on the Military Affairs Committee in the House of Representatives at the time and know the facts to be as I state them—we appropriated $164,000,000 for the Army, under a reorganization act then but lately passed, but in preparation of war; and yet now, when there is not a sign of war anywhere, in this bill it is proposed to appropriate the enormous sum of $389,000,000 plus. It seems to me it is inexcusable. Millions of our people are out of employment, and yet we are recklessly and extravagantly spending the people's money for war purposes.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. REED. The item for barracks and quarters does not include one single cent for the building of barracks or the building of quarters. It includes such items as fuel and repairs, and that sort of thing.

Mr. McKELLAR. Heaven only knows what it includes, but we all know that it includes a $13,000,000 appropriation from a bankrupt Treasury.

Mr. REED. Very good, Mr. President. But, if Heaven wants to know exactly what it includes, it will find the information on page 462 of the House hearings.

Mr. McKELLAR. All right. Well, I will let Heaven examine into it.

On page 34 there is the appropriation for the Signal Service of the Army. That ought to be reduced at least 10 per cent under the House appropriation. Instead of that, the amount was increased slightly over that appropriated by the House. There is not any necessity for these enormous appropriations.

Again, on page 37 is the appropriation for the Air Corps of the Army, $25,439,131. We ought not to expend that vast sum upon the Air Corps of the Army. It ought to be reduced. I am going to offer an amendment to reduce it 10 per cent, and it ought to be reduced even more.

I come next to page 44, ordnance service and supplies of the Army, under the Ordnance Department, where the bill carries $9,832,715 for building new guns and supplies, including necessary traveling expenses. By all means that should be reduced 25 per cent. It is useless to build guns that will be obsolete when we get into a war. No country in the world is now able to go to war, for lack of finances; and if we spend all this money now for ordnance, it will be out of date when the next war comes on. I am going to ask that that be reduced.

I come next to page 46, Chemical Warfare Service. We have agents in Europe right now trying to abolish chemical warfare as being inhuman; and yet we are appropriating this year for Chemical Warfare Service $1,222,000. That ought to be reduced, and I shall offer an amendment to reduce that 10 per cent.

Again, on page 49 is an item of $2,338,136 for seacoast defenses. Those are very proper. We ought to have them; but surely we ought not to be expending to the very limit out of a Treasury that is empty.

Again, on page 50, there is an authorization of interchange of appropriations. Some time ago the Senator from Pennsylvania offered a resolution, to apply to all appropriation bills, providing that 15 per cent of any appropriation could be used interchangeably by the head of the department and transferred from one function to another. I was against it; but we agreed in the Interior Department bill and four other bills that were passed that 12 per cent could be so used interchangeably this year, when we were cutting down appropriations. I thought probably that would be the better way. Now the Senator brings in a 15 per cent provision of the kind in this bill. In other words, instead of bringing about a reduction in the military activities of this bill, there was an increase in the military activities of this bill. It ought not to have been agreed to; and I am going to move to change that from 15 per cent to 12 per cent.

On page 53 is an item for arms, uniforms, equipment, and so forth, for field service of the National Guard, $5,886,849. We just continued to appropriate and reappropriate, year by year, that item. It ought to be reduced at least 10 per cent, and I am going to offer an amendment to that effect.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. Will the Senator tell me why we should appropriate anything for the National Guard during these times?

Mr. McKELLAR. It seems to me it could be suspended. I think it ought to be suspended. There is not a sign or a threat of war anywhere. No other nation could afford to go to war with us, and in the present state of our Treasury we could not afford to go to war with any other nation. We have a deficit, the first 11 months of this year, of $2,700,000,000. We have a deficit of over $4,000,000,000 in the last two years, and we are putting additional taxes on the people now to the extent of a billion dollars. We are not in a position to go to war, and no other nation is in a position to go to war. Why keep up such a tremendous pressure of military preparedness?

It seems to me it is wholly out of place. It seems to me that we ought to cut these appropriations. We ought to reduce them. We have reduced them in other departments. We reduced them in the Interior Department, in the State Department, in the Labor Department, in the Commerce Department, in the Department of Justice. Why should we treat the military part of our Government better than we have treated these other departments? Why make fish of one and fowl of another? There is no good reason for it. The only reason in the world is the pomp and show of a great standing Army.

We have 118,000 men in the Army, or had that many last year. I believe we have 119,000 this year, besides the officers. Why is it necessary to keep up such a great army in times of profound peace, when nations are not able to go to war even if they were disposed to do so?

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. FRAZIER. The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] stated that in this bill there is $290,000,000 for the Army. Great Britain's appropriations for the British Army this year are $127,525,560, less than half of our appropriation.

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes. It is absolutely indefensible to be appropriating $389,000,000 of the people's money out of a Treasury where there is no money, when we are borrowing day by day, when we are leading a hand-to-mouth existence with our Government, when we are raising taxes enormously on the American people. There is no reason for making these great increases-and they are increases of at least two million, and maybe more, in the military activities of this Government over what the House provided. There is no reason in the world to build up a great army of 119,000 men and keep it in the pink of perfection, spending more than double what our neighbor, Great Britain, is spending. There is no reason in the world for our keeping up such an army. It is a willful, woeful waste of the people's money.

. Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President-

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield to the Senator from Montana. Mr. WHEELER. I notice here an item of $1,178,238 for procurement of forage, bedding, and so forth, for animals used by the National Guard. That is on page 51, line 10. Then I find that the next item is one of $2,428,553 for compensation of help for care of materials, animals, and equipment.

Mr. McKELLAR. Those items have just been recurring in every bill, and they are not considered by the committees of either House. The department sends them in, and we just agree to them. We do not go over them. We deal only with amendments before the committee. We do not deal with the perennial appropriations; and this, as I understand, is a perennial appropriation that has been made ever since the National Guard has been aided by the Federal Government,

Of course, I see that while we are providing bedding for the animals of the Army we are doing nothing for men who have not beds and have not the food with which to live. I think it is little short of outrageous so to legislate.

Now, Mr. President, I come to the next item, which is the item of Reserve Officers' Training Corps, under the heading of "Citizens' military training." If we were about to get into a war, if there were any threat of war, it would be very well to train our citizens in this way. It is a good thing, anyhow, for the citizens who take part in it. It is a very excellent thing. There is no reason why it should not be done in normal times. It is a very excellent thing; but with our Treasury in its present condition to spend $4,079,484 for this purpose is inexcusable. The item ought to be stricken out entirely for one year.

Surely if we are going to reduce the salaries of the clerks of the Government-and I am in favor of it; I believe it is a necessity-in the same way I believe it is a necessity to suspend this item for one year. It is not necessary. It is a willful waste of the people's money, and I do not understand how the taxpayers will stand for it. I think if they knew how it was, they would rise up almost as one man and not stand for this willful waste, this woeful waste of the people's money.

The next item I come to is citizens' military training camps, $2,603,624. That ought to be stricken out. It ought to be suspended for a year. I would rather suspend it than abolish it entirely. I think probably that would be the proper way to do-to suspend it-and it ought to be done.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield to the Senator

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I should like to call the attention of the Senator to the statement made by General Summerall, when he retired as Chief of Staff, concerning the citizens' military training camps. He said:

It is apparent that the camps do not directly serve to promote any military objective. The chief benefit to the Army lies in the increased confidence in its personnel on the part of the civilian population which has followed from the many contacts incident to the conduct of the camps.

I should also like to direct the Senator's attention to the fact that it has been stated from an authoritative source that 39,061 boys in the citizens' military training camps provided only 10 reserve officers as a result of their training.

Mr. McKELLAR. Well, 10 officers for $4,079,000 carried over a period of a number of years is doing pretty well, is it not? Does not the Senator think it is?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I think it is a pretty high price to Mr. McKELLAR. It is a pretty high price; but as the Senator knows, the Government loves to pay high prices. It would rather pay a high price than to pay a low price for anything it buys or anything that it creates.

Mr. President, I want to say that I think this is very excellent physical training. I agree with the Senator from Wisconsin in thinking that it does not do the country any good as a means of national defense. I think it is a very delightful vacation in the summer time for men with a military trend of mind. I think if we had ample money in the Treasury there could be not very much objection to giving these men this sum of money; but with the present depleted condition of our Treasury we ought not thus to spend the people's money, and I am going to move to strike out that provision entirely.

I next come to ordnance equipment for rifle ranges for civilian instruction, where $100,000 is appropriated for arms. ammunition, and targets for our rifle-range practice. That is wholly unnecessary at this time. The senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. Brookhart] would disagree with me, of course, because he is a crack shot, and, of course, the crack shots in the country like to go to these places. It is a very popular ' thing for them to do at Government expense. At a time when the Government is well equipped with money and the Treasury is full, it may be that we ought to agree to it, but it ought not to be agreed to now.

I believe that is the last provision. In these provisions there are 14 items, which aggregate a little over $20,000,000. I think the bill ought to go back to the committee with instructions to reduce the appropriations 10 per cent.

If the furlough plan produces anything like the amount that has been claimed for it, the furlough reductions, with this $23,000,000, would reduce this bill about 10 per cent, in accordance with the others.

I do not believe the furlough plan is going to reduce the expenditures of the Government by $40,000,000. I doubt it very seriously. But, assuming that it will reduce the expenditures, as its advocates claim it will, some $80,000,000, it would then be about 10 per cent, with these various reductions which I have indicated.

Under these circumstances, I move now to recommit the bill to the Committee on Appropriations, with instructions to reduce the appropriations 10 per cent below those made by the House.

Mr. REED. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HATFIELD in the chair). The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Couzens Ashurst Cutting Bailey Bankhead Davis Dill Barbour Fletcher Barkley Bingham Frazier George Goldsborough Blaine Borah Gore Hale Bratton Harrison Hatfield Bulkley Byrnes Capper Caraway Hawes Hebert Carey Hull Cohen Johnson Connally Coolidge . Costigan Jones Kean Kendrick

King La Follette Logan McGill McKellar McNary Norris Oddie Patterson Pittman Robinson, Ark. Robinson, Ind.

Schall

Sheppard Shipstead

Shortridge Smith Stelwer Thomas, Idaho Thomas, Okla. Townsend Trammell Tydings Vandenberg Wagner Walcott Walsh, Mass. Walsh, Mont. Watson Wheeler White

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Seventy-three Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, we are about to vote on the motion of the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. Mc-Kellar] to recommit the bill to the Committee on Appropriations with instructions to reduce it 10 per cent.

Mr. McKELLAR. Below the House appropriations.

Mr. REED. Below the House appropriations. I am not going to take up time in discussing it; I want only to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that that reduction has already been more than made by the House itself. The appropriation for this year was $445,000,000. The House has cut under that some $53,000,000. The bill, as it is reported now to the Senate, cuts under that $56,000,000. The furlough plan reduces that further by another nine or ten million. So the total cut under last year's bill of $445,000,000 is already $65,000,000, or about 15 per cent, and the cuts in the military items are 17 per cent. We have cut it to the bone in every direction.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator will recall that the House in like manner reduced the appropriations for the other departments. I do not remember the exact percentage, but they reduced the appropriations very largely under last year and under the present recommendations for the Interior Department, the State Department, the Commerce Department, the Treasury Department, the Post Office Department, and the Department of Justice. They reduced all the appropriations under the estimates of last year and under the estimates of the Budget. So we would just be applying the same rule we applied to other departments if we took the action I have suggested.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Pennsylvania yield?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. BLAINE. Earlier in the day I was called from the Chamber to attend a meeting of the Committee on Banking and Currency about the time when the Senator from Pennsylvania was discussing the increases and decreases in the pending appropriation bill. The information I desire may have been given to the Senate, but I do not have it because of my necessary absence.

I note from the committee report that the appropriation as reported by the Senate committee is $56,194,722 below the appropriation for 1932.

Mr. REED. That is correct.

Mr. BLAINE. Will the Senator advise me the amount of reduction in the appropriation for military activities?

Mr. REED. The amount carried in the bill for military activities is $290,000,000, which is 17 per cent under the same item for last year.

Mr. BLAINE. It is 17 per cent less than the appropriation of last year?

Mr. REED. Yes. I do not carry in my head the exact figure for last year, but it is easy enough to calculate.

Mr. BLAINE. The calculation would be made upon the basis of 17 per cent of $56,000,000, the total reduction. I assume?

Mr. REED. I have the exact figures now and can give them to the Senator. The amount of $290,000,000 this year is a reduction of $46,000,000 in the military items. The amount for military items last year was $336,000,000. In 1931 it was $347,000,000, so it has been cut down from $347,000,000 for 1931, to $336,000,000 for the present year, and is $290,000,000 for the coming fiscal year.

Mr. BLAINE. Will the Senator also give me the information as to the total amount of the decrease for nonmilitary activities?

Mr. REED. For nonmilitary activities, in 1931 the appropriation was $197,000,000; in the fiscal year 1932 it was $123,000,000, and in the present bill it is $99,000,000.

Mr. BLAINE. There is a reduction of about $25,000,000 for nonmilitary activities?

Mr. REED. About twenty-three to twenty-four million.

Mr. BLAINE. I notice in the report, under decrease, the item, "Total decrease, military activities." I assume that is under the bill as it passed the House.

Mr. REED. That is correct.

Mr. BLAINE. A little over $656,000, and the total decrease for nonmilitary activities under the bill as it passed the House in round figures is $6,272,000, leaving a net increase for military activities over the bill as it passed the House of $3,129,145, and a net decrease in nonmilitary activities as compared with the House bill of $6,136,778.

Mr. REED. That is correct. The reason for the increase over the bill as it passed the House for military activities is due entirely to the restoration of the 2,000 officers, the provision for whom the House struck from the bill.

Mr. BLAINE. I thank the Senator.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the Senator from Wisconsin, if he will permit, may be interested in knowing, however, that in 1923—and I have the figures from the office of the Chief of Finance of this date—the appropriations for military purposes were $274,802,000, in 1924 they were $260,-867,000, in 1925 they were $268,974,000, in 1926 they were $271,092,000, in 1927 they were $274,000,000, in 1928 they were $297,000,000, in 1930 they were $329,000,000. So it is apparent that from the years to which I first challenged attention there has been a very large increase in the military expenses of our Government.

Mr. REED. Very largely accounted for by the expenditures in carrying out the Air Corps program, which is now about completed.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I understand the bill as reported to the Senate by the committee reduces the aggregate amount carried in the bill by $21,785,249 below the estimate.

Mr. REED. Yes.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. There has been added to that amount what the Senator from Pennsylvania stated to be $9,000,000 on account of furloughs, which makes the total reduction below the estimate about $30,000,000.

Mr. REED. That is true.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. REED. I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I hope the motion of the Senator from Tennessee will be adopted. It is not a question of how much we have reduced in the past. It is a question of being able to reduce the bill to the very minimum now. We have been told from the very inception of this session of Congress that we must balance the Budget, that we must reduce our expenditures. I am not one of those who want to cut down the Army under ordinary circumstances to the very minimum. I think in many instances we have not been very generous in our treatment of the Army, but I do think at this particular time there are items in the bill that could be dispensed with. I have particular reference to the citizens' training camps and the National Guard items.

The bill contains a provision for procurement of forage, bedding, and so forth, for the National Guard, $1,178,238; compensation of help for care of materials, animals, and equipment, $2,428,553; expenses camps of instruction, field and supplemental training, including medical and hospital treatment authorized by law, $8,078,000; expenses selected officers and enlisted men, military-service schools, including medical and hospital treatment authorized by law, $319,000; for pay of property and disbursing officers of the United States, $79,800; for general expenses, equipment and instruction, National Guard, including medical and hospital treatment authorized by law, $674,984; for expenses of enlisted men of the Regular Army on duty with the National Guard, including the hiring of quarters in kind, $480,000; for pay of National Guard—armory drills—$11,584,868.

Who on the floor of the Senate would tell me, in times of depression, when the people of the country are going hungry and suffering and walking the streets, when they are flooding the Capital of the country at the present time, that we could not dispense with these items, amounting in all, I should judge, to probably $20,000,000?

Then we have arms, uniforms, equipment, and so forth, for field service of the National Guard, $5,887,000. Then there is the matter of military training camps. Frankly, it seems to me that to set up these military training camps at this time, when we have so much suffering in the country, is the wrong thing to do.

Ordinarily I have no particular objection to them; but it is wrong to get a group of business men to go out and have a vacation and have it paid for by the Government of the United States when there are men in our galleries at this moment, men out here on the streets of our city who served in the war and are suffering because of the fact that they can not get food enough to eat, and yet a deaf ear will be turned to them and not anything done for them. We are not going to give them any work and we are not going to pay them anything of any kind or character. When it comes to cutting the wages of Government employees we talk about economy and balancing the Budget, and tears will roll down our cheeks as we plead for economy and to keep us upon the gold standard. But when these men come here knocking at our door a deaf ear is turned to them; but money will be spent and appropriated lavishly for a lot of nonessentials.

Mr. President, we ought to take out of the bill every single dollar that is not needed absolutely for the upkeep of the Army. We ought not to spend a dollar in these times for a citizens' training camp. We ought not to appropriate money lavishly as we are in this bill for the National Guard. There is no excuse for it whatever. If Senators are sincere about the reduction of Government expenses, then here is the opportunity to take out the nonessentials. If Senators are sincere about balancing the Budget, here is the opportunity to help balance the Budget by cutting down expenses. If Senators are sincere in the cries they have made upon the floor of the Senate heretofore about balancing the Budget and cutting down expenses and economizing, here is the opportunity.

I appreciate the fact that this body will probably not comply with the motion of the Senator from Tennessee. I have not any doubt but what the Republican orators will go to the country this fall and say they have economized in every possible way they could. I have not any doubt they will say that but for the Democrats in the House and in the Senate they would have cut down and economized still more. But somebody will ask them, "Why was it that you appropriated money for the citizens' training camps while men were sitting in your galleries hungry, without a place to sleep and without any food in their stomachs, men who went across the water and served their Nation, and yet you were turning them down? You were not even willing to appropriate money to furnish them a place to sleep, and yet you were appropriating money for citizens' training camps, so that a group of business men could go out and have a vacation and be fed and fêted and trained at the expense of the Government of the United States of America."

I say in all sincerity that I fear for what is going to happen in this country if we continue this sort of a policy. I fear for what is going to happen in this country unless we treat all classes of citizens of the United States of America in exactly the same way. It can not go on. Senators may think they can go on with it, but they can not do it, because of the fact that the people of the country, those suffering upon the farms of the country, those dependent upon the Red Cross in the Middle West and Southwest, those men who are seeing their wives and their children go without clothes. their schools being closed because of lack of funds, will not stand for it. These men who are walking the streets because they can not get any employment, men who came back from war with their arms off and their legs off, many of them, and others who served their country to the best of their ability and were willing to give up their lives, will have a deaf ear turned to them, and yet Congress will appropriate money for nonessentials. I say it is not fair, it is not just, and sooner or later if we continue in that policy some one will have to suffer for it.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, it is perfectly evident we are not going to approach balancing the Budget. The economy bill would not have balanced the Budget if it had been passed in full. However, it was reduced considerably to a saving of about $121,000,000, leaving at least $300,000,000 to be provided. Because the Senate would not agree to a tax upon beer, which would have raised $300,000,000 or $400,000,000, we are now forced to curtail every essential operation of the Government.

We read in the papers every day where this Senator or that Representative, who would not come out against this farce we call national prohibition, has been defeated. In the strongholds of prohibition, one after another, they have gone down to defeat. In the face of that, we have the effrontery and, I say with no disrespect, the ignorance to put $1,200,000,000 of increased taxation on an impoverished people while crime goes unchecked and while the one thing which would yield a great deal of revenue contributes nothing to the welfare of the Government. We may need the Army before this situation is over, and our own action here will make the Army more needed than any condition now existing in the Government.

I am going to vote to eliminate some of the things from this bill, not because I would have done it had we balanced the Budget and furnished the money to run the Government but because, through our lack of courage in taking hold of the prohibition farce, which every man with good intelligence knows is a farce, there is no other alternative left but to walk into these services with a broadax and slash them right and left, regardless of the emergency in which we find ourselves.

I want to serve notice now that when the relief bill comes before the Senate I intend to offer the beer amendment again, because it is absolutely asinine to appropriate $2,000,-000,000 or $3,000,000,000 when we have an unbalanced Budget and project those bonds on a falling market, with fear and chaos everywhere, and not provide the means to pay them, to furnish the interest and a sinking fund from some sound source of taxation which will stabilize what little is left of property and wealth and security and happiness in the country. I hope when that time comes we can rise above the silly organization which has dominated and brought fear into the hearts of Members of both branches of Congress and realize that we are in a great national emergency, that here is a matter which does not violate the tenets of the Constitution, and which will furnish the revenue to run the Government which we can not get from any other source.

Yesterday we read of 3,000 men in a mob in Detroit walking into a factory and demanding work. This is summer time, Mr. President. People are not cold now as they will be next fall and winter. Last fall and winter a mob in Detroit hunting employment brought on a serious condition, and four or five of them lost their lives and many were injured, some of them very seriously. And yet with crime unchecked, with graft permeating the whole prohibition structure from top to bottom, with liquor to be had at any crossroads in the country, with men like Al Capone bilking millions from the pockets of the people, with the Government getting no taxation because of the refusal of Congress to tax that product which would furnish enough revenue to run the Government, we have got to go to our poor little Army, already thirteenth in size among the nations of the world. We have to go to the Federal employees' salaries, already in many cases too low. We have to put $1,200,000,-000 more taxes on the backs of the people, taxing their electric current, their entrance to the cheap moving-picture theaters, their chewing gum, their radios, their automobile tires, and all the rest because we are afraid of the Anti-Saloon League. That is the only reason. Of course, we may be defeated at the next election, and that is the only reason why we do it.

A great many of us are going to be defeated in the next election, in my judgment, because an aroused populace is not going to stand this intolerable condition of public affairs. There is not a dry in this body who can not vote to put a tax on beer without violating the Constitution under which we live. The legalization of beer containing 2.75 per cent of alcohol by weight, according to the best testimony it is possible to obtain, would not transgress the Constitution, and yet we whittle here and whittle there, cut down charwomen's salaries, and cut down the salaries of employees who have large families and who are not getting $1,200 a year, simply because we will not tax this one thing that exists everywhere. Then, to make greater our hypocrisy, to add to this farce we tax wort, grape concentrates, and all the rest of the things that go into illegal beer. I say it is an outrage; and I am wondering how long those who are paying the bulk of the taxes in this country are going to rest under this large tax burden, shoulder this tremendous debt and deficit, endure our country's finances being unsettled, see commodity prices go down and chaos existing everywhere, while we sit here and refuse to face the issue.

In both political parties right at this moment there are men juggling with words in the effort to say something on prohibition that nobody on God's earth can understand. Instead of exhibiting some courage and honesty and telling the people they are for it or against it, one hears vague words like referendum and resubmission, which in the last analysis may mean any one of a thousand different things.

I say, if the action which I have proposed were taken it would not be necessary to cut some of these appropriations in the ruthless manner in which we are proposing to reduce them. We cut them without any regard to relative merits, simply to reach a certain sum, and perpetuate injustices multiplied by other injustices and without any regard for the needs or the fitness of the situation and conditions.

Let those who will not vote to tax beer realize that they have put $400,000,000 a year in taxes upon an oppressed people which they could have avoided; let those who vote to slash salaries realize that this one great big industry—the industry of crime—is above the law and contributes nothing to the Government, while every decent farmer and business man is forced to pay his meed of tribute to our Government in order that its institutions may endure. The way the economy issue is being projected in this Congress is an outrage. Simply because we have not got the money which we could have gotten, we look every place in the whole Federal structure, and wherever we find a large appropriation we cut it down even though it might be a short-sighted business policy so to do.

I am going to vote for a few of the proposed economies in the Army appropriation bill, but very few, because we have now reached the point where we have got to have an Army, whether it costs money or not, in order to keep law and order in this country. There is no use evading the facts.

We have evidence piled on evidence from North Carolina, Florida, Alabama, from the West, everywhere in the country, that the people are in rebellion against this farce, that they are sick of this hypocrisy, that they do not want extra taxes, that they need relief. We have not the money adequately to provide it, and here is the one thing which would raise at least a third of all the revenue which we have proposed to raise in the new tax bill, but, because we are afraid of a few little organizations, we back away from it, more in fear, I venture to say, that we may be defeated in the next election than because of the merits or the demerits of the case.

How long will it be tolerated? How long will the people bear these new taxes? How long will we see this illegal industry go untaxed, corrupting the entire Government, State governments, city governments, county governments, the Federal Government? Every Senator here knows that not later than next December or next March we shall vote to resubmit the eighteenth amendment. Who challenges the statement that within one year from this hour some measure of repeal or modification will pass both branches of Congress? It may not pass, but the prophecies all are that it will pass. Why can we not accept the inevitable now, when the need is great, when the emergency is great, and when there is great demand that we shall raise the money to help maintain the Government under which we live and exist?

One State after another goes wet; one congressional district after another goes wet; even last fall in every special election, in Vermont and in Michigan—not in the big indus-of alcohol by weight, according to the best testimony it is possible to obtain, would not transgress the Constitution, and yet we whittle here and whittle there, cut down charwomen's salaries, and cut down the salaries of employees who have large families and who are not getting $1,200 a year, simply because we will not tax this one thing that

We come to the consideration of the Army appropriation bill, and we are actually in a few moments going to vote upon the question whether or not we will recommit this bill to the committee not with an idea of making any balanced adjustment but on the sheer formula that it must be cut 10 per cent. Whether the service can stand it or not, we must take off $40,000,000; it does not make any difference whether it cuts the Army 3 per cent or 10 per cent or whether it eliminates so many officers; get the money. That is the kind of economy that is going on here. There is no sense to it; there is no logic to it; and there is no need for it. If we would tap this vast source of revenue, we could extract ten times as much money as is proposed to be saved by this motion.

I simply want to serve notice now, Mr. President, that when the relief bill comes before the Senate I shall again offer a combination of the bill offered by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. Bingham] and myself for 2.75 per cent beer by weight, and I hope that by that time an aroused public opinion will force us to obtain in that way the money which we can so easily get, and not make necessary the taxation of an already distressed and overburdened people.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, in the early stages of this session of Congress I voted consistently for the motions offered, one by one, by the Senator from Tennessee to instruct the Committee on Appropriations to reduce each appropriation bill 10 per cent below the sum total carried in the bill sent to us by the House. I cast those votes, Mr. President, because I believed that there are but few bureaus of the Government which could not exist efficiently, perhaps even more efficiently, with a 10 per cent reduction in their total appropriation. Under those circumstances, Mr. President, I had every intention of voting for the motion made by the Senator from Tennessee to recommit this bill with similar instructions, and I would cast such a vote but for the fact that I regard as nothing less than a direct incentive to revolution in this country the remarks of the Senator from Montana [Mr. Wheeler], to the effect that he wishes the national defense cut down in order that money may be provided for others who have no right to it whatever.

Mr. President, neither the galleries nor any armed camp which may encircle the Capitol can have the slightest effect upon my convictions or upon my vote. I believe that lobbyists, no matter in what guise they come here, should not be fed and sheltered and supported from the Federal Treasury; that they should take care of themselves; that they should let their cause stand upon its own merits. If we have now come to a time when the Senate of the United States, like the Roman Senate of old, is to be encircled with legionnaires, intent to overthrow the Republic and set up a military dictatorship, now is the time to resist it. I therefore give notice to the Senator from Tennessee that I can not go forward with him and vote for this motion.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, the Senator says that he voted for the other reductions as a matter of principle, and I know he did, and I know he believes they were right.

Now, simply because another Senator makes a statement with which he does not agree, it does not seem to me that that would justify my splendid friend from New Hampshire in changing his convictions, though, of course, he is the judge of that and I am not. At the same time, however, just looking at it as one man to another, it seems to me that that would hardly be a fair reason for the Senator to change his vote in a matter of conviction, and I hope he will not do so; but, of course, the Senator himself will decide as to that.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, I must be the judge of my own conduct, and I intend to be. I think that if we could have gone forward in an orderly fashion, and if this bill could have been dealt with in subcommittee and in full committee as other measures have been, if the chiefs of the departments could have come before us and have set up a reallocation of funds, as the Senator from Tennessee knows has been done in connection with several of the appropriation bills, undoubtedly we could have worked out the proportionate reduction in military expenses which we have worked out in connection with civil expenses; but, Mr. President, I have never yet surrendered to a threat, and I do not intend to begin now.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I do not propose to stand idly by and let the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. Moses] put words in my mouth. I say to him now that he knows very well that there was no threat made by me, and all the Senator is attempting to do by his statement is to stir up antipathy toward the ex-service men who are here.

Mr. President, I am not sure that there are any of them in the galleries, although I assume that there may be some in the galleries; but regardless of the views of the Senator from New Hampshire with reference to his feelings toward these men who have come to the city of Washington, and regardless of whether they are right or whether they are wrong, there is one thing about them, and that is they are not asking that we give them something any more than others in this country are appealing to the Congress and asking for special favors.

Ever since this Congress has been in session different groups of people have come here knocking at the doors of Congress, seeking and asking for special favors; and I make the statement without fear of contradiction that never before on the floor of the Senate have I heard the Senator from New Hampshire raise his voice in protest against special favors being granted to different classes of the citizens of this country, particularly, if you please, if those citizens happened to come from the State of New Hampshire or from New England.

I do not for one moment intend to stand here and let the statement of the Senator go by that I was making an inflammatory speech. What I was appealing for was for simple justice on the part of the people of this country, to protect them from being mulcted in taxes because of things that were unnecessary and unessential at a time when the Government of the United States, and particularly those on the other side of the Chamber, were crying with tears in their eyes, talking about the balancing of the Budget in one breath, and then, if you please on the other hand trying to put into this bill and into other bills appropriations that in my judgment and in the judgment of some of us were unessential in times of crisis like these.

Far be it from me, let me say to the Senator from New Hampshire, to appeal and try to bring on a revolution in this country. It is the last thing in the world that I want to bring on; but I do say that what I am seeking to do is to stop that sort of thing from being brought on in this country by seeing to it that the masses of the people, that the average citizens of this country, fare as well at the hands of the Congress of this Nation as do some of the Wall Street interests and bankers and insurance companies who have come into this Congress, getting special favors at the hands of Congress.

Let the farmers come here and knock for legislation and see what a deaf ear is turned toward them. Let the workers of this Nation come here and see what a deaf ear is turned toward them. But, if you please, when the Wall Street bankers come here, when the Wall Street brokers come here, when the representatives, if you please, of the stock exchange come here, do you find the Senator from New Hampshire standing upon his feet talking against special privilege?

No, Mr. President; the Senator from New Hampshire can not choke those words down my throat, here or at any other place, either upon the floor of the Senate or elsewhere. I resent the statement made by him to the effect that I or anybody else was trying to threaten the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire to make him vote for some piece of legislation that he did not want to vote for. I know him too well to think that any threat that might be made by me or by anybody else would influence him in arriving at a decision that he did not want to make.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, thanking the Senator from Montana for the implied compliment which he paid to my courage, let me say that the usual contradiction of terms with which he generally presents his cause here has accompanied, if you please, what he has now said. Inveighing against special privilege, if you please, for those who have not come from my section of the country, he now pleads for special privilege, if you please, for those for whom he has pleaded this afternoon.

While I do not wish to put words in the eloquent mouth of the Senator from Montana, I am entirely content that the country shall rest its judgment upon the printed words of what he has said when they appear in the RECORD to-morrow morning.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I desire to ask the chairman of the committee having charge of this bill one or two questions.

The first question is, How many officers have we now in the United States Army?

Mr. REED. Approximately 12,000.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. How many enlisted men in the regular armed forces of the Nation?

Mr. REED. One hundred and eighteen thousand seven hundred and fifty.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. What is the number of the National Guard of the several States and Territories?

Mr. REED. My recollection is that it is about 140,000, but I should have to look it up.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. What is the number of the Reserve officers?

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I am only a 2-legged Senator, not a 12-volume encyclopedia. If the Senator would give me some notice that he was going to ask these questions, I would have the replies ready.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. The distinguished Senator is the chairman of the subcommittee handling this appropriation bill. He is likewise the chairman of the Military Affairs Committee. He is likewise one of if not the best-posted men in the Senate; and upon military affairs I give him credit for being the best-informed man in Congress.

Mr. REED. I thank the Senator.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I was trying to get the figures in the Record as to the number of the forces of the country that this bill is making provision for. If it is simply making provision for 12,000 officers and 125,000 men, the total amount would seem large; but when it is spread over 12,000 officers, 125,000 regular soldiers, 140,000 National Guardsmen, and probably that many, if not more, reserve officers, and a very large number of civilian troops in the summer camps, perhaps it is not such a large sum after all.

Mr. REED. I thank the Senator. Now I have found the figures for which he was asking.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I am very glad to revert to the question just submitted.

Mr. REED. According to Congressman Collins in the House, the estimates for the National Guard provide for the armory drill pay of 136,548 enlisted men, and for the drill pay or allowance of 14,300 officers. So, as the Senator says, the number of individuals affected by these appropriations is much greater than the mere Regular Army figures.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, the record shows that this year, 1932, we are spending something like $445,000,000 in the support of this branch of the Federal service. The Budget requests of Congress for 1933 were less than we are spending this year. They were less by $34,000,000. Hence, the Budget estimate is only for $411,000,000. This estimate was transmitted to the House of Representatives, and the House committee recommended and the House itself passed a bill carrying the sum of $392,000,000. That is the amount in the bill when it reached this body—a reduction of $53,000,000 less than we are spending this year. That is less by $19,000,000 than the Budget estimated for. So the House made a substantial reduction under the Budget estimates submitted by the President in the sum of $19,000,000.

The Senate committee reduced the amount to $389,000,000. That is $56,000,000 less than we are spending this year. It is $22,000,000 less than the Budget requested, and it is $3,000,000 less than the House actually passed in its bill. So to-day the bill stands before the Senate at a total figure of $81,000,000 less than we are spending on the Army forces for the year 1932.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator permit an interruption?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Gladly.

Mr. REED. I think the Senator has summarized the facts very well and very effectively.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, we have two Armies in this country to-day. We have an active army and an ex-army. I had a chance to see the ex-army on parade a night or two ago. So far as I can learn, this ex-army, now camped in this city, has had no attention at the hands of the House or the Senate.

I have in my hand a paper that is just off the press. The top headline is as follows:

Vets won't leave-call 150,000 men.

Mr. President, I am unofficially advised that the Presiding Officer has on his desk a petition. I hold in my hand what purports to be a copy of that petition. I submit to the Presiding Officer the parliamentary inquiry if it is true that he does have such a petition.

The VICE PRESIDENT. A petition has been presented by a committee.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the petition delivered to the Vice President during the last few minutes be laid down and read for the information of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the petition will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

The VICE PRESIDENT. The petition will be referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, as one Member of the Senate, I wish to commend the authors of this petition for the manner in which it has been handled and for the text of the petition itself. I have had occasion to visit the camp in which these men are located. It is a misnomer to call it a camp, however. It is simply a vacant space of land over on the Anacostia River. When I was there two days ago I found several thousand ex-soldiers camped upon the open spaces. I found good order and the strictest discipline. The men have come from every State in the Nation. They have come in every way that men can travel. Some had their own cars, some had their own trucks, great numbers have come without regular means of conveyance. They are living out there on that barren plain, sleeping on the grass. Some have improvised beds of a little straw; others, more fortunate, have sacks, furnished by the War Department, filled with grass or straw or leaves; but they are the ones who are living de luxe. The average exservice man in that camp is forced to sleep upon the ground.

The only friends those men have found in Washington are the police, the newspaper boys, and the people of this city. They have made their appeals to the War Department and to the Congress and to date they have been turned down. They asked the War Department for tents and same were not furnished; however, the department did furnish some 2,000 empty canvas sacks, which can be filled with straw or hay or grass and used for sleeping purposes. There are some 10,000 of those ex-service men in this so-called camp.

Few of the boys have sacks, however. Most of them are forced to sleep on the ground. They have no blankets whatever. All the covering they have is the stars. The police department spent $350 in buying some secondhand lumber and sent it down to the camp, and the men have gotten together some nails and some hammers and have put up some shelters, just roofs, no sides; but only a few are so accommodated.

In addition to some straw, the police department has found some old rusty tins, evidently from roofs, and some secondhand roofing paper, building paper, and delivered this junk and rubbish to the camp; and there these men, one-time soldiers of this Nation, all having honorable discharges, most of them having seen service abroad, are forced to sleep in the Capital of the Nation covered with tin and tar paper and straw.

Mr. President, those men have had no assistance except $500 given them by the Veterans of Foreign Wars. A few nights ago the police arranged for the use of the Gayety Theater, and they got some of the boys who were able to entertain to go down to the theater and make fools of themselves for the entertainment of the public, and through that source they got $540 more.

Last night at the baseball park there was a donation benefit. Some 30 or 40 of the boys put on boxing exhibitions. There was no admission charge, and 15,000 of the Washington people went out there to see those exhibitions. During the bouts put on by the soldier boys the management took up a collection and received as a voluntary donation between $2,500 and $3,000.

Mr. President, I said a moment ago that the only friends the boys have in Washington are the police force-and the police force have been their real friends; the newspaper boyswho are writing the news stories; and the people of the city of Washington. The War Department was appealed to, and some 2,000 of the canvas sacks were secured for beds. If they have appealed to Members of the Senate, it has not been mentioned on this floor.

Mr. President, who is responsible for this condition? I am not going into that phase of the question now, because it is a long story and perhaps a debatable matter. But we are facing to-day a fact and not a theory. Ten thousand veterans are here. They are not communists, they are not "reds," they are not "bums," they are not tramps, but are American citizens and entitled to all the rights and privileges as such. What are we to do in this emergency?

I realize that the police can not feed these veterans. I realize that the city of Washington can not feed them, and perhaps there is no department of the Government that can Perhaps no department is speak for the Government. charged with such responsibility. But there is one body in the capital that is charged with such responsibility, and that is the policy-making body of this Government—the Congress of the United States.

If we should receive information that a cyclone had struck in some part of this Nation rendering 10,000 people homeless and clotheless and foodless, no doubt resolutions would be introduced immediately for appropriations to buy food and clothing and housing facilities for the stricken community.

Perhaps some will say, "We are not responsible for these men being in Washington." That may be true, and on behalf of my State I am able to say that but very few Oklahomans are here. That may be a criticism of the men of my State. It may be that they are not so good at riding the rods as the men from some other States. It may be that the distance has kept them away. Still, men from States farther away than Oklahoma are here. I do see in the public press that down in Tennessee, I think it is, there are some Texans and Oklahomans on the way to Washington, but they are not coming here at my invitation. I am in rather close touch with the ex-service men of Oklahoma. I have been importuned to advise them as to whether or not to come, and I want to place in the RECORD my advice in the form of messages I have uniformly sent out. That advice has been as follows:

Replying to message, advise Washington rapidly filling with veterans. No accommodations, short rations, and fear suffering and trouble. While do not criticize soldiers for coming, yet realizing hardship awaiting them would hesitate to invite them here. Am doing all possible to advance immediate payment full balance due veterans.

Mr. President, the Senate now having this petition from this group, the press being filled with news stories written by friendly reporters and published by the friendly press, the Congress can not longer ignore the presence of 10,000 of these men, homeless and foodless, in Washington, and I now pause to ask those in responsible places of leadership whether any consideration is being given to this problem now hanging like a pall over this Capital City. I address myself to the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs

Mr. REED. Mr. President, there is nothing in the pending bill that provides for persons outside the military service.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. My question is, Is anything being done or is any consideration being given to this problem of these men who are here, who are former soldiers, and perhaps other thousands on the way?

Mr. REED. In this bill?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. No; I do not mean in this

Mr. REED. Leaving this bill out of it, I know of no provision that is being made for them.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I address the same inquiry to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, no matter has been presented to the Committee on Appropriations with reference to this subject. I do not know what action the Committee on the District of Columbia has taken. I think nothing has been presented to them in reference to it. No proposition of any kind has been presented to the Committee on Appropriations touching the matter.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, the same papers that carried the headlines to which I have alluded carry another news story this afternoon, and it is this kind of news story to which I now direct attention;

NEW YORK CENTRAL ASKS UNITED STATES FOR $13,600,000

The New York Central Railroad to-day asked the Interstate Commerce Commission to approve its application for a $13,600,000 loan from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

The money is needed to pay interest on fixed debts, rents for leased roads, and taxes, the application states. Of these fixed charges $11,100,000 falls due July 1 and $2,500,000 August 1.

On March 23 the commission approved the road's application for stand why it is that this Government, under the orders of the Congress, can make it so easy for the railroads and the banks and the life insurance companies to come to Washington and, for the mere asking, receive money by the millions to pay interest and pay rents and pay taxes, but when these ex-soldiers come here, they are carted out to the edge of town and sleep on the barren ground, and when their petitions are presented, they are told by some, "You are not here at our invitation, and the place for you to be is at home." Mr. President, for five or six months now Congress has

Mr. President, many people in this country can not under-devoted its time to making safe for their owners bonds, dollars, and property. When men, women, and children come before the Congress and ask for consideration we know what the answer has always been and what the answer is

Mr. President, I want to place in the RECORD copies of some news articles, so that the people of the country who may have a chance to read the RECORD may have some idea of what the press of the country is saying about the proposal to pay the soldier boys the amount due them on the certificates which they hold.

I know the Congress has said they can not get their money until 1945, but the railroads were not held up until 1945 waiting for their adjustments. Contractors that had business with the Government during the war and had business unfinished when the war was over were not held off until 1945 to secure their adjustments. They have their adjustments and secured their money promptly.

Just because the Congress placed a limitation of 1945 upon the adjustments to be made with these veterans, when times like these come they feel that they are entitled to come to Washington, justified in coming to Washington, and asking that the Government consider their petition. Their petition is on file. Some months ago a delegation came to the Capital and delivered a petition signed by 2,500,000 of the veterans asking that compensation due them on an admitted obligation be made available at once. They are demanding what they have a right to demand, and that is that Congress consider their petition and give them a vote upon the matter.

I understand that in the other branch of Congress on Monday next a vote will be taken. If the bill should pass that body, it will come to the Senate very shortly thereafter. These ex-service men are demanding of the Senate that in the event that bill does pass the other body and come here, we shall give it consideration and give them a vote upon the bill. If the bill reaches this body, then, so far as I am concerned, the Senate will not adjourn until it has voted upon the so-called bonus bill.

I find this headline in a late issue of one of the leading Bonus army camp looks like Congo. Inspection reveals typical American atmosphere, however.

This is an article signed by Thomas R. Henry. I quote the following paragraph:

There is a squalid colorfulness to this sprawling Camp Camden, down by the Anacostia River.

It is a sort of cross between the military and the gypsy—this spot where more than 2,000 World War veterans from the four quarters of the United States to-day were drowsily waiting for something to happen.

The shelterless ex-service men are showing considerable native ingenuity in meeting the elements—the showers and the burning

In this connection, if we should have here in Washington a rainstorm as we had in my State only a few days ago, it is difficult to conceive the results. In Oklahoma it was not a rainstorm; it was a waterspout. The rain fell in such torrents that the rivers and streams were unable to take it away. A portion of the capital city of my State was covered with water. Several lost their lives. Thousands were made homeless. I am advised that during that storm hailstones as large as baseballs fell in great profusion. If that should happen here, as I hope it shall not, falling on 10,000 American citizens camped in the open, without shelter and within the shadow of the Capitol, what would be the reaction of the | people of America?

The immediate effect would be that many would be killed. The hospitals of the city would be filled to overflowing. An aroused public sentiment would condemn every official in a responsible position in the service of the Government.

I read further from the news article to which I have just referred:

They have evolved a curious sort of shelter—the straw tent. This is a structure about the size and shape of an Army "pup tent," with a framework of odd-sized sticks, pieces of rusty iron garnered from a neighboring junk pile, and any other material which will fit. This is all closely thatched over, top and sides, with alcolar intervences attems. with closely interwoven straw.

LIKE A CONGO VILLAGE

The nearest comparison to the part of the camp where these structures are most abundant is that of a Congo village.

And this in the Capital of the richest and the most powerful Nation on the face of the globe.

Mr. President, I have in my hand a news story containing a picture of one of the ex-service men. This picture shows the veteran wearing a distinguished-service cross. The name of this young man is Joe T. Angelo. I read one paragraph from this news story:

The War Department records tell of Joseph T. Angelo, Head-quarters Company, First Tank Brigade, who was awarded the distinguished-service cross for carrying his commanding officer, now Maj. George S. Patten, jr., Thirty-second Street and Woodland Drive NW., to the safety of a shell hole under continuous shell fire from the German lines, 40 meters away, and remaining with him until help arrived. That was September 26, 1918.

A few nights ago when the parade marched down historic Pennsylvania Avenue I saw many of these boys who were proudly wearing distinguished decorations for heroic service in the service of their country.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the news story from which I have just quoted one paragraph may be inserted at this point in connection with my remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The news story is as follows:

ONE OF THE FIERIEST BONUS ARMY LEADERS WEARS DISTINGUISHED-SERVICE CROSS

By Richard Hollander

He's a few inches over 5 feet tall and weighs about 115 pounds. But when he stands on the running board of a truck and harrangues the army of bonus marchers quartered in the Anacostia Park section there's something about him that makes his less excitable comrades listen to him.

He is Joseph T. Angelo, of Pennsgrove, N. J., and that medal pinned to his tattered undershirt is the United States distin-

HE LORRIES

Angelo is one of the representatives appointed to go out each day to the Capitol and lobby for passage of the bonus. But in the mornings before he puts on his shirt and combs his hair he is the firebrand that keeps the "We want our bonus" flame burning.

Yesterday morning he had his chance to put into words just how he feels about this business of coming to Washington. A group of some 125 veterans rolled in from Atlantic City. They said they could only stay for the day. They were going right back.

"Why, you don't know what this is all about," he yelled, his hoarse voice threatening to give way any minute. This isn't a vacation or a sight-seeing trip. It's not a big joke. It may be a question of life and death before we're finished.

PEP TALK

"And you come here thinking you can do the job in one day. We couldn't do it that way in France, and we can't do it here. We'll have to keep going in at the doors of the Capitol until we wear them off the hinges—and then we'll only be starting."

medal hung.
"You see this? Two hundred men were killed and I stayed to save a man's life."

ON THE RECORDS

The War Department records tell of Joseph T. Angelo, Headquarters Company, First Tank Brigade, who was awarded the distinguished-service cross for carrying his commanding officer, now Maj. George S. Patton, jr., Thirty-second Street and Woodland Drive NW., to the safety of a shell hole under continuous shell fire from the German lines 40 meters away, and remained with him until help arrived. That was September 26, 1918.

And now Angelo is here with the bonus army to get his $762.50. He is not the actual commander of the camp in Anacostia. He isn't even a platoon sergeant or a corporal. But when he wants to speak, the leaders give way to him.

"We'll stay here," he says, "until we drop. Then they can get rid of us. But while we've anything left to eat, we'll stay on. We're too big to be laughed at. That's the reason we don't want any of our own gang to make us look like fools.

MUST BE SERVICE MEN

"If they come to Washington without jobs, without anything to eat and can show that they're ex-service men—O. K. Otherwise we don't want them. They're got to live as we do.

"A man here wanted me to go to a hotel and sleep between nice, clean sheets and have swell food. But I told him where to go. While we're here we're all buddles. We all want the same thing."

The rest of the camp doesn't quite know how to take Angelo. He's a bit overpowering and they urge him not to "get excited."

But when Angie speaks they listen. And Angie intends to keep on speaking for a long time.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, we have in this country a very distinguished Army correspondent. His name is Floyd Gibbons. Mr. Gibbons perhaps has seen more active service in more wars than any other correspondent that ever lived. He has contributed some news articles recently, one headlined "Bonus vets here to find out what ails the Government, says Gibbons." I shall not take the time of the Senate to read the article, but ask unanimous consent that the story, under the signature of Mr. Gibbons, may be printed at this point in connection with my remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The article is as follows:

BONUS VETS HERE TO FIND OUT WHAT AILS THE GOVERNMENT, SAYS GIBBONS

By Floyd Gibbons

Hello everybody! This blast comes from the Washington zoo. don't mean the one in Rock Creek Park. I am referring to the I don't mean the one on Capitol Hill.

The animals are all disturbed. The congressional dog Rover has suddenly found himself full of fleas. And is he beginning to scratch?

Old congressional Rover had fleas before, but never anything like this set. The old unorganized taxpayer fleas got on his back occasionally, but he just walked out from under 'em.

EVERYBODY'S BUSINESS

But, jumping dog biscuits! Those bonus fleas stick closer than a dog collar and bite deeper than a chigger. They just won't let the old dog alone. Rover is having flea trouble like nobody's husiness

Funny part of it all is that it is everybody's business Funny part of it all is that it is everybody's business—especially everybody who has been having his own flea trouble for the last three years. Boys and girls who have been scratching like the very dickens to exterminate the depression fleas and get rid of the unemployment chiggers and feed the tax collector locusts—well, it has never made any of us any happier to see old Rover on Capitol Hill, without a single worry.

That's why Rover's present antics to shake off the bonus fleas are sending a suppressed snicker right across the country. Misery likes company. There's lots of people pulling for the fleas.

A REAL ARMY

There's an army here—a real army. They call it a bonus army. But it's more than that—much more.

These 4,000 men camped along the Potomac are here to get an answer to a mighty serious question. They want to know why they're starving in the midst of plenty.

They want their bonus money. But the main thing they want is work. They're hungry and these bonus certificates which don't mature for another 10 or 12 years are the only things that even look like meal tickets—much less money.

First of all, they are not bums. Second, they are not agitators.

CITIZENS AND VOTERS

And these men are shaven and clean. They pass safety razors and bits of soap back and forth. There's the Potomac River for a private bath and laundry and plenty of hot sun to dry out the wash.

These men are citizens. They are veteran American soldiers. Some of them are disabled soldiers. We call them heroes when they sailed for France. Called them that again when they limped back with the bacon after the armistice and found the country dry and some other fellow with their girl and somebody else in their old job.

They are also voters.

They are also workmen—steel workers, coal miners, structuraliron workers, cowboys, stenographers, newspaper reporters, dairymen, shopkeepers without shops, clerks, farmers—well, they are just American people like you and me.

SOMETHING'S WRONG

And, by golly, they are just as puzzled as we are about what has happened to the United States of America.

They don't know any more about it than our big statesmen who denied the depression. No more than our big financiers and bankers and Wall Street operators who used to be considered the prosperity brains of the country. And no more, apparently, than our Government.

They tell me, they tell everybody, that they think the country is all right. Nature has been good to us. We can produce all the food and coal and fruit and beef and clothing that we need. We can build all the houses and beds and furniture that we need. The banks are full of money. The grain elevators are full of wheat wheat.

And the people are all right. They are all hard-working people, only too anxious to take care of themselves. But, by golly, something has gone wrong with the management.

The fault just lies with the people who are running the show. That's what this hungry army on the Potomac believes.

That management is here in Washington. As the veterans see it, it is centered in Congress. They are here to find out who's supposed to be running this show and whyinell it ain't running.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I likewise ask permission to insert a second story by Mr. Gibbons, entitled "Heroes in '17; Outcasts Now."

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The story is as follows:

HEROES IN '17: OUTCASTS NOW

By Floyd Gibbons

I saw them march last night.

They were the men who won the war in '17 and '18 and were thrown into the discard in the battle of '29, '30, and '31.

In the old days—voung and strong, well shod and equipped, well fed and received with open arms—they marched the length of Pennsylvania Avenue, past the Capitol, and past the White House, where Woodrow Wilson reviewed them.

• In the light of day and the glory of youth and with prayers and hopes of the Nation pinned above their khaki-clad breasts, they marched that same route between thousands of proud and admiring public officials and civilians.

FORGOTTEN GHOSTS

FORGOTTEN GHOSTS

Last night they marched in the dark, like ghosts out of the forgotten past. Four abreast they marched—5,000 strong.

Few uniforms were shown, and those ragged and wear worn. The grease-stained overalls of jobless factory workers. The frayed straw hats of unemployed farm hands. The shoddy elbow-patched garments of idle clerks.

All were down at the heel. All were slim and gaunt, and their eyes had a light in them. There were empty sleeves and limping men with capes. men with canes.

They were 5,000 hungry ghosts of the heroes of 1917. Not so young now. They came back triumphant from the smoke of battle in distant wars, only to go down in the battle of life with their own kind. Their own people. Their own Government. The Government they fought for.

MARCH IN DARK

They did not march in the light of day. They marched in darkness. The moving-picture record of the march of the 5,000 guests will be dim and obscure, if any at all.

That's why they marched at night with their shoes worn thin and their boots run down at the heel. They marched without hats, many of them, because they have no hats. Many were without costs.

But they were clean shaven, every man of them. And the shirts they were, though patched and torn and thin and cheap, were clean from their own washing.

And they marched proud and unashamed, carrying the flag they fought for. The flags were not carried on regular staffs. They were on makeshift pieces of patched wood. Some of the flags were carried proudly aloft on fresh-cut saplings from the river bottoms where these ghosts live.

You know how pitiful and abandoned a garment looks when it is nailed on an oar and floats above a raft as a signal of distress

That is how their flags looked last night.

That's how their clothing looked—and their gaunt, clean faces. Distress and abandonment.

They carried no flagrant banners. They marched silently, as ghosts should,

WHITE HOUSE BAN

They were men of the old fighting First. They were the ragged remnants of Pershing's own. They were survivors from the glorious Second Division, from the Twenty-sixth, and the Thirty-sixth, and Forty-second, and the Eighty-sixth, and the Ninety-first—they were the ghosts of the American Expeditionary Forces, the largest and greatest Army that ever marched under the American flag flag.
They marched in darkness last night.

They were not allowed to march past the Capitol this time. Nor the Office Buildings of Congress. It would bring distress to the Congressmen.

They did not march past the White House last night. They were not allowed to. They would bring distress to the President of the richest nation in the world.

They were allowed to march just around and past one corner of the great United States Treasury, at the corner of Fifteenth Street and Pennsylvania Avenue. It also was dark.

Some said that President Hoover could, if so inclined, have seen the march of the 5,000 hungry ghosts from either the south portico or the upper windows of the White House. From those positions he could have seen them.

I hope he saw them march last night.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD, so that the people of the country may know what is going on in Washington as reported through the local press, an article entitled "Bonus Brigade Called Soul of Decency." The article is under the signature of Elsie Robinson. I ask that it may be inserted in the RECORD at this point in connection with my remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so or-

The article is as follows:

BONUS BRIGADE CALLED SOUL OF DECENCY—ELSIE ROBINSON DECLARES VETS ARE NOT TRAMPS BUT SOLID CITIZENS

By Elsie Robinson

By Elsie Robinson

Five thousand veterans camping on the Washington wastes—7,000 more ex-soldiers hurrying by foot, in trucks, box cars, fivvers, along every road that leads to Washington. The army that saved the country now marching on the Capital.

That's news. Perhaps it's also history. Whichever it is, you're listening in and forming your opinion. All right—for it. But before you do, there are certain facts you should have straight. Whether we approve of them or don't, these men are not tramps. They are not communists. They are not hoodlums nor restless unemployed. They are representative American citizens—conservative, respectable, patriotic men—merchants, real-estate dealers, lawyers, ex-bankers, union men in good standing. And they are here with a purpose. they are here with a purpose.

SOLID, DECENT MEN

Of course, there are some bums and radicals amongst them—bound to be. But in the main they're solid citizens like you and me—living by the same ideals—heading for the same goals.

Regular folks—that's the thing that hits you so hard when you first see them. You go down to the dumps "for a thrill," expecting to find a crowd of bums as you used to see in the hobo "jungles" across the railroad tracks. And with one glimpse that thrill is knowled out of you and you feel as choose the papers. thrill is knocked out of you and you feel as cheap as a phoney nickel. For there facing you are your own people!

Men like your own father or husband, brother, sweetheart, or son, without shelter, rags on their backs, hunger in their eyes, but their jaws grim.

ORDERLY, BUT GRIM

ORDERLY, BUT GRIM

The orderliness of it all—there's the one thing you mustn't forget. The orderliness of the bonus expeditionary force is the finest and the most hopeful—yet at the same time the most dangerous and ominous thing—about the whole performance.

Riots ravel out on themselves. But these men are not rioters. There's an almost solemn quietness about them—a conscious, steely-eyed precision. The look of men getting ready—waiting.

They have formed a military organization—live as nearly as they can by military rule. They permit absolutely no radical talk, no panhandling, disorderly conduct, or drinking.

They have established an intelligence service along army lines to ferret out any reds or riot talk.

They are here to get the bonus and—they tell you quietly, with-to ferret out any reds or riot talk.

They are here to get the bonus and—they tell you quietly, without any boasts or blusters—that they'll stay until they get it; until 1945 if necessary.

"But suppose Congress adjourns?"

"We won't adjourn," they answer with a smile.

Work? They have an attitude about work that startles you a little until you realize how logical it is. They don't want a dole of work just as they don't want a dole of money or food, and they don't see why they should have to have it. They consider themselves the Nation's ex-creditors, and they don't see why they shouldn't be treated with as much respect as Morgan, Mitchell, or the Missouri Pacific. the Missouri Pacific.

HEARTLESS TREATMENT

Well, maybe that idea is cockeyed and again maybe it isn't. But the point is, it's their idea and they're sticking to it.

They won't work for less than union wages. If a man can't afford to pay that, they work for nothing at all—or just grub. There's a lot of criticism of this. But the bonus expeditionary forces are they are not seeks or more best.

forces say they are not scabs or moochers. How are they faring? Rotten. Regar forces say they are not scabs or moochers.

How are they faring? Rotten. Regardless of the merits of their case. This is a mighty heartless—and perhaps a mighty dangerous—way for a big company to treat 10,000 human beings.

Over in Anacostia field—which is nothing more than a smelly, dirty flat down by the river bank—there a few shelters stuck up on poles—no floors, no sides, no tents, no cots, no mess table. A few hundred are sleeping on bags filled with straw in a big garage, and a few hundred more in some other old building. Outside of that, they are just lying around on any strip or dirt they can find

SKIMPY RATIONS

As for rations—here's what they had to eat Sunday: Two meals. For breakfast, black coffee and mush with a little milk stirred into it. At 4, one weenle and some sauerkraut. After Thursday morning there won't be anything. They say they expect starvation before they're through.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I ask further permission to have printed in the RECORD in connection with my remarks an editorial appearing in the Washington Times of June 8. The editorial is under the title of "The Bonus, or a Job."

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered

The editorial is as follows:

[From the Washington Times of June 8, 1932]

THE BONUS OR A JOB-MILLIONS OF MEN UPROOTED IN THE WAR, TAKEN FROM THEIR PLACES, THEIR OPPORTUNITY, SENT ABROAD WHILE OTHERS WERE MAKING WAR-TIME WAGES AND WAR-TIME PROFITS, ARE NOW WITHOUT JOBS AND IN WANT-THEY TOOK CARE OF THEIR GOVERNMENT, THEIR GOVERNMENT SHOULD TAKE CARE OF THEM

The Washington Times, on behalf of its readers, demands for every veteran his bonus or a job.

It is time for the Government of the United States, richest in the world, to stop its shilly-shallying methods concerning Ameri-

It is not necessary at this late date to dilate on the service rendered to their country by the soldiers. Heaven knows how presidents, governors, editors, politicians, and clergymen have talked enough about it.

What these men did for the United States, the sacrifices that they were forced to make, are well known.

The question now is, What is the United States going to do for the men that it sent to Europe with promises of never-dying

Thousands of men, formerly in the Army, now out of work and in absolute want, are marching on Washington to learn whether their Government's promises will hold water, and whether the word "gratitude" is to be found only in the dictionary, now that the war is over.

These men do not want anybody's charity, not even that of the Government served by them. They do want and are entitled to a chance to make a living by work. If the Government can not find work for them to do, they are entitled at least to payment of the bonus, which the Government owes them and must pay eventually, and which represents no charity but recognition of the fact that these men are entitled to payment for lost opportunity and secretifices in the war.

This newspaper demands on behalf of the veterans that the Government supply them with jobs or pay them the bonus now.

It ought not to be necessary for any veteran to walk or ride on a freight car hundreds or thousands of miles from home to the

The men ask only a chance to live, and they are entitled to it.

Many of them already in Washington have offered to work for $1 a day, if no better job could be found, but even $1-a-day jobs are not forthcoming.

There has been much talk about "inflation," failure to balance the Budget, "danger to the gold standard," lack of confidence in Europe, and Heaven knows what besides, if the soldiers' bonus should be paid.

There was no such talk when this country plunged into a war, started by other nations and sent into the Army the men that now ask for just treatment.

ask for just treatment.

As it is unnecessary to recall the services rendered by the soldiers, so it should be unnecessary to recall the Government attitude toward money expenditures when the war was on.

We talk now of "balancing the Budget" or "inflation of the dollar," or of "what Europe will think."

We did not bother about those things when we were shipping to Europe 3,000,000 men that now demand just treatment.

Our Government spent money at the rate of $10,000,000,000 a year. We had billions to lend to every country in Europe; we ran year. We had billions to lend to every country in Europe; we ran the Nation into debt by more than twenty thousand million dol-lars without a moment's hesitation in order to help foreign governments with a war that was not ours, one for which we were not ments with a war that was not ours, one for which we were not responsible, a war which was in no way a menace to us.

The recent history of this country proves that the United States can spend the money when it wants to spend the money, while veterans of that war in which Uncle Sam poured out his billions so freely are neglected. If the Government refuses to pay to the soldiers the bonus that is due them, that will be because the Government does not want to pay.

What a disgrace that men that gave their time, sacrificed their opportunities, risked their lives, should now be sleeping on straw in sheds here, eating thin, poorly made cabbage soup, and told repeatedly in the newspapers on official authority:

"We are very hard up; we can not feed you 5,000 men much longer. We expect you to get out of here as soon as possible."

We were able to feed 3,000,000 of the same soldiers in Europe for the benefit of other countries.

the benefit of other countries.

We were able to ship 3,000,000 of them across the ocean, paying British shipowners gigantic sums for carrying our men to defend were able to lend ten thousand million dollars to foreign countries to help them in their fighting, billions that we shall not get back.

What a disgrace to say that a Nation that could afford ten what a disgrace to say that a Nation that could allord ten billions for foreigners and forty-five billions for war can not now find two billions to save from want the veterans for whom work can not be found. The Government should and it must pay these men their bonus to enable them to live or find jobs that will support them.

What sort of men are they, gathered here and warned by this rich Government that they must "get out as soon as possible because it is difficult to feed them and their presence is a menace of some kind of violence "?

Are they not worthy men; do they deserve the misfortunes that have fallen upon them and compel them against their will to demand at least decent consideration from a Government that promised so much?

They are not unworthy men that lie on the straw here and eat that thin cabbage soup, supplied in such niggardly fashion.

Take one at random, Joseph T. Angelo, from Camden, N. J. He wears a whistle around his neck and blows it when he wants others to help him get the straw together and fix up the beds.

When he blows his whistle they come, for they respect him, even though his Government seems not to respect him.

Joseph Angelo does not look spick and span, as when he went to the war at his country's request. His clothes are old and worn, his shoes not in good condition. But you notice two medals on his breast, souvenirs presented to him by a generous Government. If you ask how he got them, he is not enthusiastic, but he says, smiling: "They don't get my family any food."

says, smiling: "They don't get my family any food."

One "medal" that he wears is the distinguished-service cross. The department records show that he got it, as a private in the Army, for rescuing his commanding officer under fire within 40 meters of the German machine guns. He has a wife and child, has been three years without work, and if the Government doesn't pay his bonus or give him a chance to work the tax gatherer will pay his bonus or give him a chance to soon gather in his home.

A man from New York came to Washington to see if the Government really meant it when it talked about gratitude. He has had no work since last September, his wife and children are "camping with relatives." The home in which he lived has been taken from them, and he says "the $800 I would get as a bonus would come in plenty handy."

taken from them, and he says "the $800 I would get as a bonus would come in plenty handy."

Another man, from Illinois, a graduate of Northwestern University, a certified public accountant, walks around helping to pile up the straw and do odd jobs about the veterans' camp, wearing shoes with holes in the soles that allow the stockings to touch the ground.

Elmer Jensen, leader of 553 men from Salt Lake City, says that all his men are out of work, 65 per cent are married, one has eight children. The Government might tell him:

"In these hard times a man ought not to have eight children."
But it did not hesitate about taking him over to Europe, without asking whether he ought to go or not.

While the proudest and richest country in the world fixes up its tax bills, votes one billion or two billions to be sent to the banks in order to "relieve them," manages through its gigantic "reconstruction fund" money to be used to reconstruct the mistakes of high financiers, the men that fought in the war sleep out of doors on straw when it is not raining, crowd into empty, cheerless buildings when it rains, wash themselves in the Potomac River or in barrels, commit no acts of violence, respect the flag that flies above their camp.

They hope that the Government that can give a thousand millions to a reconstruction committee to help disabled banks and hundreds of millions to help railroads in difficulties will decide that it can afford at least to pay the soldiers their bonus or else give them work.

Not to provide jobs for these soldiers in a gigantic public construction program, or not to pay these soldiers the money to which they are entitled, not to relieve their distress and that of their wives and children, is a brutal disgrace, and the country should not endure it.

To this subject this and other newspapers owned by William Randolph Hearst will return, continuing to discuss it until the matter is settled with justice to the soldiers and honor to the

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, the Washington Post this morning carries a leading editorial under the title "Send Veterans Home." I have read the editorial very carefully. I think the editorial contains some good advice to the Congress of the United States. I ask permission to insert the editorial at this point in my remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The editorial is as follows:

[From the Washington Post, Thursday, June 9, 1932]

SEND VETERANS HOME

The demagogues who encouraged the march of veterans upon Washington are now trying to exculpate themselves. They can not succeed. They are responsible for the present dangerous sit-uation, and will be morally responsible for any disorders that may occur.

The parade of veterans on Tuesday evening made a very favorable impression upon all beholders. Those who marched are true Americans. They are not trying to stir up mischief. Many of them are pitifully misinformed. Others have learned much since their arrival and would be glad to dissuade veterans from coming if they could.

More veterans are on the way. Their presence will make matters worse. With all the good will in the world, these men will not remain peaceable if they do not have food.

Congress is now grappling with the national problem of emergency relief. If that problem can be quickly solved, the problem of feeding and demobilizing the bonus army can be solved also. It is proposed that money shall be lent to the States for relief of the unemployed. Congress can provide that a sufficient sum to feed the veterans and to transport them to their home States shall be absorbed except the allegant to each State in proposition to be charged against the allotment to each State in proportion to the number of veterans from each State. The States, and not the United States, should be made to pay the cost of the veterans' expedition to Washington.

The veterans should be advised that unemployment relief must be sought at their homes, where they are known, and where the only fund for the purpose will be available. They should be provided with transportation back to their home States as soon as possible.

Unless the cost of feeding and dispersing the veterans' army is Unless the cost of feeding and dispersing the veterans army is made a charge against the unemployment loan to the States the country will be confronted with the beginning of the Federal dole system. Once begun, the dole will expand until the total cost will exceed the $1,000,000,000 now paid annually to veterans.

Congress need not wait until the emergency relief legislation is completed. Both Houses and the administration have virtually agreed that there shall be an unemployment relief fund to be distributed through the States. Therefore the componentials well.

tributed through the States. Therefore the comparatively small sum required for feeding the veterans in Washington and sending them home can be appropriated at once, and charged against the loans to be made to the States.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, as I said a while ago, we are confronted by a state of facts, not a theory. These men are in Washington. They are here to stay, so they say, until they get their bonus. I construe that to mean until the Congress votes upon their pending bill. If the House passes the bill, the measure will reach the Senate immediately thereafter. These men, as I interpret their attitude, will remain here until the Senate likewise votes upon their measure. If Congress will act upon their petition and give them a vote and give them an answer, that is what they ask. If we could get a unanimous-consent agreement that a vote is to be had before adjournment, then, instead of these veterans sending for their friends and sending to their homes for supplies, they would commence immediately to make their plans for evacuation of this so-called camp.

Mr. President, I sincerely hope that these veterans may be assured that, in the event the other branch of the Congress passes the bill, the Senate will agree to consider the bill promptly and give them a prompt reply in the form of a vote. If that can be done, these men will soon begin their plans for getting away from Washington. While they are here they should be taken care of. They should be treated like human beings. At the present time there is not an animal on a farm in this section of the country that does not have better treatment than these men are having. Animals at least are provided with food, but these men have nothing.

Inasmuch as the bill is not before the Senate I can not ask unanimous consent that a vote be arranged for it, but I serve notice that the moment the bill reaches this body, if it does, I shall be active in trying to arrange to give these men the consideration to which they are entitled, and that consideration is an early vote upon their so-called bonus bill.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. BLAINE. The Senator has referred during the course of his remarks to a very practical proposition. I wish the Senator might give his attention particularly as I offer a suggestion.

The Senator referred to the possibility of terrific rainstorms in the District, the possibility of continuous rains. in which event, if this large number of men who are now encamped in Washington remain here, we are threatening and menacing everyone in the District of Columbia. Even without the weather conditions to which the Senator refers, there is a really serious problem confronting the people of the District of Columbia. As I understand, there are several thousand of those men here to-day. I think the Senator mentioned some 10,000.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Yes, sir; there are approximately 10.000.

Mr. BLAINE. There are approximately 10,000. They are billeted in places that have inadequate sanitary facilities, inadequate housing facilities, under any circumstances that might prevail. Clearly it is going to be impossible to get a vote upon the bonus bill in the Senate until the House acts: and it is very apparent that the House will not act, and, perhaps, can not act under its rules, until next Monday. That will mean that the bill could not have committee consideration and reach the Senate, unless there were unanimous consent for its consideration, until next Wednesday or Thursday.

I understand that the funds of the local charitable organizations have been exhausted. These men come from all over the Union. I presume nearly every State is represented among the former-service men now in the District of Columbia. The responsibility for this situation should not rest upon the people of the District of Columbia; they have no voice in the Government; and yet, if the situation continues, as in all probability it is going to continue, with this large number of men who are here now and larger aggregations of men who will be here within the next few days, we shall be subjecting the people of the District to the possibility of an outbreak of disease and to a condition that will be a menace to the people who reside in the District, and will be particularly a menace to the former-service men who are here. So there are two classes of people to be considered in this situation.

It does not make any difference what our views may be upon the bonus; it does not make any difference what our views may be upon the subject that was discussed in the colloguy between the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. Moses] and the Senator from Montana [Mr. Wheeler]; but here is a practical proposition; it is a very serious one, in my opinion, and I do not believe the Congress is justified in permitting the situation to go on without immediate

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, at this point let me make this suggestion: These men are here because they are veterans of the World War, because at one time they were inducted into the service of the United States. wore the American uniform, and marched and fought under the American flag. The Congress sent them to that duty by declaring war in 1917. The Congress faces a serious responsibility. Those here now who voted for war face a double responsibility.

Mr. President, war is expensive, and the only way to avoid the expense, suffering, and misery of war is to find a plan to prevent war.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I am in full accord with what the Senator from Oklahoma has said regarding these former-service men. They have a right to be here. There is not any power in the Government of the United States or of the District of Columbia to load those men upon trucks and forcibly send them out of the District of Columbia. No such power exists in any jurisdiction.

How long those men are going to remain, I do not know, but they are here; they have a right to be here; they are human beings. We ought not to menace or jeopardize the lives of those men or their health and the lives of the people and the health of the people of the District of Columbia. The Congress of the United States has a double liability, a double obligation, a twofold obligation, which ought to be discharged immediately. These men must eat; they must be fed, as the Senator has said. I am not going into a long discussion of that proposition, but it is obvious to everyone that the demands of humanity would require the feeding of these men.

Taking into consideration the lack of sanitary facilities that are afforded these men, the possibility of weather conditions that may come, or even though the most delightful weather may continue, under any circumstances if we shall delay the consideration of the question of feeding those men for many more days, we do not know what situation we shall face here in the District of Columbia.

So I have presented this matter from the practical standpoint, from the standpoint of the welfare of the men who have a right to be here, and from the standpoint of the men, women, and children who reside in this District. I think, Mr. President, the obligation is such a heavy one that some action ought to be taken. I am a member of the Committee on the District of Columbia. Before that committee there is a bill, which was introduced by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. Costigan]. I am perfectly willing and anxious to vote that bill out with a favorable report. I am quite certain that the committee, if it were convened, would vote the bill out with a favorable report; and if some Senator should ask unanimous consent that the Committee on the District of Columbia be discharged from the further consideration of that bill, so that it could be brought before the Senate immediately, I rather assume there would be no Senator who would offer an objection.

That bill may not carry the necessary appropriation; it may be necessary to call the chief of police, General Glassford, before the committee in order to ascertain what may be the minimum or maximum needs to take care of these men; but, at any rate, it ought to be done quickly. We ought to have some measure before this body when we convene on to-morrow upon which we may act, in order that we may take care of and protect these men and protect the people of the District of Columbia under circumstances which are due to no fault of the men who are visiting Washington and demanding of the Government the passage of the soldiers' bonus bill.

I do not want to make the request respecting the bill which is before the committee of which I am a member; but when the chairman of the committee shall appear in the Chamber, I hope the Senator from Oklahoma will ask him whether or not he would take any offense or have any objection if a motion were made to discharge the Committee on the District of Columbia from the further consideration of the bill, so that the Senate may consider and pass it.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, citizens of this country have a right to come to Washington at any time they see fit and proper. When the present session of Congress convened in December citizens came here and asked for aid and assistance; they asked for the passage of a bill creating a superbank in order that such bank might lend them money. The Congress responded very promptly. I well remember that in the early days of the session we worked here until something like 11 o'clock one night to pass their bill.

Mr. President, when so large a group of citizens submits a petition, signed by millions, they have a right to expect consideration of such petition; and they have a right to expect a vote upon their bill.

If the Congress could assure these representatives of the millions of veterans that they are to receive consideration, and a speedy vote, the newspapers would carry such information throughout the country and the men from every angle of the compass now moving toward Washington would stop their journey and many of them would turn back toward home; and the veterans who are here would have a different attitude toward the future, and would plan to make their exit from Washington at a very early date.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. BLAINE. Does the Senator realize that if the vote shall be delayed for any considerable length of time, as it may be, the days intervening may jeopardize the health of these men and the health of the people of the District of Columbia? During the interim it would seem to me that some provision ought to be made by the National Government to feed those men, and to provide them adequate sanitation, so that both the men who are here as visitors, and who have a right to be here, and the people of the District together will be protected against any untoward situation that may arise out of conditions that are very apt to obtain under the circumstances.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. The suggestion, let me say something might be done to stop this march on Washington. If the men who are now coming here could be assured that there is to be a vote upon their bill, in my judgment, many of them, if not all of them, would cease their journey toward this city and return to their former homes. I think such assurance should be given the veterans at the earliest possible date.

Mr. BLAINE. I heartily concur in that suggestion of the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, we have wandered very far afield, which is not an unusual practice in the Senate, from the particular motion which is before the Senate. The question of beer is not before us: the question of a bonus is not before us. Questions have been discussed here for hours that have no relation whatever to the pending motion. I must call the attention of the Senate to what the motion is. The motion of the Senator from Tennessee is that this bill be recommitted to the committee with instructions to cut the appropriations it contains 10 per cent.

Mr. President, I have followed the Senator from Tennessee quite uniformly in his efforts to bring about economies. I think I have voted for all the motions that have been made with reference to reductions in appropriations; but there is a limit to such reductions. A 10 per cent reduction as applied to one bill might be all right; it might be justified; but a 10 per cent reduction applied to another bill might be all wrong; it might not be economy at all. This bill had been reduced to the limit before it came to the Senate. We reduced it before the Senate committee. I happen to know something about the facts in this connec-

I am very much opposed to the Senator's motion to recommit the bill with instructions to cut it 10 per cent. Having served on the subcommittee dealing with the bill, I became acquainted with these facts; and I want to state to the Senate that I think it would be a great mistake, and an unwise and unwarranted procedure, to agree to a motion like this.

I am opposed to destroying the fabric of our national defense. I am opposed to paralyzing the peace-time operations of the Army; and that is what we would do if we cut this bill any more than it already has been cut.

I desire to call attention to what the Secretary of War said before our committee:

The total of the War Department appropriation bill now before you is $392,586,146. This is a reduction of more than $84,000,000 under the current appropriation, and nearly $19,000,000 under the Budget. Sixty-two per cent of this drastic curtailment is assessed against the military activities, which are decreased by $52,000,000.

Why talk about another 10 per cent? Why discuss any more reductions with these facts before us, undisputed and unquestioned?

If we are going to have any Army, if we are going to have any means of national defense, if we are going to go on with the peace-time activities of the Army, or the civilian activities, if you please, such as the river and harbor improvements, flood control, and those things that we have already provided for, we must give them the appropriations that are carried in this bill. If we reduce them, we cut down all these activities, we cripple the Army, and we paralyze these operations that have been provided for and which we think are essential. That is not economy at all. That is destruction. That is waste.

I hope the motion will be defeated.

Mr. REED. I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I desire to make a brief statement, and then a request of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKellar].

As we all know, the Panama Canal Zone is not a military government; and the provisions in the bill relating to the Panama Canal have nothing to do with military activities, but rather with nonmilitary activities.

There are two projects in the Panama Canal Zone which are very important. One is the Panama Railroad, operated by a corporation which is owned by the Government of the to the Senator from Wisconsin, was made in the hope that United States; the other is the Panama Canal Zone proper, which has under its jurisdiction, through a civil governor, the operation of the locks in the Panama Canal.

I call attention to the fact that there are three items in the appropriation. One is for maintenance and operation. That item relates primarily to the locks and the upkeep and the operation of the locks. Another item is sanitation. All sanitation in the Canal Zone is under the jurisdiction of the Government of the United States. The other item is the civil government.

The Panama Canal Zone is the most perfected socialistic state in the world. The Government of the United States owns the fee title to the land. It does not convey any title to the land. No one can construct a building in the zone without a permit from the civil authority, and it is only a permission. No one can conduct a business in the Canal Zone without a permit from the Government of the United States. No one can remain in the Canal Zone without the consent of the Government of the United States. The Panama Railroad is a Government railroad, operated by a corporation organized and owned by the Government. All the machine shops that are necessary to take care of the civilian machine work are owned and operated by the Government. In fact, everywhere in the Panama Canal Zoneoutside, of course, of the cities of Panama and Colon, where the Republic of Panama has jurisdiction—the Government of the United States has a perfect socialized state, and it is purely a business proposition. It has nothing to do with the military affairs of our Government.

There are peculiar situations obtaining in the Canal Zone. It is in the Tropics. The Government conducts the necessary hospitals. It has installed and operates all of the water system and the sanitary system, the health service, all of the essential services; and the whole operation of the government of the Panama Canal, so far as the appropriation is concerned, relates to a business organization which turns into the Public Treasury, as I recall, about $16,000,000 a year in profits.

I am sorry that the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations is not present, because I intended to call to his attention the fact that when the economy bill goes into conference certain exceptions ought to be made. The Panama police should be exempted from the act. There should be some modification of the act with regard to the workers on the Panama Railroad, because those workers labor six days a week-not five and a half days, as in civil employment in continental United States. So that unless some provision is made in the economy bill to protect the men who work upon the railroad owned and operated by the Government, they will lose double the amount of time without pay that the civilian employees in the continental United States will lose; and I hope the committee of conference will take those two items into consideration.

Let me say that the salary reduction, whether the provision made by the House or the amendment adopted in the Senate is finally adopted, is effective against the employees of the Government of the Panama Canal Zone and also the employees of the Panama Railroad. Therefore, in view of that situation, to cut off 10 per cent on the operation and maintenance of the locks might, to a very large extent, and no doubt would, interfere with international trade and jeopardize the successful operation of the canal. It would also, no doubt, interfere with the sanitary conditions, which must be kept perfect in the Panama Canal Zone on account of the zone being near the Equator. I see no undertaking for which appropriations are made under the subject of the Panama Canal that can be reduced without jeopardizing the business interests of the Government as well as other interests in which the United States has a vital concern in the Canal Zone.

I had hoped, therefore, that the Senator from Tennessee would except from his motion the provisions relating to the Panama Canal.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, in answer to what the Senator says, I desire to say that this morning I outlined 14 cuts in appropriations in this bill that I felt ought to be made. I did not include the Panama Canal Zone. It is not my purpose to include it if the bill goes back to the committee, because I am familiar with the facts as stated by the Senator from Wisconsin; and I had made up my mind, before the Senator brought the matter to the attention of the Senate, that there could not very well be a cut in the Panama Canal Zone.

I say that for the reason that if the Senator will look at the report of the Secretary of War for 1931, he will find the following statement on page 268:

Tolls levied during the year on commercial seagoing vessels amounted to $24,645,456.57, as compared with $27,076,890.01 for 1930, a decrease of $2,431,433.44, or 9 per cent. Cargo carried through the canal during the year amounted to 25,082,000 long tons, as compared with 30,030,232 tons for 1930, a decrease of 16.5 per cent.

The net income from tolls and other miscellaneous receipts known as "canal revenue" was $14,847,227.21. This was less than the net revenues for the fiscal year 1930 by $3,235,224.57, or approximately 18 per cent.

Now I read from page 11 of the same report.

Total net revenue for the year from all sources (Panama Canal and Panama Railroad, exclusive of the Panama Railroad Steamship Line) was $16,401,375.10, as compared with $20,367,297.72 for 1930. The aggregate net revenue from all sources was less than that for any year since 1925. This shortage was due primarily to decreased shipping activities for the year as compared with the managed by the years. preceding five years.

It will be seen that the present bill on page 80 carries an appropriation of $11,146,661. That is somewhat less than the revenue. During the good years of 1925, 1926, 1927, and 1928, and even in 1929, my recollection is-I have not the figures before me, but my recollection is—that the income from the Panama Canal and the Panama Railroad aggregated about $25,000,000. We were making a very excellent profit on our investment down there at that time. But since that time, during the depression, the same thing has occurred there that has occurred here, and the revenues have dropped considerably.

But, for the reason the Senator has stated, and for the additional reasons I have stated, it is not my purpose to interfere in any way; and if the bill goes back, there will be no action on my part to reduce in any way those items. I hope the Senator will remember that under the terms of the motion the committee is merely to reduce the aggregate, not any specific item, and I have already mentioned the items which I think ought to be reduced. I do not think the Panama Canal appropriation is one of those items.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, will the Senator perfect his motion?

Mr. McKELLAR. I could not very well do that.

Mr. BLAINE. Will he not add "except as to the Panama Canal appropriation "?

Mr. McKELLAR. There will be no necessity of that, because I assure the Senator that item will not be reduced, so far as I am able to prevent it. I do not think a reduction ought to be made in that activity of the Government.

Mr. BLAINE. I know the assurance of the Senator from Tennessee is a valuable assurance-

Mr. McKELLAR. No; it is just my own vote. I could not assure anything more; but I think the Senator is entirely right in his contention.

Mr. BLAINE. There would be no harm, then, in amending the motion to except the Panama Canal appropriation.

Mr. McKELLAR. If the Senator desires that, I have no objection to that being contained in the motion.

Mr. BLAINE. I ask that that be done.

Mr. McKELLAR. I will modify my motion to say, "with the exception of the Panama Canal."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator so modifies his motion. The question is on the motion as modified.

Mr. REED. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I listened with some amazement, some concern, and considerable disappointment, to the controversy between the Senator from Montana [Mr. Wheeler], and the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. Moses]. I heard all that was said by the Senator from Montana and I confess I was not impressed that he had made any threat or used any language that meant a threat.

It did seem to me that the Senator from New Hampshire was going far afield to find a reason for voting against the motion.

He said that he had voted for each one of the other motions by which the various appropriation bills had been sent back to the Committee on Appropriations with instructions to cut them 10 per cent, and that because of what the Senator from Montana said he was going to vote the other way on this motion. Mr. President, I want to have a pair with the Senator from New Hampshire. I voted against every one of the motions to return the appropriation bills to the committee with directions to bring in a bill reduced by 10 per cent, and I will now vote for this motion to send the pending bill back with instructions to bring in a report cutting the aggregate 10 per cent. If the Senator from New Hampshire is moved to vote the other way because of the speech of the Senator from Montana, I will say that I was so impressed with the speech of the Senator from Montana that I have decided to vote for the motion.

Mr. President, we have all been acting in the very best of faith, trying to reduce appropriations, and to cut down expenses. I confess that I was somewhat disappointed when I found the Senator from Utah and the Senator from Pennsylvania both advocating various items of taxation in the tax bill which grated very hard on me, which it was very difficult for me to support. But I followed them. In the main, I went through with them. We all united with the chairman of the Committee on Finance when he asked us to stay late at night and to start early in the morning. We discommoded ourselves, we neglected all our work, in order to help the committee dispose of and finally pass the tax bill, which everybody hoped would balance the Budget.

After all that teamwork, and those good-faith actions, we have seen the Senator from Utah and the Senator from Pennsylvania in the lead, in the main, in destroying the good work of that bill, which balanced the Budget, and opposing appropriations which would cut down the expenses of the Government, opposing items in the economy bill which would cut down expenses, so that by their own work they have been instrumental to quite a degree in unbalancing the Budget which they worked so hard to balance

Only yesterday they helped to cut out $40,000,000 of savings. Now, in the pending bill, they proposed to use public funds to carry on an appropriation by which schools are held all over the United States, and 260,000 of the younger citizens are taught that, for instance, the election of judges is something that will go far to destroy our Government, that the initiative is entirely and fundamentally wrong, that the referendum is wrong, that the public ownership of public utilities anywhere is wrong, and that if these things are carried on, our Government is going to fail, our Government is going eventually to be destroyed by these various things. That kind of doctrine is being taught to our people and the spreading of it being paid for by the Federal Government through appropriations made in this particular bill.

It seems to me, therefore, that if there has been an appropriation bill which we are justified in sending back to the committee, as the pending motion will do with the War Department bill, with instructions to reduce the aggregate 10 per cent, if there has been such a case, it is before us now, and I do not hesitate to vote in favor of the motion.

Something was said by the Senator from New Hampshire about threats, indicating that threats had been made. Something was said about the large so-called bonus army now encamped within sight of the Capitol. I agree with the Senator from New Hampshire that no threat should move us; but I have not heard of any threat. Nobody so far has threatened me. I have not felt that it is necessary for me to carry weapons in order to defend myself at night upon the streets. I do not believe any of us have been frightened or scared by any threat. That does not mean that I approve of the action of these ex-soldiers who have come here by the thousands in order to get what they call the bonus. I think it was a mistake. I do not believe they ought to have come. I do not believe they have accomplished anything by coming. But that is their business, and not mine. If they want to come, it is a free country, and they can come.

I have not heard of those men threatening anybody. I do not expect they will threaten anybody. The person who is trying to excite somebody to fright and saying that we are going to be threatened, that we are going to be mobbed, is running away from his own shadow. No danger has yet appeared.

Mr. President, suppose it were true; is that any reason why we should carry large appropriations for a large Army? Are we going to build up an army now to fight the soldier boys who just a few years ago were carrying our flag in foreign lands? Are we going now to build up an army to fight the veterans of the great World War? I do not believe we ought to do that. I am not afraid to intrust the reins of this Government in the hands of those veterans. I do not believe we would run any risk if we did that. I do not believe we are justified in now saying to the country and to the world that our soldier boys, who went through hell fighting our battles in a war that was going to make the world safe for democracy, and which only tumbled everything upside down and made the world a thousand times worse than it ever was before-I do not believe those boys who made the fight under our flag are dangerous now to the perpetuity of our Government.

I have talked with many people who saw the parade the other night, and who have gone through the camps, and they have not seen anything "red," they have not found communists, and, as I said this morning, communists are made by bad government. Communists avoid good government. If we want to save our country from the danger of communism, we ought to see that our people are happy and contented.

If there is a danger of rebellion coming, we can not throw it off by having our Army use public funds to try to inculcate in the minds of our people the idea that things which many of the States have regarded as fundamental principles of democracy are in fact dangerous to free government.

Why was the initiative adopted? Why was the recall adopted? Why have judges been elected? Why has there been a demand in many places for the Government ownership of public utilities? It is because of the injustice that has confronted the country and the communities from the exactions of the great utility companies. Every municipal plant distributing energy to the citizens of a locality has come into existence because of injustice, because of wrong, because Government officials have not fully complied with the law, because big business, big organized monopoly has insisted on bearing down and getting unholy profits from the men and the women of this country who toil and who make up the backbone and the sinew of our citizenship. They have all come on that account. There is not an exception.

Why has the initiative been put in force? It has been because experience has shown that some instrument of that kind is necessary in order to safeguard the rights of the common people against the inroads and the merciless and unholy things which have been done by legislatures and other officials controlled by selfish monopoly.

Why has the recall been brought about? For the same reason. Why are people electing judges; why are they resisting the cry that our Army is now trying to inculcate in the minds of the young men that an elected judge is a dangerous sign in a democracy? It is because judges selected for life, with salaries larger than the ordinary person in the community receives, being given for life a power over their fellow men that is given to nobody else, have abused that power, have in many cases been merciless and tyrannical in the use of it.

The people have said, therefore, "We will elect our judges." The cry that goes up against Federal judges now is that they abuse the power in many cases. I do not believe they all do. I think that as a whole we have a remarkably fine judiciary. But this cry which comes from the common people who have suffered injustice on account of the tyranny of men who hold office for life can not be drowned, that cry can not be squelched, by a lot of Army officials, paid for from the taxpayers' money, going out in the country through all our communities trying to make people believe that an elected judiciary has no place in a democracy, that the initiative has no place in a free government, that public ownership ought to be driven out and our public utilities turned over to the tender mercies of an organized oligarchy, of an organized trust that reaches from ocean to ocean and from the Gulf to the Lakes in every community, going into the churches, into the school districts, into the municipalities, into the lodges, sowing their seeds of dissension, trying to build up a sentiment in the country opposed to government ownership, paying for it all out of the pennies that the washerwoman and the laboring man pay for the electric current they use, paying for it all from the money obtained from the very men and very women whom they are trying to deceive and to fool.

Mr. President, it seems to me time now that we should call a halt. We can do it by cutting this item out of the appropriation bill. Will it hurt anybody in this time of distress, when we are in the greatest depression we have ever had in the history of our country? Will it hurt anything to suspend for a year or two these instrumentalities which, as a matter of fact, have nothing to do with the efficiency of the Army or the Navy? We got along a great many years, more than a hundred years, without any of them, and we will continue to get along if we should abolish them for a year or two.

I say again, there are a good many things about the training camps that I think are good. I think the physical training given to the young men of the country is a good thing, but it is not necessary to get that training in a military camp. It is not necessary, in order to get that training, to listen to a lot of doctrine that I think is unpatriotic, that goes to the very foundation of our liberty and our Government, trying to teach the young men of the country, with money that we pay them from our taxes, that these things which millions of our people regard as necessary in a democracy are as a matter of fact treasonable and will ultimately bring about destruction of government.

I have no hesitancy in voting to send the bill back to the committee and I hope, if it comes back with some of these items left as they are now, that the Senate of the United States will strike them out when the time comes.

Mr. CUTTING. Mr. President, I am sorry that the eloquence of the Senator from Montana [Mr. Wheeler] has been so powerful as to cause both the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. Moses] and the Senator from Nebraska to vote otherwise than they had intended to vote before that speech

Mr. NORRIS. Oh, Mr. President, I hope the Senator will not have any feeling in regard to my vote, because that only emphasizes what I had already concluded to do.

Mr. CUTTING. I have been voting, as the Senator from Nebraska has voted, against every one of these motions to recommit bills for a 10 per cent cut. It seems to me a very foolish and futile policy. That has been proven by the cuts we have made on previous appropriation bills. It may be that in some cases the House has sent appropriation bills which could be cut and should be cut, not only 10 per cent but perhaps 20 per cent or more, but to assume offhand that any bill which comes from the House ought to be cut the exact sum of 10 per cent, no matter what the merits of the issue may be, seems to me a very poor compliment to the coordinate body at the other end of the Capitol.

I want to say with regard to the speech of the Senator from Montana that I do not consider it revolutionary, subversive, or in any other way offensive. I think it was a perfectly proper thing to call attention to the facts to which the Senator did call attention. The only criticism I would make of the speech is that it seems to brand all who vote against the motion to recommit as being Budget balancers at all costs, as being opposed to relief for the suffering, as being opposed to a public-works program, or to the demands of the army of visitors which has come to us at the present time.

I think the Senator from Montana knows that I have consistently preached that the balancing of the Budget was infinitely less important at the present time than the giving of direct relief to the suffering and the providing of employment to every man for whom the Government is able to find a job.

So far as the question of the bonus is concerned, since 1924, when I was commander of the American Legion for the Department of New Mexico, I have believed and stated that a cash option should have been included in the bill at that time, on less favorable terms, of course, than would have been provided for the ex-service men who chose to wait for the final maturity of their certificates. There has been no time since then that I personally would not have voted to amend the original adjusted compensation act to include a cash option, and I should so vote now if I had the opportunity. I do not think that the arrival of the ex-service men will promote that cause in any respect. It will probably lead a great many who would otherwise have voted for their cause into voting the other way. Nevertheless I do not think anyone could have watched that parade two days ago without being profoundly moved at the idea that a whole generation of men, whom the Congress of the United States took out of private life and put into the war, is now at our doors pleading for the elementary right of citizens to be allowed to work or, if that is not given them, for the payment of a debt which they feel to be just.

Possibly these men would receive less permanent relief through an immediate cash payment at the present time than they would receive in employment through the enactment of some substantial measure providing for public works. I myself have proposed a bond issue of $5,000,000,000 for that purpose. I am doubtful in my own mind whether even that vast sum is adequate to deal with the situation.

But, Mr. President, we are not voting on any of these questions at the present time. This is a vote on a motion to send back to the committee a bill which has already cut down the present Army appropriations by 17 per cent. That motion would instruct the committee to take out another 10 per cent, or rather to make a 10 per cent reduction under the figures proposed by the House. I served on the subcommittee which reported the bill now before the Senate, and I do not believe that any such cut is possible within the bounds of rational legislation. We have already taken $80,000,000 off the department estimates. While I have not figured out the cut which would be required, I suppose it would amount to something like $40,000,000 more.

Mr. REED. It would be $39,000,000.

Mr. CUTTING. That seems to be a cut quite out of proportion with what any other department of the Government has been forced to take at the present time. I very much hope that the motion of the Senator from Tennessee will not prevail.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, may I call the Senator's attention to the fact that the present amount proposed to be appropriated for the Army alone is $290,000,000, which is more than twice as much as the Army appropriation for the British Army at the present time.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, that statement has been made several times, but I am perfectly certain it is incorrect. The latest exact figures that I have are for the fiscal year 1930. At that time the British budget for their Army was more than the United States Budget, and that was our high year in our Budget for the Army. In that year Great Britain, with an army twice the size of ours—and she pays them very much less I might say—was spending $334,937,000.

Mr. FRAZIER. Did not that include their navy and their air force, too?

Mr. REED. Oh, no. Our Army appropriation for that year was $332,405,000. The British military appropriation does not include their air forces. The American appropriation includes that part of our air force which is attached to the Army.

Mr. CUTTING. Mr. President, may I call the attention of the Senator from North Dakota to the fact that, according to my understanding, the British Army is not employed on any of the public-works programs which in this country we employ our Army to perform.

Mr. REED. The Senator is exactly right. At the present time the British Army is 100,000 men larger than ours.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, according to the statement of the Senator from Pennsylvania, $290,000,000 of this bill is for the Army itself. That is not for the river and harbor provisions of the bill at all. The $290,000,000 is for the Army itself. According to Congressman Collins's statement appearing on page 10249 of the Congressional Record of May 10, the British budget provided for the army, navy, and air force an appropriation of $364,753,228. The British Army budget alone is but $127,525,560.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I have not voted for any of the motions previously made by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKellar] to return appropriation bills to the committee with instructions to reduce the total amount by 10 per cent. I have not voted for those motions because I did not believe that the civil arm of the Government should be required to bear the entire brunt of the economies to be achieved at this session of Congress. The total expenditure of this Government for past wars and preparation for future wars, 20 years after the World War, amounts, according to a statement made recently by the President of the United States, to about 70 per cent of this year's Budget.

Therefore, Mr. President, the economies attained by the motions of the Senator from Tennessee and by the Senate up until this time have been taken from appropriation bills carrying the funds for the 30 per cent of the Budget which goes to maintain the entire civil arm of the Government. I suggested to the Senator from Tennessee on yesterday that while he had been very successful in cutting the appropriation bills that deal with the civil branches of the Government, and which render daily service to the citizens, when he came to offer similar motions to apply to the Army and Navy appropriation bills he would find a very different attitude on the part of Members of this body.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President-

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. I want to call the Senator's attention to the fact that while there is an apparent reduction in the bill of $3,000,000 from appropriations for the Army, it does not come from the appropriations for military activities of the Army at all, but it comes from deductions made from appropriations for civil activities of the Army, $5,000,000 plus being deducted from the appropriations for rivers and harbors alone, so that the bill really provides for an increase over the House appropriations of $2,000,000 plus.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I thank the Senator for his suggestion. It merely emphasizes the point I am making.

Mr. President, I have not been one of those who participated in creating the panic in the public mind concerning the balancing of the Budget; I have not been a party to it either on the floor of the Senate or in anything I have said outside of this Chamber. The fact remains, however, that Members of this body, members of the administration, men in positions of leadership in our economic and financial life, and the press have created a panic in the country concerning the balancing of the Budget. Yet when those same gentlemen are confronted with a proposal to apply to the appropriations for the Army the same rule of economy they have applied to all the civil functions of the Government, they balk: they find excuses not to apply that rule to the one branch of the Federal Government expenditures which, taken with those for the Navy, account for the greater share of the outgo of the money that is gathered in through taxation

Our expenditures, Mr. President, for this purpose following the "war to end war" have been continuously mounting through the years. In 1916, after we had launched a preparedness program, we spent for military activities $122,392,363; in 1922, after the war, we spent $329,000,050; in 1923 we expended $284,112,900; in 1924 the expenditure was $250,714,592; in 1925 the expenditure was $262,087,036; in 1926 it was $267,260,488; in 1927 it was slightly reduced to $267,124,000; in 1928 it rose to $294,957,000; in 1929 it jumped to $313,093,000; in 1930, the first year of the depression, it jumped again to $325,400,742; and even in 1931 it mounted to $339,604,259. The expenditures of the United States Government for national defense have increased from 1913 to 1930 by 197 per cent, the largest increase in such expenditures of any of the great powers of the world. Our total expenditures for armament in 1931 were $707,-425,000.

A majority of the Senate has been willing, in order to achieve economies, to take 10 per cent out of the pay of the lower-salaried employees of the Federal Government; but, Mr. President, according to Doctor Lubin, a noted economist connected with the Brookings Institute, if the 732,460 civil employees of the Federal Government who are to-day threatened with a cut in wages were to relinquish all their wages and salaries during the coming fiscal year, the savings to the United States Government would hardly be equal to two-thirds of the annual Federal expenditures for past and prospective wars.

One of the items which has been under discussion in this bill is the item for the citizens' military training camps. I wish again to direct the attention of those who hesitate to take the same action in connection with this bill that they have taken regarding all the other appropriation bills which have been considered by this body to the fact that Major General Summerall, when he retired as Chief of Staff, had this to say about the citizens' military training camps:

It is apparent that the camps do not directly serve to promote any military objective. The chief benefit to the Army lies in the increased confidence in its personnel on the part of the civilian population which has followed from the many contacts incident to the conduct of the camps.

In other words, Mr. President, the same gentlemen who have been shouting that drastic economies were necessary in order to maintain the credit structure of the Federal Government now refuse to apply the 10 per cent reduction rule to this bill which they applied to the other appropriation bills. It is evident they will vote to give the Army the money necessary to run the citizens' military training camps for instance when a former chief of staff has indicated that they are of no service so far as a military objective is concerned and that all the money expended for them accomplishes is to help carry on a propaganda among the citizenship of the country for the Army and for larger appropriations for its enlargement and maintenance.

I pointed out early in the afternoon that 339,061 boys participating in the citizens' military training camps have provided only 10 reserve officers; that half of the graduates who accept commissions let them lapse by showing no further interest; and, so far as the Reserve Officers' Training Corps unit is concerned, of 179,000 boys taking drill in educational institutions last year, only 5,150 became reserve officers, there being 833 graduates too young to receive commissions.

The Senate should be more consistent in its attitude toward the appropriation bills. Upon what theory will it refuse to reduce military appropriations and at the same time justify drastically cutting the independent offices appropriation bill, thereby crippling the investigation of the power companies, stopping the investigation of the chain-store organizations, stopping the investigation of the Cement Trust? It is said it is necessary to cut these appropriations in order to maintain the credit structure of the Government; but when the test comes on the Army bill, which accounts for a large percentage of the Government expenditures, the Senate is generous and declines to cut 10 per cent. Senators find excuses for changing their positions, even going so far as to seize upon the remarks made by another Senator as a justification for their inconsistencies.

Much has been said heretofore, Mr. President, relative to the military expenditures of France. I hold in my hand a clipping from the New York Times dated at Paris, June 8, from which I read as follows:

France's new radical socialist government intends to reduce armament appropriations this year by nearly 10 per cent, the figure currently given being 1,500,000,000 francs, or $60,000,000. The reduction will be distributed among three services—the army, the navy, and the air force.

The nation which has been most militaristic since the war now recognizes that it can no longer maintain the enormous ment.

In January, 1929, the President of the United States had this to say:

In the matter of Army outlay, I am in agreement with the Secretary of War to set up within the General Staff a commission of leading Army officers to reconsider our whole Army program, to see what services and other outlays have become obsolete through advancement of science and war methods, and what development programs can be well spread over longer periods in view of the general world outlook.

In September in a radio address the President said:

To-day we are engaged in a most hopeful discussion with other governments leading to this end

Referring to disarmament.

These are proposals which would relieve the backs of those who toil from gigantic expenditures and the world from the hate and fear which flows from the rivalry in building armaments.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President-

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. While we have that expression from the President, here is what actually happened:

In 1928 there was expended for the Army $298,000,000. In 1929 there was expended for the Army $416,000,000.

In 1930 there was expended for the Army $453,000,000.

In 1931 there was expended for the Army $478,000,000.

In 1932 there was expended for the Army $445,000,000. While the President may have taken the position that he was in favor of reduction, it will be found from the figures, from the actual facts, that during the time he has been President we have had the most extravagant and the costliest Army we have ever had in the history of time.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I was about to point out, before the Senator interrupted me, that despite these statements made by the Chief Executive, the appropriations for the Army have been mounting and mounting, mind you, during this period of depression; mounting during the very time when people were talking, in this Chamber and out of it, about reducing Government expenditures. It seems to me that in view of this situation we are entirely justified in pursuing with regard to this bill the course which the Senate has followed with regard to the bills carrying appropriations for the civil activities of the Federal Gov-

Mr. President, the mounting burden of armaments in the world is, no doubt, one of the causes for the prolongation of this depression.

I should like to point out that in Great Britain between 1913 and 1930, armaments rose from $375,000,000 to $535,-000,000, an increase of 42 per cent.

In France they rose from $348,000,000 in 1913 to $455,-000,000 in 1930, an increase of 30 per cent.

In Italy they rose from $179,000,000 in 1913 to $258,000,000 in 1930, an increase of 44 per cent.

In Japan they rose from $95,000,000 in 1913 to $232,000,000 in 1930, an increase of 142 per cent.

Mr. GORE. Is that for the army and navy, both?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Both.

In Russia they rose from $447,000,000 in 1913 to $579,000,000 in 1929, an increase of 30 per cent.

In the United States they rose from $244,000,000 in 1913 to $727,000,000 in 1930, an increase of 197 per cent; or, as I said a moment ago, the largest for any great power in the world.

In 1913 the six Governments I have named spent $1,690,000,000 for armaments. In 1930 they expended $2,788,000,000, or an increase for the group as a whole of

Mr. President, I hope that the motion offered by the Senator from Tennessee will prevail. I believe that if this bill is sent back to the committee and if the Secretary of War comes before the subcommittee, as the heads of other departments have come before other subcommittees in connection with other appropriation bills, a material saving may be made in this appropriation. I trust that the same | Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS]; expenditure for the maintenance of its military establish-, procedure will be followed with regard to the naval appropriation bill; for unless the Senate adopts the same rule of economy with the Army and the Navy appropriations that have been applied to all of the other appropriation bills, its efforts to bring about economy become a sham and a hypocrisy.

> I, for one, can not see how Senators who have participated in directing public attention to the necessity of balancing the Budget, who have stated here on the floor of the United States Senate that if the Budget was not balanced it would create a run on the American dollar, can vote against this motion. The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED], in charge of this bill, made an impassioned speech, which I characterized as an unfortunate utterance and could but inevitably have the effect of increasing the panic already created in this country concerning the soundness of the credit structure of this Government. Yet, as the Senator in charge of this appropriation bill for the Army, he is unwilling to vote, as he has voted on other appropriation bills, to send it back to the committee in order to make a substantial reduction in that branch of the service. The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] voted to reduce the civil branches of the Government but he declines to reduce the Army by the same percentage.

> I shall vote for this motion because I believe it is a sham on the part of the Senate to cut the civil services of the Government 10 per cent and then to refuse to make the same cut in the Army and Navy upon which we shall expend nearly $700,000,000 this year.

> The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKellar] has moved to recommit the bill to the Committee on Appropriations, with instructions to cut the appropriations 10 per cent below the amount contained in the bill as passed by the House, with the exception of the appropriations for the Panama Canal.

> On that question the yeas and nays have been ordered, The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

So Mr. McKellar's motion to recommit the bill, with instructions, was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the committee.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, at this time I desire to introduce a resolution which, if agreed to, would have an effect upon the pending bill and all other appropriation bills. I ask to have the resolution read for the information of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent to introduce a resolution, which will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 224), as Resolved. That it be declared the policy of the Senate to eliminate from H. R. 11897 and all other appropriation bills, including bills already enacted, all items for permanent improvements, such as for highway construction, public buildings, public works, flood control, river and harbor improvements, and that such items be ordered considered in connection with the bill for unemployment relief and that the cost of such permanent improvements be met with funds secured from the issuance and

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I ask that the resolution may lie over under the rule.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I did not ask for the immediate consideration of the resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. As a matter of fact, may the Chair state to the Senator from Oklahoma, the resolution may not be introduced except by unanimous consent, because the Senate is already working under a unanimousconsent agreement.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I realize that the resolution would not be in order as an amendment to the pending bill. The resolution, if agreed to, would affect a bill which has already been passed, the Interior Department appropriation bill, but that is not in such shape that it could not be reached. That bill contains items which can be taken from it and placed in what might be termed an unemployment relief bill.

This resolution, of course, is subject to a point of order. I could only get it up by unanimous consent, and I serve notice that at the earliest possible time I shall ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. May the Chair suggest that the Senator ask unanimous consent to introduce the resolution, have it printed, and lie on the table?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I make that request.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the committee, which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 9, line 21, strike out "$4,648,-006" and insert "$6,281,824," so as to read:

Rental allowances, including allowances for quarters for enlisted men on duty where public quarters are not available, $6,281,824.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 9, line 22, to strike out "$5,122,479" and to insert "$5,928,389," so as to read:

Subsistence allowances, $5,928,389, and the rental and subsistence allowances for the fiscal year 1933 shall be the same as for the fiscal year 1932, subject to such reduction therein as may be necessary under the provisions of section 102, Part II, of the legislative appropriation act for the fiscal year 1933.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 10, line 9, to change the appropriation for pay, etc., of the Army from "$133,-257,790" to "$137,042,204," and in line 12, after the word "discharges," to strike out "£132,457,790" and insert "$136,242,204," so as to read:

In all, $137.042.204, less $800,000 to be supplied by the Secretary of War for this purpose from funds received during the fiscal year 1933 from the purchase by enlisted men of the Army of their discharges, $136,242,204; and the money herein appropriated for "Pay, etc., of the Army" shall be accounted for as one fund.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 10, line 15, after the word "Provided," to strike out:

That no part of this appropriation shall be available to pay any officer detailed as a military aide to any civil officer of the United States outside of the War Department except the President.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 10, commencing in line 18 to strike out:

Provided further, That no appropriation contained in this act shall be available for or on account of the maintenance of more than 50 military attachés.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 10, commencing in line 21. to strike out:

Provided further, That no appropriation contained in this act shall be available for or on account of the maintenance of more than 83 bands: Provided further.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 11, line 2, after "sec. 803)," to strike out the colon and the following additional Provided further, That after September 30, 1932, the sum herein appropriated for the pay of officers shall not be used for the pay of more than 10,000 commissioned officers on the active list of the Regular Army.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 11, line 6, to strike out the following additional proviso:

The next amendment was, on page 16, after line 14, to insert:

MILEAGE OF THE ARMY

For mileage, reimbursement of actual traveling expenses, or per diem allowances in lieu thereof, as authorized by law, to commissioned officers, warrant officers, contract surgeons, and expert accountant, Inspector General's Department, $506,250.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, I would like to have an explanation of that insertion in lines 15 to 20, page 16.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, that is a part of the larger item, which, the Senator will see, was stricken out, ending on line 14, page 16. We have put back into a separate provision the appropriation for various items of travel; but we have not increased by a single cent the amount allowed by the House for travel. That is the explanation for many of these changes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Expenses of courts-martial," on page 17, line 2, to strike out "$55,700" and insert "$58,925," so as to read:

For expenses of courts-martial, courts of inquiry, military commissions, retiring boards, and compensation of reporters and witnesses attending same, contract stenographic reporting services, and expenses of taking depositions and securing other evidence for use before the same, $58,925.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Apprehension of deserters," and so forth, on page 17, line 13, after the word "discharge," to strike out "$110,000" and insert "$30,000," so as to read:

For the apprehension, securing, and delivering of soldiers absent without leave and of deserters, including escaped military prisoners, and the expenses incident to their pursuit; and no greater sum than $50 for each deserter or escaped military prisoner shall, in the discretion of the Secretary of War, be paid to any civil officer or citizen for such services and expenses; for a donation of $10 to each prisoner discharged otherwise than honorably upon his release from confinement under court-martial sentence involving dishonorable discharge, $30,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Quarter-master Corps," on page 20, line 3, after the words "in all," to increase the appropriation for subsistence of the Army from $11,714,792 to $11,815,498.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 21, line 23, after the figures "$3,904,926," to strike out the colon and the following proviso:

Provided, That no appropriation in this act shall be available for the purchase of electric ranges for buildings or quarters supplied with gas for cooking purposes or for buildings or quarters upon reservations to which such gas is supplied.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, I can not understand why this proviso should be stricken out. I do not know what the amount of the expenditure would be if it were left in. The appropriation to which it refers is $3,904,926. The House has put in the proviso that no electric ranges shall be bought where gas is available. I can not see for the life of me why there should be; and I can not see why the committee struck the proviso out.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, that was stricken out on the report of the War Department that there are some posts at which electricity is so cheap that they save money by using electricity instead of any other fuel. Of course, that is not true in most posts, but there are some of them where hydroelectric works are right near by, where they can do their cooking cheaper by electricity than by coal or gas. That is the only reason why the proviso was stricken out.

Mr. FRAZIER. It seems to me strange, Mr. President, that the House committee would not have the same information the Senate committee had.

Mr. REED. If the Senator will yield, I will say that that is one of several items which the House committee inserted apparently without any evidence one way or the other.

Mr. FRAZIER. I do not know that it makes any difference, but where gas is already piped into buildings, it looks rather strange that they would be allowed to spend Government money for electric ranges.

Mr. REED. The War Department assures us that in every case they will adopt that course which is the cheapest, which will save the most money.

Mr. FRAZIER. I am not so sure that the War Department always carries out that kind of a promise. It seems to me that they have been mighty extravagant in many instances in their expenditures. I am afraid this is one of them, and that the reason is that the wife of the Army officer feels that she would prefer an electric range instead of a gas range because it is cooler in the summer time to have an electric range.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 23, line 9, after the word "reasons," to strike out "$6,776,519" and insert "$6,300,000," so as to read:

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I ask that that amendment may be passed over for a moment. Apparently a line has been omitted by the printer.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment will be temporarily passed over.

The next amendment was, on page 25, line 16, after the word "allowances," to insert "to officers and enlisted men on discharge," so as to read:

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, would an amendment be in order making an addition to a part of the bill now under consideration?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. An amendment to a committee amendment is in order. An amendment to the House text is not yet in order.

Mr. JOHNSON. My amendment is not to a committee amendment, so I shall have to offer it subsequently.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be in order when the stage of individual amendments is reached.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of the amendment on page 26, beginning with line 11?

Mr. REED. Mr. President, that language was stricken out because it was completely covered by our action on the economy bill yesterday. We did not see any use in duplicating it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will state the next amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, I want to call attention to these items in the river and harbor provisions of the bill. I invite attention to the prevailing method of financing river and harbor projects. I want to do that for the purpose of showing what a wasteful pork-barrel method of appropriating funds has been pursued all down through the years, an inexcusable method of wasting public funds.

I have had placed on the wall of the Senate Chamber a map which shows the Mississippi, Missouri, Ohio, and Tennessee Rivers. In the last 40 years there has been $470,000,000 spent in developing those rivers—$470,000,000 spent to develop channels for transportation; and we have not a channel in any of those rivers now, with the exception of the Ohio.

The Ohio River project was adopted in 1910. It was estimated it would cost $60,000,000 if it was completed in 10 years. Under this piecemeal method of appropriations and piecemeal method of making contracts, and the delays incidental to this method of financing the project, it took 20 years to complete it. Because of the delays and because of the method pursued in letting the contracts it cost $103,000,000 instead of $60,000,000. The Ohio is the only project that has been completed. Last year the Ohio River, with its tributaries, carried 64,000,000 tons of freight. It carried 24,000,000 tons more of freight than passed through the Panama Canal last year.

To show what river transportation means to those who must pay for goods moved, we have here the Monongahela River carrying coal to the steel plants at Pittsburgh for 21 cents a ton. The rate by rail for the same coal 50 miles farther to Youngstown, Ohio, is $1.46 a ton, $1.22 extra to haul it an extra 50 miles by rail. I am informed that that difference in differential is worth $25,000,000 a year to the United States Steel Corporation for the plants at Pittsburgh over what the Youngstown Sheet & Tube Co., at Youngstown, enjoys, having to haul by rail. There is a distance on the Ohio River from Pittsburgh to Youngstown that has not yet been developed. I believe that stretch is called the Beaver River. That will give an illustration of what it means to develop the inland waterways of the United States.

I am not going to take the time of the Senate to discuss now the advantages of developing the rivers and harbors. I want to point out how wasteful of the taxpayers' money is the method now pursued in this bill and in every appropriation bill that has been passed for rivers and harbors, because it does not finish any channel, it does not give the taxpayer the advantage of the cheaper water transportation. We have here $470,000,000 invested in these inland waterways, but we do not have the use of them. The interest on the money thus invested, the interest on the idle capital tied up in inland waterways, would ensure the balancing of the Budget this year. The Chief of Engineers of the Army has testified before the Commerce Committee of the Senate that if this work were done as one job it could be completed in five years and he would save 20 to 25 per cent of the amount otherwise expended.

The method pursued in financing the inland rivers has been as expensive and wasteful as it would be when building a house to build one room each year and not put on any roof. We have dug in these rivers for 40 years and because the work was never finished, the work that was done this year was destroyed by the floods of next year, and it would have to be done over again. The only people who have had any benefit out of this wasteful pork-barrel method of financing the inland waterways have been the contractors who seem to have had a close corporation and have waxed fat upon these contracts without anyone else getting any benefit.

Mr. KING. Mr. President-

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I yield.

Mr. KING. A number of years ago I made a very careful investigation in regard to these contractors and their close corporation or their close affiliation under the terms of which they obtained substantially all the contracts. I was wondering if that combination still exists and whether the War Department of the Government still nurses them as it has been doing to my way of thinking for many, many years? I think it is perfectly indefensible conduct on the part of the Government. I discovered these organizations carried on a powerful propaganda. Their organization went so far as to affect the purchase of materials and the necessary machinery that was employed. I was wondering if the Senator knew of the existence of the organization to-day and whether there has been any change in its policy and in the relation of the Government to it.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I have no personal knowledge of the conspiracy, but judging from results and methods pursued they are evidently very good lobbyists. I am led to believe that in view of the attitude that has been taken by the War Department in the administration ever since Hoover in 1928 and again in 1929 made it a part of his program to finish these inland waterways as one project and to develop inland water transportation, nothing has been done to carry out a comprehensive plan of developing the inland waterways and finishing them to save money and to give people the benefit of water transportation.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President-

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I yield.

Mr. WAGNER. Has the Senator suggested how he thinks this project could be financed?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I shall be glad to do so.

Mr. WAGNER. I think that would be interesting.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. These projects, in my opinion, being permanent improvements, that will mean a great saving to shippers of all kinds of goods in the 25 States affected, should be treated as capital investment. There is no reason for continuing appropriations under the present method unless we are going to handle this on a business basis and pursue a sound financial policy in financing and develop a sound economic policy in the construction of it; otherwise I think these appropriations should be abolished.

The capital investment should not be taken out of the taxpayer at the present time or at any time. The finances should be funded. It should not be funded in the Budget. No capital investment should be in a budget. The simplest housewife who has a budget at all will budget her current expenses, but extraordinary expenditures become capital investment and should not be taken out of current income.

The smallest business concern will not take capital expenditures out of current income. If the project is to be finished so that the people shall get the benefit of water transportation and so break the economic paralysis that has stricken this part of the country since Congress passed the transportation act, the whole financial project should be lifted out of appropriation bills; funds should be raised by the sale of bonds and retired over a long period of years. Future generations should help to pay for the benefits that are to accrue.

The benefits resulting would make it indirectly a selfliquidating project because the benefits that would come would so increase the income to the people, freight that can not now move would then move, and from the increased interchange of goods would come financial and economic benefit so that at least indirectly these projects would be self-liquidating.

To illustrate, from Shelby, Mont., to Duluth, 1,000 miles, it costs 21 cents to haul a bushel of wheat. From Duluth to Buffalo by water it costs 1.8 cents to haul the same bushel of wheat. It costs 7.5 cents to take a bushel of wheat across 3,000 miles by water that it does to take it a thousand miles by land. Transportation rates are so high in this part of the country [indicating on map] that industry is drifting to the seaboard in order to get to the water. The traffic manager for the John Deere Co. at Moline, Ill., testified before the Commerce Committee that, because of deep channel in the lower Mississippi, instead of shipping farm machinery to the Pacific Coast by rail, they took it down the Mississippi River by barges, put the machinery on board a ship and took it through the Panama Canal, up the coast of Central America and to ports in California at a saving of $23 a ton. He said the saving amounts to as much as forty or fifty dollars on a farm tractor.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I yield.

Mr. DILL. As illustrative of what water transportation compared to land transportation means, I call the attention of the Senator to the fact that when the wheat farmers on the Pacific slope have a market in the Orient they get a higher price for their wheat than any other farmers in the United States; but when the market in the Orient is glutted or closed to them and they must ship their wheat east, they get 30 cents a bushel less than is paid in Chicago. is the practical illustration of the benefit of water transportation.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I thank the Senator from Washington for his contribution. I should like also to talk with the Senator from Washington about lumber because he is interested, I am interested, and we are all interested in it, because we buy it. Prices for it are very high. With the development of these waterways [indicating on map] lumber can be brought down from British Columbia and Washington to the Mississippi River and up the Ohio to Pittsburgh, or up the Mississippi to the Twin Cities, and up the Missouri River to Sioux City. Here [indicating on the map] is a development that seems to have been left in the hands of a very few people, who certainly have had a great deal of benefit out of it at the expense of the great mass of the taxpayers of the United States, though their number is very small, because the project has never been finished.

Later I shall call the attention of the Senate to a bill that would place all those projects into one project, which would save, according to the Chief of Engineers, from 20 to 25 per cent in construction costs and employ 160,000 for five years, working 120 days out of each year.

Mr. BLAINE. That is direct employment?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. That is direct employment of labor, and the indirect employment of labor we can not estimate. Mr. BLAINE. It is three times the direct employment.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Possibly it is three times.

I simply wanted to take a few minutes of the time of the Senate to call attention to the miserable little appropriations being made for projects of this kind under the policy being pursued. It is a disgrace to any government; it is not businesslike at all; it is an example of business in government and not government in business.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I yield.

Mr. KING. Is it not a fact, notwithstanding the expenditure of considerably more than $500,000,000 upon the Mississippi and Missouri Rivers, to say nothing of the Ohio, that there is less traffic upon those rivers now than there was in the days of Mark Twain and for 20 years anterior to his trips up and down the Mississippi River?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I think that is true of the Mississippi, because with the present channel it is uneconomic to move freight, the channel not being of sufficient depth. However, engineering plans have already been finished, and the Chief of Engineers said he could easily spend $100,000,000 this year on the program of completing these inland waters and river and harbor projects. Where there is a 9-foot dependable channel there can be operated a barge tow of 24,000 tons. The average tow on the Ohio is 10,000 tons, the Atlantic, 3,000 miles. It costs just one-third to take it drawn by a little tugboat. Tows have been hauled on the Ohio, I am told, of 35,000 tons. That would be nearly four times the tonnage carried by an ocean freighter. The average tow, however, is 10,000 tons.

Mr. President, I do not think I will at this late hour take up any more time. I will address the Senate later upon this subject; but because of the fact that there is an appropriation bill now before us to continue the present uneconomic method of developing rivers and harbors, I wanted to call the Senate's attention to the policy which has been pursued for 40 years and which should be stopped at once.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, does the Senator's proposal involve taking the expenditure of the funds for rivers and harbors out of the hands of the War Department? I agree with the Senator, I will say, that that ought to be done, because of the experience of the past. We have expended now more than $1,260,000,000 upon river and harbor projects; I have examined every project from the days of Washington down to the present time, and I have reached the conclusion that 95 per cent of them have been wasteful and extravagantly managed. It seems to me now, as the Senator has pending a very important proposition treating the question sort of de novo, we ought to take it out of the hands of the War Department and evolve a different system for handling these appropriations.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, I believe that the Congress is to a great extent to blame, because Congress has sponsored and tolerated the kind of policy which has been pursued.

Mr. KING. I agree with the Senator as to that.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Congress should establish the policy, and I believe the engineers of the War Department will carry out whatever policy Congress may adopt. I have a great deal of regard for the ability and integrity of the Chief of Engineers, General Brown. I think he is a man who could complete this work as efficiently as General Goethals completed the Panama Canal. If there were adopted such a method of financing these projects as was adopted in the case of the Panama Canal, they could be brought to completion, and the people who are now suffering from exhorbitant freight rates and economic stagnation in that great inland empire, around which Congress built an economic wall when it constructed the Panama Canal, would be greatly benefited, as would the taxpayers; but under the methods pursued in the past, I can not see where anyone gets any benefit unless it be the contractors and those who furnish the material.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next amendment reported by the committee will be stated.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the subhead "Muscle Shoals," on page 76, line 6, after the word "development," to strike out "$244,809" and insert "$245,184," so as to read:

For operating, maintaining, and keeping in repair the works at Dam No. 2, Tennessee River, including the hydroelectric development, $245,184, to remain available until June 30, 1933, and to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War and the supervision of the Chief of Engineers.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 76, at the end of line 13, to strike out "$31,773,775" and insert "$31,500,000," so as to read:

Flood control, Mississippi River and tributaries: For prosecuting work of flood control in accordance with the provisions of the flood control act, approved May 15, 1928 (U. S. C., Supp. V, title 33, sec. 702a), $31,500,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 76, line 21, to strike out "$390,307" and insert "$400,000," so as to read:

Emergency fund for flood control on tributaries of Mississippi River: For rescue work and for repair or maintenance of any flood-control work on any tributaries of the Mississippi River threatened or destroyed by flood, in accordance with section 7 of flood control act, approved May 15, 1928 (U. S. C., Supp. V, title 33, sec. 702g), $400,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 77, at the end of line 2, to strike out "$993,855" and insert "$1,000,000," so as to read:

Flood control, Sacramento River, Calif.: For prosecuting work of flood control in accordance with the provisions of the flood control act approved March 1, 1917 (U. S. C., title 33, sec. 703), as modified by the flood control act approved May 15, 1928 (U. S. C., Supp. V, title 33, sec. 704), $1,000,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 77, after line 2, to insert:

Mileage, traveling expenses, or per diem in lieu thereof, transportation of dependents, including packing and crating, and transportation of baggage, as authorized by law, for officers, warrant officers, and enlisted men of the Regular Army and civilian employees, traveling on duty pertaining to or on detail to or relief from nonmilitary activities provided for in this act under appropriations for the Quartermaster Department, Signal Corps, and Engineer Department, shall be paid from the appropriation in connection with which such travel is performed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Townsend in the chair). That completes the committee amendments with the exception of an amendment, on page 24, which the Chair is informed was passed over at the request of the chairman of the committee. Without objection, that amendment will be recurred to, and will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 24, line 15, after the word "transportation," the committee proposes to strike out—

For transportation of Army supplies; of authorized baggage, including packing and crating.

And to insert:

For transportation of the Army and its supplies, including retired enlisted men when ordered to active duty; of authorized baggage, including that of retired officers, warrant officers, and enlisted men when ordered to active duty and upon relief therefrom, and including packing and crating; of recruits and recruiting parties; of applicants for enlistment between recruiting stations and recruiting depots; of necessary agents and other employees, including their traveling expenses; of dependents of officers and enlisted men as provided by law; of discharged prisoners, and persons discharged from Saint Elizabeths Hospital after transfer thereto from the military service, to their homes (or elsewhere as they may elect): Provided, That the cost in each case shall not be greater than to the place of last enlistment.

Mr. REED. I move to amend the committee amendment by inserting the word "transportation," after the semicolon at the end of line 5, page 25.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 25, in line 6, before the words "of horse," it is proposed to insert the word "transportation."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I am authorized by the committee to submit an amendment, to come in on page 76, after the figures "$54.000.000." in line 2.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 76, line 2, after the figures "$54,000,000," it is proposed to insert a colon and the following additional proviso:

Provided further, That the existing project for the improvement of the Miami River, Fia., authorized by the rivers and harbors act approved July 3, 1930, is hereby modified to include the improvement recommended by the Chief of Engineers in the report submitted in Senate Document No. 95, Seventy-second Congress, first session, provided that the authorization of $800,000 for the existing project shall not be increased but is hereby continued as the total authorization for the project as herein modified.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, this amendment does not involve an increase of appropriation; it does not involve an increase of authorization, but is merely a modification of the project which has been recommended by the Chief of Engineers so as to permit the dredging of a place in Miami Harbor where airplanes en route to Panama may come to rest. It requires a 6-foot depth of water, and there is only 2 or 3 feet at the present time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania on behalf of the committee.

Mr. REED. I am authorized by the committee to offer the amendment, which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 76, after the additional proviso just inserted, to insert the following additional proviso:

Provided further, That the existing river and harbor project at Monroe Harbor, Mich., as authorized by the act approved July 3, 1930, and in accordance with House Document No. 22, Seventy-first Congress, second session, is hereby modified in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 12, Seventy-second Congress, first session.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, that amendment involves an actual reduction in the appropriation at Monroe Harbor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania on behalf of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. REED. I am requested by the Quartermaster General to offer the amendment which I now send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated for the information of the Senate.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 68, line 2, after the word "village," it is proposed to insert a colon and the following additional proviso:

Provided further, That hereafter Arlington National Cemetery shall be administered by an officer of the Army retired from active service under the provisions of section 1251, Revised Statutes, detailed on active duty for that purpose.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like an explanation of that amendment.

Mr. REED. The amendment merely authorizes the continuance in Arlington Cemetery of the retired officer who is now on duty there. The Quartermaster General has asked that the amendment be adopted in order to clear up any doubt that may exist.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. REED. I have one more amendment to come in on page 11, line 2, after the parenthesis. I send the amendment to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 11, line 2, after the parenthesis, it is proposed to insert the following proviso:

Provided further, That notwithstanding any provisions to the contrary contained in Part II of the legislative appropriation act for the fiscal year 1933, members of the military service shall be entitled to automatic increases in pay and allowances by reason of length of service or promotion during the fiscal year 1933.

Mr. REED. The purpose of that amendment, Mr. President, is to take care of those enlisted men and officers—but principally enlisted men—who may be promoted during the coming year. If a private is promoted to a corporal or a corporal is promoted to a sergeant, the promotion carries a very few dollars additional pay, but it is something that touches the pride of the man himself.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, is this amendment not in defiance of the provisions of the economy bill which passed yesterday?

Mr. REED. It is the amendment which I tried to offer last night and which was ruled out of order because the bill had already been read the third time.

Mr. DILL. It permits promotions and increases of salary, which are forbidden in every other department, does it not?

Mr. REED. Promotion goes on just the same in the Army, but does not carry an increase of salary. In the case of the enlisted men in the Army, promotions result in an additional cost of approximately $150,000 a year. If we are going to say to a newly made corporal that he is to be denied all increase of pay that should accrue from his promotion, we have just about destroyed his morale, and I hope the Senate will not insist upon doing that.

Furthermore, as to the officers, I have had a statement prepared to show who will bear the brunt of the change; and I find that it falls almost entirely upon the first lieutenants and the captains. Three hundred and fifty-six thousand dollars out of the $500,000 saving on officers will fall on first lieutenants and captains. I am sure the Senate did not realize that when it included military officers in section 201 of the economy bill.

I should like very much to have this amendment adopted and go to conference in the hope that we can do something for those young men.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I do not think that amendment should go in this bill. We should not start out in this bill to make exceptions in the other one before we get it through conference. I can realize that it will work some little hardship in the way of the expectations of these men, but we must deal with the situation as it is. What the economy bill may bring out I do not know; but I do not believe we should provide in this bill that exceptions shall be made.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I feel perfectly certain that the Senate would have done this last night if we had not had snap judgment taken on us by the action of the Chair in announcing the third reading of the bill. It gave us no chance to offer the amendment or to thresh it out on its merits.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I have just read the amendment. It was impossible for anyone to keep up with the amendment when the clerk was reading it, he read it so rapidly.

This amendment distinctly says that nothwithstanding the provision in regard to promotions, members of the military service shall be entitled to automatic increases in pay and allowances by reason of length of service or promotion during the fiscal year 1933.

Mr. REED. That is right; and they ought to have them. Mr. TRAMMELL. That is directly in contradistinction to the policy applied to everybody else in the Government service.

I see no reason why we should make any exceptions. I have a very high regard for the Army officers. I have a very high regard for the administration of the War Department in general, as far as the Army officers are concerned. I might not extend that to the Secretary of War, although I think perhaps he is all right; but, while the Army officers are all right, there is no reason or justice in making exceptions in their case and giving them a privilege that we do not give anyone else.

I do not blame the Senator in charge of the bill for his zeal in trying to hold the War Department intact in every respect and have practically no reductions in the appropriations. He is now manifesting the same zeal in that respect that he did a day or two ago in regard to cutting the salary of everybody in civil employment.

Mr. REED. Frankly, I am concerned for the enlisted

Mr. TRAMMELL. I do not care for any exceptions. If the Senator is concerned about the enlisted men, why not apply it only to the enlisted men?

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I think this amendment is subject to a point of order. I think it is legislation on an appropriation bill; and I make the point of order.

Mr. REED. I have to admit that, in my opinion, it is subject to a point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, there is one other amendment which is requested by the Senator from California [Mr. Johnson]. It merely continues an authorization on which contracts are now being let. There is some apprehension in the War Department that they will not be able to get the contracts technically completed by the 1st of July. This will take care of that by continuing the authorization.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 28, line 17, in the appropriation for military posts, add the following:

The unexpended balances on June 30, 1932, under the following appropriations are hereby continued and made available until expended for the same respective purposes, namely: Barracks, officers' quarters, and noncommissioned officers' quarters, $518,000, War Department appropriation act, fiscal year 1929, approved

March 23, 1928, and subsequently made available for the same purpose at Marin County, Calif., by the second deficiency act, fiscal year 1931, approved March 4, 1931; technical construction for the Air Corps of the Army, $285,000, War Department appropriation act, fiscal year 1930, approved February 28, 1929, and subsequently made available for the same purpose at Marin County, Calif., by the second deficiency act, fiscal year 1931, approved March 4, 1931.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania on behalf of the Senator from California.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I ask the chairman of the committee whether any effort has been made-and if so, whether it is being realized in this bill-to close a large number of the unnecessary posts throughout the United States?

Mr. REED. That is a matter for Executive discretion, Mr. President. It is a fact that a list of 58 posts-I think that is the number-has been prepared at the War Department. Many of them have already been abandoned. The property of many of them has been advertised for sale. They are making a conscientious effort to reduce the number as fast as it reasonably can be done.

Mr. KING. The Senator knows that the maintenance of this large number of Army posts adds materially to the expenses of the Government, and the same thing is true of the Navy. We are maintaining a large number of naval stations that are unnecessary; and, notwithstanding frequent recommendations for their abolishment, are still maintained. We are also maintaining many Army posts that ought to have been abandoned years ago.

Mr. REED. I think that is true; but every time we try to abandon one, Senators and Congressmen interested rush up to the War Department and to the President and make it difficult. I think, however, more have been abandoned in the last 12 months than in any similar period in the last

Of course, it is for the good of the Army. Men can not be trained satisfactorily when only a platoon is stationed at

Army maneuvers can not be conducted properly, as our troops have been scattered throughout the United States, a few hundred or, at the most, a very few thousand in posts, instead of having them concentrated in such a way that effective Army maneuvers can be conducted.

Mr. REED. The Senator is exactly right; but, of course, he sees as well as the rest of us that to bring that about by legislation is next to impossible. We would not get this bill through by Christmas if we undertook to put in a list of posts to be abandoned.

Mr. KING. May I ask the Senator one other question? I notice in the reports of the expenditures for a number of years that the civil employees in the Army have ranged all the way from 25,000 to 45,000. A large number have been clerks and officials doing civilian work. I am wondering if any effort had been made to reduce the number of civilian employees in the Army.

Mr. REED. Oh, I think so.

Mr. KING. I have not seen any evidence of it.

Mr. REED. Of course, the Senator must remember that a very large number of civilian employees are employed in nonmilitary activities. The flood control and river and harbor work calls for the employment of many civilians. They are not all clerks here in Washington, by any means.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I express deep regret over the failure of the committee reporting this bill to bring it within proper bounds. In my judgment it contains a number of provisions that ought to have been eliminated and it carries a total appropriation of at least $50,000,000 in excess of what the situation requires. There has been deep concern upon the part of Congress because of the fear that revenues would not be provided for the purpose of meeting the expenditures for the next fiscal year. That fear was shared by the business interests of our country as well as by thoughtful persons and those who were cognizant of the condition of the Treasury of the United States.

Congress was conjured to apply drastic reductions to the appropriation bills that were being formulated, and to enact than $1,000,000,000 of additional revenue. It was recognized that the increasing deficit was a menace to the credit of the Federal Government and an obstacle to business revival. If the Federal Government failed to provide revenues to meet its expenditures, it was obvious that the day would soon come when the credit of the country would be impaired and its securities would fall below par. Such a situation would be calamitous. Securities of States and their political subdivisions, as well as those offered by corporations and individuals, would be seriously affected and the reactions in every business and industrial activity would be highly disadvantageous.

The Finance Committee, of which I am a member, struggled for weeks to agree upon a measure that would yield sufficient revenue, if appropriation bills were materially reduced, to cover the contemplated expenditures of the Federal Government for the coming fiscal year. Because of the continued depression and the rather dubious prospects of anticipated revival in business, it is a question whether the revenues anticipated by the committee and by Congress, will be realized, in which event a deficit undoubtedly will result, unless reductions made by Congress are hundreds of millions of dollars below the President's Budget submitted by him to Congress in December.

Mr. President, if Congress were to follow the recommendations of the President as contained in his budget, there would be, I feel certain, a deficit of hundreds of millions of dollars. Congress must disregard the President's recommendations and subject every appropriation bill to important, and indeed radical, reductions. Thus far Congress has made some progress and has cut appropriation bills considerably below the recommendations of the executive departments. But the cuts have not been sufficient. It has been my view that when the two military bills, the Army appropriation bill and the Navy appropriation bill, were before Congress, there would be an opportunity to achieve important results in the way of reductions in Federal expenditures. I believed that we could reduce the budget estimates covering the Army and Navy for the current year, between $150,000,000 and $200,000,000. But I am doomed to grievous disappointment. My expectations will not be realized. The Senate a few moments ago, refused to recommit the pending measure for the purpose of reducing the total amount carried by the bill, 10 per cent. With a decisive vote in opposition to the motion to recommit, the Senate served notice that it would not accept any amendments reducing the items carried in the bill.

The measure before us provides approximately $400,000,000 for the next fiscal year. It is true only about three hundred millions are for strictly military purposes, the remainder being for improving rivers and harbors, and for flood-control work on the Mississippi River. With respect to the appropriations for rivers and harbors, may I say that in my opinion at least fifteen or twenty million dollars should be taken from the amounts allocated for that purpose. Three or four years ago I made a searching investigation of the appropriations made by the Government for improving rivers and harbors and so-called inland waterways. I examined every appropriation from the days of President Washington, and every project upon which money had been expended, together with the hundreds of reports and thousands of pages of testimony relating to such projects, and after such examination I was convinced that hundreds of millions of dollars appropriated by the Government had been wasted. There has been appropriated to date considerably more than one and a quarter billion dollars for such projects.

The Senator from Minnesota has just stated in substance that hundreds of millions of dollars expended during the past 40 years upon the Mississippi and Ohio Rivers have largely been wasted. In my opinion the inefficiency of the Government when it undertakes business activities has been exhibited in the waste and extravagance which have characterized its work in connection with rivers and harbors and so-called inland waterways. For years I contended for a different plan for dealing with rivers and harbors and inland waterways, and suggested a plan calling for a scientific a revenue measure that would produce considerably more and proper engineering organization to handle these public projects, but we have kept on in the old inefficient and wasteful course with unsatisfactory results and with indefensible demands upon the Public Treasury.

Mr. President, this bill should carry no more than $250,000,000 for the military activities of the Government for the next fiscal year. For a number of years, such as 1924, 1925, and 1926, the total appropriations by the Government for purely—Army—military purposes did not exceed $250,000,000 per annum. There is no justification for a larger appropriation at the present time. Indeed, taking into account the nation-wide depression, the enormous burdens of taxation, the possibility and perhaps the probability of a deficit for the coming year, the appropriation should be less than it was in either of the years referred to.

The Senator from Tennessee a short time ago referred to a large number of items carried in the bill which should be reduced; and, as I recall, his suggestions would have reduced the military appropriations in the bill between thirty and forty million dollars. There are a number of other items that should be reduced so that the military appropriations carried in the bill would have been brought within the limits of $250,000,000.

Mr. President, we will have before us within a few days a naval bill which will demand more than $300,000,000 to meet the ordinary expenses of the Government for the next fiscal year. Senators will recall that only a few days ago there was forced through the Senate a bill authorizing nearly a billion dollars for new naval construction, the war vessels to be completed before the end of the year 1936. The appropriations demanded by the executive department for military and naval purposes for the next fiscal year will be greater by nearly $200,000,000 than any country on earth. I have heretofore stated that there is no justification for this Republic, with its advantageous position-geographically, materially, and otherwise-devoting so large a sum for military purposes. During the past two or three years we have expended nearly $800,000,000 each year for the ordinary expenses of the Army and the Navy. That stupendous sum has been nearly one-fifth of all of the expenses of all nations for military purposes.

This Nation professes to be a devotee of peace, to desire disarmament and the abolition of war, and the establishment of international tribunals to which appeals may be made to settle all controversies which might arise between nations. It is inexplicable to some, why, with the professions which we make, this Nation should expend more for military purposes than any of the so-called militaristic nations of the world. Many of our citizens with remarkable vocal powers and loud affirmations of patriotism, are constantly talking of preparedness, of national security, and indulge in bitter criticism and indeed denunciation of those who do not accept their view and who merely suggest that this Nation might be more influential in the world and might become a greater moral leader if it did not devote so large a portion of its revenues for military purposes. Within this latter category are many people in the United States who, if the occasion required, would gladly lay down their lives for their country and make every sacrifice possible to defend its honor and preserve its integrity. There are those who believe that this great Republic was brought into being under divine cognizance to serve a beneficent purpose, in promoting the cause of liberty and justice in all the world; that it is to be not only a powerful moral and spiritual force, but an effective instrumentality in securing world unity, peace, and good will.

Mr. President, I submit that there is no foe that menaces our country. This Republic is impregnable from any attack from without. If it ever falls it will be the result of domestic causes, and internal betrayal. But I have confidence in the enduring qualities of this Republic—the integrity and character, and the love of liberty and freedom of the American people. Social and political disturbances that shock the foundations of other nations will pass us by, and this Nation under God will indefinitely guard the liberties of the American people and contribute to the progress and welfare of all peoples.

Mr. President, this is not the time to spend hundreds of millions of dollars, as is proposed, for military and naval purposes. It will be a great mistake to pass this bill in its present form. It will provoke criticism from many American citizens; it will arouse the fears, or, at least, provoke questionings upon the part of other nations. They will be unable to comprehend how or why in this period of depression, with millions out of employment, this Government would be willing to heavily tax its people and appropriate between seven and eight hundred million dollars for its Army and Navy for the next fiscal year.

Many Americans have been critical of the policies of other countries, charging them with ambitions for territorial gain and militaristic enterprises. May we not expect criticisms of other nations if we pass measures such as the one before us? It seems to me that we should be more interested in rescuing our country from the frightful depression into which it has been plunged. We should be interested in reversing unwise and unsound policies by which our country has been guided for a number of years. We should abandon any narrow or partisan view, and formulate and carry into execution those policies that will unify the people, dissipate the difficulties that now exist, revivify stricken business, quicken moribund and stagnant enterprises, and contribute to the return of prosperity. We should attempt to instill confidence by adopting measures that have within them moral and humane qualities-if such may be attributed to social and economic policies—as well as sound business and financial measures that will bring assurance to the people that the shadows are passing and prosperity is within our

I express my profound regret that the Senate has set its face resolutely against modifying this bill or reducing the appropriations beyond the limits prescribed therein.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LA FOLLETTE in the chair). The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Reed] in behalf of the Senator from California [Mr. Johnson].

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Individual amendments are in order.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I move to strike out all of pages 62 and 63, the provision for the citizens' military training camps.

I do not care to detain the Senate at this late hour in discussing the proposition, because I have already discussed it in considerable detail on the motion to send the bill back to the committee with instructions, which motion was defeated.

I believe that the Senate, if it wants to carry out what we have been professing we were trying to do—to bring about economy and to cut appropriations to the bone—can not vote against this amendment. I am not arguing, and I have not to-day argued, against these military training camps if they are properly administered, if they are properly handled, but I have called attention to the fact that in these military training camps the money that is to be used, or part of it at least, is used for the purpose of inculcating into the minds of the young men who attend those training camps ideas of government which are directly detrimental to the constitutions and laws of nearly all the States of the Union.

Can we not wait one year, can we not, for the sake of helping out the economy program, suspend the operation of these camps for one year? They have nothing to do with the military efficiency of the Army. They have nothing to do with any Army emergency of any kind. But over the country there are military training camps established, where for 30 days, I believe it is, young men from all walks of life come to get instruction. Some of the instruction they get is beneficial, although it is doubtful whether the expense should be paid by the Federal Government.

The young men are taught, as I have shown to-day, not military affairs so much but ideas of citizenship, which are absolutely contradictory to the theory of citizenship in 90 per cent of the States of the Union. They are taught there, as I have shown, that an elective judiciary, if carried out to its logical end, would mean the destruction of our Republic. They are taught there that all the initiative provisions in the various State constitutions are in that class. They are taught that if a municipality wants to own its own electric-light plant, its waterworks, its street-car system, such a thing will ultimately lead to the ruin and the destruction of our Government.

Do we want such things taught? We have no objection to anybody having those theories of government if he wants to, but I submit that it is not right to ask the taxpayers of the United States to pay for them.

Are we not willing in this great emergency, as great as war itself, to forego for one year even the things in those training camps which are beneficial to the young men, physical training, and so forth? From every walk of life from whence these young men come there is human suffering on account of unemployment. A few are selected to go to these training camps. They have a vacation; they have a good time; they receive some instruction that is valuable, some instruction that is absolutely wrong, fundamentally wrongall of it at the expense of the taxpayers of the United States-when in every community from which they come, on all sides, their own neighbors, their own acquaintances, are suffering for the necessaries of life, and we are here now trying to meet the emergency, we are here now trying to cut down the unnecessary expenses of the Government, many which under ordinary circumstances it is conceded are unnecessary.

Why, then, should we insist on paying from public funds under these conditions the expenses of these training camps, even if this evil were taken out?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Norris].

Mr. NORRIS. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. HAYDEN. My colleague the senior Senator from Arizona [Mr. Ashurst] is necessarily absent. He is paired with the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. King]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. REED (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. Robinson], which I transfer to the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. Dale], and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. BROOKHART. I have a pair with the senior Senator from Montana [Mr. Walsh]. I understand that he would vote as I am going to vote, and therefore I am permitted to vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. TOWNSEND. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKellar]. Has that Senator voted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That Senator has not voted.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I transfer my pair to the junior Senator from Maine [Mr. White] and vote "nay."

Mr. BULKLEY (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. Carry], but I understand that he would vote as I have voted, and therefore I allow my vote to stand.

The result was announced—yeas 11, nays 45, as follows:

So the amendment proposed by Mr. Norris was rejected. Mr. DILL. Mr. President, on page 14 of the bill there is a provision, beginning in line 12, that—

No appropriation for the pay of the Army shall be available for the pay of any officer or enlisted man on active list of the Army who is engaged in any manner with any publication which is or may be issued by or for any branch or organization of the Army or military association in which officers or enlisted men have membership and which carry paid advertising of firms doing business with the Government.

Then follows a proviso to the effect that this shall not | prohibit officers from writing articles not in violation of the regulations of the War Department.

This has been interpreted so that officers are afraid to permit the publication of special booklets or special publications for their posts for athletic contests and recreation purposes. The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. Moses], who was instrumental in having this passed, said it had not been the intention to interfere with those special publications. I have prepared a short amendment to be inserted at the end of the provision in line 24, page 14, which I offer.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 14, line 22, at the end of the provision after the word "war," strike out the period and and insert a comma and add the following:

Nor from giving approval to the issuance of special publications in the interest of athletic contests or recreations at a local post or fort.

Mr. REED. Mr. President. I have looked at the amendment and I am quite clear that it does not conflict with the original purpose of Congress in adopting the general policy. This would relate only to athletic programs and things of that sort

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I submit an amendment in the nature of a limitation and ask that the same be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 82, after line 20, add a new section, as follows:

SEC. 4. No part of any appropriation made by this act shall be SEC. 4. No part of any appropriation made by this act shall be used in any way to pay any expense in connection with the conduct, operation, or management of any post exchange, branch exchange, or subexchange within any State, save and except for real assistance and convenience to enlisted men and troops in supplying them with articles of ordinary use, wear, and consumption not furnished by the Government: Provided, That excess and surplus stocks of merchandise now on hand at any exchange, branch exchange, or subexchange may be disposed of, and all goods on consignment shall be returned immediately: Provided further, That all branch exchanges and subexchanges located off of Government lands and outside of Government reservations, and operernment lands and outside of Government reservations, and operernment lands and outside of Government reservations, and operated by private contract or agreement on a commission basis, shall be closed and terminated as to such contract or agreement immediately: And provided further, That the Secretary of War shall make a report to the Speaker of the House of Representatives and to the President of the Senate at the beginning of the next session of the Congress, covering the several exchanges, branch exchanges, and subexchanges operated by or under the supervision of the War Department.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, in support of the amendment I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD at this point a radio address delivered by Merle Thorpe, editor of Nation's Business, entitled "On Behalf of the Delinquent Taxpayer."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, leave is granted.

The article is as follows:

ON BEHALF OF THE DELINQUENT TAXPAYER

(Transcript of the thirty-second radio talk of the Popular Busi-Fallacies series conducted by Merle Thorpe, editor Nation's Business)

I have been discussing with you, ladies and gentlemen, the increasing activities of government and its inevitable increase of taxes. Many of these activities are in direct competition with the taxes. Many of these activities are in direct competition with the business enterprises of its citizens. We have the spectacle of the Government laying taxes on the people and at the same time undermining the income of the individual by destroying his opportunity of earning a livelihood. Such a spectacle needs no eloquence to argue its complete impropriety.

I wish I could say that this encroachment on individual enterprise is something near that it had only near here because it.

prise is something new, that it had only now been brought into the light of public opinion, and that this publicity offered a de-pendable protection from future trespass. Let us not be deluded. Business men have long been alive to the insidious curtailment of their markets for goods and services through the paternalistic and welfare innovations of government. Unfortunately, nothing is done except pass resolutions. But now the public is thoroughly aroused because the related tax burden has become oppressive, and at the same time it sees with its own eyes the ruin of an individual business or industry through Government competition.

As a result of this aroused public opinion a significant thing occurred in the Congress this week. The House agreed to the appointment of a committee of five Members to investigate Government competition with private enterprise.

rnment competition with private enterprise.

The proposed inquiry had its inception in a personal investigation made by Representative Shannon, of Missouri. He had been hearing from some of his constituents who have been forced to divide their business with Uncle Sam, as well as hand over a sizable share of their earnings in taxes. The discussion of the resolution on the floor of the House helps to define the breadth and depth of the Federal Government's aggressive curtailment of the money-making possibilities of the American people.

He sent a young clerk, John Cronkite, to an Army supply store.

He returned outfitted from head to foot in apparel that cost him $27.55. The same outfit purchased elsewhere would have cost from $38 to $50.

Mr. Shannon's experience caused Representative Ralph Horr, of Washington State, to go shopping. At the Army canteen he bought a straw hat for $1.85 and four bottles of cordial at 50 cents each tour of Government agencies was started at the cronkite's tour of Government agencies was started at the post store at Bolling Field, Army airport. There he bought for $4.85 a pair of shoes. To his surprise they were stamped "Made in England." At another Government store he acquired a light-gray 3-piece suit for $16; pocket handkerchief, 25 cents; underwear, 75 cents; white shirt, $1.60; belt, $1. At the Army post exchange he bought a necktie, 85 cents; straw hat, $1.85; socks, 40 cents.

"The cordial is labeled rum, Scotch, rye, and gin," said Mr. Horr. "Directions explain it should be mixed with one gallon of alcohol and the result will be the required flavor as well as color."

The young man also had luncheon, a shoe shine, hair cut, and shaye at Government establishments and determined to take shave at Government establishments and, determined to take advantage of all possible bargains, bought cigars, camera film, witch hazel, soap, and vaseline at Federal agencies.

The office of the Missouri Representative contains large packages of goods bought in this manner and innumerable letters from business men complaining of this competition. One of his exhibits is a letter sent out under Government frank by a Government store to local citizens of Leavenworth, Kans. The letter announces "special sales for Friday and Saturday; fresh country eggs, 15 cents a dozen; bananas, 15 cents a dozen; ketchup, 3 bottles for 57 and so on.

Mr. Shannon said merchants of that city were in distress because they could not meet the lower prices of the Government competition

competition.

As he read a letter from one of them he opened a large cardboard box containing a string of beads, brilliant yellow necktie, a bottle of cologne, and a pair of women's pink pajamas (price, 89 cents) that his secretary had bought at the Army post store.

Well, what of these exhibits in the case? Are they to be dismissed with a few paragraphs in the editorial and news columns of the press? My friends, the situation revealed through Representative Shannon's enterprise defines a problem of national dimensions. I think I can suggest to you the magnitude of the malady by indicating the nature of the protests registered by businesses which are struggling against this Government competition.

From one city came this letter to Congressman Shannon: "There is a serious condition existing in our little community. Our merchants are being ruined by the Government stores, with which they are unable to compete."

One of his constituents wrote him to see if something could not be done to save his business from this unfair competition. He has a little jewelry store, which is his sole support. A customer gets his price on, say, a Seth Thomas clock. He takes the number, then walks across the street to the Government store and buys the same clock for much less.

A woman clerk sent shopping by the Congressman was able to purchase at a Government store a bottle of cologne, a handkerchief, and a pajama suit, and two packages of cigarettes—the cigarettes minus the 2 cents for the State tax which the private store across the street had to charge. And here's another angle, a St. Louis shoe factory petitioned its Representative in these words: "Can not something be done to stop the Government from making shoes at Leavenworth * * *."

It takes no personal exposure to this sort of competition to making shoes at Leavenworth * * *."

It takes no personal exposure to this sort of competition to understand the feeling of merchants in trying to get their plight before the Members of Congress. Why not consider us as well as the personnel of the Army, they ask, in pointing out that the Government pays its officers and men, and then, after they have served a specified time, they are retired on part pay, "but we still have to fight for a living."

Then there's the difficulty faced by private laundries in competition with the Government-operated establishments. It seems that a Government employee's cousins, sisters, and his uncles petition with the Government-operated establishments. It seems that a Government employee's cousins, sisters, and his uncles and his aunts may send their soiled linen to a Government laundry if they send it in his name. Representative Shannon says he has received protests from privately operated laundries in 20 cities. The situation in Washington is illuminating. I give it in his words. "Fort Myer sends Government wagons over to gather up the Army officer's clothes, and incidentally the clothes of all his neighbors and friends, and later they whisper, 'We get our work done 30 per cent cheaper by sending it to the Government laundry!

To that the laundrymen of Washington say, "Of course you do. We have to pay rent. We have to pay labor. We have to equip our plants and pay for everything that is necessary for our privately conducted business, including higher and higher taxes."

Years ago Professor Downing, of Harvard University, showed

Years ago Professor Downing, or Harvard Chiversity, that—"It is this pernicious practice of obscuring the actual costs of Government business enterprises of all kinds—by diverting interest, depreciation, and some measure of the overhead expenses into the general tax levy—which makes possible the appearance of an apparent profit to the taxpayer, when in reality he suffers an actual deficit. That deficit the uncritical taxpayer never recognizes, because it comes to him only as increased taxes. A private business enterprise can not resort to a shifty system of accounting and throw its burdens on the patient and sinewy shoulders of the taxpayer."

The restaurant and delicatessen men also have a case, and Representative Shannon has been looking into it.

Representative Shannon has been looking into it.

In Kansas City a restaurant is operated in the Federal Reserve Building, and the installation of another in the new post-office building is contemplated. Space in Government office buildings is also leased, I am told, in competition with local real-estate owners.

Representative STOKES, of Pennsylvania, reports that a varnish factory at Scranton is being ruined by the competition of a Government plant at Norfolk. Representative Bacon is authority for the statement that the Navy Department maintains a factory for the manufacture of clothing, whereas it previously called for bids from private contractors on a competitive basis. Now, he says, the Navy is spending a good deal more for its clothing than it paid under the old system.

So much for the mere item and detail of the competitive encroachment of Government on the domain of private business. The examples carry a significance far beyond the localities which provide them. In a very real sense they are symptomatic of a comprehensive trend toward a paralyzing restriction of the area of individual endeavor.

provide them. In a very real sense they are symptomatic of a comprehensive trend toward a paralyzing restriction of the area of individual endeavor.

Possibly it is something of a novelty that public opinion as reflected by the Congress thinks it worth while to hear what the small business man has to say about Government in business. As long as I can remember, it has been a popular fashion to regard "big business" as the only objector to a commercial rivalry with a public administration, such as banking, insurance, the grain trade, the railroads, water-power developments, fertilizer, and the operation of ships.

But the fact is, my friends, that Government has set up shop in about 250 separate lines of business, and the complications in which Government competition involves the local laundry owner, merchant, real-estate man, or tailor are only the localized vibrations from a profound disturbance feit throughout the length and breadth of the entire structure of finance, trade, and industry. In the main, our attitude has been "Let 'em take it on the chin. They're big enough to stand the punishment." But if in the past we have noted only the opposition of corporations to Government competition, we are now impressed with the rising tide of protest from individuals, men who might be your neighbors or mine. It is this per capita expression of public opinion that comes home to us, for it awakens our sense of fellow feeling. When we hear that a friend or acquaintance, some familiar figure in our town, is on the financial rocks because he had to give odds to his Government in carrying on his business, we do more than say, "Poor old So-and-so." We resent this unfair treatment of a fellow citizen.

Every business community has a stake in this inquiry. An actual interest will do much to revitalize the guarantees written into the Constitution. And it is no carping or mischievous spirit that business men throughout the country are seriously questioning whether the roots and trunk of government can sustain the luxuriant folia which is ours to ask themselves in all seriousness, government?"

An agency to protect life and property, to establish justice, to provide for the national defense. As Charles R. Fowler, of Minneapolis, reported to the American Bar Association in New York, only a minor part of the present Federal Budget goes to pay for the essential constitutional functions of the legislative, executive, and judicial branches of the Government. In other words, a large percentage of our costs is due to those activities which we have percentage of our costs is due to those activities which we have wished upon our governments, that do not fall within the primary purpose of our social compact.

Because of this, our tax burden is increased in two ways: First, the activities now assumed by Government, which should be carried on by the individual, are not subject to taxation. Therefore, a growing number of business enterprises, including property, are taken off the tax base. In the second place, when Government attempts to carry on a business undertaking, it invariably runs at a deficit, which must be made up by the taxpayer. This may be due to no lack of ability on the part of those whom we intrust to operate a governmental business undertaking. It is due, as I have pointed out, to the political mechanism which we have set up to protect political liberty, with its checks and balances—red tape, we call it—necessary in handling matters involving our political rights, but which rules and regulations hinder the efficient operation of a business enterprise. We must have red tape in order to prevent a quick overturn of established political principles. Otherwise it is revolution. Quickness of decision is essential to the proper conduct of a business.

So, when we have a large percentage of governmental activities, we find the reduced taxpaying capacity of the country is aggravated because Government deprives citizens from earning money with which to pay taxes.

This gradual and subtle encroachment of Government into those activities which belong the individual of the individual of the country is a subtle encroachment of government into those activities which belong the individual of the

This gradual and subtle encroachment of Government into those activities which belong to the individual, and for which you and I as citizens are responsible through our indifference or our

Thus we have the anomaly of taxpayers providing the funds for their own competition, and it is one of the factors to-day affecting the delinquent taxpayer, present and prospective, in whose behalf these talks are given.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, as I listened to the amendment being read, it occurred to me that it might possibly create some difficulties in places like Panama.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. It applies only to the States,

Mr. REED. It does not apply to the outlying possessions? Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. It does not apply to the Territories.

Mr. REED. I can not commit myself to it very definitely. but I am inclined to consent to its adoption at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Oklahoma.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CUTTING. Mr. President, I desire to submit an amendment which I think will take care of the situation so ably and justly criticized by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Norris] with regard to the use of citizens' training camps for the dissemination of various kinds of propaganda relating to economics, governmental theories, and so forth.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 63, line 25, after the word "made," insert the following:

Mr. CUTTING. Mr. President, this subject has been discussed at such length to-day that I do not care to add anything more; but I should like to have the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from New Mexico, on which the yeas and nays have been demanded. Is the demand seconded?

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

So the amendment proposed by Mr. Cutting was rejected.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I desire to offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be reported for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 82, line 8, after the word "department," strike out the remainder of line 8 and all of lines 9 to 13, inclusive, and insert:

This section shall not apply to medical officers on out-patient medical service to whom may be assigned a Government-owned motor vehicle for their exclusive use.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, the object of the amendment is to effect a very substantial economy when we apply the policy to the various departments here in Washington. This is the first appropriation bill that has been considered since I discovered a week or two ago that probably half a million dollars a year is expended for private automobiles for officials to use at Government expense. I do not know that there was ever any justification for this policy. I do not think the American people would quite approve of the idea of furnishing a Cadillac automobile for an Assistant Secretary of War in which to ride around on his private business. Of course, it is called "official business," but I do not know of any particular official business of any consequence that would require the Government to furnish an automobile for an Assistant Secretary of War. It happens that the other House requested data in regard to the use of Government automobiles, and the head of the Bureau of Efficiency reported, as best I am able to figure from the data furnished, that there are about 21 or 22 automobiles used in connection with the War Department.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator from Florida vield to me?

Mr. TRAMMELL. I yield.

Mr. REED. I do not see why this amendment should not be agreed to and allowed to go to conference. Then we can look into it and ascertain the number of automobiles that are being used.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I should like to have that information. I thank the Senator. I am going to say only a few additional words to show some justification for the amendment. The report made by the Director of the Efficiency Bureau shows that the Secretary of War has a Packard automobile, purchased with Government money, and that $1,380 is provided for a chauffeur. I have great respect for the dignity of that office, but I submit, especially in view of depressed economic conditions, that there is no reason in the world why the Government should furnish the Secretary of War an automobile. Let him own his own automobile and provide his own chauffeur just as does the average official in this city or any other city does or as a Senator does. I do not know of any Senator who has an automobile furnished to him; I do not know of any Senator who even has the privilege of the use of what are called "group automobiles." In the War Department the Secretary has a Packard furnished him, with a chauffeur at $1,380 a year. One of the Assistant Secretaries has a LaSalle, with a chauffeur furnished at an expense to the Government of $1,380. The other Assistant Secretary of War has a LaSalle, purchased by the Government, furnished free of charge, with a chauffeur at $1,380. The Chief of Staff is furnished with a Cadillac, which is operated by an enlisted man. The chief deputy of the General Staff has a LaSalle, which is also operated by an enlisted man.

Then they have what they call the "reserve and replacement" LaSalle, operated by an enlisted man. The Adjutant General has furnished to him only a Dodge and an enlisted man to operate it for him. Then they have what is called the "messenger center," with a Dodge. Then they have six cars in a general pool. I suppose anybody may use those. Those cars are all operated by enlisted men and are directly connected with the department, as I understand. I have checked these data the best I can. There are about 21 cars, as stated here, purchased by the Government, furnished by the Government, operated by the Government, used by the War Department. I think some of these automobiles are also used by the district engineer, probably as many as 15 or 16; but the others are used entirely by the War Department.

This system has crept into all the departments. It has crept into the Agricultural Department. The Secretary, his assistant, and the heads of the different bureaus are all provided with Packards, LaSalles, Cadillacs, and so forth, at Government expense, and with chauffeurs. The Secretary of Agriculture tries to effectuate economy when it comes to the question of rendering some assistance to the poor, downstricken farmers of the country, but he did not ask Congress to cut off the appropriation for all those automobiles, for which he really has practically no use so far as official business is concerned.

I say he has "practically no use" for them. If the Secretary of Agriculture or one of his assistants has occasion to come to the Capitol, let him go out and get in his own car, just as a Senator does when he visits the department. I dare say that 90 per cent of the Senators spend more time visiting different departments on official business than do any of the department officials calling at different places on official business.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, will the Senator from Florida yield to me?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. TRAMMELL. I will yield to the Senator in a moment. We have no transportation accommodations furnished to us—none whatever. I do not make this criticism on account of what we have or do not have. I would not have such accommodations if they could be furnished; I think it would be wrong for transportation to be furnished to a Senator. I now yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. JONES. My recollection is that in the appropriation bills which we have heretofore passed there has been a general provision in regard to the use of automobiles by department officials.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I do not think so. I raised this question the other day.

Mr. JONES. I will ask the Senator from Pennsylvania if there is not such a provision in the pending bill?

Mr. REED. There are restrictions in this bill, but they do not go so far as the amendment of the Senator from Florida.

Mr. TRAMMELL, No.

Mr. JONES. But they are similar to the provisions in the other appropriation bills?

Mr. REED. Yes.

Mr. TRAMMELL. There is in this bill a restriction against the use of automobiles for any other than official purposes; then there is a definition of "official purposes," and then there is the provision which I seek to have stricken out which excepts the Secretary of War and his assistants and those connected with his department. That in itself shows it should be taken out. Why should they be made favorites? Why under any idea of the dignity of the office or placing a higher official upon a pedestal that should any of them except the Secretary be allowed to have free cars and chauffeurs? I think in these times that even he should not be permitted to have them. They have absolutely overdone the business of getting Government automobiles and using them practically for personal purposes. The abuse runs all through the Government service. I dare say that in the various appropriation bills there are at least half a million dollars or a million dollars carried this year for that purpose.

I never said anything about the Chief Executive. I have a great deal of sympathy for the man who occupies the high office of President of the United States, and particularly in these times when he has his trials and his tribulations and responsibilities. But as an illustration, what use is there for nine automobiles at the White House, purchased and paid for by the American people, and with chauffeurs provided by the American people?

If the Senator will accept this amendment, I will be glad to have him do so.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida. The amendment was agreed to. Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 61, after line 11, it is proposed to insert the following proviso:

Provided further, That none of the funds appropriated in this act shall be expended for or on account of any educational institution not essentially a military school which makes military training compulsory to any student enrolled therein, and this appropriation shall be available in accordance with law to such institutions as maintain elective military training courses.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, this amendment simply cuts out the compulsory feature of military training at public educational institutions. I should like a yea-and-nay vote on it, and if that is agreeable I will make no further remarks. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I ask that the amendment be again stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be again stated for the information of the Senate.

The legislative clerk again stated the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from North Dakota on which the yeas and nays have been demanded. Is the demand seconded?

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BINGHAM (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before regarding my pair and its transfer, I will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. BULKLEY (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before with respect to my general pair with the junior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. Carey] and its transfer, I vote "nay."

Mr. HATFIELD (when his name was called). Repeating my previous announcement regarding my pair and its transfer, I vote "nay."

Mr. JONES (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before as to my pair and its transfer, I vote "nay."

Mr. McNARY (when his name was called). Referring to my former announcement, I vote "nay."

Mr. NYE (when his name was called). Again announcing my pair with the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. Kendrick], I desire to announce that were I at liberty to vote I should vote "yea."

Mr. REED (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before, I vote "nay."

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

As in executive session,

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States, submitting sundry nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

RADIO ADDRESS OF EDWARD A. O'NEAL

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President, I ask leave to insert in the RECORD a speech of Edward A. O'Neal, president of the American Farm Bureau Federation, delivered on June 4 over the Columbia Broadcasting System.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerks at the desk state to the Chair that this speech was inserted in the REC-ORD yesterday by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. Nye].

Mr. BROOKHART. Very well; if that has been done, I withdraw the request. I will let my statement stand in the RECORD, however, with the further statement that this of, we take up for consideration Order of Business 836, Sen-speech ought to be read by every Senator, including the President pro tempore.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The RECORD will carry that statement, undoubtedly accurately.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I should like to say that if that speech of Mr. O'Neal is not better than those I usually hear him make, I advise anybody who is thinking about reading it not to waste his time. [Laughter.]

FEDERAL POWER COMMISSION-LEGAL EXPENSES

Mr. TOWNSEND. From the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, I report back favorably a short resolution which will not entail any

Mr. NORRIS. I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The legislative clerk read Senate Resolution 222, submitted by Mr. Norris on the 8th instant, and it was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary, authorized by Senate Resolution No. 415, agreed to February 5, 1931, to engage counsel for the purpose of instituting proceedings to secure a determination of the right of George Otis Smith to the position of member of the Federal Power Commission, and to pay the counsel fees and other expenses necessarily incident to such proceedings, hereby is authorized to expend from the contingent fund of the Senate $395.40 in addition to the amount heretofore authorized for said purpose.

FEDERAL BUILDING SITE, DOVER, N. J.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Order of Business 729, House bill 11337, be taken up and passed at this time. I may say that the bill passed yesterday without discussion or debate; and I requested my colleague the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. Kean] to let it go over through an inadvertence. I ask that it be passed again.

Mr. CONNALLY. Reserving the right to object, whose bill is it?

Mr. BARBOUR. My bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands the action of the Senate to have been to have passed the bill yesterday, and, upon request, that action was reconsidered and the bill was replaced upon the calendar. The Senator from New Jersey now asks unanimous consent that it may be taken up for consideration. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the question is on the passage of the bill.

The bill was passed.

AGRICULTURAL DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. McNARY obtained the floor.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I desire to make a request following a motion which I understand is about to be made.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair intends to lay before the Senate the unfinished business

Mr. WAGNER. What is the unfinished business?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is the bank bill, the so-called Glass bill.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the conference report on the agricultural appropriation bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is a privileged motion. The question is on the motion of the Senator from

The motion-was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7912) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, and for other purposes.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President— Mr. McNARY. I yield to the Senator from New York.

Mr. WAGNER. I ask unanimous consent that as soon as the conference report just made the special order is disposed ate bill 4860, which is the so-called relief bill, providing for an appropriation of $300,000,000 for the relief of the destitute.

Mr. BULKLEY. Mr. President, does the Senator couple with that request a further request that the Glass bill be temporarily laid aside?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes; of course, that the Glass bill be only temporarily laid aside.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, it is my opinion that this morning, when the Army bill was made the unfinished business, it displaced the unfinished business. Is that correct?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair did not so understand, although the present occupant of the chair was not in the chair at the time. The Chair understood that it was temporarily laid aside.

Mr. McNARY. A motion was made to proceed to the consideration of the Army bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed at the desk that it was temporarily laid aside, in which case the Chair was perfectly correct in laying the unfinished business before the Senate; but, of course, a motion to take up a conference report is privileged. That motion has already been agreed to, and the conference report is now before the Senate.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.
Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I understood that the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Norris] objected to unanimous consent to laying aside the unfinished business temporarily and the question came on the motion to proceed to the consideration of the Army bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The present occupant of the chair was not presiding at that moment.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. May I suggest that the Chair inquire at the desk?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will ask the Journal clerk what occurred.

Mr. McNARY. That is precisely what occurred, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Journal clerk informs the Chair that that is correct, and the banking bill has been laid aside permanently.

Mr. McNARY. That is correct.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The business before the Senate now is the conference report on the agricultural appropriation bill.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President-

Mr. McNARY. I yield to the Senator from New York.

Mr. WAGNER. I have submitted a unanimous-consent request which I ask to have put by the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York asks unanimous consent that upon the conclusion of the consideration of the conference report now before the Senate Order of Business 836, Senate bill 4860, shall be taken up. Is there objection?

Mr. HAWES. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, the Senate has had on its calendar for some time the bill providing for the independence of the Philippine people. That bill passed the House by almost a unanimous vote, and it is on our preferential calendar.

I desire to say that the friends of Philippine independence do not want to interfere with relief bills or these other important measures; but there must come a time when the Senate will take up that bill and dispose of it. It not only represents a very large sentiment in the House, but I am sure that that sentiment is equally strong in the Senate. I therefore ask unanimous consent that that bill be taken

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, the Senator from Oregon does not intend to proceed with the conference report to-night; and all this is unnecessary, because it all comes after the conference report, which is not going to be acted on to-night.

Mr. WAGNER. I understand that.

Mr. NORRIS. Why does not the Senator wait until to-morrow, then?

Mr. WAGNER. What I wanted to do was to have some definite time fixed when this bill, which is so important, shall be taken up.

Mr. NORRIS. The conference report may take all day. There will be plenty of time to make the request to-morrow. Mr. McNARY. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oregon has the floor.

Mr. WAGNER. I understand that the Senator from Missouri does not intend to object to my request.

Mr. HAWES. No.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, in view of the parliamentary situation, the possibility of some Senators objecting, and the fact that the Senator from New York will have an opportunity to submit his request in the morning, I move now that the Senate take a recess until to-morrow morning at 11 o'clock; and I suggest that the Senator from New York withhold his request until that time.

Mr. WAGNER. Of course, I will follow the suggestion; but the Senator from Missouri has just informed me that he does not intend to object to my request.

Mr. McNARY. Other Senators have informed me that they may do so this evening; so I move that we recess now, and suggest to the Senator that he proceed with the matter to-morrow.

RECESS

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oregon moves that the Senate take a recess until to-morrow morning at 11 o'clock.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 7 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until to-morrow, Friday, June 10, 1932, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

THURSDAY, JUNE 9, 1932

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

God is our refuge and strength, a very present help in trouble. Therefore will not we fear, though the earth be removed and though the mountains be carried in the midst of the sea; though the waters thereof roar and be troubled; though the mountains shake with the swelling thereof. There is a river the streams whereof shall make glad the city of God, the holy place of the tabernacles of the Most High. God is in the midst of her; she shall not be moved; God shall help her, and that right early. The Lord of Hosts is with us; the God of Jacob is our refuge. Be still and know that I am God; I will be exalted in the earth. The Lord of Hosts is with us; the God of Jacob is our refuge.

Heavenly Father, anchor our faith in Thy Holy Word and in the mission of Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

JOHN H. MEHRLE

Mr. LAMNECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Private Calendar H. R. 2920, for the relief of John H. Mehrle, and refer it again to the Committee on Claims.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

DISPOSITION OF SURPLUS MATTER IN FOLDING ROOM

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the House Resolution 259, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 259

Resolved, That the documents now in the folding room of the House of Representatives, described in the list hereafter set forth under the heading "List of Documents," shall be disposed of in the following manner:

First. Members, Delegates, Commissioners from Puerto Rico and the Philippine Islands, and officers of the House having such documents to their credit may dispose of the same in the usual manner at any time before December 1, 1932.

at any time before December 1, 1932.

Second. Upon the expiration of the said time the Doorkeeper shall furnish to the Members of the House, as promptly as practicable, a list of the documents herein referred to then remaining in the folding room, and thereupon such documents shall be subject to the order of any Member or Delegate in the order in which they are applied for, for the period of 30 days after the day when such list shall be furnished by the Doorkeeper.

Third. The Doorkeeper shall furnish a list of all such documents remaining in the folding room at the expiration of the last-named remaining in the folding room at the expiration of the last-named period to the various departments and commissions of the Government at Washington, including the Superintendent of Documents, Smithsonian Institution, Library of Congress, Bureau of American Republics, and the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, and any such documents shall be turned over to any such department, commission, etc., above referred to, in the order in which their application shall be made, and all such documents which shall remain in the folding room for a period of 10 days after such list shall have been furnished to the departments or commissions aforesaid shall be sold by the Doorkeeper as waste paper.

Fourth. No documents which are described in the list aforesaid shall thereafter be returned to the folding room from any source.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I think the gentleman from South Carolina should make a short statement so that we would know exactly what he proposes to do with this resolution.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Speaker, there is attached to the resolution a list of the matter that is in the folding room and which will have to be moved. That was printed in the RECORD some two or three weeks ago, though probably most of the Members did not notice it. The resolution itself, with some slight variation, was printed also then. The folding room has to be moved before the first of the year over into the new House Office Building. There are about 1,000,-000 documents in the folding room to the credit of different

Members of Congress. The resolution provides that Members must get these documents away from there by the 1st day of next December. When this was last done Members were given only 30 days in which to do that. That was in 1908. My proposition is to put it to the 1st of next December, because Members are exceedingly busy now, and they will go to the conventions and into the campaign and I think it would be unfair to ask them to remove these documents in 30 days. Therefore we have fixed the time at the 1st of next December in which to get those documents to their credit out of the folding room. Then the Doorkeeper is to give a list of all that is left to each Member of the House. Then every Member may go and get what he wants of that residuum, according to the date of his application-first come first served, for 30 days. Then a list of what is then left is to be given to the departments, and the departments are to have 10 days in which to go and get what they want out of that residuum. When that is done, the balance will be disposed of as waste paper.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. STEVENSON. Yes.

Mr. WARREN. I notice that the gentleman has made the date December, 1932.

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes.

Mr. WARREN. I note that he has changed the date from the original resolution.

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes.

Mr. WARREN. The original resolution which the gentleman introduced called for the employment of from 12 to 15 clerks over a period of several months. I wish the gentleman would inform the House if by making it December 1 it is going to entail any additional expense on the contingent fund.

Mr. STEVENSON. I do not think it will. I think by making it December 1 the Members will get their stuff away, because they are going to need a lot of it this year in distribution in their campaigns, and I think they will get most of it out.. If they do not, of course we are going to have to stand the expense of dealing with it as it is; and if we do not do this, we are going to have to stand the expense of moving whatever we must over into the new House Office Building.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. STEVENSON. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Then, as I understand it, the present resolution does not call for the employment of any additional force or the expenditure of any money.

Mr. STEVENSON. Not at all. It merely calls on the Members to take what belongs to them and gives them until the 1st of December in which to do it.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. And how soon will the list of what we | in Washington, as most of them have been held, and not have there be available to us?

Mr. BLANTON. It is in the RECORD now.

Mr. STEVENSON. It is attached to this resolution, and by application to the superintendent of the folding room the Members can get what is to their credit from the books of the folding room.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman put the list in the RECORD about two weeks ago.

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes, sir; and I am attaching it to this resolution.

Mr. PARSONS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEVENSON. I yield.

Mr. PARSONS. I think the gentleman means what will be allotted to each individual Member.

Mr. STEVENSON. I understand.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

There was no objection.

The resolution was agreed to.

LEGISLATIVE APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. SANDLIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 11267) making appropriations for the legislative branch of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Louisiana?

The Chair hears none, and appoints the following conferees: Messrs. Sandlin, Ludlow, and Hardy.

HAROLD LOUDERBACK, UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the resolution. H. Res. 239.

The Clerk read the resolution as follows:

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman a question. What expense is connected with this investigation?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. It proposes an appropriation of Mr. BLANTON. Does it provide for a junket to the west coast for the committee?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. No; it does not. And there will be no trip to the west coast unless it is necessary; but it is

Mr. BLANTON. But the purpose of the gentleman and his committee is, if possible, to have that investigation here require an expensive trip to the west coast?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. That has been the policy of this committee.

Mr. BLANTON. I just want to remind my colleague of the last expensive trip a House committee took there, the Joe Walsh committee, that lived on the Pacific coast in Pullman trains so long.

Mr. TILSON. Reserving the right to object, may I ask if this inquiry is requested or backed by the bar association or a reputable part of the bar?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. May I make a brief statement? This investigation is requested by the two bar associations of San Francisco; and in so far as I have heard from the Representatives from the State of California, they all believe that a condition obtains there which requires an investigation by the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. TILSON. It is not a case of the personal grievance of somebody?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. It is at the request of the bar associations, and there are only two.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to was laid on the table.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by incorporating in the Rec-ORD at this point letters from the bar associations with reference to this bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The letters referred to are as follows:

Under date of May 9, 1932, we received an acknowledgment of said communication from Mr. Lawrence Richey, Secretary to the President, stating that the matter "is being referred for consideration of the Attorney General," and thereafter we received a letter dated May 12, 1932, from Mr. Charles P. Sisson, Assistant Attorney General, stating in effect that our letter addressed to the President had been referred to the Department of Justice for consideration, and further stating "that the Department of Justice has no jurisdiction whatsoever over the United States judges. BARRISTERS' CLUB OF SAN FRANCISCO,
BAR ASSOCIATION OF SAN FRANCISCO,
San Francisco, Calif., May 28, 1932.

CHAIRMAN OF THE JUDICIARY COMMITTEE,

HOUSE of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

HONORABLE SIR: For some time past the press of this city has published news articles, editorials, and cartoons referring to receivership and bankruptcy matters pending before the Hon. Harold Louderback, judge of the United States District Court for the Northern District of California, and the conduct of the judge in connection with these matters

Northern District of California, and the conduct of the judge in connection with these matters.

The Barristers' Club of San Francisco, the junior bar organization of this city, believes that the matter is one which should be called to your attention because of the serious nature of the charges against Judge Louderback. We express no opinion as to the truth or falsity of the publications. However, regardless of their truth or falsity, their effect has been to create a question in the public mind as to the integrity of the Federal courts.

We believe that it is essential that this should not occur. The people should be able to rely upon the integrity of the United States courts. Therefore, being of the opinion that the matter is properly within your jurisdiction, we request that you conduct an inquiry into the facts surrounding the administration of justice by Judge Louderback, and that you take such action as may be warranted by the facts as you find them to be.

If the Barristers' Club can be of any assistance to you in such action as you see fit to take, we are at your service.

Respectfully yours,

Gordon Johnson, Chairman Board of Directors.

SECOND DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 12443) to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1932, and prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1932, and June 30, 1933, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 12443, the second deficiency appropriation bill, with Mr. DISNEY in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the following sums are appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1932, and prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1932, and June 30, 1933, and for other purposes, namely.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

I do this for the purpose of making a very brief statement to the committee. There has been no explanation of this bill, and I simply want to call the attention of the committee to the fact that in amount it is the smallest general deficiency bill that has ever been proposed to the Congress. I think that the House is to be congratulated on that fact. It carries a total of $15,398,873.01. That sum is $1,137,250 less than the Budget estimate. I do not recall just what the next smallest general deficiency bill which has been heretofore passed carried, but I am sure it was over $50,000,000, and possibly $80,000,000, but I did want the House and the country to know that this general deficiency bill carries a far lesser sum than has been carried in any general deficiency bill at any session of Congress during its history in recent Another fact to which I want to call the attention of the House is this. I will not say there has been a deliberate purpose, but there would seem to be an effort on the part of some to minimize just what the House has accomplished in the way of reductions in appropriations and expenditures. The effect of this has been that the country has failed to appreciate just what the House has accomplished in this way, and credit is due, of course, to both sides of the House for the action taken. It has fully sustained its reputation as being the most economical branch of Congress, and also far more economical than the Executive.

I feel there should be something said at this time on the occasion of the passage of the last appropriation bill which will be passed at this session showing just what those reductions are. If you will indulge me a moment, I will state that the Budget estimates which have been submitted for the regular annual appropriation bills and the deficiency bills, including the one now under consideration, amount to $3,474,052,120.30. The amount of the bills as they have passed the House, including the one now pending, is $3,311,-585,653.50, which represents a reduction under the estimates submitted of $162,466,556.74.

Of course, all of these bills, with the exception of the bill making appropriations for the Department of the Interior, are now pending in the Senate.

The future will tell as to whether or not these reductions will be increased or decreased, but this represents the action taken by the House at this session upon these various bills, and I ask unanimous consent to incorporate as a part of my remarks a table showing the various amounts of each bill and the reductions made in each bill for the information of the House and of the country.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. BYRNS. I will be glad to yield after I complete my statement.

I have in my hand also a statement showing a comparison of the amounts of the annual appropriations exclusive of permanent appropriations for the fiscal years 1932 and 1933 as of June 7, 1932. This shows that the House has reduced the appropriations for the year 1933 under 1932 in the sum of $627,422,101.42.

In other words, the total appropriations for 1932 were $3,802,271,218. The appropriations passed by the House amount to $3,174,849,116.66.

I also ask unanimous consent to incorporate this table as part of my remarks for the information of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks as indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

This amount shows the net decrease on regular and supplemental annual appropriations which are passed upon by Congress. The permanent annual appropriations, which occur automatically each year without action by Congress, as estimated in December, 1931, show an increase, for 1933 over 1932, of $104,535,684, wholly due to interest on the public debt and debt-retirement funds.

Mr. LAMNECK. Will the gentleman yield for a brief question?

Mr. BYRNS. I must yield first to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. WOODRUFF. I want to thank the gentleman for his courtesy. He has just given the House the exact information I was hoping he would give us when he quoted the last figures.

Mr. BYRNS. I now yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LAMNECK].

Mr. LAMNECK. Does the reduction the gentleman from Tennessee spoke of include the reduction accomplished by the economy bill?

Mr. BYRNS. No; this has reference only to appropriation bills which have been passed by the House up to this time.

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman yield for a question? Mr. BYRNS. I yield.

Mr. DYER. I would like to ask the gentleman from Tennessee, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, for some explanation of the money provided for in this bill at page 31, in the first paragraph, for furnishing and installing fixed permanent equipment for cafeterias, in view of the policy of the House a few days ago in passing a resolution to investigate the Government participating in private business and competing with private individuals in matters of this kind.

Mr. BYRNS. I will say to the gentleman this simply follows the recommendation of the Post Office Department and its action with reference to a number of other buildings that have either been constructed or are now in the process of construction. The item will come up in regular course, and I am satisfied that when it is reached the gentleman will have an opportunity to discuss it. I do not care to anticipate anything in the bill at the present time.

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman state approximately how much money this will take out of the Treasury?

Mr. BYRNS. The gentleman understands that these cafeterias are carried on by the postal employees who conduct these cafeterias on a cost basis. It costs the Government nothing except the space that is provided and the fixed equipment.

Mr. DYER. But they do compete with private cafeterias and restaurants?

Mr. BYRNS. To the extent the postal employees take their meals in these cafeterias.

Mr. JOHNSON of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. BYRNS. Yes; but I do not want to anticipate what will come up for discussion later on. The item on cafeterias is way down in the bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of Missouri. Do not the hearings disclose that it will cost $750,000 to equip the cafeterias?

Mr. BYRNS. It was stated at one point that the cost would be $50,000 on the average. Just what was meant by that I do not know, but undoubtedly the fixtures and equipment will not cost $50,000.

Mr. DYER. I will say to the gentleman that the hearings show there are 15 of them which, at $50,000 each, amounts to $750,000.

Mr. BYRNS. Let us delay that controversy until we get to the item in the bill.

Mr. DYER. We ought to delay that or the investigation.

Mr. HOLMES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS. I yield.

Mr. HOLMES. Is the pending deficiency bill also included in the gentleman's figures?

Mr. BYRNS. Yes: it is.

Mr. McCLINTIC of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I have just returned from the State of Oklahoma, where I participated in the dedication of a splendid new bridge which spans the Red River between Texas and Oklahoma. While there I took occasion to feel the pulse of as many of the citizens of both Texas and Oklahoma as I could with respect to their views as to what Congress is doing. I regret exceedingly to advise you that the situation, as I view it, in this section of the Nation, is much worse than I have ever witnessed during the time I have served as a Member of the House. people are not able to pay their taxes this year. Without relief they can not pay them next year. There is nothing in the way of hope being held out in front of them, and in my opinion, unless this Congress passes some kind of a law which will provide some kind of aid to those who till the soil there is liable to be an eruption that will shake the very foundation of this Government.

Up to the present time this Congress has been extending relief beginning at the top and working down. Our people do not believe that a sufficient amount will trickle down to be of any material benefit to them. Therefore, they are clamoring for proper legislation which will put a foundation under the Nation to the extent that the 52,000,000 people who depend upon agriculture for a livelihood may have some kind of assurance given which will cause them to obtain a fair price for that which they produce instead of 5 or 6 cents for cotton, 30 or 40 cents for wheat, and similar prices for the other commodities that are produced on the farm. They believe, as I do, that the cost of production on commodities needed for home consumption should be guaranteed and that this Congress should indicate a willingness to help out to this extent in the present crisis.

I say to you, my friends, that the source of all wealth is in the ground and that every occupation in the section of the country where I reside is more or less dependent upon agriculture. If the farmers are not given some measure of relief, so they can at least obtain the cost of production on that part of the yield that is necessary for home consumption, there is not an industry in either of the States I have visited that will be able to carry on very much longer.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. McCLINTIC of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Has the gentleman thought of any plan that could be laid out or presented? I agree with much the gentleman says.

Mr. McCLINTIC of Oklahoma. I am glad to have the gentleman ask that question. It does seem to me that when we know the amount the Nation has to produce in order to take care of the needs of our own people that it is not a difficult question to work out suitable legislation that will be fair to all concerned. We know that if we did not produce that which is needed for home consumption in the United States that we would have to purchase the same abroad and probably pay a price that would be greater than the cost of production in the United States.

Therefore, if our farmers could be assured that this principle would be enacted into a law, then they would receive 12 or 15 cents a pound for cotton, $1 a bushel for wheat, and similar prices for other kinds of commodities. This would result in our farmers obtaining a fair wage scale for their own labor, and should they produce a greater amount than was needed for home consumption, the same could be utilized on the farm or fed into the world's market when there was a demand for such surplus. I am sure that beneficial results would be obtained, as such a law would automatically bring about either a reduction of acreage in some crops or diversification to the extent that those who till the soil would utilize their land in a way that would bring about the most benefit.

Mr. McCLINTIC of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCLINTIC of Oklahoma. During the World War the conditions that confronted this Nation from an agricultural standpoint, in my opinion, were not one-tenth as bad as they are now. At that time we established a precedent for such legislation by guaranteeing a certain product to sell at a stipulated price. I do not consider to go that far in the proposed legislation, but if we could take into consideration that every occupation is either directly or indirectly dependent upon the success of the farmer, then no one could object to the principle I am sponsoring at the present time. We know that unless the farmer can make a profit, he can not pay his taxes. It will be impossible for him to pay the banker or to take care of any mortgage indebtedness on his farm. The merchant will have his volume of business reduced, and this will reflect clear back to the manufacturer of raw products, thus clogging up the wheels of industry to the extent that everyone suffers.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. The gentleman speaks of the fact that because we began relief at the top nothing has trickled down. I would like to ask the gentleman if he does not think that had there not been some relief at the top the banks in all of the cotton country would not have been able to pay even 6 cents for cotton.

Mr. McCLINTIC of Oklahoma. I want to say to the gentleman that I am in accord with the statement he has made. I voted for the emergency relief measure he has in mind. I knew that many of our institutions had reached the place where they could go no farther, that the foreign nations were drawing millions of dollars in gold and that unless credit had been provided there would have been a smash in this country that might have destroyed every major industry, yet I will have the gentleman understand that unless we put a foundation under agriculture there can be no permanent benefits obtained from this emergency legislation, as we must realize that when pay day comes these institutions will have to have another postponement or be given relief in some other way.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. The gentleman wants to bring the bottom up a little bit.

Mr. McCLINTIC of Oklahoma. Yes.

Mr. SPARKS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCLINTIC of Oklahoma. Yes.

Mr. SPARKS. I agree with the gentleman that we should have some substantial relief for agriculture before Congress adjourns. I am wondering if the gentleman has in mind any particular bill now pending before the House that he is referring to in his discussion.

Mr. McCLINTIC of Oklahoma. I am very glad to say to the gentleman that I have pending a bill before the Committee on Agriculture which, if enacted into a law, would guarantee to the producer the cost of production on that part of the yield that is needed for home consumption. Likewise, there is pending a bill that has the indorsement of the different farm organizations. It has incorporated in it three plans, namely, the debenture, the equalization fee, and the one I have referred to, which is called the allotment plan.

I say to you that if we can not get the committee to report favorably on the plan I have in mind, I would like to see the bill sponsored by the farm organizations enacted into law, with a provision contained in the same making it mandatory on the agency of our Government that is charged with the responsibility of putting the same into effect to use the plan which is best suited for the particular commodity grown in any section of the country, so that if the debenture plan is better suited for wheat the growers could obtain such benefits; if the allotment plan is best for some other commodity, it could be used; and if the equalization plan would bring better results for some crop, it would be available.

This has been a long-drawn-out session, and I realize there are many Members who would like to go home to look after their political fences. However, as I view it, it will be far better to remain in session until the farm-relief program is concluded even if it takes all summer. I feel that when a person has faithfully represented a district for many years and has always looked after the needs of the people in a proper way, that they will not be stampeded by any person who resorts to unethical practice to deceive the voters. Therefore, I have decided that it will be more beneficial to give our people relief than it is to elect anyone to any office, and it is for this reason I am going to leave my candidacy in the hands of my friends, feeling sure that they will put themselves in my place and give justice where it is deserved.

I regret exceedingly that the President and the Secretary of Agriculture have not felt warranted to urge Congress to pass this legislation. I am sure that if this subject had been included in one of the messages that have been sent to Congress during the session, it would have caused the party leaders to take a united stand, thereby insuring the country that such relief was going to be provided. Everyone realizes that the President by a veto can defeat any bill in the House if a two-thirds vote can not be obtained to override the same; yet I am hoping that he has the interests of the farmers at heart to the extent that if Congress passes such a bill it will receive his approval.

If there ever was a time on earth when Congress should realize the emergency condition that is confronting this country, it is now. Our poor depressed farmers are facing a situation where they know they are not going to receive one-half of the cost of production on their crops unless this legislation is approved. Likewise, every other occupation is facing disaster. Therefore it is for this reason I am pleading with you, as I have never pleaded before, not to adjourn and go home until this relief has been provided. I say to you—and I know what I am talking about—our people are far worse off than they have ever been during all of my public career, and unless we give some kind of aid God only knows what is going to happen to the Nation in the future. [Applause.]

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last three words.

Mr. Chairman, I heard with interest what the gentleman from Oklahoma has just said, and I am wholly in sympathy with him, because I, too, wish to help the farmer. I shall pledge him to vote for an equalization fee or the debenture plan or any other plan to rescue the farmer, but I should like to get from him as condition precedent a pledge that would relieve this country of staggering taxation. Will the gentleman pledge me that he will vote for relief as to prohibition in this country? Will he repeal prohibition in the interests of the taxpayer, especially the farmer?

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, bunk.

Mr. CELLER. You may say, "Oh, bunk," but the people of the country are not saying that. There are unmistakable signs of a revolt in this country. The newspapers are filled with matter that those who are now dry might very well weigh with the greatest amount of meditation and thought and wisdom.

I am informed that the former President of the United States, Mr. Coolidge, for example, as dry as ever was a President in the White House, will, in the next issue of the Cosmopolitan, condemn prohibition, and I ask the gentleman from Texas to take heed. The handwriting is on the wall.

Mr. BLANTON. How did the gentleman find out that the former President was going to do that—from his wet organization?

Mr. CELLER. That is not a subject of present argument. I will tell the gentleman that I have it from a reliable source and on good authority.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman ought not to prognosticate this far in advance of the next issue of the Cosmopolitan.

Mr. CELLER. The gentleman need not worry about my "inside information."

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman is on the inside, of course. Mr. CELLER. I refuse to yield further, Mr. Chairman.

I may say to the gentleman from Texas, however, that he had better sit up and take notice. He should read very carefully the returns from the State of Florida and see where those who were wet won and those who were dry lost, and the very charming lady——

Mr. BLANTON. No; the straddlers lost.

Mr. CELLER. I have refused to yield.

The very charming lady from Florida, Mrs. Ruth Bryan Owen, because she did not come out in time and suitably for the referendum, went down, unfortunately, to defeat. She was defeated by one who was more pronounced in his wet views than the lady from Florida. From reports he appears to have been for out-and-out repeal. She had come out for referendum, but rather too late. I regret her defeat. She was an asset to this House. It is regrettable she did not see the light earlier.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. How about Texas?

Mr. CELLER. Yes; Texas is wet. Why, the Democratic State convention of the State of Texas came out against the drys. It is for the referendum. I say to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Blanton] that he had better consult his party leaders. I could go into almost every State and give you the unmistakable portents as to prohibition.

See what happened to the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. Morrison]. He misread the signs in his State. He came out as a dry in the beginning, then straddled as a "moist" and went down to defeat. See what happened to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. William E. Hull], my esteemed friend—a former distiller. He was a recent convert. He had been dry; he voted for the "five and ten" Jones law. He came out against prohibition too late, and see what was the result in his district. What a tragedy it was to him because he could not read these portents properly, or shall I say with intelligence. He therefore reaps the whirlwind.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. I now yield to my friend from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. I just want to cite the gentleman two instances. Our good friend Chindblom, who turned wet, was turned down. Our friend Governor Yates, who stood loyal and firm on the question and was as dry as the Sahara, was returned by 167,000 votes from wet Illinois.

Mr. CELLER. My distinguished friend from Illinois [Mr. Chindblom] undoubtedly was not defeated because of that fact. There were other issues in his campaign that, unfortunately, caused his defeat. He is a very distinguished Member of the House, and I am very unhappy at his defeat. Governor Yates is an exception. His many years of honorable service is more important than his dry views. I will wager, however, that the governor will soon change.

Mr. MILLARD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. I yield.

Mr. MILLARD. I wonder if the gentleman from Texas has ever heard of John D. Rockefeller, jr., a classmate of mine?

Mr. CELLER. I am coming to that. The gentleman from Texas has probably reluctantly heard of John D. Rockefeller, jr., who very courageously and in most pronounced terms came out against prohibition and has stated that while the saloon has gone we have received in its stead something far worse—the speakeasy.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I shall not object, because the gentleman is always willing to yield.

Mr. CELLER. Even William G. McAdoo has declared for a vote of the people in a special national election. McAdoo has been impervious to all wet argument. He, too, has succumbed. He now admits the feebleness of national prohibition and deplores the lack of cooperation of the States. He admits that during prohibition crime has so increased as to become menacing to the well-being of the Republic.

Let us go back to Florida for a moment. Our colleague, Representative Herbert J. Drane, wisely ran as a wet and won in the primary. Our colleague, Representative Tom Yon, however, ran as a dry and was defeated.

As agreeably startling as the Rockefeller statement is the announcement in this morning's press of John R. Mott, world head of the Young Men's Christian Association. His views—another bombshell in the prohibition ranks—are as follows:

I desire resubmission for two reasons. First, I think the young generation which has grown up since the eighteenth amendment was adopted should have a voice in determining the law under which they have got to live. The opportunity should be given them to vote on the matter, not in accordance with pleas from political parties, but after thoroughgoing education as to the merits and demerits of prohibition.

My second reason for resubmission of the question to the people of all the States is that there has been a change of mind on the part of so many good men like Rockefeller, in whose sincerity and intellectual honesty I have absolute confidence.

The recent Digest poll, where only two States were counted as dry—Kansas and North Carolina—should be sufficient warning to my wavering colleagues.

Take the case of our colleague Mr. Rogers, of New Hampshire. He won as a wet. Our former colleague, Mr. Sears, of Miami, Fla., wins as candidate for Congressman at large from Florida on the wet side.

General Martin won in Oregon as a wet. The Republican delegation from New Jersey has run to cover—to emerge as wets. They are wise.

Watch your step, my friends. You can not run against public opinion. The American Legion, the American Federation of Labor, the American Bar Association, the American Medical Association, and many other important organizations are tired of prohibition and want a change. The Anti-Saloon League has had its teeth drawn. Woman's Christian Temperance Union has lost prestige. They can not help you. They can not help themselves.

Coming events cast their shadows before. The end of prohibition is coming. It is coming with greased-lightning speed.

When I first came here, almost 10 years ago, we wets were very lonesome. We are no longer lonesome. Our numbers are steadily increasing.

We stood for much abuse and harsh treatment. We were accused of high crimes and misdemeanors, nullification and treason. We were threatened with defeat. But we stood our ground. We have the satisfaction now of seeing the enemy routed. The enemy now flees from the field in hopeless despair and disorder.

Before it is too late, my dry colleagues, come over to our side—the wet side.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Chairman, I am compelled to object. We have got to pass this bill. These speeches are wholly out of order. There has been plenty of opportunity under general debate. I am going to object to any further speeches not confined to the bill, except one speech on the other side—where the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Wood] had some time left, and I agreed with him that if we could go on and read the bill he might use his time to-day.

Mr. BLANTON. I know the gentleman from Tennessee so well that I know he is fair. I am a member of his committee, and I back him up in every move he makes to save the Government money.

Mr. Rockefeller is only one of 120,000,000 people. He means no more to the prohibition cause than any other one of the 120,000,000 people.

The prohibition cause does not need his money. I honestly believe that every dollar that has ever been contributed to the prohibition cause has done it harm. Men who have collected prohibition funds have brought the cause into disrepute. It is the antis who need the money. Why, they have bought up the newspapers, they have bought up the magazines, they have bought up college professors and big business. They control the radio, they control everything—they almost control some Congressmen.

If there were not a dollar contributed to the prohibition cause, it would grow and thrive just the same. It does not require money. It requires loyalty to duty and patriotism to country and humanity. Mothers and fathers will continue to vote against saloons regardless of whether funds are contributed to the prohibition cause or not. Money has never yet bought one vote for prohibition. It takes much money sometimes to gather strength against prohibition. The action of John D. Rockefeller, jr., is inconsequential.

Mr. BYRNS. Does not the gentleman think he has sufficiently answered the gentleman from New York to let us proceed with this bill?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I am going to obey the orders of my chairman, because he is the ablest, safest chairman that I ever followed. [Applause.]

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, under agreement with the gentleman from Tennessee, I yield to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Wolcort].

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks, and incorporate therein two very short bills on the sugar industry.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, during this session of Congress many worthy proposals have been advanced as aids to economic stability in Government and business. By the time we adjourn we shall have enacted legislation which has made available facilities which should ease credits, guarantee the stability of the American dollar, insure a more even flow of money, and a more equitable distribution of the wealth of the Nation. We have pinned our hope for agricultural, industrial, and economic rehabilitation on our ability to balance the Government's Budget by strict economies and the curtailment of Federal activities. It is to our credit that this has been done with a minimum of depreciation of the value of government to the people and without serious injury to our national defense. Many of the proposals of economy, if adopted, would have but transferred the tax burden from the Federal Government to the States, thereby increasing the real-estate tax of an already overburdened people wroth at the possibility of the loss of years of saving by tax sales of their homes and farms. Much credit is due the stalwarts in this House who have stood steadfastly against an avalanche of abuse and villification hurled by selfish interests who would subjugate republican freedom of thought and action to oligarchical tyranny.

History will write the achievements of this Congress in glowing terms. The broad Republican policies adopted during this session of Congress will outlive the men of this century and will be chosen by posterity as the guiding stars to national destiny. By our efforts the people of the Nation have been awakened to the desirability of sound but progressive Government. The futility of the "ism" which was growing upon us that the citizens of our country existed for Government instead of the truth that Government was created and maintained for the common welfare of our people has been proven so conclusively that we now, on a firmer foundation, can start to build anew.

The foundation has been built; the superstructure will take such form as we deem desirable for a proper housing of the complete happiness and well-being of our people, wherein lies the reason for my rising at this time to present my thoughts on the questions before us.

There is much to be accomplished if the Nation is to emerge from the depression with any degree of hope for permanent prosperity.

We must perhaps be more jealous of our national entity; we must live more unto ourselves than we have during the past 15 years; we must come to a realization in respect to our own policies that throughout the history of the world internationalism has destroyed more nations than domestic strife; paternalism must give way to fraternalism; we must henceforth live for America and insist that our policy of protection of our own people be maintained against all the world if necessary. Because we are a commercial Nation, the well-being of our people must of necessity be measured by the yardstick of commerce, and as much by the steadiness of our domestic trade as by the expansion of our foreign commerce.

We will not complete the work which we have begun here until we create a market in the United States for the products of our own soil and industry preferential to those of foreign countries.

Some weeks ago I rose in this Chamber and called attention to a serious condition confronting the Nation due to our failure to adequately protect our domestic market. At that time we were considering the Democratic tariff bill, recently vetoed by the President, who was sustained by this House. During those remarks I emphasized the value of our domestic market and warned that we could hope for no permanent recovery from the depression unless we protected the products of our farms and industries from foreign invasion.

I pointed out that the purpose of tariff legislation was to protect and encourage agriculture and the industries of the United States, and to protect American labor by maintaining a high standard scale of wages, which would in turn preserve our economic structure. At that time I said in part as follows:

Rather than see this Nation of ours further enmeshed in the economic net of foreign governments, it would be preferable to sustain a total loss of our foreign trade. Let me explain why: For months we have all been steeped with the thought that the economic recovery of the United States depended wholly upon a resumption of a normal foreign trade. We have been led to believe that our commercial and agricultural structures were built upon our exports to foreign countries. The majority party in this House would have us believe that we should tear down our tariff wall in order that the people of the United States might buy abroad and thereby foreign capital would be created by these purchases with which to buy American goods. What an economic fallacy in the face of the facts.

I pointed out that the average exports for the 30 years preceding 1929 constitute only about 10 per cent of our total trade. In this connection it is interesting to note what Dr. E. Dana Durand, formerly statistical assistant to the Secretary of Commerce, has to say on this subject. On page 583 in a book entitled "American Industry and Commerce," he says:

Were comparison made between the value of foreign trade and the total output of the American people, the ratio would be very modest. At present (1929) it is only 5 or 6 per cent. This is a very much lower ratio than in many other countries of the world.

I particularly had in mind the sugar industry of the United States, and I would like to discuss for a few minutes the condition of that industry as a typical example of the point which I make that there can be no permanent recovery of agriculture and business until our home market is made available to our producers and manufacturers. I know that there is little hope of any legislation emanating from this Congress which will help the sugar industry of the United | ket. Philippine raw sugar has been heretofore used to fill in States, because we are controlled by certain Democratic free traders who believe, apparently, that 90 per cent of our trade should be jeopardized to protect the other 10 per cent. However, we are thankful that there were enough Republicans in the House to prevent the abolition of the Federal Tariff Commission, which I believe can and will give some relief to the sugar industry. You; sirs, would have destroyed the Tariff Commission if your tariff bill had become law, and with it you would have completely obliterated the sugar industry of the United States from the face of the earth.

On January 9, 1932, one month after coming here, I made my first speech on the floor of this House. My voice was raised then against the destruction of the only hope held out for the sugar growers and refiners. Like Cato before the Roman senate, urging the destruction of Carthage, every speech I make will be replete with entreaties for a safeguard to our sugar industry.

I am particularly interested in the sugar-beet industry, and if my career in Congress amounts to no more than to have had an aggressive part in the preservation of the only means by which my sugar-beet growers can get permanent relief, I feel that my time has been well spent.

Recently a petition was filed with the Tariff Commission to increase the tariff on sugar under the flexible provisions authorized by Congress. Previous to this I had started an exhaustive study of the sugar business, and the tariffs and treaties affecting it. Since then I have been in constant contact with the commission, and have addressed a communication to the President setting forth in substance the result of my research and stressing the dire necessity for relief. Until recently I considered it unethical to introduce a bill to increase the tariff on sugar, raw or refined, while this petition was pending before the Tariff Commission; but when it was learned that the commission is still conducting a field study, and because I am informed that it is doubtful whether the field work will be completed before this year's crop is harvested and refined, I introduced H. J. Res. 411. and welcome this opportunity to call your attention, and the attention of the country, to the need for relief by immediate passage of that legislation.

In this respect let me say that I have also introduced House Joint Resolution 426, which, after setting forth certain facts concerning sugar importations from the Philippine Islands, provides that sugar coming into the United States from the Philippine Islands, the product of such islands, shall be admitted free of duty in an amount not in excess of 500,000 short tons in any one fiscal year. Until such time as the Philippine Islands are granted full independence resulting in the levying of the same tariff duties on imports from the Philippine Islands as are now paid on the imports from all other countries except Cuba, and until such time as the Government of Cuba realizes that the reciprocity treaty and act of 1903 were for the purpose of allowing them an opportunity to build up their domestic industries and that they were in no manner intended to be used as weapons of destruction little hope can be held out for the future of the sugar industry in the United States. It will be remembered that under the existing law sugar may be imported from the Philippine Islands into the United States free of duty. The increase in importation of Philippine sugar is alarming. The Payne-Aldrich Tariff Act of 1909, recognizing the danger to the stability and growth of the domestic production of sugar in an unlimited duty-free importation of sugar from the tropical regions, with cheaper labor and practically unlimited areas favorable to the growth of sugarcane, restricted the duty-free importation of Philippine sugar to a maximum of 300,000 tons per annum. It is interesting to note in this respect that in the same year only about 40,000 tons of Philippine sugar were imported into the

In 1922 the importation of Philippine sugar was removed by the Fordney-McCumber Tariff Act, due to the fact that although the importation of Philippine sugar had reached somewhat over 200,000 short tons per annum, it was thought that it would never seriously interfere with the domestic marthe gap between domestic production and consumption. However, importation has steadily increased, so that in 1930 the importation of Philippine sugar into the United States had amounted to about 809,000 short tons, as opposed to about 63,000 short tons imported from all other countries, exclusive of Cuba. The encouragement thus given to the Philippine sugar industry not only contributes to the destruction of the industry in the United States but it also delays the agricultural and economic development of the islands, due to the fact that it makes them largely dependent upon a single competitive export crop, contrary to the principles of diversified agriculture and industry, upon which depends ultimate economic, cultural, and political progress.

Our purpose in advocating Philippine independence should not alone be predicated upon our selfish desire to safeguard our domestic interests, but if our local sugar industry can be helped by providing that the Philippine Islands be saved from ultimate dependence on the United States, then, of course, we are justified in insisting that they gradually create other markets for the products of their land and factories. The protection of our sugar industry is but one of the many problems confronting us during this period of agricultural, industrial, and economic depression. One of the most sane ways of balancing our Budget is to put our agriculture and industry on such a stable basis that the return to our Treasury from these industries will of itself obviate the necessity of an increase in taxes and the adoption of dangerous economies.

Our citizens are the most resourceful people in the world. As it was lately said by Representative Hawley, coauthor of the Smoot-Hawley Tariff Act, "Our national resources are unimpaired; our farms retain their fertility; our labor still has its efficiency and its intelligence; our industries continue to possess the enterprise and ability which has made us the greatest industrial nation—our people are the best of all." It remains, then, only to encourage our farmers and our laboring men in their ordinary pursuits to assure a return of

The United States sugar industry as a whole operates 173 refineries in 21 States; employs 27,321 persons, pays in salaries and wages $37,330,769, which, together with the purchase of material, fuel, and electric power, amounting to $521,582,617, brings the total value of this industry annually to a sum total of $558,913,386, exclusive of capital investments in real estate and equipment. These figures do not include the thousands of farmers and farm hands engaged in growing sugar beets on approximately 720,000 acres of land, nor do they take into consideration the unknown amount of revenue to the Government, States, counties, and municipalities in the form of taxes derived from incomes from the industry and the land and buildings used in the production.

Although the investments in the domestic sugar business are seriously menaced by the increased importation of dutyfree sugar from the Philippines, the danger from that source is small compared to the threatened disintegration of the industry by the activities of Cuba within recent years.

As proof of the contention that the sugar industry of the United States is on the verge of collapse unless some relief is immediately offered, I insert at this point a table showing the consumption of sugar in the continental United States from 1925 to 1931, both inclusive:

Consumption (in long tons) of sugar in the continental United

Note that the importation of refined sugar from Cuba increased from 1,182 long tons in 1925 to 51,859 long tons in 1926. It will be seen that the importation of Cuban sugar continues to increase steadily so that at the present rate it can completely supplant the domestic sugar industry in the next 15 years. We need have no fear of a reasonable increase in tariff rates on sugar, due to the fact that competition between the various units of the domestic sugar industry would prevent any increase in the price of sugar if a higher duty on the refined product were enacted. What the industry needs more than an increase in price is a restoration of its lost volume. This can only be brought about by creating a market for domestic sugar by some drastic regulation of importations.

The reasons why Cuba can import sugar into the United States to the detriment of the domestic industry is due, first, to the 20 per cent preferential which is given on tariff duties under the reciprocity treaty of 1903, and, secondly, the lower labor costs, lower taxes, lower land values, and small capital investment. It will be recalled that the United States entered into a commercial treaty with Cuba, the reciprocity act of 1903, which provides in part, as follows:

During the term of this convention, all articles of merchandise not included in the foregoing Article I and being the product of the soil or industry of the Republic of Cuba imported into the United States shall be admitted at a reduction of 20 per cent of the rates of duty thereon as provided by the tariff act of the United States approved July 24, 1897, or as may be provided by any tariff law of the United States subsequently enacted.

Under this treaty its provisions can be abrogated only in the following manner. I quote from the treaty—* * and the convention shall go into effect on the tenth day after the exchange of ratifications, and shall continue in force for the term of five years from date of going into effect, and from year to year thereafter until the expiration of one year from the day when either of the contracting parties shall give notice to the other of its intention to terminate the same.

I am requesting the Secretary of State to give notice under the provisions of article 11 of the treaty, from which I have just quoted, in the hope that a more equitable commercial treaty may be entered into.

The real point involved in the argument for protection of the domestic industry lies in the difference between the differential as fixed by the Hawley-Smoot Act of 1930 and the differential as fixed by the Fordney-McCumber Act of 1922. Under the tariff act of 1922, a world rate on 96 per cent sugar, which we refer to as unrefined sugar, was $2.20 per hundred pounds; for Cuba, with the operation of the preferential, the rate for 96 per cent sugar was $1.76 per hundred pounds. Under the same act, on 100 per cent sugar the world rate was fixed at $2.39 per hundred pounds, and for Cuba $1.91 per hundred pounds. The Cuban rate is determined by deducting 20 per cent from the world rate.

The difference between the Cuban rate on raw sugar and the rate on refined sugar was, therefore, the difference between $1.91 and $1.76, or 15 cents. Under the Hawley-Smoot Tariff Act of 1930 the world rate on 96 per cent sugar is $2.50 per hundred pounds; the Cuban rate on 96 per cent sugar is $2 per hundred pounds; the world rate on 100 per cent sugar is $2.65 per hundred pounds, and the Cuban rate on 100 per cent sugar is $2.12 per hundred pounds, thereby giving a differential between the duty on raw sugar and refined sugar of only 12 cents, or a differential in Cuba's favor between the Fordney-McCumber Act of 1922 and the Hawley-Smoot Act of 1930 of 3 cents.

Under the Fordney-McCumber Act this differential of 15 cents enabled the refiner to import Cuban raw sugar with a polariscopic test of 96 per cent, to refine it and still compete successfully in the domestic and in the world market. The differential of 12 per cent as provided by the Hawley-Smoot Act is insufficient to enable the American refiner to meet Cuban competition. An attempt has been made in the bill which I have introduced to increase this differential sufficient to give protection to the American refiner.

Because of the advantage given to the Cuban refiner there has been a decrease in the importation of Cuban raw sugar and a marked increase in the importation of refined sugar. In 1920 and 1921 there were 198 raw-sugar mills in operation on the island of Cuba. In 1931 there were but 127 rawsugar mills operating. Previous to 1925 Cuba had two refineries. Since 1925 there have been 7 built on the island, and 11 additional units are planned. Great advantage is given to the Cuban industry over the American grower and refiner by reason of smaller capital investment, cheaper land, less substantial buildings, and lower operating costs, due to extremely low wages. I have gathered some figures showing the relative wages paid in the industry in Cuba and the United States as of 1930. I pick a few at random in substantiation of my point that under such conditions it is difficult for us to meet Cuban competition.

In 1930 the relative wages were somewhat as follows:

Occupation	United States wages	Cuban wages
Melters Filter pressmen Evaporator tenders Tank men Sugar boilers Weighers and checkers Laborers Electricians	$5, 53 5, 43 6, 36 5, 53 8, 32 6, 04 4, 95 7, 88	$1. 20 1. 20 2. 50 1. 20 5, 00 1. 50 1. 20 2. 75

These figures are furnished by the United States Department of Labor, Bureau of Labor Statistics. In view of the fact that the Cuban wage rate is on the basis of a 12-hour day, the American wage rate has been taken for a corresponding number of hours of work.

Summarizing the above, we find that in 1930 the Cuban refiner paid about 26 per cent of the wages paid by the American refiner. There is likewise a large advantage to the Cuban refiner on capital investment, due to the fact that in Cuba the factories are usually located outside of metropolitan areas and the climatic conditions make it unnecessary to build expensive permanent structures. In the United States refineries are almost universally built in villages or cities, where the price of land is higher, and because of the permanency of the buildings and equipment much more capital is invested. For this reason taxes on the capital investment of the refineries and factories in the United States are much higher than those of Cuba.

Much of the keen and disparaging competition within the domestic industry is due to the very small margin of profit for which this condition is responsible. If the domestic market as a whole is sufficiently protected, this competition will be fair in all respects and there will be no repetition of the present deplorable condition of the industry.

I am aware of the fact that many people in the United States are sympathetic with the endeavors of Cuba to build up its export trade, but I do not believe that there can be any concerted effort on the part of any numbers of our people to bring this about at the expense of our own prosperity, especially in view of the attitude which Cuba has lately taken concerning its trade relations with the United States. There is much talk in Cuba of setting up an embargo against products of the United States. El Mercurio, a newspaper of which President Machado's son-in-law, Jose Emilio Obregon, is president, carries each day on its front page a warning to the people to refrain from purchasing anything from the United States.

I also quote from an article appearing in El Comercio, a prominent Cuban newspaper, as follows:

If the Cuban producers could obtain an absolute and irrevocable guaranty that the duties on sugar refined in Cuba would not be raised within 10 years, there would not be left standing a single cane-sugar refinery on the Atlantic Coast or on the Gulf of Mexico. Only the fear of an increase in duty deters the Cuban planter from investing his money and adapting his raw-sugar mill to refining.

This applies also to the factories refining beet sugar in Michigan, Colorado, Nebraska, Utah, Wyoming, Montana, and the other sugar-beet producing States, because of the close affiliation of the beet-sugar industry and the canesugar industry.

This, we hope, is not the attitude of the Cuban people. It surely is not the attitude of Horatio S. Rubens, the sole surviving member of the Cuban Junta, which organized the successful Cuban revolution and sustained the Cuban troops in the field until the intervention of the United States in the Spanish-American War. In a fine friendly talk given on the thirtieth anniversary of the independence of Cuba, in addressing himself to the American people in appreciation of our activities in rehabilitating the island, he said:

We can never forget that the supreme sacrifice of your sons on our soil consolidated the freedom for which we fought for 13½ years. The single star of our flag will ever shine as the symbol of our gratitude.

The American people desire more than anything else a continuation of the friendly relations between our Government and Cuba. These relations have become strained during this economic depression. We are hopeful that it will not continue, but probably the future amicable commercial relations between the island of Cuba and the United States depend upon a more complete understanding of our respective trade problems. If the people of Cuba understand that this dissatisfaction in our trade relations is caused by the knowledge on the part of our people that our generous attitude toward the people of the island is destructive to American industry, then I believe that they will be appreciative enough of the many gratuities bestowed upon them by us to aid in the reestablishment of reciprocal agreements more equitable than now exist, assuring continuance of the friendly feeling which has existed since the Spanish-American War.

My congressional district includes a large sugar-beet area interested both in the production of sugar beets and the refining of beet sugar. Millions of dollars are invested in this industry. Thousands of farmers and their helpers are dependent upon this industry for a livelihood. I have presented these facts to the President and to the Tariff Commission; I have appeared before the Ways and Means Committee and called its attention to the condition of the sugar industry in my district, pleading with them for relief, and I have but lately attempted to write a provision into the revenue bill for an increase in tariff on sugar.

Although we were unable to accomplish our purpose, due to the antipathy of the Democratic majority in this House to further tariffs, I feel that the groundwork has been laid for a more thorough understanding of the problems of the sugar-beet farmer, and that eventually this Congress will grant the relief so necessary to the life of this valuable industry.

The Clerk read as follows:

The four preceding appropriations shall be disbursed by the Sergeant at Arms of the House.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Byrns: Page 2, after line 15, insert the following: "For payment of expenses incurred by Wesley E. Disney, contestee in the contested-election case of O'Connor v. Disney, audited and recommended by the Committee on Elections No. 2, $2,000, to be disbursed by the Clerk of the House."

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Chairman, if this amendment be adopted, I shall follow it with another amendment to pay Mr. O'Connor, the contestant, for his expenses. In explanation of this amendment the certification from the chairman of the Elections Committee did not reach the Committee on Appropriations until after the bill had been reported to the House. Certifications of this character are required according to law. We have the certificate here, and these are the expenses which the Committee on Elections, which had jurisdiction of this case, has certified.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is the gentleman acquainted with any instance where the Elections Committee has recommended a less amount than $2,000, which is the maximum amount allowed by law?

Mr. BYRNS. Oh, yes; here is one that is to follow.

Mr. STAFFORD. Many years ago when I was serving on Committee on Elections No. 2, in some election contest arising out of Oklahoma, as I recall, our committee recommended the amount of only $500. We tried to deprecate the practice of filing contests primarily for the purpose of getting the $2,000 fee. It had been abused in many instances. I am not acquainted with any instance since where any Committee on Elections has recommended a less amount. The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations may be aware of the fact that many times contests are precipitated largely for the sake of getting the $2,000 fee, and some Elections Committees have attempted to discourage that by cutting down the expenses that will be allowed to the marrow, so as not to encourage election contests where there is not much merit.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Chairman, I do not think any such objection can be raised in so far as this contest is concerned. This contest was instituted by Mr. Charles O'Connor, a former Member of the House, against the present sitting Member, Mr. DISNEY. I not only have no reason to say so, but I do not believe that he instituted the contest for any such purpose as that indicated by the gentleman from Wisconsin. I think it was instituted in perfect good faith. The law authorizes the payment of $2,000 of actual expenses to the contestant and to the contestee upon the recommendation and certification of the Elections Committee under the signature of the chairman. The Appropriations Committee knows nothing about the expenditures incurred, but I am sure the Elections Committee, which had jurisdiction of the matter, made an investigation. I understand that the expenses incurred were greater than the amount allowed. which is the limit provided by law.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am quite sure that in the instant case the contest was started in good faith by the former Member of the House, Mr. O'Connor, who was the contestant, but my question goes more to the fact of whether the expenses were really incurred. In the cases in which the committee of which I was a member had to do, there was no question of the contest, but we did not think the contestant and the contestee had earned the $2,000 allowed, and we allowed only $500.

Mr. COLTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. BYRNS. Yes.

Mr. COLTON. I am not now a member of a Committee on Elections, but I served for some years as chairman of Committee on Elections No. 1. We did what the gentleman from Wisconsin suggests in every instance. We allowed only the amount actually shown to have been incurred by way of expenses, and often it amounted to only a few hundred dollars.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. BYRNS. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. It is the rule that the amount—or whether any amount at all shall be allowed—is solely within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Elections. The gentleman will doubtless recall a number of cases in which an appropriation was denied altogether and one celebrated case from South Carolina many years ago which has been held as authoritative from that time down, in which the committee made the announcement that in the future it would refuse to make allowances in cases which the committee did not consider there was meritorious ground for contest.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I ask recognition in opposition to the amendment. In reply to the statement made by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Cannon], I am glad to get the information, and perhaps the position taken by that Committee on Elections in holding they would in the future not grant expenses unless the contests were meritorious and entered upon in good faith has discouraged these contests which were formerly merely abusing the privilege to such a large extent.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman will doubtless recall that the statement by the committee resulted in the discontinuance of the class of cases to which the committee referred.

Mr. STAFFORD. In recent Congresses we have been free from other than bona fide contests.

Mr. BYRNS. Let me read to the gentleman the certification which has been made in the case of this particular amendment, and there is a similar one with reference to the | which reads "that no part of this appropriation shall be amendment which is to follow, if this be adopted:

EXPENDITURES OF WESLEY E. DISNEY

I certify that duly verified vouchers have been presented to this I certify that duly verified vouchers have been presented to this committee showing the expenditure of $2,000 by Wesley E. Disney, contestee in contested-election case of Charles O'Connor v. Wesley E. Disney from the first congressional district of the State of Oklahoma, and proof that such expenditures were reasonable and necessary. I further certify that the conclusion that Wesley E. Disney has spent such an amount of money was determined at a meeting of the Committee on Elections No. 2, held June 8, 1932.

JOSEPH A. GAVAGAN,

Chairman Committee on Elections No. 2

Chairman Committee on Elections No. 2.

I think it ought to be clear that the expenses were actually incurred.

Mr. STAFFORD. It is a general statement that warrants the Committee on Appropriations in appropriating $2,000. Of course, there is no bill of particulars.

Mr. BYRNS. They have the vouchers in the committee.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS. I yield.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I think Mr. O'Connor was perfectly justified in pressing this contest. If the case of Granata v. Kunz had been decided by the House upon the same principles which governed the House in the case of O'Connor v. Disney, Mr. Granata would not have been unseated: but I think the House took the right view in the case of Disney v. O'Connor.

Mr. BYRNS. I will not go into the merits of the case, because I know nothing about it; but I feel sure it was a case that was brought in good faith.

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, there is no question about that.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS. I yield.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Is it not a fact that under the law he is entitled to $2,500 if he makes out a prima

Mr. STAFFORD. No: no. The gentleman is entirely in error. That is the maximum amount that can be allowed. He must show that the amount has been expended, so that it will not be an inducement merely to get money out of the

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. BANKHEAD). The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Chairman, I offer a further amendment, which is at the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. Byrns: On page 2, after line 15, insert the following: "For payment to Charles O'Connor, contestant in the contested-election case of O'Connor v. DISNEY, audited and recommended by the Committee on Elections No. 2, $1,712.71, to be dispensed by the Clerk of the House.'

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, in view of the fact that this amount gets down to the penny-$1,712.71-it is rather prima facie proof that vouchers to the very penny were produced for the money expended by the contestant. I have no further objection to the allowance.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

For assistants in compiling lists of reports to be made to Congress by public officials; compiling copy and revising proofs for the House portion of the Official Register; preparing and indexing the statistical reports of the Clerk of the House; compiling the telephone and Members' directories; preparing and indexing the daily calendars of business; preparing the official statement of Members' voting records; preparing lists of congressional nominees and statistical summary of elections; preparing and indexing questions of order printed in the appendix to the Journal pursuant to House Rule III; for recording and filing statements of political committees and candidates for election to the House of Representatives pursuant to the Federal corrupt practices act, 1925 (U. S. C., title 2, secs. 241–256); and for such other assistance as the Clerk of the House may deem necessary and proper in the conduct of the business of his office, fiscal year 1933, $5,000: Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be used to augment the annual salary of any employee of the House of Representatives.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order for the purpose of making an inquiry as to that part the 1st of July, as I take it from your answer that nothing used to augment the annual salary of any employee of the House of Representatives."

I understand the practice has been heretofore to use this fund to amplify the salaries of certain regular employees of the House. Does the gentleman think that this work can be performed for this amount by individual employees who are not on the pay roll of the Government? The gentleman is well aware of the fact that the Clerk's office has a large retinue of employees and that the Congress has been rather liberal with that retinue and has not diminished it or curtailed their salaries.

Mr. BYRNS. That may be true, but the Clerk stated that this was absolutely necessary to perform the work of his office, and the committee put in this proviso so that if this money was expended it would not be used for the purpose as stated in the proviso, namely, to augment anybody's salary. If the Clerk does not employ some one on the outside, the money will not be used, but the Clerk of the House appeared before the committee and assured the committee that this sum was necessary. He was not able to say that all of it would be used. In fact, he assured the committee that he would not use any greater sum of this amount than was necessary, but he said he needed it.

Mr. STAFFORD. Then, as I understand, from the statement of the Clerk of the House, this money will be used for temporary employees for part-service work, and not as a means to add to the permanent roll of the House of Representatives?

Mr. BYRNS. That is true, and the proviso so states.

Mr. STAFFORD. No. It simply provides that it shall not be used to augment the salary of any present employee.

Mr. BYRNS. But, of course, he will be compelled to employ somebody on the outside. Whether he will employ them for one week or two weeks or two months depends on the work that is to be performed, but it is only temporary em-

Mr. STAFFORD. And it is not intended that this $5,000 shall be used as a basis for permanent employment in the future?

Mr. BYRNS. Oh, no; and I am sure the Clerk of the House would not even think of so using it.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the reservation of the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Contingent expenses: For expenses of special and select committees authorized by the House, fiscal year 1932, $5,250.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

I ask this time for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee what provision has been made in this $5,250 to finance that special committee authorized by House Resolution No. 235, which committee was organized a few days ago for the purpose of investigating Government competition with private enterprise and all the other questions in relation thereto that would aid Congress in consideration of any necessary remedial legislation. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Shannon] is chairman of the committee. I see the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Staf-FORD], the Republican member, here. It is one of the most important committees of this House, I think.

Mr. BYRNS. This is to cover a deficiency in this item between now and the 1st of July. The Clerk stated that this sum would be sufficient to provide for the expenditures until that time. I think he named two committees. One of them was the investigation of holding companies on the part of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. Another was the silver investigating committee. I think those were the only two he mentioned, but this sum goes into the general fund which may be used for all purposes with reference to special investigating committees. After July 1 there is an appropriation of $50,000 which will be available for all of these various investigations.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. My point is: Where is the appropriation to carry on the work of this committee up to is included in this $5,240, or at any other place in this bill, to pay for stenographic help, printing, or any of the rest of the work? I am informed the committee has started its work. I am prepared and am ready to present to the committee evidence in regard to the interference of the Government with the handling of livestock at the Denver Union Stock Yards and several other subjects. Let me mention four of them:

PRISON-MADE TENTAGE AND CANVAS GOODS

I am informed that the Forest Service is required to buy its tents and other canvas-made commodities from the Atlanta Penitentiary, which heretofore have been purchased from the manufacturers in the Rocky Mountain and Pacific coast regions. Such a change interferes materially with a local industry 2,000 to 3,000 miles away from the penitentiary.

The director of the Bureau of Prisons states under date of February 3, 1932, that:

There are probably not more than 15 or 20 men engaged continuously on the manufacture of the tents, but there are upwards of 100 men employed in the various processes of spinning the yarn and weaving the cloth.

When it is considered that the Bureau of the Census report shows only 7,162 wage earners in this entire industry in the United States, of which 113 are in Colorado and 15 in Utah, where they work in 9 Colorado and 5 Utah establishments, you may understand the demoralization which the cutting out of this business has wrought in that industry.

I have a file of accurate information obtained from the Bureau of the Census and the Department of Prisons, the Denver Chamber of Commerce, and the Seattle Tent and Awning Co.

WAR DEPARTMENT'S COFFEE-ROASTING PLANT AT CHICAGO

Purchase and distribution of issue coffee for Fort Logan, Fort Warren, and Fitzsimons General Hospital have been discontinued from the coffee roasters in the Rocky Mountain region and under date of February 3, 1932, the Quartermaster General of the War Department advised that—

It is believed that the best interests of the Government are conserved through the methods adopted for the supply of this commodity—namely, the centralizing of all distribution of roasted and ground coffee in Chicago and the utilization to the fullest extent of the coffee-roasting plant of the War Department at the Chicago quartermaster depot.

EVASION OF STATE TAXES ON GASOLINE

The United States pays no State taxes upon gasoline. It is alleged that the various post exchanges and other Federal agencies sell gasoline for privately owned automobiles for purposes which are not the Government's business.

At the recent conference of gasoline-tax administrators of the various States, this matter was taken up and practically every State in the Union represented at that meeting complained bitterly at the unfairness of the United States Government competing with its citizens in this as well as other respects.

It was pointed out that not only was each State deprived of its legitimate tax upon gasoline, but that the private merchants were also deprived of their legitimate sales of gasoline used for all purposes except the Government's business.

VETERANS' BUREAU PURCHASES FOR HOSPITALS

This item goes farther than mere interference of the Government in business and also touches the subject of prices paid for commodities. The Veterans' Administration insists that its centralized system of buying and distribution is best. Detailed information furnished by the chamber of commerce concerning freight rates and the handling of goods in the Rocky Mountain district indicates that the purchase and distribution from the supply depots at San Francisco and Chicago resulted in a greatly increased cost to certain hospitals situated in the Rocky Mountain district.

I can name Fort Lyons, Colo.; Albuquerque, N. Mex.; Sheridan, Wyo.; and Hot Springs, S. Dak. Maybe there are others.

I have not the exact figures before me, but each hospital purchases supplies amounting to hundreds of thousands of dollars each year. A comparison some months ago of contracts then in existence with current prices indicated that the freight-rate saving alone was a considerable item, being in some instances as much as 20 per cent.

At least there should be made available one of the House Committee reporters to take down the morning hearings. And there should be available enough of the printing fund to print the hearings which are daily being held and which should not be discontinued until July 1 merely because no mention thereof is made in this bill.

I was speaking to the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Shannon], and he said he did not know where the money is coming from, and that his own private clerks have up to this time been doing all of the work.

Mr. BYRNS. I will say to the gentleman from Colorado that so far as stenographic work is concerned the committee has the right to call on the committee stenographers, and I hope they will do so and not go on the outside and undertake to employ stenographers.

Let me also say that this fund, the gentleman understands, is available for all purposes of this kind. In fact, the Clerk of the House stated that this was all that would be necessary to provide funds up until July 1. Whether he will have enough to carry on the work of the committee to which the gentleman refers, I do not know, but this is all we were asked to provide.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman from Colorado yield?

Mr. EATON of Colorado. I yield.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the chairman of the committee kindly inform the House how much was carried for contingent expenses for similar work for the next year?

Mr. BYRNS. The amount for that purpose is $50,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the gentleman will yield further, I may say that, so far as the work of the committee the gentleman has referred to is concerned, we have already started our hearings. We have not even placed the Government to any expense so far as committee stenographers are concerned in that the chairman of our committee has called upon his clerk, who is an efficient stenographer, to do that work; and, further, we do not know how much will be required for the actual expenses.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

I question whether we will have occasion to utilize any of the contingent expenses prior to the ending of the present fiscal year. I know it is the intention of the chairman, and I believe of the other Members, to have as economical an administration of that investigation as possible. It was the consensus of opinion in the organization meeting of the committee that the Members would not use any money unnecessarily for any junket purposes whatsoever. In fact, it was expressed by a number of Members that they would retire from the committee if that was the purpose.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have served on two other investigating committees, and on both of them the committee established a policy that might well be emulated by every committee of the House. It was my privilege in 1908 to serve on the first tariff commission ever appointed by Congress, headed by that greatest of all legislators, the great James R. Mann, and, even though we toured a large part of the United States and went up into the wilds of Canada, our expenses, all told, were less than $10,000. I also served later on the Mulhall Investigating Committee that ran for months and months, of which our former distinguished Democratic leader, Mr. Finis Garrett, was chairman, and the expenses were not much more than $6,000 or $8,000.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. STAFFORD. So, I will assure the House that the doubts that seem to pervade that as there was no limit to the amount that could be expended by the committee for its expenses have little foundation.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn. The Clerk read as follows:

Military and naval insurance: For an additional amount for military and naval insurance accruing during the fiscal year 1932 or in prior fiscal years, $4,233,000.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of calling the attention of the chairman of the committee and the committee to a condition existing in reference to the administration of war-risk insurance. The matter was before the Judiciary Committee this morning. There are thousands and thousands of cases pending in courts on insurance claims in many districts. There are so many thousands of cases that it will take many years before they can possibly be reached. The result is that a bill, I think, has passed the Senate, and a bill was reported favorably from our committee, permitting the United States commissioner in one district to try these cases. Now, you will readily see that that is a very doubtful precedent to establish. A United States commissioner has no power to hear and determine cases. Commissioners have no trial jurisdiction, and if we start with these cases, the first thing we know we will have that jurisdiction extended and another superior court established. It will be most unsatisfactory. On the other hand, it has been suggested that we create a new court with sole jurisdiction to hear warrisk insurance cases, but the minute we create a new court with limited jurisdiction they will never be abolished, even though their purpose has been completed.

It occurred to me that the only way we can clean up these cases would be to establish boards of review in each veteran regional district. I think the country is divided into regional districts by the Veterans' Bureau.

And not any employee or official of the Veterans' Bureau should be on the board, of course-men who would be qualified to pass upon these cases, as if they were appointed as referees or masters by the court, men of proper standing and, of course, ability and capacity. I would have these men appointed on a per diem basis, and the reason for that is that there is always danger, if we establish anything like a tribunal and give it the dignity of the name of court and judge, of having it on our hands forever.

Mr. PARSONS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes.

Mr. PARSONS. How many of these boards would the gentleman provide—one for each regional office or simply one here in Washington?

Mr. LaGUARDIA. I would provide these boards of review in each regional district, and in some places it might be necessary to have two or three, because there are thousands of cases pending.

Mr. PARSONS. It would be necessary to have purely independent boards, entirely outside of the Veterans' Bureau; otherwise you would have the same condition prevailing that prevails now.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. It would not be judicial otherwise. think I would even have them appointed, if necessary, by the district judges. It has to be judicial, it has to be impartial, and it would have to pass upon these claims judicially. However, to do that it would be necessary to change the law. I would give these boards the power to decide and make their decisions final, with an appeal to the United States circuit court of appeals.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. The gentleman, of course, knows that the last date for filing suits has passed except where there was an agreement between the Veterans' Bureau and the veterans in cases awaiting a final decision in the Veterans' Bureau. The Administrator of Veterans' Affairs testified before the Economy Committee that they had 44,000 such cases now pending, that many already decided adversely by the Veterans' Bureau had gone to court, and thousands of others would go to court. It means congestion in our Federal courts.

Mr. PARSONS. Is not the total around 100,000?

Mr. LaGUARDIA. There are a great many on stipulation. awaiting results in other cases.

I mention this, gentlemen, so that you may give it some thought, because something ought to be done. However, the plan before us to give jurisdiction to United States commissioners is not satisfactory. It is not satisfactory to the veterans; it is not satisfactory to the Government; and it is a very dangerous precedent to establish.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment. I wish to acquaint the gentleman from New York with the provisions of the bill which passed the House on Monday last under suspension of the rules, a bill reported from the Committee on Military Affairs, and where it was sought to restrict the right of review to all those cases that have heretofore been passed upon in the bureau, at least those which have gone to the highest appellate branch of the bureau.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Was that with reference to war-risk insurance?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes. We sought to correct the abuses that have been indulged in by the veterans who have had their day in court.

Mr. PARSONS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes. Mr. PARSONS. Did not that bill relate purely to the matter of retirement or compensation? The insurance proposition is purely a contract, while the compensation and retirement proposition is not a contract.

Mr. STAFFORD. No; it referred to the insurance cases. I would like to inquire of the chairman of the committee as to the reason for this large appropriation of $4,000,000. Is it occasioned by an erroneous estimate, a curtailment of estimate, or how did it come about?

Mr. BYRNS. It came about through an estimate, which was submitted as being the amount required to pay the insurance and these judgments on contracts up to July 1.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. These are additional liabilities which have come about since the last appropriation bill was passed by reason of deaths over and above the estimated number and by reason of judgments.

Mr. STAFFORD. It was that character of cases to which our attention was called by General Hines, that after the bureau passed upon them in an administrative way, then, through the importuning of some claim agent or attorney, they are taken to the courts and judgments are awarded against the Government. In the trial of those cases evidence is presented in many instances which was not presented to the Government when the Veterans' Administration received the claim, and the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs is very desirous of having some machinery established that would curtail that practice.

Mr. BYRNS. Let me read this to the gentleman from the testimony of General Hines:

This estimated deficit is occasioned entirely as the result of litigation on contracts for war-risk insurance, allowed under sections 19 and 307 of the World War veterans' act. These sections have permitted the filing of suits on war-risk insurance contracts either where the insurance has been terminated through failure to pay premiums or where it has been converted into a conventional type of Government policy.

In other words, there were more suits brought and more claims settled than was anticipated when the original estimate was submitted, and this money is needed for that

Mr. STAFFORD. I may say there is some abuse on the part of some of these claimants of insurance. They present their claims to the Veterans' Administration, appeal is made through the respective boards, turned down, and then the claimant employs attorneys, goes into court and presents additional evidence that was never presented before the administrative board, which, in many instances, results in a judgment against the Government.

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

Land for workhouse and reformatory: For an additional amount for the purchase of approximately $1\frac{1}{2}$ acres of land at the workhouse and reformatory to provide suitable switching connections and switching yards for industrial railroad adjacent to main line of the Richmond, Fredericksburg & Potomac Railroad, fiscal year 1932, 844.99.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph just read, although the amount is very small. I wish to inquire whether authorization has been made for the purchase of this additional land. I make this inquiry for the purpose of guiding the Committee on Military Affairs in similar requests for additional land. Has authority of law been granted for the securing of additional land as provided in this paragraph?

Mr. BYRNS. The land is owned at this time by the District, and this is simply an appropriation to pay for securing title to the land.

Mr. STAFFORD. Then it is not really to secure additional land?

Mr. BYRNS. It is not for the purchase of additional

Mr. STAFFORD. The wording of the paragraph is "for the purchase of approximately 11/2 acres additional."

Mr. BYRNS. I know that. It relates to the purchase of the land which is contiguous to the other property and, of course, the language included here is in the same terms as the language used in the original purchase. However, this simply relates to the amount of money necessary to complete the payment in making the transfer of the property; in other words, it involves the cost of the transfer rather than any land.

Mr. STAFFORD. I made the inquiry because the Committee on Military Affairs has before it bills to authorize the purchase of additional land tributary to some of the original projects. I did not think the Committee on Appropriations was taking jurisdiction of such cases.

Mr. BYRNS. No; this land has already been bought, but the buyer, the District of Columbia, had to pay the cost of the transfer.

Mr. STAFFORD. I withdraw the reservation of a point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The Clerk read as follows:

SETTLEMENT OF CLAIMS

For the payment of claims approved by the commissioners under and in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act authorizing the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to settle claims and suits against the District of Columbia," approved February 11, 1929 (45 Stat. 1160), as amended by the act of June 5, 1930 (46 Stat. 500), and reported in House Document No. 333 of the Seventy-second Congress, $162,169.43.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word

In general debate I took occasion to refer to the two acts under which the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are authorized to settle claims against the District as if the District were a private individual, the amount up to which they may settle claims being $5,000.

As the chairman of the committee knows, the departments are only authorized to settle claims up to $500. I stated then that after considering the law that was passed in 1930, delegating to the commissioners the right to settle tort actions against the District to the extent of $5,000, I was inclined to favor an amendment of the general law delegating to the heads of departments the right to settle claims against the Government arising out of automobile accidents or other kinds of tort actions to the extent of $2,000. I looked over the hearings to see whether there was any statement by the commissioners as to the work of settling these claims under this authorization. I was rather impressed by the size of the appropriation that they ask for the administration of this authority for one year, namely, $162,000.

Has the gentleman any information as to how they have administered this large authority whereby Congress has delegated to the commissioners the right to settle all tort actions up to $5,000? I am seeking information as to their method of administration as a guide for the Congress so as to relieve the Private Calendar. We have claims on the Private Calendar where the Committee on Claims has recommended $2,000 or $3,000 or $4,000 or more, and I am seeking to transfer such authority to the department heads rather than impose it upon any committee of Congress.

Mr. BYRNS. I will say to the gentleman, it is my impression they consider all kinds of claims up to the amount stated by the gentleman.

Mr. STAFFORD. But I was seeking information as to whether they have any certain schedule as to the fixing of the maximum amount or a lesser amount under the authority invested in them by the act of June 5, 1930.

Mr. BYRNS. I do not know that I understand exactly what the gentleman means by "schedule."

Mr. STAFFORD. For instance, here in the Congress, the Committee on Claims usually allows the payment of $5,000 upon the death of a member of the family or a lesser amount where the claimant is injured. I was seeking to ascertain whether this total amount is segregated in any way to determine how the amounts allowed are arrived at.

Mr. BYRNS. The gentleman will find that on page 17 of the hearings and also in House Document No. 333, which is referred to in the bill.

I will say to the gentleman that $145,000, in round numbers, of this amount is a refund for certain paving assessments under the Borland law, which the gentleman is aware has been set aside by the courts.

Mr. STAFFORD. Well, that is very illuminating. I feared that the $160,000 was payment for personal-injury claims under this authorization.

Mr. BYRNS. Oh, no; the courts have practically set aside the Borland Act, and wherever persons have made payments and applied for a refund they received that refund, which amounts to $145,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. That relieves me of the fear that the power granted to the commissioners might have been abused in settling pure tort actions.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 9, line 9, after the word "person," strike out the word "or" and insert the word "of."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin.

I want to ask the chairman in regard to the repeal of the so-called Borland law. The courts have not set the law aside altogether; they have set aside certain features of it.

The commissioners have attempted by their action to set the entire law aside and to grant refunds of taxes to various individuals and corporations owning large real-estate tracts around the city.

The Borland law was a good law. It was an equitable law, it was a just law, and it made the contiguous property owners of big tracts of land pay their proportional part of the improvements.

Now, has the gentleman from Tennessee investigated to find out whether or not the commissioners have overstepped their rights in attempting to repeal in toto the Borland law?

Mr. BYRNS. The gentleman will find the information on page 20 of the hearings. It is true that the court has never declared the act void.

Mr. BLANTON. And until it does declare the act void the commissioners have no right to consider it as void.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. West stated, and the gentleman will find it on page 20 of the hearings, "There were suits to cancel these assessments on the ground that the act was void and the assessments were unconstitutional. The court, however, has never declared the act void, but never has a single paving assessment been sustained by any one of our courts. We have gone so far as to apply to the Supreme Court for a writ of certiorari in three cases, and we have been denied that writ."

I asked Mr. West on what theory the court denied the writ, and he replied, "The theory of the court is that where this assessment is made according to the rule laid down by Congress, without hearing, that such assessments are void or there is any inequality in the depth of the lot or in the value of the lot. It is practically impossible to find any place in the District of Columbia where there is not some irregularity, either in the shape of the lot, or in the depth of the lot.'

Mr. BLANTON. That so-called setting aside on a preliminary hearing by the court has been accepted without carrying it up to the Court of Appeals and having it properly decided. You have a little preliminary court hearing in Washington setting aside an act of Congress for the benefit of a few big taxpayers of the District.

I have a list of taxes of some big corporations and big property owners in the District, where they have refused to pay their taxes for a number of years. That list would astonish you. It was furnished me by the tax assessor's office. They let those taxes run along for a few years, and the first thing they know, they make a settlement with the District Commissioners, and get rid of a big amount of taxes. Of course there is a sympathy here by the officials for the taxpayers of the District, people who live here in this beautiful city filled with tax dodgers, and I am afraid that some of that sympathy gets into the courts.

Every time you come to condemn a piece of property for the Government you find that the jury of view, as we speak of them in the States, assessing the amount the Government must pay at two or three times the real value of the property. Some of these days the people of the States are going to wake up fully to all of the rights and privileges that the 450,000 people who live in Washington enjoy at their expense. When they do finally realize it you had better watch out. When the people back in the States wake up some day and find out just what Congress is doing for the people of Washington at their expense, you had better watch out when the primary time comes and you had better watch out when the general election time comes in November. They are not going to stand for being robbed in taxes that the people who live in Washington may live without paying comparable taxes. The fact remains that $1.70 on the hundred is all the tax that the people of Washington pay for everything-school purposes and all. They have all of the books furnished for their school children; they have the playgrounds furnished free; they have everything in the world furnished the people here. They enjoy all of the fine parks and all of the fine improvements, and the chambers of commerce back in our State are spending hundreds of thousands of dollars a year to get people to visit our cities, when the Government does all that for Washington.

Mr. ARENTZ. What does the gentleman estimate the valuation of property here for assessment to be?

Mr. BLANTON. When they wake up you are going to be called on for an accounting.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. I shall speak on that later, when that item comes up.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY

Rent of buildings: For an additional amount for rent of buildings and parts of buildings in the District of Columbia for use of the various bureaus, divisions, and offices of the Department of Agriculture, including the same objects specified under this head in the agricultural appropriation act for the fiscal year 1932,

Mr. BRIGGS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word to ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations why it is that, with all the building going on now by the Government in the District of Columbia to provide these various departments with enormously enlarged quarters, we are always encountering new items for rental of privately owned buildings by these departments? It seems to me, instead of requiring additional sums out of the Treasury for rentals, we should be saving enormous sums. On the contrary, in the city of Washington, we are constantly confronted with the refusal of the Government to relinquish rental quarters and go into quarters owned by the Government. Whether it is that the departments prevail upon the Building Commission to award them additional space so that they can keep those buildings in which they have once been quartered, without going into space available in the Government buildings, I do not know, but it seems to me we have a tremendous amount of overhead that ought to be saved to the people, particularly at this time. I am not merely directing this inquiry to this particular item but I ask an expression from the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations as to what is the reason for the Government not saving more in rentals with all of this enormous building program in the District of Columbia-the greatest building program the Government has in the whole United States?

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Chairman, I shall confine myself to this particular item. This item was made necessary by the fact that the public building was not completed in time for the Government to occupy it. Because it was not completed in time it was necessary to rent space under a contract which will expire on June 30; this sum is the amount of the rent which will have to be paid at that time.

Mr. BRIGGS. The purpose I have in asking this question is not alone with reference to this particular item but it is the general experience that is now being encountered by the Government. I notice that as soon as the Government gets out of one building with rented quarters, it is reoccupied by another branch of the Government, notwithstanding the enormous building the Government has been carrying on in the District of Columbia. I am interested in ascertaining from the chairman of the committee if he can state why this condition exists; whether it is due to the sanctioning of all this by the Budget Bureau, whether it is due to the action of some commission, like the Public Building Commission, or whether the Appropriations Committee sanctions all the things?

Mr. BYRNS. I am not so sure that the condition is quite so bad as the gentleman describes. These buildings are just now being completed from time to time, and are just now being occupied, some of them authorized and under construction, not yet completed. I think some time has to be given, of course, to the location of these bureaus in these various buildings. That is all done under the supervision of the Joint Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, of which, I think, the Senator from Utah [Mr. Smoot] is chairman. They have charge of that, and it is done really under the commission composed of Members of the Senate and of the House.

Mr. BRIGGS. Does not the gentleman think, after all, that that commission functions through some subordinate, and that the Committee on Appropriations could handle it better than the commission?

Mr. BYRNS. I submit to the gentleman that the Committee on Appropriations can not possibly go around and undertake to locate every bureau and every building in the city. All we can do is to make the appropriations where it is shown that they are necessary.

Mr. BRIGGS. It could pass on the necessity for this expansion, and why they do not confine themselves to quarters available in Government-owned buildings without going outside and renting others.

Mr. BYRNS. We do that, and if the gentleman will read the hearings with reference to this $9,100 item, he will see the reasons assigned for this appropriation. Every time these appropriations come before the committee we make a close and thorough investigation, and never recommend them unless it is quite evident they are proper.

Mr. BRIGGS. I notice that the Government from time to time gets out of some of these buildings that are rented in the city of Washington, and then is back again in them within 30 or 60 days.

There was the Commerce Building on Nineteenth and Pennsylvania Avenue, vacated by the Commerce Department, and it seems to me it was reoccupied by another bureau within 30 days.

Mr. BYRNS. This Congress passed the Reconstruction Finance Corporation bill, for which the gentleman no doubt votedMr. BRIGGS. Certainly I did, to relieve unemployment and revive prosperity, if possible, in industry, agriculture, and other lines of business activity.

Mr. BYRNS. That provided for a very large activity which had to be housed. There was no place to put it, and it was necessary, therefore, for it to go into that building.

Mr. BRIGGS. That is the point on which I am not agreeing with the gentleman—that is was necessary to house it in this building.

Mr. BYRNS. How does the gentleman know?

Mr. BRIGGS. I do not; but the Appropriations Committee, I think, should go into that matter and determine itself.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRIGGS. I yield.

Mr. BLANTON. Does the gentleman know that General Dawes is paying $75,000 rent for that old Commerce Building?

Mr. BRIGGS. I had no idea what he was paying; but I believe when the Patent Office vacated the Patent Office Building there was space there or in the Interior Department or some other Government building. When the Commerce branches were moved into that great Commerce Building, one of the largest buildings in the world, there ought to have been space in some of those other Government buildings to house these commissions and agencies of the Government.

Mr. BLANTON. I think the gentleman is entirely correct. Mr. BYRNS. Let me say this, that Congress has provided a Public Buildings Commission and that commission is composed of certain Members of the United States Senate and certain Members of the House, together with Colonel Grant. That Public Buildings Commission has been given entire authority with reference to the location of governmental activities in Washington. It is not the duty of the Committee on Appropriations to go out and make investigations as to whether those activities are located here or there, except to inquire whether there is need for the space, and whether or not the sums being paid are reasonable; but I submit that when the gentleman criticizes the Committee on Appropriations, he ought to direct his criticism, if he has any, to the Public Buildings Commission, which represents the Congress and the Government and has authority in the

Mr. BRIGGS. I want to take occasion to disclaim any criticism of the Appropriations Committee. What I am doing is seeking to find out if the Appropriations Committee in this House can not ascertain more accurately the alleged need for the rental of these privately owned buildings; I want to say with reference to the commission, to which the gentleman refers, that the Congress itself should review the action of that commission and let it feel that Congress intends to scrutinize its action, and that it will not be allowed to pay out vast sums of money, simply upon its own recommendation, without sufficient justification therefor.

Mr. BYRNS. Permit me to say that that Public Buildings Commission is composed of the chairman and ranking member of the Senate Committee on Public Buildings, and the chairman and ranking member of the House Committee on Public Buildings, of which the gentleman's colleague is a member, and I am sure that that commission makes a close investigation of these matters.

Mr. BRIGGS. I agree with the gentleman that there are estimable gentlemen upon that commission, but I know, with the duties devolving upon them in a legislative way and many other departmental duties, they can not always give the time necessary to determine all these details.

Mr. BYRNS. Does the gentleman not think that the Committee on Appropriations is about as busy as any legislative committee of this House?

Mr. BRIGGS. I have no doubt that is true; but it has facilities for reaching down to the bottom of things.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I ask recognition in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, there is a popular impression abroad that it is cheaper for the Government to house its activities in the very fine ornate Government buildings in the District of Columbia than it is to pay rent. Some years ago when I happened to be a member of the Subcommittee on Appropriations for the Legislative and Executive and Judicial Departments, of which the distinguished chairman was then chairman of the subcommittee, that committee had occasion to go into that question, and we found it was much cheaper for the Government to house its activities in rented buildings rather than to own its own buildings. Even with a 3 per cent interest rate, when the additional overhead required on these more extravagant buildings was considered, it was found to be cheaper to pay rent.

The gentleman from Texas [Mr. Briggs] levels his shaft of criticism against the commission which has been created in the last 10 years for allotting space in the Government buildings. The gentleman must be aware that we have reduced much of the space that was allotted to the Government when the buildings on the triangle were razed. For instance, the Coast Guard Service was housed down on Fourteenth and Pennsylvania Avenue. That building was razed and their activities were transferred to the Treasury Annex.

The gentleman from Texas [Mr. Blanton] levels his dart of criticism against the Reconstruction Finance Corporation in occupying a privately owned building, on which the Government had a lease until July 1, in which the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is only utilizing three floors. There was no other available space for the Reconstruction Finance Corporation in which to be housed for their activities.

Now, can the gentleman, who must be acquainted with conditions, point out in any particular where any of those activities are being improperly housed? If so, I will yield to him and will be glad to yield to him.

Mr. BRIGGS. It occurs to me that, with the merging of all these bureaus and special activities of the Department of Commerce in that great building, one of the largest, not only in this city but in the entire world, it is bound to have released an immense amount of space to the Government. Down in the Patent Office alone there is a whole square—

Mr. STAFFORD. Let us take the Patent Office, for instance. Anyone who has been in the old Patent Office, as perhaps the gentleman has and as I have, and has searched patents, knows that they were not in adequate quarters. They were cramped there.

Mr. BRIGGS. But they have moved out of there now.

Mr. STAFFORD. I say they were cramped there. Now, they are in adequate quarters. Take the Forestry Service, down on F Street, they were in cramped quarters, which were really unsuitable and insanitary.

The modern building of the Department of the Interior is an up-to-date building, in my opinion, for housing Government activities, with its three airways, with adequate light. The Government has been merging and housing its activities in modern up-to-date quarters and moving from the temporary quarters which were erected during war days.

Does the gentleman favor housing the Census Bureau in these shacks down here on the Mall, which are fire traps, three or four stories high, or does he favor its transfer to the Commerce Building?

Mr. BRIGGS. I will say that, of course, the gentleman does not favor housing it in fire traps, but the Census Bureau is housed in the magnificent Commerce Building, and there is no occasion for any talk about the Census Bureau not being properly and adequately housed.

Mr. STAFFORD. The Census Bureau, until recently, has been housed down here in these temporary shacks.

Mr. BRIGGS. I know where they have been housed; but the gentleman's argument is that it has been, and is, cheaper to house Government activities in rented quarters than in quarters owned by the Government; but that policy has been abandoned in the District of Columbia, and the Government of the United States is spending over $150,000,000 in putting up brand-new buildings for Government use.

Certainly the Government ought not to be subjected to the double expense of building new structures and continuing to rent old ones.

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes; and your taxpayers and my taxpayers are paying for that extravagant policy, and the taxpayers of the country are raising a cry against such extravagances.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph.

Mr. Chairman, I quite agree with my colleague from Texas [Mr. Briggs] that it behooves Congress to watch the rentals that are paid by every department of the Government. One summer here I spent two months at my own expense checking up the rents paid and the buildings used by the United States Shipping Board and the United States Emergency Fleet Corporation, and to my great surprise, here in Washington and in the city of Philadelphia, they were paying out $754,000 a year rents on all the buildings they had in use. I spent my own funds investigating and had employees, specially employed by me to do the work, go with me and we actually measured the floor space in every building they had rented. Then I went down here with the same employees and measured the surplus floor space in the new Army and Navy Building on the park driveway near the Lincoln Memorial and checked up the vacant floor space in that tremendous big building, a building in which they say if you travel all the corridors and do not retrace any steps you will have gone 28 miles, and I found there was more actual floor space vacant in that building than was taken up in the rented buildings used by the Emergency Fleet Corporation and the Shipping Board. I brought those figures and facts to the attention of the then chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, and he forced the Shipping Board and the Emergency Fleet Corporation to move into the Army-Navy Building. You will find them there right now, and they have been there ever since.

Now, if you will check up the floor space for which the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is paying $75,000 rental, and check the surplus floor space available in that monstrosity of extravagance known as the new Commerce Building, you will find there is more available floor space right now in the new Department of Commerce Building than is necessary to house the new Reconstruction Finance Corporation. If that is so, why can we not save the $75,000 rent per annum?

Mr. BRIGGS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield.

Mr. BRIGGS. May I ask the gentleman if his investigations thus far have not indicated the Government can save thousands upon thousands of dollars that it is now paying out to private interests in rent of private buildings?

Mr. BLANTON. Certainly; and I want to say to my friend that I did not vote for the Reconstruction Finance Corporation bill, so I can criticize it. When you keep on appointing these commissions and keep on giving them an army of employees and allowing them to fix salaries without any limit, the man appointed at the head of it generally begins to look around for a tremendous building and tremendous floor space for that great army, and he is not very careful about the maximum he places on their salaries or on expenses.

Why, I can remember, and so can you, when Herbert Hoover was first appointed Food Administrator and he rented the old Gordon Hotel on Sixteenth Street. You remember how Will Wood, Martin Madden, and Graham, of Illinois, and some others rose here one day and said that he was guilty of extravagance for the rent he paid.

I wrote Mr. Hoover that evening and said:

Here is what they are saying about you. I do not think it is true. I want to defend you if it is not true. Give me the facts.

I found from his reply that, as a matter of fact, he was paying for the Gordon Hotel nearly twice as much as his accusers on this floor were claiming he was paying. You have got to watch these heads of departments on these rentals.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield.

Mr. McDUFFIE. The Government has bought the old Southern Railway Building at Thirteenth Street and Pennsylvania Avenue, and there is space available there for just such activities.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; I am sure that some space is surplus there.

Mr. McDUFFIE. And I can not understand why the Government did not use its own building instead of going out and getting quarters for which it must pay extravagant rentals.

Mr. BLANTON. We have got to watch them, and I am going to watch them; and if they do not utilize vacant floor space in our own buildings I am going to let the country know about it.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the proforma amendment, for the purpose of calling attention to the fact that the Bureau of the Budget recommended an item of $90,000 for salaries to carry on the work of the President's Unemployment Relief Committee, as well as an item of $24,000 for contingent expenses and an item of $6,000 for printing and binding. I notice the Appropriations Committee has refused to appropriate for any of the matters affecting unemployment relief, which Mr. Gifford and Mr. Owen D. Young have been heading for the past few months and in which they have done an excellent job. I want to know if the chairman can inform the committee why the Committee on Appropriations left those appropriations out of the bill?

Mr. BYRNS. The very best reason I can offer the gentleman is that there was no law authorizing it, as was admitted by the gentlemen who appeared before the committee in support of the estimate. If these items had been reported they would have been subject to points of order.

Mr. GOSS. The gentleman includes lots of things in these bills which are subject to points of order.

Mr. BYRNS. I know of none in this bill.

Mr. GOSS. Perhaps; but in other bills he does.

Mr. BYRNS. Let me say to the gentleman in addition that the so-called Gifford Unemployment Committee was created in the Department of Commerce in August, 1931, when Congress was not in session. The President of the United States, owing to the emergency which he considered existed at the time, without the slightest authority of law, provided for this committee and designated certain funds which had been appropriated for the Department of Commerce for the employment of such clerks as were necessary. As I have stated, there was not the slightest authority of law—so admitted by all the authorities—for the action of the President.

Let me say to the gentleman that this House made an appropriation to carry on this work or provided for a deficiency up to June 30, 1932. It was stated when the first deficiency bill was passed that there was no intention of asking for any appropriation for the next year and that the work of that employment committee would be concluded and finished, so far as all things it could do were concerned, by June 30. But to my surprise, when we came to consider this bill, after that positive statement from the Department of Commerce, we were met with an estimate for an additional appropriation of $120,000 for next year, when we were told only two or three months ago it would not be needed.

Mr. GOSS. Does not the gentleman know about the unemployment situation and agree that something should be done?

Mr. BYRNS. I do; but can the gentleman tell me one single thing this Gifford Employment Commission has done looking to the relief of unemployment?

Mr. GOSS. Yes; many things. It raised funds in the various local communities to help those local communities take care of their own unemployment. They have done it in my district. They ran the Army and Navy football game in New York City for unemployment relief.

Mr. BYRNS. Are we going to spend $120,000 for a commission to run an Army and Navy football game?

Mr. GOSS. No. The gentleman is facetious in that remark. They have done a good job all over the country.

Mr. BYRNS. The funds to which the gentleman refers were raised by local communities, and those funds could have been raised and doubtless would have been raised by those local communities without the establishment of an illegal and unauthorized employment commission. We have an employment commission in the Department of Labor. Why have another employment commission in the Department of Commerce?

Mr. GOSS. Simply to follow up and help in this unemployment-relief program.

Mr. BYRNS. That is the trouble with these departments of the Government; there is so much duplication of service that it is impossible for anybody to know just what is being done, and that is one reason for the enormous increase of expenditure.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GOSS. Then the only reason why your committee did not bring this in was because it was subject to a point of order?

Mr. BYRNS. Oh, no. I am not speaking for the other members of the committee, but I want to say to the gentleman that I think that was a useless expenditure of money and that I do not believe it ought to be carried on next year. Certainly when there is no authority of law for it the committee would not have been justified in bringing it in.

Mr. HART. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. GOSS. Yes.

Mr. HART. As a member of the Appropriations Committee I voted to exclude it because I thought it was a waste

Mr. GOSS. The gentleman does not think Mr. Young or Mr. Gifford has done anything toward the relief of unemployment?

Mr. HART. Mr. Young and Mr. Gifford put in no bill for their services.

Mr. GOSS. But there are 108 employees working without any compensation at all and there is more or less of a skeleton organization over the country.

Mr. BYRNS. Does not the gentleman know we have the United States Employment Service?

Mr. GOSS. I know that, and it does a fine service. Mr. BYRNS. Then why have one in the Department of Commerce? Is not the Department of Labor the proper place in the Government for that activity?

Mr. GOSS. My information is that this agency is doing a different class of work from that of the Federal employment service in the Department of Labor.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. Goss] spoke about points of order. I want to ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations if it is not the fact that every item that the gentleman and his committee have put in any of the supply bills that was subject to a point of order, was put in to save money and not to spend money?

Mr. BYRNS. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

If the record is allowed to stand, and some of the remarks made in the last 15 minutes go out to the public, they will be misunderstood.

I am surprised that one gentleman desires to know why the Government does not use the Southern Railroad Building. Of course, the gentleman probably does not know that we have a Prohibition Department—few people realize that, but still we have it-that we have a Bureau of Industrial Alcohol; that we have the Customs Service; that we have the overpopulated Farm Board and other activities; all of which are now housed in the Southern Railroad Building.

Some Government offices have been there since the day it was taken over by the Government.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Yes.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Is the gentleman sure that all the space available in that large building is now occupied by some activity of the Government?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Certainly.

Mr. McDUFFIE. If the gentleman is sure, that settles it. I was ignorant of that fact. The gentleman has been communicating with the Prohibition Department more than I

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. No; I seldom go there, as the administrator will attest. Then, again, I do not think we have a Prohibition Department—at least we have no prohibition. [Laughter and applause.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. Goss] a minute ago told us that we have 108 employees with the Gifford commission and no appropriation made for them.

Mr. GOSS. That is true.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. They are all taken from other departments of the Government and paid for out of other appropriations.

Mr. GOSS. Oh, no.

Mr. McDUFFIE. The gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. GOSS. These workers are volunteers.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. The Executive order of the President creating the commission provided for transfers from other departments. The clerk of the Appropriations Committee, who knows, says they have paid employees.

Mr. GOSS. Not these particular employees.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I will tell the gentleman how he can save space.

Mr. McDUFFIE. If the gentleman does not know more about the Southern Railway Building on the Avenue than he does about this other proposition, I am beginning to question the gentleman's statement.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. The gentleman can question my statement all he desires, but I know that Government employees were transferred to the Gifford Commission. I know that positively. I know that Government employees were taken out of the Treasury and out of other Departments and placed in the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and not only that, but are now paid an increased salary by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. Let some one question that statement.

Mr. McDUFFIE. The gentleman is quite correct as to that, but I do not think the gentleman understands the proposition that the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. Goss] is talking about.

Mr. GOSS. I refer the gentleman to page 66 of the hearings and I will read it to him.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I am talking about the clerical help.

Mr. GOSS. It refers to a general advisory committee of 108 members serving without pay.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. But what about the clerical employees? Mr. Shields, clerk of the Appropriations Committee, says they are working there.

Mr. GOSS. They are paid.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Now, if you want to save some space in the District of Columbia I can tell you how you can save it. I have told this to the building committee and on this floor for several years. About 40 per cent of the space occupied by Government agencies in the District of Columbia is taken up with obsolete files and records; and if you get a warehouse to put the obsolete files and records in, you will have room to house your Government employees and it will not be necessary to build so many fine buildings. You have in the Department of the Interior Building, or I presume they are now in the Arlington Building, pension records of the Revolutionary period. You have in the War Department, Navy Department records from the Revolutionary period up to date—records of every man and woman who served in the Army and Navy. You have in the Department of the Interior all the Land Office records that take up, we might say, acres of space and they are nothing but old plats and books that are used only now and then. Why could you not have them in a warehouse where they had expert file clerks to get out the records when any department wanted them and have them sent over to the main building, and utilize the space that is now occupied by cabinets and file cases holding old records and files?

Mr. McDUFFIE. I would be very glad to see that done. Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. The records while obsolete are valuable. They must be preserved. They can not be destroyed, but they can be placed in a safe fireproof building where they will be always available. When a record is wanted it can be brought to the office desiring it by messenger. I am told that in many cases the old records are only needed when some Member of Congress wants information for a constituent. Every department of the Government has tons and tons of obsolete records that could be placed in some storehouse. For a reasonable amount of money a suitable place could be rented and hundreds of thousands of dollars now being paid to house bureaus and commissions would be unnecessary as space could be found in Government-owned buildings after the obsolete files had been removed.

I again urge the building commission to give this suggestion some consideration.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

A great deal has been said and is being said about unemployment, and the question has just been raised as to the advisability of continuing the activities of the Gifford committee or the Young committee, which, originally, I believe, was the Arthur Woods committee.

Perhaps, two years ago we were in need of information concerning unemployment. Perhaps at that time statistics on unemployment were useful; but, gentlemen, we have passed the period when we need any more fact-finding commissions on unemployment or any more statistics.

Conditions have not become any better in the last six months that we have been here. The only purpose of the President's original Committee on Unemployment was to ascertain the real conditions of the country and to make specific recommendations. Arthur Woods was appointed as chairman of that committee and there were several volunteer workers and members of the committee who cooperated with him, but Arthur Woods resigned. I do not know why, but I have often wondered if it is not true that after Arthur Woods completed his fact-finding mission and did ascertain the facts, and did make specific recommendations for relief to the President, the President did not accept the recommendations and did not and has not to this day acted on

I never heard that denied.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Did we ever have a report?

Mr. LaGUARDIA. I do not think we had a report. In connection with that there was another commission for the study of technological employment and technological unemployment, and a report was made on that, I will say to the gentleman from Alabama, and that report is now on the desk of the Secretary of Labor. It is a scientific research into that subject and a scholarly report; and for some reason that I have been unable to fathom, the report has never been published. I formally asked the Secretary of Labor for a copy, and if I get it I will introduce a resolution making it a public document, because it is a very useful document to any student of the present economic conditions.

I submit that this is no time to suppress the facts, it is no time to suppress recommendations, it is no time to sup-Conditions in this country are beyond press reports.

I do not subscribe to this school of thought that we can run this country or feed hungry children on slogans. We have the slogan, "Just around the corner," "Better times are Budget," "Two chickens in one pot," "Adjourn Congress and go home." As far as I am concerned, I do not want any more slogans. We need no more statistics. We must have action, direct relief, a vast building program, a 5-day week, a 6-hour day, unemployment insurance, and economic security. I have insisted on such constructive measures for many years. Some of you gentlemen will realize before long the necessity of such an economic readjustment.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman will get his postmasterships taken away from him if he does not look out.

[Laughter.]

Mr. LAGUARDIA. There is only one thing we can do, and that is to face the facts. There should be no difference of opinion about existing facts. You can not shut your eyes to the fact that in the big cities there is great unemployment, the factories are closed, on the farms mortgages are being foreclosed and the farmers in dire need. Gentlemen. the time for an economic readjustment has arrived, and the quicker we act the better for our country.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto be now closed.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Laguna, $33,566.47, which may be expended for the purchase of Laguna, $33,566.47, which may be expended for the purchase of land, irrigation, drainage, and other improvements, and the purchase of equipment for the benefit of the Laguna Pueblo Indians; San Felipe, supplemental, $21,860.88, which, together with the unexpended balance of the original award for this pueblo, may be expended for the purchase of land, irrigation, drainage, and other improvements, and the purchase of equipment for the benefit of the San Felipe Pueblo Indians; Nambe, supplemental, $1.40. San Edgense supplemental, $23.27 $1.40; San Ildefonso, supplemental, $73.27.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph. I would like to inquire of the gentleman in relation to this paragraph and the following item, where authority is vested in the Secretary of the Interior to use funds for the construction of a power line and distributing system and the purchase of equipment. Is it sought to confer authority on the Secretary to establish a utility plant in this restricted service?

Mr. LEAVITT. This is an Indian agency at a considerable distance from any other settlement, except surrounding ranch land. There is considerable Indian population, a hospital, and school. It has not sufficient light. They have a plant with a worn-out engine and battery system. It does not give sufficient light so that the physicians can perform operations. I was there last summer, and that was stressed as one of the necessities of the case.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is the gentleman referring to the Laguna or the Tongue River? I am inquiring about both.

Mr. LEAVITT. I am referring to the Tongue River. I am not acquainted with the Laguna.

Mr. STAFFORD. There is a plant there now, and this is to make it more serviceable.

Mr. LEAVITT. To give them a much better supply of electricity than they now have.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEAVITT. Yes.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Can not they get along without this improvement for another year? Is it absolutely essential

Mr. LEAVITT. This is absolutely essential to the wellbeing of those Indians. They have a plant there that is worn out. They can not even run the laundry system in the hospital with what they have now.

Mr. BYRNS. And this is not a new appropriation?

Mr. LEAVITT. Oh, no; it continues an old appropriation. Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the reservation of the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Indian school, Pipestone, Minn.: For new school building and auditorium, including equipment, $75,000, to remain available until June 30, 1933.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of coming," "Don't sell your country short," "Balance the order upon the paragraph, which provides for new school building and auditorium in addition thereto. Is there authorization of law for this school at Pipestone, Minn.?

Mr. BYRNS. This is an existing school, and this is to take the place of some buildings that were destroyed by fire in February of this year.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the reservation of the point of order.

Mr. LOZIER. Mr. Chairman, I wholeheartedly supported the nonpartisan economy program. The record of roll calls shows that in every instance I voted for the proposal that would effect the greatest economies. I joined with my colleagues in voting a reduction of congressional salaries. By voice and vote I have endeavored to bring about a very substantial reduction in all Government expenditures. I have insisted that under existing unprecedented conditions a reduction in Government expenditures is not only wise but absolutely necessary.

The ever-increasing cost of government is not primarily chargeable to Congress but to the President and those in charge of the various departments of the executive branch of our Government. The number of employees in the departments, bureaus, boards, and commissions has grown enormously under the administration of Harding, Coolidge, and Hoover. There has been an increase of approximately 200,000 employees under these three Republican administrations. I am convinced we will never get a worth-while reduction of Government expenditures until the departmental heads are "put on the spot" and brought to a realization that much of the responsibility for the prodigality in public expenses rests upon their shoulders. Moreover, these Cabinet officers, bureau chiefs, and heads of boards and commissions are appointed by the President, hold office at his will, and are answerable to him for the manner in which they conduct their respective activities. The President could have compelled his subordinates to economize and thereby save millions of dollars if he had not lacked the courage to act.

While I can not furnish a bill of particulars, there is a widespread belief both in and out of Congress that the personnel of every department has been unnecessarily increased, and that there are many thousand Government employees who perform little or no useful or necessary service, and who could be eliminated from the pay rolls without any impairment of the efficiency of the service and without discontinuing any useful or necessary governmental activity.

Mr. BLANTON. There are 40,000 of them at least.

Mr. LOZIER. In my opinion, many more than 40,000. I am convinced that an accurate survey would demonstrate that of the 750,000 civilian employees probably as many as 100,000 could be separated from the service without impairing the functions of any useful or necessary Government activity. The responsibility for this condition of affairs rests largely upon the President of the United States and upon the departmental heads. In every department there has been each year a large increase in the number of employees.

While Secretary of Commerce for eight years Mr. Hoover did absolutely nothing in the way of reducing the expenses of his or the other departments. In the three years he has been President he has effected no economies and, aside from a little talk now and then, has done nothing to reduce the expenses of Government. His Cabinet officers have appeared before the Committee on Appropriations and vigorously protested against any reduction in appropriations for their respective departments. They have insisted that there were no duplications, overlappings, or surplus employees in their respective departments.

The House Committee on Appropriations substantially reduced the appropriation for each and every one of the departments over the protest of the Cabinet officers and bureau chiefs. When these appropriation bills were pending in the Senate Chairman Jones wrote to the department heads, asking them for suggestions where reductions could be made with the least objection. The Cabinet members replied, and all said substantially the same thing, that cuts in the appropriations could not be made without materially impairing the functions of their respective departments.

The subsidized press of the Nation did not carry to the people the astounding fact that a Democratic House and a Republican Senate were trying to reduce the expenses of government; and instead of having the cooperation of President Hoover's Cabinet officers, the departmental heads opposed these reductions. These Cabinet officers belong to President Hoover's family. If the President wanted to effect economies, why in the name of reason did he not begin with his Cabinet officers and prevent them from using their influence against a reasonable reduction in the expenses of their respective departments?

While the economy bill was pending in the House I received a letter from an ex-Cabinet officer advocating a substantial reduction in government expenditures. In reply, I wrote him that I was consistently and aggressively supporting the nonpartisan economy program, including a consolidation of the War and Navy Departments, which would effect a saving of $50,000,000 to $100,000,000 annually, but that the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, and the President opposed this consolidation, and the President sent one of his secretaries to the floor of the House to lobby against this economy and line up his partisans against the proposal. In reply this ex-Cabinet officer wrote as follows:

I have not been in public service for many years, but the situation with which you are now contending was fairly apparent even during the —— administration. An effort was made at that time, to which my department contributed in every way possible, to combine by transfer or otherwise, bureaus, etc., to reduce expenses. We met the same opposition you are now meeting, which, in my judgment, will ultimately have to be overcome.

From the foregoing letter I deleted the name of the President under whom the writer served, and I do not feel authorized to give the name of the writer, although I am quite sure he would have no objection to having the letter made public. I will say, however, that the writer is not of my political faith, and he did not serve under a Democratic President. He is a man of national reputation, of outstanding ability, exalted character, and enjoys the confidence and respect of all with whom he has come in contact in a long, useful, and honorable life. As a Cabinet officer he realized that by consolidating departments, boards, bureaus, and commissions the expenses of Government could be tremendously reduced. As a patriotic public servant he tried to bring about such consolidations and reductions in Government expenditures, but he encountered powerful opposition from other departmental heads and bureau chiefs, whose influence was so potent as to neutralize and defeat his laudable purpose.

Now, as then, the Cabinet officers and bureau chiefs are arrayed in a solid phalanx in opposition to the efforts of Congress to consolidate departments, bureaus, boards, and commissions and to thereby reduce expenses, and it is regrettable that the President, instead of calling off these greedy departmental heads, lends them aid and encouragement, and sends one of his many secretaries to the House to lobby against the economy program of Congress and to prevent the consolidation of departments, bureaus, and commissions.

The President and his Cabinet officers have taken no steps to reduce the excessive expenses of Government. Congress has had to contend with the ceaseless, aggressive, and persistent opposition of the departmental heads who are in the confidence of the President and are supposed to reflect his wishes, and who appeal to the Appropriation Committees not to reduce appropriations for their departments. Congress in its efforts to effect economies has had absolutely no cooperation and no help from the department heads who have used their power and influence to prevent substantial reduction of expenditures. [Applause.]

What has the President done to bring about a reduction in Government expenses or a reduction in taxation? Absolutely nothing. Since 1929 he has been giving out interviews and issuing statements opposing salary and wage reductions, and to this good hour has never gone on record in favor of a reduction of salaries of Government officers and employees. But you say the President advocated the furlough plan. This is true, but the adoption of the furlough plan will not reduce the pay roll, as I can prove by a statement made by President Hoover, over his own signature. In his letter of May 21, 1932, to Richard S. Parker, president of the American Society of Civil Engineers, in a lengthy review of economic and governmental conditions, President Hoover outlined a relief program and in paragraph (i) of his statement, as a means of lifting the depression, the President proposed:

The introduction of the 5-day week in Government, which would save the discharge of 100,000 employees and would add 30,000 to the present list.

I am quoting President Hoover's language, as you will see by reference to page 10917 of the Congressional Record of May 23, 1932. Here we have the President himself construing his so-called furlough or 5-day week plan, the net result of which the President says will be to "save the discharge of 100,000 employees and add 30,000 to the present list." Instead of reducing the number of Federal employees, the President is about to succeed in forcing on Congress his furlough plan, which, according to his own statement, will not only prevent the discharge of 100,000 employees but will "add 30,000 to the present list." If adding 30,000 new names to the pay roll is the kind of economy the President stands for, then the less we have of it the better it will be for the country.

Congress has reduced appropriations much below the recommendations of the President and the estimates of the Bureau of the Budget. When Congress adjourns it will have reduced appropriations several hundred million dollars below the amount the President recommended. On the record, no one can deny that the Congress has been more economically minded than the President and his Cabinet officers. When the economy bill and the appropriation bills reach the White House, the country will be compelled to give Congress the credit of having reduced Government expenses several hundred million dollars below the amount which the President said he needed to run the Government.

It is easy to prove that Congress is more economical than President Hoover. In December the President sent to Congress recommendation as to the amount of money required to run the Government for the next fiscal year, the grand total of which was $3,474,000,0000, which the economically minded House reduced to $3,311,000,000, or $162,000,000 below the amount recommended by the President. Most certainly Congress is entitled to credit for saving this $162,000,000 that the President asked for.

Nor is that all. The present Democratic House has conclusively demonstrated its willingness and ability to reduce government expenses. Last year the Republicans had a safe majority in the Senate and a 100 majority in the House. Now, what did our Republican friends do when they controlled both branches of Congress and wrote the appropriation bills? They did not exhibit any spasms of economy or desire to reduce expenses, for they appropriated for the fiscal year of 1932, $3,802,271,218, while the present Democratic House has held down appropriations to $3,174,849,116, or $627,422,101 less than the appropriations for last year when the Republicans held the purse strings of the Nation.

While in my opinion these supply bills should have been subjected to a more drastic cut, nevertheless I am sure the American people will approve the action of the Democratic House in cutting appropriations $627,000,000 below last year's appropriations, and in slicing $162,000,000 off of the amount the President said he needed to run the government next year. To these savings should be added the reductions in expenses made by the new economy bill which will be between $150,000,000 and $200,000,000. When all these items are added you will find that the present Congress has made very substantial reductions in government expenses. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

The Clerk read as follows:

BUREAU OF RECLAMATION

Boulder Canyon project: For the continuation of construction of the Hoover Dam and incidental works in the main stream of the Colorado River and Black Canyon, to create a storage reservoir, and of a complete plant and incidental structures suitable for the fullest economic development of electrical energy from the water discharged from such reservoir; to acquire by proceedings in eminent domain or otherwise, all lands, rights of way, and other property necessary for such purposes; and for incidental operations, as authorized by the Boulder Canyon project act, approved December 21, 1928 (U. S. C., Supp. V, title 43, ch. 12A); $2,000,000, to remain available until advanced to the Colorado River Dam fund; which amount shall be available for personal services in the District of Columbia and for all other objects of expenditure that are specified for projects included in the Interior Department appropriation act for the fiscal year 1933 under the caption "Bureau of Reclamation" without regard to the limitations of amounts therein set forth.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order. What new legislation is in this paragraph? I notice in line 10, on page 22, it says:

Without regard to the limitations of amounts therein set forth. Also in lines 19 and 20, on page 21:

To create a new storage reservoir, and of a complete plant and incidental structures suitable for the fullest economical development of electrical energy from the water discharged from such reservoir; to acquire by proceedings in eminent domain or otherwise.

What is the new legislation in this paragraph, and what are its effects?

Mr. BYRNS. I do not think there is any new legislation. Mr. GOSS. What about the language?—

Without regard to the limitations of amounts therein set forth.

Mr. ARENTZ. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman from Connecticut is referring to the condemnation suits on the Virgin River at St. Thomas. These assessments have been made of this farm or range land, that will ultimately be covered by the reservoir, and they are about complete now, and the land will have to be paid for, because it is contemplated to move these settlers from this section to another place in Nevada, in my county, and because of that, it is necessary to pay these appraised amounts.

Mr. BYRNS. It is already assessed.

Mr. ARENTZ. Yes.

Mr. GOSS. What does that wording "referring to the limitation of the amount therein set forth" mean? There were certain limitations placed in the act, were there not?

Mr. BYRNS. That refers to certain limitations placed in the Interior Department appropriation act for 1933, with regard to certain administrative expenses. Those limitations were based upon the amount of the appropriation made in that bill. Now, we are adding $2,000,000 more.

Mr. GOSS. What were the limitations?

Mr. BYRNS. I do not have the bill before me, but if I had it I could show the gentleman.

Mr. GOSS. Certain persons in the District of Columbia, as I recall.

Mr. BYRNS. But that does not constitute legislation.

Mr. ARENTZ. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOSS. I yield.

Mr. ARENTZ. There was a certain amount of money set aside for material and a certain amount for administration, and finally for the monthly pay to the contractors, which was the full amount, less 10 per cent.

Mr. BYRNS. Yes.

Mr. ARENTZ. The contractors have gone ahead much faster than they contemplated. Most of the material that was contemplated to be purchased has also been purchased far ahead.

Mr. BYRNS. Yes.

Mr. ARENTZ. So that the limitations set by the previous appropriation bill must be set aside or these things can not be done?

Mr. BYRNS. Yes. In other words, those limitations applied, as I recall, solely to personal services and telephone bills and telegraph bills, and things of that general nature.

Mr. GOSS. What does the gentleman mean by this $2,-000,000 fund remaining available until advanced to the Colorado River Dam fund? Is there authorization for that also?

Mr. BYRNS. That is under the law. That is simply carrying out the exact terms of the law.

increased $1,000,000, is that true, over what was contained in the last appropriation bill of this year?

Mr. BYRNS. Two million dollars; yes.

Mr. GOSS. And the limitations that were put on the bill this session are being taken off. Is that correct?

Mr. BYRNS. Yes; but those limitations related to personal services. This does not relate to personal services, telephone, or telegraph bills. This appropriation is intended to be advanced to this fund.

Mr. GOSS. But it states, "which amount shall be available for personal services in the District of Columbia."

Mr. BYRNS. That is general language.

Mr. GOSS. In the other bill we limited it, did we not? Mr. BYRNS. That is general language used in the appropriation bill which has been passed and signed by the Presi-

Mr. GOSS. Does the gentleman think this additional $2,000,000 is absolutely necessary at this time?

Mr. BYRNS. I do; and the report shows that under the proof submitted it probably will not be sufficient to carry the work along farther than January 10.

Mr. ARENTZ. According to the report that the chairman has made on this bill, January 1 will find a deficit or overexpenditure of $1,826,000.

Mr. BYRNS. No. It is $1,554,000.

Mr. ARENTZ. And the $2,000,000 will be extended up until January 1, and then there will be a deficit of $1,526,000. Then there are two plans proposed by the gentleman, one of $7,000,000 and one of $11,000,000 to carry on until July 1 of next year.

Mr. BYRNS. No. The deficit to which the gentleman refers amounts to $1,554,412. That is the deficit that will exist under the present appropriation on January 1. We recommend an appropriation of $2,000,000, which will mean that on January 1 they will have a balance of something like $440,000, which will carry them, as we estimate, until about January 10.

Mr. ARENTZ. To carry on the work they are doing now?

Mr. BYRNS. Yes.

Mr. ARENTZ. Without making any provision for that steel lining and other things?

Mr. BYRNS. Oh, yes; it takes care of everything.

Mr. ARENTZ. According to the requirements of Doctor Mead?

Mr. BYRNS. Yes. This is the estimate which was finally submitted by the Department of the Interior.

Mr. ARENTZ. The gentleman's idea is not to curtail or to obstruct in any way the carrying on of this work?

Mr. BYRNS. Oh, no. The committee has no intention of undertaking to reduce the force there or cause the contractors to postpone the work; but it was thought this amount would carry the work along until a deficiency could be provided, and undoubtedly a deficiency will be necessary.

Mr. GOSS. How many men does the gentleman estimate this will keep at work?

Mr. BYRNS. About 3,300, as I now recall.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the reservation of point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Salaries and expenses: For an additional amount for salaries and expenses, Bureau of Immigration, for the fiscal year 1932, including the same objects specified under this head in the act making appropriations for the Department of Labor for the fiscal year 1932, $200,000.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which is at the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. Sabath: Page 24, line 17, strike out "$200,000" and insert "$100,000."

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, the Secretary of Labor reports that immigration is down to within 5 per cent of the 153,000 permitted under the act of 1927. It is practically nil; yet notwithstanding this fact we are increasing the appropriations from year to year. I do not believe that the

Mr. GOSS. In other words, this appropriation is being | total number of immigrants this year is more than 8,000, and still we are asked to appropriate an additional $200,000 for that bureau. What the Secretary of Labor does with the money is something I do not know.

Of course, the deportation bill, which I voted for, was passed a few days ago, and I am willing that we should deport any undesirables; but I can not understand why the department is asking for these additional sums, which are increasing from year to year, unless it be to put in a lot of political appointees to do political work.

Now, in 1923, when the President advocated the creation of a Budget Bureau, the country was promised that such a bureau would bring about a reduction of expenditures in all departments; but I have been waiting anxiously since then for the great service that was to be rendered by the Budget Bureau. In 1931 that bureau expended $208,000. In 1932 it expended $191,000, and now, with all the necessity for economy, the appropriation has been reduced to $190,870, or exactly $130 less than was expended by the bureau in 1932. Why do they not practice what they preach?

What can we expect? The President demands that we balance the Budget. We are doing our duty, but what is the Budget Bureau doing? Instead of making it easier and possible for us to comply with the general request of the Nation, it is making it harder and well-nigh impossible for us to bring about the economy which the House desires.

I claim that we should begin to economize with the Budget Bureau and with the Bureau of Efficiency, another bureau that is supposed to effect economies and that expended $270,000 last year. Gentlemen, here we have the Bureau of Efficiency and the Budget Bureau expending nearly $500,000 in an effort to bring about economy and efficiency; and yet, in the last analysis, we are the ones who are effecting the economies, for we are obliged to cut the appropriations reported by them by millions, on the floor of this House, in order to help balance the Budget; and, therefore, is it any wonder that many ask what purpose these bureaus serve or what good they accomplish?

I wonder why it is that the President, instead of advocating economy from day to day in the press, and instead of censuring the House for not economizing, does not instruct these bureaus and the bureau heads to begin practicing economy? He has permitted his own bureaus to expand and increase expenditures to a point that I think is outrageous. I have not been able to detect what real service these bureaus have rendered to the country; and I think it is high time that they should be eliminated, or, at least, instructed to perform the work for which they were organized.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

I sincerely hope the pending amendment is defeated. If I had my way I would increase the appropriation to enforce the immigration laws by two or three million dollars, and I think it would be money well spent and that it would be expended in an economical manner.

I am certainly surprised to have my good friend the distinguished gentleman from Illinois intimate this small appropriation is to employ politicians to run around the

Mr. SABATH. The provision states it is for salaries.

Mr. SCHAFER. For salaries, certainly; but let me state to the gentleman that in the State of Wisconsin there are only three immigration officers enforcing the immigration laws, and while there may be bootlegging of liquor from Canada and from foreign countries, I believe that the immigrant bootleggers are making about as much money as the liquor bootleggers. In these days of unemployment, when American citizens, whether they were born here or whether they legally came to our country from foreign shores and have become naturalized, and aliens who have legally entered are walking the streets out of employment, I, for one, want to take every alien who has been bootlegged into the country in violation of the immigration law and send him on his way rejoicing back to his native country. [Applause.]

We have in the State of Wisconsin three immigration officers to enforce the immigration laws and to perform the additional duties placed upon them by enactments of Congress. When Congress enacted the law to provide that upon investigation a certificate in lieu of arrival could be issued you can imagine the additional work placed upon this undermanned immigration office with the three immigration officers in Wisconsin, who have been faithfully and effectually working 13, 14, and sometimes 20 hours a day. They now have to conduct these examinations and investigations and were unable to obtain even a stenographer to take the testimony on these immigration cases where it is practically a matter of life and death to the alien in some cases where the alien legally enters and the hearings are held by the immigration officer. Yet we find under this great Government of ours that the immigration inspectors, who are overburdened, have to write the testimony down in long-

May I suggest to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Sabath] that if he really sympathizes with the unemployed of this country, and I know that he does, he ought not to make any of these veiled attacks upon the President of the United States and the Department of Labor who are trying their very best to relieve the serious unemployment situation by sending out of this country aliens who have entered illegally.

Mr. SABATH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCHAFER. I yield.

Mr. SABATH. Is there any doubt in the gentleman's mind as to my sympathy with the unemployed?

Mr. SCHAFER. My good friend is a very able legislator, and I know that he has great sympathy for the unemployed. He has been working hard to solve the unemployment and depression problem. I therefore hope that upon further thought he will ask unanimous consent to withdraw his amendment so we can have the additional funds to send those aliens, who have been bootlegged into our country illegally in violation of the immigration law, out of the country and let some of those walking the streets, unemployed, fill the positions which they now have.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. SCHAFER. I yield.

Mr. BLANTON. I am very glad to learn the gentleman from Wisconsin is against the bootlegger.

Mr. SCHAFER. I certainly am against bootlegging aliens into this country in violation of the immigration laws.

Mr. BLANTON. Well, all bootlegging; is not the gentleman against all bootlegging?

Mr. SCHAFER. The time is not far distant, my friend, when the contraband-liquor bootleggers will not be able to make millions and billions of dollars while the poor, battered Treasury has a deficit of billions of dollars. The people are waking up and it will not be long before the prohibition laws which brought recognition to liquor bootleggers will be a thing of the past.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two additional minutes in order to cite the case to which I have referred.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, and I never object to my friend the distinguished gentleman from Wisconsin using time, I am just glad again that the gentleman is against all bootlegging. I hope he will help us to enforce the law.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SCHAFER. I am also against liquor bootlegging and the best way to prevent that is to repeal the prohibition

Mr. Chairman, I had a party from my district recently ask me to request the Secretary of Labor to extend the deportation warrant in the case of himself, his wife, and his daughter, 21 years of age. He admitted in his letter that he was bootlegged into this country by way of Canada in violation of the immigration law.

He said that if the extension were granted he would have sufficient funds to voluntarily depart and pay the transportation of himself, his wife, and his daughter, 21 years of age, as the three of them were working. That is how they were going to get the money, even in these days of unemployment.

I hope that the gentleman from Illinois, who is a conscientious legislator and who realizes the unemployment conditions we now have in this country, in the name of law enforcement and in the name of the people out of jobs who are walking the streets, including many war veterans who offered their all for their country, will rise in his place and ask unanimous consent to withdraw his amendment.

In closing I want to commend the present Secretary of Labor, the Commissioner of Immigration, and the employees enforcing the immigration laws for their efficient, effective work. Mr. Reynolds and his small staff in the immigration office at Milwaukee are among the most efficient and hardest working employees in the Federal Government service.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I share the same high opinion of the gentleman from Illinois that we have just heard expressed, and I feel he offered the amendment to reduce this appropriation because of misinformation. I therefore wish to submit a brief statement in connection with this additional $200,000 now urgently asked for by the Department of Labor.

There was appropriated during the present fiscal year for the purpose of deporting aliens and removing indigent aliens, $1,884,000. There was unexpended of that amount on May 1 only $143,000 plus. There had been deported and removed during the first 10 months of the present fiscal year only about 300 less than were deported during the full 12 months

Mr. SABATH. Eighteen thousand three hundred and twenty-two.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Eighteen thousand three hundred and twenty-two up to May 1, 1932, as against 18,666. It is claimed by the Department of Labor they are now prepared and ready before July 1, 1932, to send out of this country over 4,000 who are here unlawfully and who should be removed. They will require this amount, the committee was told, to remove them.

The committee reluctantly grants any increase in appropriations, but this was one item that we felt the Members of the House would not hesitate to vote for if shown to be needed for the purpose of deporting this large number of aliens before the end of this month.

Mr. BRIGGS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Yes.

Mr. BRIGGS. The hearings show that the deportations to be made during the months of May and June will amount

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Over 4,000 are to be deported by July 1.

Mr. BRIGGS. And this deficiency of $200,000 is needed to accomplish that deportation?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. The gentleman is entirely

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last three words. I rise in opposition to the Sabath amendment, and I do so in the interest of a condition which ought to be remedied. Instead of these aliens who are unlawfully brought here having an opportunity to make a great deal of money a new and cruel system of exploitation has been established. In the first place, the cost of entering the country unlawfully is very large. Whether they come as stowaways or whether they are smuggled over the boundary, the cost is very large, from three to five times what it costs an alien to come here lawfully. The result is that that unfortunate person enters into the country heavily in debt and becomes the victim of a system of peonage. He has to work for lower wages and longer hours, and is exploited to a degree that is most cruel.

Only the other day I heard of a case—and this happens very often-where an alien unlawfully here was injured in course of his employment.

When an alien unlawfully here is injured at his work, as | soon as he puts in a claim for compensation he is immediately reported and deported, so that the insurance company will not have to pay his compensation. Just think of that, gentlemen. So it is for the protection of the people who come here under a misapprehension and under the misrepresentation of steamship agents and steamship companies, I am sorry to say, to put a stop to unlawful entry of aliens. Aliens in foreign countries are shown a map which indicates that Cuba is but a step from Florida and showing Canada as part of the United States. They say, "Once you get there it will be easy to cross the line." When they do get into this country they are turned over to padrones and employment agencies, private employment agencies which specialize in that kind of labor. They are placed in employment in competition with citizens and aliens who are here lawfully, and at a lower wage scale, and by reason of their unlawful status are at the mercy of labor

I say we should attempt to get the word to other countries that there is no use of coming here unlawfully. In the first place, economic conditions here are bad. In the second place, we should show that the United States Government will be compelled, in order to protect its own people and aliens who are here lawfully, to deport unlawful entrants, and I think if we could get that information across the sea it might put an end to this organized system of alien smuggling.

I suggest to the gentleman from Illinois that it is for the protection of these innocent victims that unlawful entries should be stopped. It is harsh to take an alien, apprehend him, and deport him; but we can not do anything else under the present conditions, because we have private employment agencies specializing in aliens who enter the country unlawfully and exploit them. They underbid lawful labor, and these men take the places of people who are here lawfully and of citizens of the country. The result is what I have told you. If they are injured in their work, instead of being compensated, the insurance company reports them to the Immigration Bureau, and they are deported before they can get their compensation. I think it is an act of mercy to provide the means whereby we can put an end to this system of peonage, this new padrone system that the steamship companies and private employment agencies and crimps are to blame for, and I hope the gentleman from Illinois will withdraw his amendment.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, in view of the statement of the gentleman from New York, the gentleman from Alabama and the gentleman from Wisconsin, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Second Polar Year Program: For the purpose of carrying into effect the provisions of the public resolution entitled "Joint resolution authorizing an appropriation to defray the expenses of participation by the United States Government in the Second Polar Year Program, August 1, 1932, to August 31, 1933," approved March 18, 1932, and for each and every object and purpose specified therein, $30,000, to remain available until June 30, 1934.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order.

I am curious to inquire the attitude of the Committee on Appropriations as to authorizing $30,000 in these hot times to go to the polar regions.

Mr. BYRNS. Would the gentleman like to go?

Mr. STAFFORD. I would like to go home to my North Lake resort where I can get a refreshing cold bath, rather than the hot baths I suffer here in the House of Representatives.

Mr. BYRNS. This is a scientific investigation, as the gentleman knows, that is to be conducted in unison with all the other nations of the world. They have all made their appropriations and most of them will have more stations than the United States and will spend more money upon the subject of this investigation. I can not express myself technically and accurately, but this has to do with sound waves. radio, telegraph, and things of that sort.

Mr. STAFFORD. What is the total amount appropriated by all the governments for this specific purpose?

Mr. BYRNS. I can not tell the gentleman, and those who appeared before us did not have the information, but they did tell us that Great Britain has two or three stations and practically all of the countries are spending more than the United States. We are going to have only one station.

Mr. STAFFORD. When I examined the paragraph the thought occurred to me whether we could abandon for the time being this scientific work, but if it is a contributing part to an international fund I can see the reason why we should perhaps participate.

Mr. BYRNS. The gentleman understands this money does not go into any general fund. This only provides for the station that the United States Government will operate. The last investigation of this kind was made 50 years ago. The other governments will have their stations and, I understand, have already made arrangements for them. In other words, the whole world is to be covered and each nation has been allotted a certain portion of the world, and this is to take care of our portion of the investigation.

Mr. STAFFORD. The United States is virtually a contributing country to a general scientific work participated in by the other nations of the world.

Mr. BYRNS. That is true; and, of course, the United States will get the results of their investigations.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the reservation of a point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Treasury Department.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Bynns: On page 28, after line 3, insert a new paragraph, as follows:

"BUREAU OF CUSTOMS

"For an additional amount for collecting the revenues from customs, including the same objects specified under this head in the act making appropriations for the Treasury Department for the fiscal year 1929, $1,665.27."

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Chairman, this estimate came in after the bill had been reported by the general committee. This amendment simply represents five claims which have been audited and recommended for payment by the General Accounting Office.

Mr. STAFFORD. And either now or next year or sometime they will have to be paid.

Mr. BYRNS. They will have to be paid, and there is every reason why they should be taken care of now.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Washington, D. C., central heating plant: The authorization contained in the second deficiency act, fiscal year 1931, approved March 4, 1931 (46 Stat. 1604), is hereby amended so as to include the buildings in the Municipal Center among those to be served, steam for the purpose to be purchased at a rate to be agreed upon, also to serve the Federal warehouse, the Land Office, Patent Office, Pension Office Buildings, and the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia and the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia Buildings; also to serve the buildings contemplated to be served under the legislation for the West Potomac Park heating plant, authorized in such act approved March 4, 1931 (46 Stat. 1555), and the lodge east of Washington Monument in lieu of the Washington Monument. Washington Monument.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph. This is a change of existing law, and I want to ask the chairman, does this provide for a utility or public-heating plant?

Mr. BYRNS. This is to enable the building to be heated by the Government heating plant.

Mr. STAFFORD. The language is not very clear, and I withdraw the reservation.

The Clerk read as follows:

Sundry Federal buildings: The limits of cost heretofore fixed and the authorizations and appropriations heretofore made for the acquisition of sites and construction of buildings for Atlanta, Ga., post office, etc.; Boston, Mass., post office, courthouse, etc.; Cincinnati, Ohio, post office; Fort Worth, Tex., post office; Kansas City, Mo., post office, etc.; Nashville, Tenn., post office, etc.; Newark, N. J., post office, courthouse, etc.; New York, N. Y., post office; Norfolk, Va., post office, courthouse, etc.; Philadelphia, Pa., post office; Pittsburgh, Pa., post office, courthouse, etc.; Rochester, N. Y., post office; St. Paul, Minn., post office, courthouse, etc.; San Francisco, Calif., post office, courthouse, etc.; Tulsa, Okla., post office, courthouse, etc.; are hereby amended so as to make such limits of costs, authorizations, and appropriations available for furnishing and installing fixed permanent equipment for cafeterias.

Mr. SHANNON. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the language, starting on line 18, page 30, under the title "Sundry Federal Buildings" and ending with the word "cafeteria" on line 11, page 31.

This is legislation on an appropriation bill not authorized by existing law, and is therefore subject to a point of order.

Appropriations for public buildings are subject to the public building act and amendments thereto. In no public building act can it be found where the Congress has authorized the expenditure of public money for the installation of business establishments within post offices. It might be that provisions have been made for some specific buildings, but the act does not provide that money can be used for furnishing and installing fixed permanent equipment for cafeterias in all public buildings, if the department so desires.

I can not conceive how the Chair can hold that public money, under existing law, can be used for such purposes, and I therefore insist upon my point of order.

My authorities for that are Hinds' Precedents, volume 4, section 3811; Cannon's Precedents, volume 6, page 544; Cannon's Precedents, volume 6, 8545; Hinds' Precedents, volume 4, 3582; Cannon's Precedents, volume 6, section 8552; Hinds' Precedents, volume 4, section 3868.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Tennessee wish to discuss the point of order?

Mr. BYRNS. I do. Mr. Chairman, the only authority for the provision I have been able to find is contained in the act for the construction of public buildings, and other purposes, approved May 25, 1926. I will read the language:

That to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to provide suitable accommodations in the District of Columbia for the executive departments and independent establishments of the Government not under any executive department, and for courthouses, post offices, immigration stations, customhouses, marine hospitals, quarantine stations, and other public buildings of the classes under the control of the Treasury Department in the States, Territories, and possessions of the United States, he is hereby authorized and directed to acquire, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, such sites and additions to sites as he may deem necessary and to cause to be constructed thereon—

And so forth.

Now, it seems to me the only question which confronts the Chair is whether or not a cafeteria can properly be classed as an incidental part of a post office. The Post Office Department has already established a number of these cafeterias. I understand that it wants to establish them in post offices now being constructed in the larger cities. I may say that the Post Office Department thinks that, while this is not necessary, it is a yery important feature of the Post Office Department, that it makes for efficiency in the service, that it promotes efficiency in providing for postal clerks a place where they can get meals within the building without running out.

Mr. SHANNON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman is not speaking to the point of order but is arguing the merits of the question.

Mr. BYRNS. I am trying to show why it is regarded by the Post Office Department as necessary.

Mr. SHANNON. And I would like to explain why it is not necessary.

Mr. BYRNS. I was attempting to show why the Post Office Department regarded this as incidentally a part of the construction of the post office, and it was necessary to make the statement that I have made.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I want to discuss the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Has the gentleman from Tennessee concluded?

Mr. BYRNS. I may say that there are lockers already provided in post-office buildings.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS. Yes.

Mr. RICH. Does the gentleman think a cafeteria is essential to the Post Office Department in conducting the affairs of the post office?

Mr. BYRNS. No; if I made it that strong, I made it too strong. What I was trying to say was that a cafeteria, in the opinion of the Post Office Department, operated for better efficiency in the department. In other words, it was claimed that hot-dog stands grew up around these places and employees ran out during work hours to patronize them, and so forth.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS. Yes.

Mr. DYER. Does the gentleman think that because the Post Office Department thinks it is essential that that brings it within the rule cited by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Shannon] that it is legislation?

Mr. BYRNS. No; I would not say that; but the Post Office Department constructs lockers, and I think it is a legitimate argument to say that the post office regards these not as essential but as more or less necessary to promote the greatest amount of efficiency.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Is it not, as a matter of fact, nothing more than a convenience?

Mr. BYRNS. It undoubtedly is a convenience.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. The House a few days ago passed a resolution appointing a special committee that is coming in with a resolution to-morrow asking the House for money to carry on its investigations to determine how much the Government is competing with private business, and we are going to appropriate the money. The purpose is to bring back legislation here to do away with competition by the Government with private enterprise. If that means nothing, we ought to know it now, so that we will not appropriate the money and have it wasted by this committee.

Mr. BYRNS. I think it is just a question under the point of order whether this is authorized. If it is authorized by law, it is a question for the House to say whether it wants to provide for them or not to provide for them or not.

Mr. JOHNSON of Missouri. Does not the very language of the provision indicate that the original law did not authorize the construction of any such thing as a cafeteria? This is new legislation amending the original law.

Mr. BYRNS. I think this question is one which is clearly open to argument.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, the hearings show that this will cost an average of $50,000 each for the 15 different post offices, so this paragraph will expend $750,000 on cafeterias in 15 buildings. It is not a question of whether the Post Office Department deems these necessary; it is a question of whether or not a $50,000 cafeteria in each of the 15 post offices is a part of the post-office system; and it is not, and by the most strained construction we can not make it so. We must save this $750,000 for the people. It is a cost to the Government, and it is a cost to the taxpayer that is not authorized by law.

If you will go down here to-night to that big cafeteria on the top floor of the Government Printing Office and check up the waste and the overhead and the cost to the people of this Government because of that one cafeteria, you will see they ought to be taken out of every department of the Government. This Government should go out of the cafeteria business. I submit the point of order made by my colleague from Missouri is well taken, and should be sustained. By sustaining it there will be saved to the taxpayers of the United States the sum of $750,000.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, the point of order raised by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Shannon] is well taken. The paragraph to which he objects is unquestionably legislation and is not in order in this bill. All discussion as to expediency, as to the value of these installations and their advantage to the Government and its employees, is beside the point. Such considerations have nothing to do with the parliamentary situation. The rule is very clear. It pro-

Nor shall any provision in any such bill or amendment thereto changing existing law be in order.

Any provision here changing existing law-whether it subtracts from existing law or whether it adds to existing lawis subject to the point of order advanced by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Shannon].

The proposal to install permanent cafeteria fixtures and provide for extensive business establishments foreign to the purpose for which these buildings are being erected undoubtedly adds to existing law. There is no such provision in the enabling act. There is no such statutory authority in the organic law. It necessarily follows that the paragraph proposes to add to existing law. It is legislation on an appropriation bill. Otherwise, why should it be proposed here? Why would it be necessary to incorporate this provision in the bill if authority for the installation of cafeteria fixtures already existed. Patently, this paragraph is proposed here by the committee in order to authorize a program which would not otherwise be legal. The act cited by the distinguished chairman of the committee authorizes these buildings, but it includes no authorization for any construction of this nature. It is legislation, Mr. Chairman, and the point of order made by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Shannon] is undoubtedly well taken and should be sustained.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, unless the Chair is prepared to rule, I would like to be heard briefly.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is prepared to rule. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Shannon] makes the point of order that the appropriation proposed in the pending paragraph is not authorized by existing law. The Chair has read the statute cited by the gentleman from Tennessee, which may be found in United States Code, Supplement V, title 40, section 341. That statute, after providing for courthouses, post offices, immigration stations, customhouses, and so forth, provides that the Secretary of the Treasury shall provide for adequate and suitable buildings for the foregoing purposes—that is, for post-office purposes, customhouse purposes, and so forth. In the opinion of the Chair that authorization is not broad enough to include cafeterias. The point of order made against the paragraph is well taken, and the Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

OFFICE OF JUDGE ADVOCATE GENERAL

OFFICE OF JUDGE ADVOCATE GENERAL

The unexpended balances of the appropriations carried in the second deficiency act, fiscal year 1931, for "Expenses of administration of settlement of war claims, act of 1928," Judge Advocate General's Department, are hereby continued and made available until June 30, 1933, for every expenditure requisite for and incident to the work and duties of the War Department Commission for the Adjustment of British Patent Claims, including the authorized traveling expenses of members of the commission, commissioned officers detailed to duty therewith and employees, the employment of personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, printing and binding, photographing, and such other expenses as may be necessary and proper for carrying out the duties of such commission.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. What patent claims are in process of adjustment for which the authorization is made in this paragraph? The authorization is to permit the appropriation heretofore made to be utilized for the adjustment of British patent claims, and I am curious to know what character of claims they might be.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Chairman, I shall read to the gentleman what Colonel McMullen, chief of the patent section in the Judge Advocate General's Department, had to say on the subject. Asked to explain the provision, he said:

Colonel McMullen. That is for the purpose of trying 16 British claims which the State Department has agreed, with the British Government, to try before the section 3 of the Dent Act tribunal. It has been pending about 12 years, and in February the State Department reached an agreement with the British Government that they would submit those to the judgment of a tribunal under

The Secretary of War has authority under section 3 of the Dent Act to settle all those war claims.

The CHAIRMAN. It is not going to take any additional appropriation?

Colonel McMullen. No.

The CHAIRMAN. How much have you?

Colonel McMullen. There is about $15,000. There may be a few odd dollars over or under that, but it is about that amount.

The Charman. How much do these claims involve? Colonel McMullen. These claims involve claims for $695,000, but I do not believe there will be judgments in anything like that

The Chairman. You have no money with which to go on with . this work?

Colonel McMullen. No, sir; we have not any money for the expenses. We have the authority.

The CHARMAN. This is just a proposition to make that money available until June 30, 1933?

Colonel McMullen. Yes, sir; that is all.

Mr. STAFFORD. Then there is no question that the authority is vested in the department to adjudicate these claims under the so-called Dent Act?

Mr. BYRNS. He so states.

Mr. STAFFORD. My impression was that the Dent Act has virtually become negatived by the expiration of time.

Mr. BYRNS. These were British patents which were used by the United States during the war, and these claims are submitted, of course, for their use, and they involve $695,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. When were they first presented? Does the evidence show?

Mr. BYRNS. No; the evidence does not show.

Mr. STAFFORD. It is rather late to be presenting claims arising out of war activities.

Mr. BYRNS. These have been pending some time. This appropriation was made a year or two ago and we are now extending it.

Mr. STAFFORD. But the authority was under the socalled Dent Act, which was passed shortly after the termination of the war.

Mr. BYRNS. I have no information as to just when they were commenced.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the reservation of the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

FINANCE DEPARTMENT

Pay, etc., of the Army: For an additional amount for "Pay, etc., of the Army, 1932," including the same objects specified under this head in the War Department appropriation act for the fiscal year 1932, $1,900,000.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I wish to call attention to what the committee has just done with reference to striking out a provision for $750,000 for cafeterias in post offices, and to call attention to the condition that exists in Army posts. Throughout this country practically every Army post maintains either cafeterias or post exchanges and things like that for the purpose of furnishing food and provisions, ostensibly to the enlisted men and the officers and their immediate families. but I think it will be admitted by everyone that it is not confined to those to whom this service is supposed to be rendered, but relatives and friends and almost anybody who knows those in charge of the cafeterias and exchanges can go there and buy supplies. If the Secretary of War would issue an order telling those responsible in the posts, the commandants and others, that they must not permit this abuse, it would make unnecessary an investigation such as the House has recently authorized.

Mr. PARSONS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DYER. I yield.

Mr. PARSONS. Do they furnish clothing and all family supplies of every kind in these posts?

Mr. DYER. I think from what my colleague stated that is true. I think we all owe a great debt of gratitude to my colleague [Mr. Shannon] for bringing this matter so forcibly to the House. I think they are doing this generally, and it is harmful to private interests and to private business, and it has grown to such an extent that it is really disgraceful for the country to permit it to be carried on, and some people to be favored against others.

Mr. HORR. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. DYER. I yield.

Mr. HORR. As a matter of fact, it exists not only in the city of Washington but it extends as far west as the State of Washington. They charge very much less for the products which they sell, and in the various industries, such as laundries and the like, they charge practically one-third what is charged on the outside.

Mr. DYER. Undoubtedly that is true, and if the Secretary of War would take notice of the action of the House to-day in connection with this matter affecting post offices and would act upon it and issue an order, which is all that would be required, legislation would not be necessary as the outgrowth of the investigation which the House has

Mr. PARSONS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DYER. I yield.

Mr. PARSONS. Who furnishes the initial capital to put in the stock in the first place?

Mr. DYER. I suppose the Government does. As far as I know, that is the fact.

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

UNITED STATES MILITARY ACADEMY

For an additional amount for the preparation of drawings, plans, and specifications for mess hall, cadet store, dormitories, and drawing academy, for payment of the claim of Gehron & Ross, as successors to the Arnold W. Brunner Associates (Inc.), for extra achitectural services performed, fiscal year 1925, $4,577.56.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph. I would like to ask the chairman if this paragraph provides for the payment of a private claim that has not heretofore been authorized by the Congress?

Mr. BYRNS. No. This is a claim which was approved by the Comptroller General in connection with some construction work at West Point and is part of the amount due the architect employed in that construction, and under contract. So it is not a private claim in the sense to which the gentleman refers.

Mr. STAFFORD. There are many claims that the Comptroller General does approve which, nevertheless, have to come to Congress for authorization to pay.

Mr. BYRNS. This claim was allowed under a contract which the Government made with an architect in connection with construction work which was being prosecuted at the Military Academy. So that it does not come under the class of claims to which the gentleman refers.

Mr. STAFFORD. If it is a legitimate claim which does not require authorization by Congress, why was not the claim paid out of the existing fund?

Mr. BYRNS. The money has been exhausted. It was necessary to come and get money with which to pay it.

I will say to the gentleman the contract was made and this gentleman was employed to render service for the usual architect's commission. The work proceeded. Then the quartermaster at the Military Academy decided to make certain changes and certain additions to the building, or, as I am reminded, to the equipment of the building. This architect was directed to proceed to submit plans and specifications, and under his contract he was entitled to his commission for the increased cost. This represents that

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Tennessee has satisfactorily shown that it is not a private claim, but one that has been authorized by law and would have been paid if the money had been available. Therefore. I withdraw the reservation of the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Monuments and battlefields: The unexpended balances on June 30, 1932, under the following appropriations are hereby continued available until June 30, 1933, for the same respective purposes, namely: Monument on Kill Devil Hill, Kitty Hawk, N. C., $232,500, War Department appropriation act, fiscal year 1931; monument to the memory of the first permanent settlement of the West, at Harrodsburg, Ky., $100,000, second deficiency act, fiscal year 1931; survey of battlefields in the vicinity of Richmond, Va., including the battlefield of Cold Harbor, Va., $6,800, and survey of battlefield of Saratoga, N. Y., $4,400, second deficiency act, fiscal year 1930, as extended by the War Department appropriation act for the fiscal year 1932. the fiscal year 1932.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph in order to ask the chairman of the Appropriations Committee whether it is not possible, in view of the serious financial condition of the Federal Treasury, to fail to appropriate $232,500 for a monument on Kill Devil Hill, Kitty Hawk, N. C.?

Mr. BYRNS. I will say to the gentleman from Wisconsin that nearly all of this money has been expended. It has all been contracted for. The work is in progress, and, as I have said, nearly completed; but it will not be possible to complete the work by June 30. Therefore, it was asked that these unexpended balances, which only amount to about $13,000, be made available during the next fiscal year. The fact that it only amounts to about $13,000 is an indication of the fact the work is practically completed.

Mr. SCHAFER. Am I to understand that the balance of the $232,500 for the monument on Kill Devil Hill has already been expended?

Mr. BYRNS. All except $13,000, as I stated to the gentle-

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

CORPS OF ENGINEERS

Protective works and measures, Lake of the Woods and Rainy River, Minn.: Any unexpended balance on June 30, 1932, of the appropriation of $375,000 for "Protective works and measures, Lake of the Woods and Rainy River, Minn., 1928–1930," made by the second deficiency act, fiscal year 1928, as authorized by sections 1 and 2 of the act approved May 22, 1926 (44 Stat. 617), is hereby continued and made available until June 30, 1934.

Mr. SINCLAIR. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Sinclair: On page 35, after line 9, insert a new paragraph as follows:

"Survey of Mouse River, N. Dak.: Not to exceed $15,000 of the appropriation, maintenance, and improvement of existing river and harbor works, shall be available for surveying the Mouse River, N. Dak., with a view to the prevention and control of its floods as authorized by the act approved February 27, 1931."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order.

Mr. SINCLAIR. May I say, Mr. Chairman, I have no desire to occupy the time of the House. I have presented this matter to the chairman of the committee and the authorization was made for this survey under the act of February 27, 1931.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman acquaint the committee with the reason why some appropriation has not been made heretofore for this purpose? Is it recommended by the Bureau of the Budget?

Mr. SINCLAIR. Yes; it has been recommended by the Bureau of the Budget.

Mr. STAFFORD. Why has it not been included in some regular appropriation bill?

Mr. SINCLAIR. It was deemed a supplemental appropriation and did not properly come in any of the other bills.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. SINCLAIR. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. BYRNS. I may state to the gentleman from Wisconsin that under the act passed in February, 1931, an appropriation of $15,000 was authorized for the purpose of making this survey of the Mouse River. The Budget first sent up an estimate for the full amount for the pending bill. The committee felt that it was not an essential for next year and declined to recommend the appropriation and the bill carries no appropriation for that purpose.

The gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. SINCLAIR] has talked to me on the subject, and I think he talked to my friend from Indiana on the subject. It seems that this survey is to be made by the War Department for the benefit of the city of Minot, N. Dak., and that general section of the

Mr. SINCLAIR. And I may say also that two transcontinental railroads as well as two or three highways will be benefited by this survey.

Mr. BYRNS. And I understand that all costs involved outside of the survey will be borne by the local drainage commission

Mr. SINCLAIR. I believe there will be a drainage commission or some such entity organized.

Mr. BYRNS. At any rate, the United States Government will not be called upon to contribute to the cost of whatever may be done after the survey is made.

This survey is to be made by Army engineers. I have no authority to speak for the committee which did not consider an amendment of this sort, but I have said to the gentleman from North Dakota that if he would take these funds out of flood relief and river and harbor funds which have already been appropriated that I would offer no objection, provided he reduced the amount to $10,000. It seems to me with the work to be done by the Army engineers, whose salaries are paid from other funds, $10,000 ought certainly to be sufficient to cover any expenses incurred in the investigation. If we authorize $15,000 it will be expended. I do not think that there is any doubt about that. I have no personal objection to the amendment.

Mr. SINCLAIR. Mr. Chairman, I should not like to reduce the amount to $10,000 because after a preliminary examination the Army engineers stated it would require $15,000 to do this work properly. However, in view of the statement of the chairman of the committee I will accede to his wishes and permit an amendment of the sum reducing it to $10,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. SINCLAIR. I yield.

Mr. STAFFORD. When I last saw the little Mouse River at Minot, S. Dak., in the campaign of ninety-six-

Mr. SINCLAIR. Eighteen hundred and ninety-six? Mr. STAFFORD. I am not speaking of 1796 or 1996.

Mr. SINCLAIR. I judge not.

Mr. STAFFORD. I could not conceive how that river would ever overflow. How often does this small, peaceful creek up there at Minot overflow its banks?

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from North Dakota be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. SINCLAIR. I will say to the gentleman from Wisconsin that it overflows on an average of once in five years. Of course, no one can tell when a disastrous flood will come. Whenever there is a heavy snow in the northwest beyond where the river rises in Canada there is liable to be a spring freshet that will inundate half the city of Minot. The last flood there destroyed something like a million and a half dollars' worth of property.

The engineers of the United States Army felt that considering the number of people involved that this is quite as important a matter for flood relief as similar projects in other parts of the United States.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I am sympathetically inclined toward having the National Government, through its Army engineers, cooperate with small localities which can not afford to employ high engineering skill, and as the provision is not subject to a point of order, I withdraw my reservation of a point of order and I shall not contest the appropriation.

Mr. SINCLAIR. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to modify my amendment by striking out "$15,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "$10,000."

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered. There was no objection.

The amendment as modified was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Sec. 5. For payment of interest on amounts withheld from claimants by the Comptroller General of the United States, act

March 3, 1875 (U. S. C., title 31, sec. 227), as allowed by the General Accounting Office, and certified to the Seventy-second Congress, in House Document No. 328, under the War Department, $1,641.90

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph. This is the last appropriation bill for this session that will come before this House. I wanted us to pause long enough to speak of the hard, strenuous, and grinding work the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Byrns], chairman of the committee, has done in trying to reduce the Budget estimates in all of the appropriation bills.

When you speak of having reduced supply bills $161,000,-000, no one stops to contemplate the amount of hard work that must have been done in order to bring about those reductions. Whenever the gentleman from Tennessee decreases such an item on this floor, he must have a good reason for it. He must have the support not only of his committee but he must have the support of the membership of the House. If the House did not support him in it, he could not make the reductions. And to gain the support of the House he must be able to show a good reason for the reduction.

I want to say that our chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, in my judgment, deserves the thanks of every American citizen in this time of distress for the reductions he and his committee have made. [Applause.]

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn. The Clerk concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to, and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. DISNEY, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 12443) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1932. and prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1932, and June 30, 1933, and for other purposes, and had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill, as amended, do pass.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and amendments to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them en grosse.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. Byrns, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

H. J. RES. 396 AND H. R. 11203

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes relative to two Government bills which were unanimously reported from the Ways and Means Committee.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes touching two bills reported from the Ways and Means Committee. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, one of them is House Joint Resolution 396, extending for one year the time within which American claimants may make application for payment, under settlement of war claims act of 1928, of awards of the Mixed Claims Commission and of the Tripartite Claims Commission, and a similar Senate resolution, No. 97, came over to-day. The other is H. R. 11203, to enable the collection of import duties on foreign-made goods entering the Virgin Islands through parcel-post mail, and a similar Senate bill. S. 4367, came over to-day.

These two bills were unanimously reported by the Ways and Means Committee. They are Government bills. One of them simply extends the time one year for American citizens to file claims before the Mixed Claims Commission for claims due them for damages done them during the war by Germany, Austria, and Italy. It does not involve any expense whatever out of the United States Treasury, but is simply protecting the rights of American citizens in permitting them to file claims for amounts due them. The United States Treasury has some funds available for this purpose, turned over to it by the foreign governments.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRISP. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Is the time extended one year from the date of the passage of the bill?

Mr. CRISP. One year from March 12, 1932.

Mr. BLANTON. One year from March 12, 1932?

Mr. CRISP. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Then the expiration date has not passed.

Mr. CRISP. This extends it one year.

Mr. BLANTON. Why not extend the time for one year from the passage of the bill? Then persons who have overlooked filing their claims can still do so. They are writing me about the matter. I got some letters this week, one from Concho County and another from one other county on the Mexican border, saying they had these claims and wanted to file them.

Mr. CRISP. The Treasury thinks one year is sufficient and the Senate has passed a bill to that effect.

Mr. BLANTON. This would not help all of those who have claims to file.

Mr. CRISP. No; this gives them a year from now within which to file their claims.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman said a year from March. Mr. CRISP. The time is one year from March, 1932.

Mr. BLANTON. Then they will have until March, 1933, to file their claims?

Mr. CRISP. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. That is all right.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRISP. I yield.

Mr. STAFFORD. If my memory serves me right, this extension would revive the adjudication of some claims that have been passed upon and decided by the Mixed Claims Commission. What is the real purpose of the extension of the statutory time limit?

Mr. CRISP. The law limited the time when claims should be filed, and the umpire, Mr. Boyden, died, which delayed matters. The Treasury has some money paid in that is due certain claimants. They have not been able to locate these American claimants. Certain claims have not been filed, and this extension is simply to give certain American citizens the right to present their claims.

Mr. STAFFORD. I know of one claim where the claimant did not avail himself of his privilege within the statutory limit. Is it purposed now to grant all claimants who have been neglectful in the presentation of their claims this right so that they may be paid their claims? If we extend this right to American citizens, the German claimants are going to request the same privilege against the American Government.

Mr. BLANTON. I will state to the gentleman from Wisconsin, if my colleague will permit, that some of these claimants are ignorant people living 60 miles from the railroad.

Mr. STAFFORD. And they have had three or four years in which to present their claims.

Mr. BLANTON. But they knew nothing about their rights at all

Mr. STAFFORD. I would like to examine these reports because I do not wish to open the Treasury so far as the provisions of this bill would permit.

Mr. CRISP. I told the gentlewoman from New Jersey that if I could not get these bills disposed of in five minutes, I would not stand in her way—

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman bring them up to-morrow?

Mr. CRISP. I intend, of course, to keep my promise to the gentlewoman from New Jersey [Mrs. Norton] and I shall not submit any request for their consideration. I hope the gentleman from Wisconsin will look into the matter immediately, because this is important. I will request the Speaker to recognize me to-morrow.

Mr. STAFFORD. I shall certainly examine not only the bills, but the reports that have been filed.

PETITION FROM CERTAIN VETERANS OF THE WORLD WAR

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk may read a petition of veterans of the Bonus Expeditionary Force presented to the Speaker of the House this afternoon.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEMANDS OF OUR "BUDDIES"

Whereas in the year of our Lord 1918 the flower of our country, young and strong, at the call of their Government, and with the cry of "Hero" still echoing in their ears, went forth upon the blood-soaked battlefields of France to sacrifice their all, their time, their fortunes and opportunities, their health, and even their lives in the service of our country, determined to liberate the nations of the world from oppressive militarism and to forever guarantee democratic governments upon earth; and

Whereas in part performance of promises solemnly given by the people and by the Government of these United States, the representatives of the people in Congress assembled enacted a law providing for soldiers' compensation certificates, varying in amount according to duration and place of service, calculated upon the lowest wage rate paid to unskilled laborers who had remained at home; and

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from North Carolina, who filed a minority report, is not present. I desire to ask the gentleman from Indiana if he notified the gentleman from North Carolina that he would call up this resolution this afternoon?

Mr. GREENWOOD. We only plan to dispose of the rule this afternoon, and the gentleman from North Carolina can present his objection when the bill is taken up.

Mr. STAFFORD. It is not designed to go farther than adopting the resolution this afternoon?

Mr. GREENWOOD. That is true.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Speaker, I make the point that no quorum is present.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman object to the adoption of the rule?

Mr. BULWINKLE. I do.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman withhold his point of no quorum?

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. GREENWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I yield one-half the time to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. PURNELL], and will take 10 minutes myself.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. GREENWOOD. Mr. Speaker, this is a rule to consider a bill reported from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, introduced by Mr. CROSSER. There is nothing unusual about the rule. It allows one hour debate, and then the bill is to be taken up under the 5-minute rule. The bill is for the development of American transport services overseas, to encourage the construction in the United States by American capital of American airships for use in foreign commerce, and to make certain provisions for maritime law to be applicable to the foreign commerce by airship. A similar bill was introduced in the Senate, but it was to consider both classes of airplanes, the heavier-than-air and the dirigible or lighter-than-air. Under this bill the heavier-than-air class is not considered, but an attempt is being made to give certain rights to those who would develop the lighter-than-air airship or dirigible, or Zeppelin, as it is sometimes called. A great deal of money has been expended in this country under the encouragement of the Government in the development of the dirigible for military purposes. Certain companies have invested a great deal of money in experimentation. The development of the lighterthan-air machine or Zeppelin method of transportation has passed the experimental stage both in this country and in Germany. There have been voyages made that have demonstrated the safety and utility of this class of transportation.

Already the German nation has included the use of this class of airship to carry the mail and to carry passengers and expressages from the continents of Europe to South America. Certain companies in this country have spent several million dollars in experimentation and they have reached the place now where they believe they should have the encouragement, not of money, but of the administration of the law so that they can go farther with this class of transportation. The bill asks that the maritime laws which apply to vessels on the surface of the water, and which have stood for years, be applied to this class of transportation so that liability can be fixed and they may procure insurance for the passage of this class of vessels. The bill also asks that the companies that develop this class of transportation be permitted to bid for the carriage of the mail. We think the time has come when our country should go forward in this method of carrying the mail and carrying expressage and Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREENWOOD. Yes.

Mr. PARSONS. Will there be that tendency to subsidize this proposition that there is to-day in the air mail and ocean-going mail?

Mr. GREENWOOD. That proposition is left entirely to the Postmaster General, to be considered on the same basis as vessels and airplanes that carry the mail to-day in this country. The discretion is entirely with the Post Office Department whether the contract shall be let and whether the charges are sufficient to take care of it. Of course, a higher postage charge can be made for this class of transportation than for ocean-going vessels, because an ocean-going vessel can not cross the Atlantic in less than five days.

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREENWOOD. Yes.

Mr. BRITTEN. Is there anything in the pending bill which provides for construction loan funds from the Federal Government such as apply to ships?

Mr. GREENWOOD. There is no authorization in any way of any money here to be given to any company. They merely ask for the privilege of bidding to carry the mail under contract before the Post Office Department, and the discretion is left to the Postmaster General as to whether the contract shall be let and what charge shall be made for carrying the mail in order to cover the contract. There is nothing in the bill in the way of appropriation or authorization.

I feel there are sufficient reasons why the United States should not permit foreign countries to take this class of transportation away from us. In the first place, we have men who have the capital, who have experimented and expended millions of dollars and have several hundred employees and experts who are ready to go ahead and construct these dirigibles of size sufficient to sail across the ocean without refueling. They have spent this money. They should have the same rights as surface-going vessels to bid for the carrying of the mail and to carry expressage and to carry passengers. There is no surface vessel that can cross the ocean in less than five days. These vessels can cross the ocean in slightly over two days. Much of the money used in sending cablegrams will be used in sending mail, because there will be an advantage in time. There will be encouragement to passenger traffic because of the cutting down of the time. Two days required in this service will encourage a great many to travel in this manner, who do not now make business trips. It ought to be a means of bringing more business to the United States because of the speed that is involved. I say the day of experimentation is over.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. GREENWOOD. I yield.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. About how long will it take if this bill is passed before it would be possible to provide a dirigible which might make such a trip?

Mr. GREENWOOD. Well, I could not give the exact time on that. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Crosser], the author of the bill, is more familiar with that.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. It would be several years, I imagine.

Mr. GREENWOOD. But there are companies who are ready, who have the personnel and the equipment and who are ready, if they are given the same franchise as the surface-going vessels, to at once launch into the building of this dirigible, without any subsidy from the Government, and build vessels that will make regular schedules in crossing the Atlantic as well as the Pacific.

Mr. PARSONS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREENWOOD. I yield.

Mr. PARSONS. Will this not, after all, cause a lot of ships to be abandoned and create more unemployment?

Mr. GREENWOOD. The report of the committee is to the effect that it will not, because the class of traffic that will use this service in a great many instances are not those who want to go by the cheaper plan of passage. They will charge more, and it will be those who want speed that will be willing to pay for it. At least, that is the report from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Mr. BRITTEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREENWOOD. I yield.

Mr. BRITTEN. Is it not a fact that just the contrary has occurred as applied to big ships? The more big, fast ships we get on the ocean, the more slow vessels that follow?

Mr. GREENWOOD. I think that is true.

Mr. BRITTEN. That applies to the merchant marine to-day.

Mr. GREENWOOD. Exactly. One of the men who has developed surface vessels on the Pacific coast, the late Captain Dollar, has subscribed to this theory, upon the basis that if men can send their business agents from New York to China and the Philippines and return within a period of two or three weeks, there will be a great many more representatives of our business firms who will make these trips, and it will encourage business. Although Captain Dollar had millions of dollars tied up in surface vessels, he favored this plan, because the two services would help each other.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BULWINKLE].

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Speaker, this bill which will be considered under the rule, is nothing more nor less than a subsidy. I shall vote against the rule, and I am asking the membership of the House to read the bill. If there is a single, solitary Member who is not a member of the committee, who has given any study to this bill, who can tell what it is all about, I would like to have him stand in his place and show me. The truth of the matter is that the Goodyear Co. wants to build dirigibles. While I do not care to speak much on the merits of the bill, yet I want to call to the attention of the House the fact that the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce had before it for consideration one of the most meritorious bills that was introduced in this session of Congress, and that was the repeal of the recapture clause of the Esch-Cummins law. passage of that bill would do more to aid the railroads, to take from them that cloud that is hanging over them at the present time, than any other thing we could do.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BULWINKLE. I yield.

Mr. BLANTON. What is the status of that measure now?

Mr. BULWINKLE. That was reported out of committee, and it lies there on the calendar of the House.

This bill seeks what? To permit a company to build dirigibles? They have that right. But it goes even farther than that. It permits that company to make a contract with the Postmaster General of the United States for mail pay, and when I asked the question on the hearings, "How much do you expect to get for one trip a week from this country to the Orient and return?" it amounted to the fabulous sum of $10,900,000 a year.

We are already losing $17,000,000 in the Post Office Department on the Air Mail Service, and this will only add to it by giving further authority to the Postmaster General to create another subsidy.

We always hear that this is good for national defense. There is no military man who will tell you that a dirigible is worth anything in military defense. If it is, then let us build our own. Let our own War Department have it. Let us not, under cover, give something to somebody else.

This is fallacy as far as the dirigible is concerned in actual service in time of war. The whole thing was shown in the hearings, and the proponents of the bill who came before the committee said that unless this clause was in the bill authorizing them to make a contract with the Postmaster General they did not want the bill at all.

Mr. CROSSER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BULWINKLE. I yield.

Mr. CROSSER. Would it be surprising if they were to have a proposition that they should not be allowed to carry express or passengers either? Is it not natural they would want to have the same rights as any other citizen to carry mail, express, or passengers? Suppose they were prohibited from carrying all three; what would the gentleman say?

Mr. BULWINKLE. They have the right to carry express and passengers; but they have no right to carry mail, it is true.

Mr. CROSSER. Of course not.

Mr. BULWINKLE. But under this proposed contract you are paying about ten times as much for one trip to the Orient as you pay to an ocean vessel going to the Orient. That is what I am talking about.

Mr. MAAS. As a matter of fact, we do not know what an individual trip to the Orient is going to cost. The bill simply places a limitation.

Mr. BULWINKLE. I know what they said in the committee, and I know how much they said they expected to get, and I know upon my own figures when I asked them the question they said it figured out to $10,900,000 a year.

Mr. MAAS. The gentleman has said that lighter-thanair ships have absolutely no value from a military standpoint in time of war.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Yes.

Mr. MAAS. Has the gentleman been in dirigibles?

Mr. BULWINKLE. No; I have not.

Mr. MAAS. Was the gentleman in balloons during the

Mr. BULWINKLE. No; but I have been in flying machines, and I know what is going to happen if you put one of these airships like the Los Angeles out with a whole flock of airplanes after it. It could not be used for defense.

Mr. MAAS. Let me tell the gentleman that I know if a flock of airplanes went after the Akron they could not shoot it down. They might riddle it with bullets, but they could not shoot it down if it was filled with helium.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Does the gentleman think it is proper to build up national defense by giving a subsidy to an individual?

Mr. MAAS. If it is necessary, certainly; if it is a cheaper way to develop national defense.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Is this the cheapest way? Mr. MAAS. We are thinking of the air mail.

Mr. BULWINKLE. We are thinking of paying enough on a year's contract to the Orient to pay for building three dirigibles, for they cost only $3,500,000.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BULWINKLE. I yield. Mr. BANKHEAD. As I understood the hearings before the Committee on Rules, it was not a question of national defense. The matter of using this development as a part of the defense program was not developed at all. It is merely a commercial proposition, as I understood it.

Mr. BULWINKLE. That is what I understood until the gentleman from Indiana spoke of it from the nationaldefense standpoint.

Mr. GREENWOOD. I spoke only of the experimentation that had been made along that line, not of the bill.

Mr. LAMNECK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BULWINKLE. I yield.

Mr. LAMNECK. Did I understand the gentleman to say the Government lost $17,000,000 on air mail?

Mr. BULWINKLE. Yes.

Mr. LAMNECK. I think the gentleman is in error.

Mr. BULWINKLE. And the Government loses $18,000,000 on ocean-going mail?

Mr. LAMNECK. The air mail loss is $11,500,000.

Mr. BULWINKLE. I was reading from the report of the Postmaster General.

Mr. LAMNECK. I think the gentleman is in error.

Mr. BULWINKLE. I will take the gentleman's figures of $11,000,000. How much is the loss suffered on ocean-going mail?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. BULWINKLE. I yield. Mr. LaGUARDIA. We have lost money on the subsidies provided for in the merchant marine act, but it is not the fault of the law; it is the fault of measly administration of the law.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Be that as it may, I do not know; but I know that we have lost money, and I am trying to prevent the Government from losing any more.

Mr. BRITTEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BULWINKLE. I yield.

Mr. BRITTEN. Has the gentleman concluded definitely to his own satisfaction, that by proper arrangement with the Postmaster General the carriage of this mail matter could not be made to support itself and not create this $10,000,000 or $11,000,000 deficit he talks about?

Mr. BULWINKLE. No; I have not satisfied myself, because I know that there is always a danger of never getting it when you pay it out in subsidies.

Mr. BRITTEN. Frankly, I am for this bill, because I think it is a good bill, but I am wondering if it is not possible by ordinary business management to provide for postal rates that will care for the carriage of the mail?

Mr. BULWINKLE. All I can judge about the future is what the history of the past of the air mail service shows, and we have not been able to do it in that matter. We have had time to do it, but we have not done it.

This is the only thing this bill provides for.

Look at the bill. If you will look at the sections in it, you will find it is legislation by pure reference and nothing else. It is bad parliamentary and legislative practice to pass a bill of this kind, and I am asking you to vote against it.

Mr. PARSONS. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. BULWINKLE. Yes.

Mr. PARSONS. After this bill is enacted into law how long does the gentleman anticipate it will be before these ships will be put into operation?

Mr. BULWINKLE. They said in three years after they signed the contract, if they make the contract now.

Mr. PURNELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. PARKER].

Mr. PARKER of New York. Mr. Speaker, I am in favor of this bill. It is a subsidy, and I will accept the challenge that was made by the gentleman from North Carolina. Let me say that every mail contract is a subsidy. It does not make any difference whether it is your star route, your railroad, or your steamer. You pay to have it go whether it takes one letter or whether it takes a ton. There is no use disguising that fact. Every mail contract comes under the head of a subsidy, because you do not pay for what is carried.

What is the purpose of this bill? It is perfectly simple. The Goodyear Rubber Co. has spent millions of dollars in getting together an organization. They have built the Akron, which is the largest airship in the world. It belongs to the Navy. It has shown its air-worthiness by landing in California in one of the worst storms they ever had out there. They are now building the Macon, and it will be finished next year. The Goodyear Co. have been getting together the technicians and experts they have in this plant, the best in the world.

What does this bill do? It simply permits them, after three years, to get a contract from the Postmaster General, if the Postmaster General is willing to give it to them. There is absolutely nothing in the bill which makes it mandatory. The Postmaster General does not have to use this mode of transportation if he does not want to.

Do you not all know that speed is now one of the great factors in transportation? Why is it there is a plane going from here to New York every half hour? Simply and solely on account of speed.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PARKER of New York. Yes. Mr. STAFFORD. Does the gentleman justify our Government in transporting mail to South American countries at an expenditure of $7,000,000 annually when the revenue is only $600,000?

Mr. PARKER of New York. In answer to that, I am not on the Post Office Committee.

Mr. STAFFORD. That is a subsidy, pure and simple, an outrageous subsidy, and this is only extending the subsidy

Mr. PARKER of New York. What compensation will the lighter-than-air companies get from the Government? They will get exactly the same price they are paying steamers now.

Mr. GREENWOOD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PARKER of New York. Yes. Mr. GREENWOOD. We have the right to assume that because of the increased speed this class of transportation will give, the Postmaster General will fix the rates at a point where they will more nearly cover the cost than is the case in connection with the service by vessels, because vessels can not possibly reach the speed that will be reached by this class of service.

Mr. STAFFORD. What is the basis for that assumption? Mr. GREENWOOD. Because the power to fix the rate is entirely in the hands of the Postmaster General.

Mr. PARKER of New York. There is great difference between the question that was cited by the gentleman from Wisconsin when you consider lighter-than-air ships and heavier-than-air ships. Your heavier-than-air ship will never, in all probability, be a safe ship in which to cross any body of water which has an expanse of more than a few hundred miles. You can not at present carry passengers and freight over the water in safety. The lighter-than-air ships will be able to take large loads of express and many passengers, so the mail can be carried at less expense.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. PURNELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman five additional minutes.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PARKER of New York. Yes.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. The statement has been made that any payment made in this way will be lost. I would like to suggest the revenues possible under this provision. There are millions of pounds of foreign mail being carried, and one of these dirigibles will carry 10,000 pounds. There are 45 letters to a pound, and at the rate which could be fixed by the Postmaster General of 25 cents there would be revenues of $11.25, which would bring in $110,000 and more in payment for that one shipment, and the outside payment that could be made would be $35 a mile, or less than

Mr. PARKER of New York. I thank the gentleman for that statement. There is not one thing in this bill that is mandatory on the Post Office Department. There is not one thing in this bill by which these companies can borrow one single dollar from the Government under any conditions. There is no provision for that, and it seems to me that in aid of progress we should allow these companies to at least try to finance their proposition and make their arrangements for foreign landings, which they are going to do with a foreign company, and have an air service over the Atlantic.

Mr. THATCHER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PARKER of New York. Yes.

Mr. THATCHER. Is it not a fact that the United States has a monopoly of helium?

Mr. PARKER of New York. Yes. Mr. THATCHER, And for that reason can have a monopoly on the navigation of the air for lighter-than-air

Mr. PARKER of New York. Practically so, yes; and this is an added reason why we should encourage this mode of transportation which has been demonstrated is entirely practical.

Mr. GREENWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ARNOLD].

Mr. ARNOLD. Mr. Speaker, I want the Members here to-day to think very seriously before they cast a vote in favor of the adoption of this rule or the passage of this bill. I am saying to you that there has never been a bill brought before the American Congress during all the time I have served here that was more vicious than the bill they are asking you to consider at this time. [Applause.]

It is a subsidy pure and simple, and a subsidy, gentlemen, for one concern, because we all know that the Goodyear Rubber Co. is practically supreme in the building of lighterthan-air craft.

Now, what does this bill do? It authorizes the Postmaster General to contract up to the rate of $12 a nautical mile if the airship makes but 24 knots, and if it makes a speed of 65 knots or 74.85 statute miles per hour the rate may go as high as $35 per mile for the outward trip, or $17.50 per mile for the round trip, for carrying mail, regardless of quantity. This is a pure, unadulterated subsidy.

I can not believe the Congress of the United States, in this hour of stress, with want and misery and suffering throughout the land as they are to-day, with the condition of our Budget so precarious, and with the millions of dollars of taxes heaped upon the backs of the American people, will turn around now and pass a bill that will give a subsidy of untold millions to the Goodyear Rubber Co. [Applause.]

Look at the bill and see what you are doing:

Compensation for airships of class 1 shall be the same as that provided in section 409 (a) (b) for vessels of class 1; the compensation for airships of class 2 shall be one-half that provided by section 409 (a) (b) for vessels of class 1.

Airships of class 1 are those capable of carrying 10,000 pounds of mail. Airships of class 2 are those capable of carrying 5,000 pounds of mail.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ARNOLD. I yield.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. As the gentleman has pointed out, the possibility of the contract is $12 a nautical mile; but in the statement of the majority of the committee it is pointed out that it is possible to contract up to $17.50, or $5.50 more than the gentleman has pointed out.

Mr. ARNOLD. If you will refer to the merchant marine act, section 409a, you will find on page 12 of the report the rate of compensation to be paid under this title for ocean mail service shall be fixed in the contract and such rate shall not exceed—and then it goes along with the different classes of ships—vessels of class 1, $12 per nautical mile, and in section 409b provision for increased rates based on speed of the vessel.

Of course, there is a provision in here that these contracts shall be let by competitive bidding, but where are your competitors in lighter-than-air craft?

Mr. ARNOLD. I am very sorry I have not more time. I hope you will vote down this rule; and if you do not vote down the rule, I hope you will kill the bill. [Applause.]

Mr. GREENWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Crosser].

Mr. CROSSER. Mr. Speaker, it was not my intention to consume any time in discussing this rule, because I intend to discuss the bill at length after the rule has been adopted; but after listening to several statements of a hysterical nature, it seems proper, perhaps, that we should have a little statement of the facts.

What does this bill propose to do? First of all it provides for the application of the admiralty law to airships, just as it now applies to surface ships. If we did not have that law it would be impossible to get any insurance for an airship or its cargo, because the insurance companies would not know under what law, if any, the airships would be governed so far as their responsibilities and their rights are concerned.

Secondly, it provides that American airship lines may make mutual arrangements with foreign airship lines for the use of terminal facilities and for the staggering of their schedules. The reason for this is that it was questioned by some lawyers whether or not it would be a violation of law for American airship companies to make such a contract without such legislative authority.

Third, it provides that they may bid for the carriage of mail on exactly the same terms as those with which surface ships must now comply.

My friends, we simply apply the law relating to surface ships in this respect to airships. It is not proposed to grant to airships what has been granted to the surface ships, namely, the right to borrow three-quarters of the cost of building the ship. Those undertaking to operate airships must risk their own capital before they take one step. All this "holier than thou" talk about subsidies is without foundation. Do those indulging in such talk assume that they are the only honest, faithful people and that all the officials of the Post Office Department and all other departments will be looking for an opportunity to fleece the Government? The fact is that the airship owners must submit bids.

It is not true that they are the only concern which would be interested. As a matter of fact, there is a concern in Detroit which is planning to build ships which would come under class 2. The fact that there are not now three or four companies is no reason why we should not make it possible for them to start. Mr. WILLIAMSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CROSSER. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. This would be in competition with the surface ships?

Mr. CROSSER. Yes; it was suggested along that line that this might take away a lot of business from the surface ships, but it would not take any business that they care about. One reason why we must resort to this transportation in the future is this. The cost of building ships so as to gain another nautical mile in speed is prohibitive, to make it a profitable investment. It can not be done.

For example, inquiry was made recently to find out how much it would cost to build two ships to rival the Europa and the Bremen. It was found that it would cost $60,000,000, and no one would risk such an investment, because it could not succeed commercially.

This provides for carrying a class of mail under the present traffic that must go fast. Germany has seen the wisdom of such service and the Government has cooperated in building the airships. They know that when they can go from Friedrichshafen to Pernambuco, South America, in 4½ days, when it takes a surface ship 16 days, it is to the great advantage of the German people.

Mr. GREENWOOD. I yield the gentleman five minutes more

Mr. CROSSER. They have already made 4 of 10 scheduled trips this season on schedule time. Germany knows that by making these trips to that commercially fertile country they will extend their trade much faster than they could in any other way.

What do you think Germany and Britain would do if they had the assurance that we have because of our monopoly of helium? You would see their airships scouting over the whole earth for trade while we sit back complacently telling how virtuous we are, how we are against imaginary subsidies, and overlooking the real interest of the American people.

After all, this bill merely authorizes, permits the Postmaster General, does not command him, to make contracts for the carrying of the mail, if he thinks it in the interest of the American people to do so.

Mr. MAAS. It does not call for any bids for at least three years.

Mr. CROSSER. It provides specifically that no contract shall obligate the Government to any expenditure thereunder until the expiration of three years after the passage of this act.

Mr. MAAS. And if business conditions are not improved by that time, of course, they will not be made.

Mr. CROSSER. They do not need to make any contract, and everyone knows that the chatter to the contrary is just so much buncombe. I think the cat was let out of the bag here in the opening statement of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. Bulwinkle], who complained that we had another very important bill, reported from the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee, namely, the recapture clause bill, which he felt should have been considered. The gentleman must remember that I did not oppose his bill in committee, and I have not made any effort to oppose its coming up now. I think there is merit in that bill. I think, however, that the gentleman's disappointment about the failure of the recapture-clause repeal to come up for consideration throws some light on the gentleman's opposition to the pending bill.

If we are ever going to make progress, if we are not going to stand by until every other country in the world establishes merchant-airship lines, if we are ready to do our part to advance the country's interests, then we must at least do the reasonable thing, pass this bill and let airship builders and owners have the same right to bid for the carriage of the mail as surface ships now have.

Why should they be denied this right? You know that they could not carry a single letter unless the Postmaster General did make some sort of a contract with them. Let me tell you what the prospects are. Nobody knows, as I say, exactly what the receipts for mail would be until there have been experiments with rates; but I would say this, that if only one-half of the available mail space were used, namely, 10,000 pounds, and 10 cents extra for the carriage of each letter in that 10,000 pounds were charged, the Government would take in $40,000 or $5,000 more than the maximum that could be charged under the terms of this bill, and it stands to reason that the Postmaster General will not seek an opportunity to pay the highest figure possible. It is necessary for the Postmaster General to have the authority to say what the rate of postage would be. If it were left open, if it were in a private field, these people could work that out themselves, but figuring 40 letters to the pound, and a total of 10,000 pounds, at 10 cents a letter, you will have more than what it would cost the Government by $5,000.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BRITTEN].

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I hope this resolution prevails, because it is in the interest of an infant industry that is of tremendous importance to the United States. It is not a mail proposition such as was suggested by my friend, who is afraid of a subsidy of $10,000,000 referred to by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BULWINKLE]. That is based on 52 long trips across the Pacific Ocean to the Orient in one year. Of course, that is a physical impossibility that can not be and never will be done. Those of you who know something about the Post Office Department know that hundreds of thousands of letters daily are marked by business men, by citizens of the United States, with the words "Europa" or "Bremen" across the face of the envelope, because these men want to send that mail across the ocean by the very fastest way. This dirigible postal service will do more to help business that needs expedition than any other one thing that we might do. It will take away from the Europa and the Bremen and the Majestic and the other first-class ships that are faster than ours all of the important first-class mail, because instead of going in the Leviathan or some of our slower ships that mail will go by airship; and it is not natural to believe that our Postmaster General, when it comes to drawing a contract with the Goodyear people, or whoever it may be, will use ordinary everyday common sense and make a contract that will redound to the interest of the Government rather than to the detriment of the Treasury?

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. THATCHER].

Mr. THATCHER. Mr. Speaker, I am for this rule and for this bill. I do not like subsidies myself, but as a practical matter we have to meet the competition of the world. France alone last year, I am told, spent $37,000,000 for her air activities in one or another form. If Germany to-day had the great helium reserves of the world as we have them in the Southwest and West, mammoth German airships would to-day be filling the skies circling the globe, and no nation could compete with her in the business of operating dirigible ships. The constant demand of our people is for world trade. If we are to have world trade, we must have world contacts, and such contacts must be by ships of the air as well as by ships of the sea.

We have slept upon our opportunities too long already. Germany, dependent on hydrogen, an inflammable gas, is the only country that is making substantial progress in the matter of transoceanic airship operation. The skill and enterprise of her Zeppelins and Eckners have been of a marvelous character. Shall a nation which has produced a Lindbergh and an Earhart, and which has already constructed great ships of the air, prove less skilled and less enterprising than Germany? American business enterprise has demonstrated its capacity to build even greater dirigibles than the Graf Zeppelin. Already American business enterprise has demonstrated its capacity to produce all the helium which may be required for commercial or other operations; and our helium supplies are practically inexhaustible.

The enactment of this measure creates no actual obligation on the part of our Government, but it does open to business enterprise in our land the door of hope and opportunity. Without this incentive American commercial airships will not be built for years to come. In the meantime other countries will monopolize this great field of enterprise.

If this measure becomes a law, and American airships are thereupon constructed and placed in operation between the continents of the world, they take their chances on securing contracts for the transportation of our foreign mails under the terms of the bill. They will be permitted to qualify just as under our merchant marine laws the ships of the sea sailing under the American flag are permitted to qualify, and secure contracts for the carriage of our mails into foreign ports.

The passage of this bill will constitute a highly important milestone in the march-or may I not say the "flight"-of progress. Under the encouragement which this enacted measure will give, backed by the helium reserves which our own, and no other, country possesses, America will soon lead the world in transoceanic airship operations; and it should soon be able to dominate and control this form of air transportation throughout the earth. What country can compete with us in this unique and advanced field if we but utilize wisely and efficiently our advantages and opportunities? And if and when that day of dominance and control shall come, I am sure that American enterprise will so conduct itself as to win the favor and cooperation of all the other countries. Commercial enterprise in other lands recognizing the signal advantages which are ours, because of our exclusive and all-sufficient helium gas supply, will come into the picture with us in varying forms of operation of mutual advantage.

We must keep pace with the times. We must stay ahead of the procession or be trampled under foot. Helium constitutes, for us, a talent which, if properly employed, will yield not only the Biblical 10 talents of return, but talents one hundred thousand fold, and even more. The possibilities of the future are beyond our power to forecast.

In the pioneer stages of our commercial airship enterprises, the Government can aid, and must aid, just as it is undertaking to aid our shipping interests in building up our American merchant marine. If this measure is passed, and commercial airships are thereupon constructed, contracts must be executed by the Postmaster General for the carriage of our transoceanic air mails, and appropriations must be voted by Congress for those contracts before the operators of these ships will be able to derive any benefits under the act. Personally speaking, I believe that American business enterprise will be risking much in the earlier years, even though this bill becomes a law; but it is characteristic of the skill, the courage, and the daring of the masters of American industry to undertake and to achieve success under conditions of grave hazard and difficulty. Let us give them this chance, and the future will, I am sure, attest the wisdom of our action. The airship has come to stay just as has the automobile and the airplane. The time will come when airship operations will prove as stable. as profitable, as any other form of transportation, and as that time approaches the need for governmental encouragement and aid will the more and more decrease. Quick transit means everything in this modern age of haste. Passengers and freight will soon build up the revenues of airship operations, and the need for Federal aid-for the so-called mail subventions-will correspondingly diminish.

I am willing to trust the committee that studied, amended, and favorably reported this bill, because I know that its members have given it their best thought and judgment. It is permissive; it is not mandatory. Nature has put into our hands this great instrument of commerce and national defense—these great helium reserves.

Mr. Laguardia. Are there any in Kentucky? Mr. THATCHER. There are none in Kentucky. By means of this strange noninflammable gas, helium, these great airships may be navigated in two days across the Atlantic, two days to Hawaii from the Pacific coast, four or five days to the Orient; and all this means quicker contacts, which will bring world trade to us if we are but wise enough to employ the wonderful talent with which our Nation has been endowed.

Why does Germany send the Graf Zeppelin trip after trip to South America and to other distant lands, except for the quick contacts that are made thereby and the trade which is opened up by means of those contacts? [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired.

All time has expired.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the resolution.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Greenwood) there were ayes 127 and noes 62.

Mr. ARNOLD. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground there is not a quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Two hundred and twenty-seven Members are present; a quorum.

So the resolution was agreed to.

On motion by Mr. Greenwood, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to was laid on the table.

INEQUALITY OF TARIFF ON REFINED SUGAR

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, as illustrative of some of the inequalities in the Smoot-Hawley tariff bill. I would like to have a letter from the employees of the Revere Sugar Refinery, similar to many other letters from this industry, printed in the RECORD and referred to the Finance Committee. Before sending it to the desk for that purpose, however, I would like to quote two paragraphs from the letter:

Now we find, under the present law, that the duty on imported raw sugar, when applied to the finished product, is greater than the duty on sugar if imported in refined form. Quick to take advantage of this loophole, refineries have been built in the tropical countries, where wages and living conditions do not approach our own hard-won American standards, and the sugar is being dumped into the United States. In other words, the dual advantage of peon labor and lower rate of duty allows these foreign refiners to cut under the cost price of the American finished product. finished product.

These facts are substantiated by figures compiled by our Government, which show that in 1925 there was practically no refined sugar imported into the United States, and that since importations have increased until in the one week ending May 21, 1932, 25,000,000 pounds of refined were dumped into the country. If this keeps up the domestic sugar refining industry faces

I hope the United States Tariff Commission, before whom an investigation is pending, may take notice of this serious inequality.

There being no objection, the letter was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

United States Senator, Senate Office Building,

Dear Senator Walsh: We are taking the liberty of addressing you on behalf of 500 to 600 employees of the Revere Sugar Refinery, situated in Charlestown, Mass. Many of these men are residents of your district and your constituents.

A situation has arisen in the sugar-refining industry of the United States which is without precedent and which threatens the means of livelihood of every man engaged in the business of refining sugar in America. Peculiarly, this situation has come about through a loophole in the tariff laws of the country, which amounts practically to a subsidy for foreign refined sugars.

As you are undoubtedly aware, the bulk of the sugar supply of this country originates in Cuba. For centuries this product has been brought into the United States in its raw state and refined at strategically located refineries along the Atlantic seaboard. These refineries are models of American industry and efficiency. No finer food plants, from the standpoint of protection of the community health, can be found anywhere in the world. They employ American citizens at a wage commensurate with American standards of living and purchase American-produced supplies. The investment of capital in these plants and their equipment is colossal. Faw sugar under every tariff law has always paid a very extermination.

Now, we find under the present law that the duty on imported raw sugar, when applied to the finished product, is greater than the duty on sugar if imported in refined form. Quick to take advantage of this loophole refineries have been built in the tropical countries where wages and living conditions do not approach our own hard-won American standards, and the sugar is being dumped into the United States. In other words, the dual advantage of "peon" labor and lower rate of duty allows these foreign refineries to cut under the cost price of the American finished product.

These facts are substantiated by figures compiled by our Government, which show that in 1925 there was practically no refined sugar imported into the United States, and that since importations have increased until in the one week ending May 21, 1932, 25,000,000 pounds of refined were dumped into the country. If this keeps up, the domestic sugar-refining industry faces extermination.

Just for a moment let us look at the matter from a personal standpoint. Every home in the United States uses refined sugar. It is a food product which has more "good will" than any other made. You never question the quality of the sugar you habitually purchase at the store. Why? Because for centuries sugar has been refined under the most careful supervision and strictest regulation until the confidence of the public in its purity is as steadfast as is humanly possible. Sugar refined in foreign countries without the public-protecting Government health and pure food laws can not be looked upon with any such confidence.

What, then, is the answer to this problem? In order for the tariff on refined sugars.

We, therefore, respectfully petition you as a representative of the people of Massachusetts to initiate, foster, and aid either in Congress or before the Tariff Commission a change in the tariff with a view to immediately exterminating this menace.

Yours very truly,

PLANT QUARANTINE

Mr. BARBOUR presented a letter from the Secretary of Agriculture relative to the matter of plant quarantine, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE, Washington, June 7, 1932.

Hon. W. WARREN BARBOUR, United States Senate.

United States Senate.

Dear Senator Barbour: I have for acknowledgment your letter of May 5, with which you transmitted the statement on the principles and procedure in plant quarantine prepared and indorsed by the agricultural and horticultural interests of New Jersey.

The introduction to the statement indicates that the purpose of the statement is to endeavor to clarify the national policy on quarantines and to present a constructive method of operation. It is further noted that the announcement suggests that the problem should be considered from a long-time viewpoint, and the statement is designed to lay the groundwork for a new viewpoint on the whole subject of plant quarantine.

This indication of your interest in the subject of plant quarantine is appreciated, and we very largely indorse your entire statement. It represents substantially the present practice in the department, and the principles it outlines have been frequently discussed and indorsed at meetings of scientific workers of this department and of the various States in recent years. The indorsement of these policies by the New Jersey delegation in Concrete is pleasing.

department and of the various States in recent years. The indorsement of these policies by the New Jersey delegation in Congress is pleasing.

Paragraph 1. The nature of a quarantine: Quotes from a preliminary statement on quarantine principles prepared by the National Plant Board. The statement on quarantine principles as finally adopted by the National Plant Board was prepared and approved by the plant-quarantine officials of the various States of the United States after consultation with the regulatory officials of the United States Department of Agriculture. The statement before issuance was reviewed by the Plant Quarantine and Control Administration of this department, hence is something we are in entire sympathy with. However, your delegation knows full well that it is a comparatively simple matter to compose a statement of general policy. When, however, such a policy has been outlined, the real accomplishment is to bring into harmony with that policy all the various angles and ramifications of a problem so complex as the regulation of the agricultural imports into this country from all foreign countries and the regulation of those commodities which must be regulated to prevent the spread of injurious pests in this country. This is more or less of a constant problem, but we believe it is being satisfactorily met as complications arise from time to time, as they inevitably must and will. Naturally, we bring to the solution of these problems all the advice and information available from trade interests and specialists outside the department in addition to the information available in the department.

Paragraph 2. Amendment of the plant quarantine act of August the department.

Paragraph 2. Amendment of the plant quarantine act of August Paragraph 2. Amendment of the plant quarantine act of August 20, 1912: Proposes that the fundamental quarantine act of 1912 be amended in such a way as to require the United States Secretary of Agriculture to cause a determination to be made of the prospective benefits of the proposed quarantine and the prospective damages accruing by reason of its action and to place the said proposed quarantine only in case the prospective benefits to the country far outweigh the prospective damages.

Precisely the thing sought by the proposed amendment now exists in section 8 of the plant quarantine act. This section makes it the duty of the Secretary of Agriculture to determine the need for any quarantine; it directs him, if the public interests permit, to establish rules and regulations pertaining to that quarantine, and it requires him to give advance notice of and to hold a public hearing where all interested parties may be heard before he shall hearing where all interested parties may be heard before he shall promulgate such a quarantine.

No quarantine has been placed by the Federal Government with-out a public hearing and without fully considering the prospec-tive benefits of the proposed quarantine and the prospective dam-ages. Since the plant quarantine act, as at present constituted, provides for everything that is suggested in the proposed amendment to the plant quarantine act, it would seem that no amend-conviction that some quarantines have been laid in the past and are therefore likely to be laid in the future, which involve more injury to the country's business than any benefit derived from them." Of course, no such firm conviction could Paragraph 2 of the statement further says that "it is our firm them." Of course, no such firm conviction could prevail unless there was in mind some specific example of a quarantine which involved more injury to the country's business than any benefit derived from it, and a reference to some specific example of such a quarantine would provide an opportunity to study this paragraph with better understanding.

Paragraph 3. Restriction on interstate movement a Federal function: Expresses the belief that "where restrictions on the movement of plants and plant products are to be placed and enforced for the purpose of preventing or delaying spread of injurious insects and plant diseases, new to and not heretofore distributed in the United States, it is the firm conviction that such restriction should be placed, enforced, and financed by the Federal Government, because any attempt to restrict interstate commerce of this sort by State action is bound to be chaotic and the benefits derived from such restrictions by the Federal Government are enjoyed by that section of the United States outside of the infested zone."

This should doubtless be interpreted to mean that States should be denied the right to place restrictions on the interstate movement of products because of possible spread of insect pests and plant diseases. Irrespective of any opinion which might be held by the department on this point, the amendment of April 13, 1926, to section 8 of the plant quarantine act provides that "until the Secretary of Agriculture shall have made a determination that Secretary of Agriculture shall have made a determination that such a quarantine is necessary and has duly established the same with reference to any dangerous plant disease or insect infestation, as herein above provided, nothing in this act shall be construed to prevent any State, Territory, insular possession or district from promulgating, enacting, and enforcing any quarantine prohibiting or restricting the transportation of any class of nursery stock, plant, fruit, seed, or other product or article subject to the restrictions of this section into or through such State, Territory, District, or portion thereof from any other State, Territory, District, or portion thereof when it shall be found by the State, Territory, or District promulgating or enacting the same that such dangerous plant trict promulgating or enacting the same that such dangerous plant disease or insect infestation exists in such other State, Territory, District, or portion thereof."

The power to protect themselves by State quarantine was found by the courts to have been taken away from the States by the plant quarantine act. This power as to diseases and pests not covered by a Federal quarantine was restored by the amendment above quoted, which was sought by many of the States, and it is believed that those same States would vigorously oppose the surgender or abroaction and States would vigorously oppose the surgender or abroaction and States would vigorously oppose the surgender.

believed that those same States would vigorously oppose the sur-render or abrogation of that power.

It is difficult for me to believe that the agricultural and horti-cultural interests of New Jersey really intended to propose and recommend that States should be denied the right to place such restrictions on the interstate movement of products as might be necessary in order to protect their territory against the introduc-tion of insect pests and plant diseases. The State of New Jersey, in cooperation with this department, has at much expense and effort, and largely for the protection of its own forested regions effort, and largely for the protection of its own forested regions, been engaged for about 10 years in the eradication of an outbreak of gypsy moth. This work has apparently reached a successful conclusion. The insect, however, is still strongly established over large areas in New England.

large areas in New England.

If through the failure of an appropriation measure or otherwise the Federal Government at some future time should be unable to carry out the necessary protective measures in New England to prevent the spread of this pest, I am sure those responsible for the agricultural and forest interests of New Jersey would not want to find themselves helpless on account of Federal legislation and unable to take any legal measures to prevent the reintroduction of this insect into New Jersey. Should the suggestion, however, that States be denied the right to place interstate quarantines be met by favorable congressional action, it seems unlikely that Congress would deprive the States of the power to protect themselves and at the same time withhold funds to permit a similar degree met by favorable congressional action, it seems unlikely that Congress would deprive the States of the power to protect themselves and at the same time withhold funds to permit a similar degree of protection to the States from the Federal Government.

The department is not in possession of information at this time to indicate that the existing State quarantines are unnecessary, at least from the standpoint of uninfested States. Therefore, to comply with the thought expressed in this paragraph would mean the appropriation of a tremendous amount of money. It has been the belief of the department that where one or two States, or a small group of States, may be uninfested it is more economical and just as effective and reasonable for these one or two States or few States to enforce an embargo or a restrictive quarantine against the infested States or areas of the country than it would be for the Federal Government to attempt to enforce a quarantine over a great area for the protection of a small uninfested area. Hence the department approved the amendment to the plant quarantine act which restored to the States on April 13, 1926, the power to place interstate quarantines in the absence of action power to place interstate quarantines in the absence of action by the Secretary of Agriculture. The right of States to protect themselves from pest introduction whenever such protection is not afforded by the Federal Government is an important power and one which many of the States will undoubtedly jealously guard.

Paragraph 4. Suppression as a means of preventing spread of a Federal function: Points out that, in addition to the cost of Federal quarantine enforcement when suppression measures are to be undertaken within the limit of any State for the purpose of preventing or delaying spread into outside areas, the cost of such measures should be borne by the Federal Government.

We are in full sympathy with this principle. In practice, of course, suppressive measures almost invariably benefit both the infested and the noninfested State. While a rigorous distinction can not be made between expenditures primarily directed to the protection of outside areas and those intended to benefit the infested territory, the principle of such a separation, so far as the can not be made between expenditures primarily directed to the protection of outside areas and those intended to benefit the infested territory, the principle of such a separation, so far as the amount can be determined, has been consistently followed. In the eradication of the Mediterranean fruit fly in Florida, for example, the Federal Government spent $6,710,411, while the State of Florida spent $378,768.68. In the eradication of the pink boilworm in sections of Texas, Louisiana, and Arizona, while the States participated in the payment of reimbursement to farmers for losses incurred through the enforced nonproduction of cotton, the Federal Government paid almost the entire cost of cleaning up the fields and suppressing the insect. In the eradication of the date palm scale in California and Arizona, until comparatively recently, the Federal Government has provided all the funds for the clean-up work. In the eradication of the Mexican fruit fly in the Rio Grande Valley of Texas the Federal Government has paid for almost all the clean-up work. In the maintenance of the Barrier Zone between the gipsy-moth-infested area in New England and New York the Federal Government has spent a large proportion of the money for cleaning up and preventing spread west of this zone. In eradicating the gipsy moth in the State of New Jersey the Federal Government contributed appreciably to the expense of eradication, although New Jersey, as a matter of protection to herself, did contribute quite heavily also to this campaign. In clean-up and control measures against the European corn borer the Federal Government has spent far more than campaign. In clean-up and control measures against the European corn borer the Federal Government has spent far more than have the States in control measures.

is assumed that this paragraph may refer to such problems as the certification of nursery stock out of the State of New Jersey in the enforcement of the Japanese beetle quarantine. The State of New Jersey contributes to this inspection of nurseries and certification of plants for movement outside the quarantined area. This paragraph may have been meant to suggest that this expense should have been borne by the Federal Government; however, we believe that it is the duty of the people in an infested area to place their products in such condition as to render fested area to place their products in such condition as to render them not dangerous to uninfested areas in other parts of the country. Therefore the inspection and certification work being necessary to the movement of New Jersey products should be supported financially by the State of New Jersey.

Paragraph 5. Suppression as a means of protecting infested territory a State function: Announces the belief of your delegation that suppression of injurious insects or plant diseases whether new or not heretofore widely distributed in the United States or old and widely distributed in the United States, in so far as this said suppression applies to the protection of the States or infested territory, should be carried on and financed by the State itself. Certainly, there can be no quarrel on this point.

Paragraph 6. Federal quarantine and suppression efforts within a State should involve cooperative understanding: Announces that all quarantine enforcement and all suppression undertaken by the Federal Government within the limits of a State should be car-all quarantine enforcement and all suppression undertaken by the Federal Government within the limits of a State should be carried out on the basis of a cooperative understanding between the Federal Government and the State Government.

We can agree with this principle. No other arrangement could satisfactorily prevail and no other arrangement has prevailed in the past. In many instances in which infested areas occupy only parts of certain States, the Federal Government would have no authority to enforce quarantine lines without State cooperation. Even where infestations occupy entire States and cooperation with the States might perhaps not be legally essential, the department has always worked in close direct touch with the plant-quarantine officials of the States concerned. In fact the department has no knowledge of any instance where quarantine work has been done has always worked in close direct touch with the plant-quarantine officials of the States concerned. In fact the department has no knowledge of any instance where quarantine work has been done in a State without a full understanding with the State involved. Paragraph 7. Position with regard to present plant quarantines: States that so far as quarantines now in effect are concerned on account of insect or fungous pests, the gradual abandonment of these quarantines is favored except where it has been demonstrated that spread can be definitely controlled by regulatory measures, and such abandonment or comprehensive revision of regulations pertaining to quarantines now in effect should be carried out only upon the basis of a studied policy in the formation of which all interests affected have been consulted. This has been, is now, and will continue to be the policy of the department. Public hearings are held before a quarantine is put into effect as required by law. Public conferences or hearings are held when removal of a quarantine is contemplated at which time all interests affected are consulted and given an opportunity to be heard, not because it is required by law, but because it is only fair, just, and sensible.

Paragraph 8. Position with regard to the extermination of new pests is as follows: "When the Japanese beetle was first found in 1916 it covered an area of not more than 1 square mile. It is entirely probable that if adequate funds had been available this insect might have been wiped out and large succeeding expenditures avoided. This is only one instance, of which there have been a number in the past and doubtless will be a number in the future, where prompt action with adequate funds might have effected tremendous future savings. It is therefore our firm conbeen a number in the past and doubtless will be a number in the future, where prompt action with adequate funds might have effected tremendous future savings. It is therefore our firm conviction that measures should be taken and moneys appropriated, making it possible to exterminate the injurious insect or plant disease if when first found such procedure seems practical."

Here we are urged to immediately undertake extermination measures when an insect is first found in this country. This paragraph apparently contemplates the making available of what might be termed an emergency fund so that such action can be might be termed an emergency fund so that such action can be promptly undertaken when necessity arises. Whereas paragraph 2 insists that the Secretary of Agriculture before placing a quaran-tine must cause determination to be made of the prospective benefits of the proposed quarantine and the prospective benefits of the proposed quarantine and the prospective damages accruing by reason of its action, and to place the said proposed quarantine only in case the prospective benefits to the country far outweigh the prospective damages, paragraph 8 insists that when an insect is found, eradication measures should be immediately undertaken if such procedure seems practical. Since eradication measures involve the promulgation and enforcement of a quarantine, it is just a little bit hard to reconcile the principle expressed in paragraph 2 with that expressed in paragraph 8. When the Japanese beetle was first found in the United States ciple expressed in paragraph 2 with that expressed in paragraph 8. When the Japanese beetle was first found in the United States it could not on the basis of its history in Japan be classed as an especially injurious insect. The provisions of your paragraph 2 could not have been literally followed with any hope of preventing or retarding spread. So that the Japanese beetle provides a most graphic illustration of the necessity for taking immediate action, even though a pest has not been proven to be especially damaging, thereby establishing the principle that we must assume that introduced pests are potentially dangerous and that quarantine and extermination measures must be taken even though the insects have not proven themselves to be dangerous. We therefore agree fully with the principle expressed in paragraph 3. The statement concludes with the petition that the Congress and the Secretary of Agriculture develop a new procedure with reference to plant quarantine to the end that interests of economy may be served and burdens resting upon the people of New Jersey and other States similarly affected may be removed to the point consistent with the general public interest. You announce the sincere belief that any new approach to this problem should be based on the foregling principles and procedure.

May I respectfully suggest that an approach to this problem based on the principles and procedure subscribed to and submitted by your honorable delegation would not be a new approach at all, but would be the same approach that has been used by the department throughout the enforcement of the plant quarantine act since it was passed by Congress in 1912. I am sure that a thorough study of the principles outlined in the statement which you submitted, together with a study of the procedure followed by the department in the enforcement of the plant quarantine act, would convince anyone that the statement on the principles and procedure in plant quarantine prepared and indorsed by the agricultural and horticultural interests of New Jersey constitutes a rather vigorous indorsement of the policy of the United States Department of Agriculture in the conduct of its plant quarantine effects. We releave and appreciate this evidence of interest tine affairs. We welcome and appreciate this evidence of interest in this important work.

It has been called to my attention that this statement was printed in the Congressional Record of May 5, 1932. May I request, therefore, that the same consideration be given to this reply.

The inclosures which accompanied your letter are returned

Sincerely.

ARTHUR M. HYDE, Secretary.

UNIFORM REQUIREMENTS AFFECTING GOVERNMENT CONTRACTS

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, early in the session I introduced a bill (S. 1395) to establish uniform requirements affecting Government contracts, and for other purposes. After introducing the bill there was some question respecting one feature of it which might be somewhat in dispute. I therefore desire to perfect the bill and insert in it a provision to correspond with what was in my mind at the time I introduced the bill originally.

I therefore ask unanimous consent to withdraw from the Committee on the Judiciary the bill (S. 1395) to establish uniform requirements affecting Government contracts, and for other purposes, and to introduce another bill in its stead.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, that order will be made.

The bill (S. 4875) to establish uniform requirements affecting Government contracts, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

THREATENING COMMUNICATIONS IN THE MAILS

Mr. McKELLAR submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 96) to punish the sending through the mails of certain threatening communications, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

UNEMPLOYMENT RELIEF-AMENDMENT

Mr. SHEPPARD submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. ENLARGEMENT OF YELLOWSTONE AND GRAND TETON NATIONAL PARKS

(a) The methods employed by the National Park Service to dis-burage persons from making entry and settlement on public and forest reserves in said region so that the boundaries of said Yellowstone and Grand Teton National Parks might be conveniently extended, and the efforts made by the National Park Service to secure the cooperation of other bureaus and departments of the Government in discouraging, directly or indirectly, entry or residence on such public lands and in national forests; and

For the purposes of this resolution the committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to hold such hearings, to sit and act at such times and places during the sessions and recesses of the Senate in the Seventy-second Congress until the final report is submitted, to employ such ciercal and other assistants, to require by subpœna or otherwise, the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents, to administer such caths, to take such testimony, and to make such expenditures as it deems advisable. MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives by Mr. Haltigan, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 12443) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1932, and prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1932, and June 30, 1933, and for other purposes, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed without amendment the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 97) extending for one year the time within which American claimants may make application for payment under the settlement of war claims act of 1928 of awards of the Mixed Claims Commission and of the Tripartite Claims Commission.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED

The bill (H. R. 12443) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1932, and prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1932, and June 30, 1933, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

UNEMPLOYMENT RELIEF

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar 836, a bill (S. 4860) to provide for loans to States for the relief of distress arising from unemployment, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from New York?

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, since we have the District of Columbia appropriation bill ready for consideration and are very anxious to get it through in order to send it to conference, will the Senator agree that his bill may be temporarily laid aside so we may take up that appropriation

Mr. WAGNER. I doubt whether we shall take very much time in disposing of the bill, which has been pending several days, and which I think is agreed to by practically the entire Senate. If unanimous consent is not given, I shall have to move to proceed to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, is this the unemployment relief bill?

Mr. WAGNER. It is the relief bill.

Mr. BORAH. Covering what portion of the relief program?

Mr. WAGNER. Providing $300,000,000 for relief of the destitute and needy.

Mr. BORAH. I think it ought to be disposed of. We can better dispose of that matter immediately, it seems to me, than to let it wait on appropriation measures.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the unanimous-consent request proposed by the Senator from New York?

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President, I certainly have no objection to that portion of the relief program providing for $300,000,000 for the States to be distributed in accordance with the wishes of the authorities of the various States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from New York?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That (a) to aid in furnishing relief and work relief to the needy and distressed people residing in the several States and in relieving the hardship resulting from unemployment, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized and empowered to make loans to the several States for such purposes out of the funds made available by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act, under the terms and conditions hereinafter set Corporation act, under the terms and conditions hereinafter set forth, and in an aggregate amount of not to exceed $300,000,000. Such amount shall be apportioned among the several States in the proportion which their population bears to the total population of the States of the United States according to the Fifteenth Decennial Census. Such apportionment shall be made by the corporation within 10 days after the date of enactment of this act, and the corporation shall immediately certify to the governors of the several States the amount apportioned to each State. The amounts so apportioned to any State shall be available for loans to such State for the purposes of this act until the expiration of two years after the date of enactment of this act.

(b) The aggregate amount of the loans made to any State under this act shall not be in excess of the amount apportioned to such State. Each such loan shall bear interest at the rate of 5 per cent per annum. The amount of the loan or loans to each State, with interest at the rate of 5 per cent per annum upon any unpaid balance, shall be reimbursed to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation by making annual deductions, beginning with the fiscal balance, shall be reimbursed to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation by making annual deductions, beginning with the fiscal year 1935, from moneys payable under regular apportionments made from future Federal grants in aid of the States for the construction of highways and rural post roads, of an amount equal to one-fifth of the share which such State would be entitled to receive under such apportionment, except for the provisions of this act, or of an amount equal to one-fifth of the principal of the loan or loans made pursuant to this act and all accrued interest on such loan or loans to the date of such deduction, whichever is the lesser, until the sum of such deductions shall equal the total amount of such loan or loans and all accrued interest thereon. Whenever any such deduction is made, the Secretary of the Treasamount of such loan or loans and all accrued interest thereon. Whenever any such deduction is made, the Secretary of the Treasury shall immediately pay to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation the amount so deducted. Such deduction shall not be made with respect to any State which, within a period of two years from the date of enactment of this act, shall enter into an agreement with the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for the repayment of the amount of the loan or loans to such State with interest thereon as berein provided in such install master and repayment of the amount of the loan or loans to such State with interest thereon as herein provided, in such installments and upon such terms as may be agreed upon between such State and the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, unless such State shall be in default in the performance of the terms of such agreement. Such an agreement may be made after the expiration of such 2-year period with respect to the repayment of the unpaid principal of any such loan or loans, with interest thereon as herein provided. In the case of a default in any such agreement, the agreement shall thereupon be terminated and reimbursement of the amount of the unpaid principal and interest of any such loan or loans shall be made by making deductions in the manner above the amount of the unpaid principal and interest of any such loan or loans shall be made by making deductions in the manner above provided from moneys payable to such State under regular apportionments made from future Federal grants in aid of the States for the construction of highways and rural post roads, beginning with the fiscal year next following such default.

SEC. 2. Any State making application for a loan under this act shall, through its governor, certify the necessity for such loan, and that its own resources, including moneys then available and which can be made available by the State, its civil subdivisions, and private contributions, are inadequate to meet its relief needs. Any funds made available to a State pursuant to this act shall be administered by the governor, or under his direction, and upon his responsibility, subject to the laws of the State.

SEC. 3. The amount of any loan authorized under this act shall be paid to the State upon delivery by the State to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation of a receipt for such amount, which receipt shall state that the loan is accepted subject to the terms of this act.

terms of this act.

Mr. WAGNER obtained the floor.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield to me?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. WAGNER. I will yield to the Senator for a question. Mr. HOWELL. I desire to make a statement. I ask the Senator to yield that I may make a statement and a request.

Mr. WAGNER. Very well; I yield. Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President, those who represent agriculture in the Senate have no desire to interfere with the passage of the pending relief measure, but we do desire to make a request for unanimous consent at this time, that immediately following the disposition of the pending measure, Calendar No. 780, being Senate bill 4536, to amend the agricultural marketing act, approved June 15, 1929, may be taken up and considered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska asks unanimous consent that the agricultural relief bill named by him may be taken up for consideration immediately following the disposition of the bill which is now before the Senate. Is there objection?

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President, what was the request of the Senator from Nebraska? I was engaged for the moment and did not hear it.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, it has been the general practice-

Mr. WAGNER. I think I have the floor, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York yielded to the Senator from Nebraska for the purpose of proposing a unanimous-consent request, and that must be disposed of.

Mr. WAGNER. Very well.

Mr. BINGHAM. It has been the general practice to permit appropriation bills to have the right of way. They generally do not take long. It is appreciated that usually they have the right of way even over the unfinished business, the unfinished business being temporarily laid aside in order that they may be considered. I hope there will be no exception made in this case and that we may have an opportunity to pass the District of Columbia appropriation bill to-day at an early hour, so that it may go to conference.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Chair understand the Senator from Connecticut to object?

Mr. BINGHAM. I have no desire to object to the request which the Senator from Nebraska makes, but I ask him, if his request shall be granted, to permit the District bill to be taken up immediately when his bill shall come before the

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is within the province of the Senate to determine by a series of unanimous-consent requests what measures shall come before it.

Mr. HOWELL. I will withdraw my request for the present. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska withdraws his request. The Senator from New York has the floor. The bill will be read for the information of the Senate.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, there appears to be no opposition to the bill, and I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the bill may be dispensed with.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, there is no opposition to the bill, but we would like to have a chance to read it before we vote upon it.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, let the bill be read.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I wish briefly to explain the bill. I suppose there is no need of any further debate upon the measure, because the debate which we had some time ago in this body, when we had under consideration the La Follette-Costigan bill, applies to the conditions at the present time, except at that time a majority of the Senate was not ready to agree upon the relief plan proposed. I think since then conditions have become even more tragic and more serious, and I am persuaded that those who then regarded it as a foreign field for the Government to assume the responsibility of feeding the hungry and unsheltered now are convinced that the Federal Government should assume its responsibility in the task of relieving human misery. The bill is an attempt to compose the differences which divided the Senate at the time we had under consideration the La Follette-Costigan bill and the Walsh-Black-Bulkley proposal. An analysis of the vote, when we considered the former relief bill, shows that a majority of the Senate at that time was for some form of relief, but there was a difference of opinion as to the method for the distribution of the funds provided.

This bill provides that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation may loan to the States altogether a total of $300,-000,000, which is to be apportioned among the States according to population, the loans or advances to be made upon the certification of the governor that there is need in the State for such relief and that funds both public and private available in the State are insufficient to cope with the situation. Then upon such certificate being filed, the State, up to the limit of its apportionment, is entitled to its proportion of the funds.

Mr. THOMAS of Idaho. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Austin in the chair). Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. THOMAS of Idaho. If it will not interrupt the Senator unduly, I should like to ask him a question regarding the $300,000,000 which is to come from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. I notice that under the bill $300,000,000 may be loaned by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. The question I want to ask is, Is that $300,000,000 to come out of the limit of $2,000,000,000 which the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized under the law creating it to advance?

Mr. WAGNER. I think there is some question about that as the bill now reads, so I have prepared an amendment, after discussing the matter with the junior Senator from Idaho, which provides for an additional authorization of $300,000,000 to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to take care of that situation.

Mr. THOMAS of Idaho. Very well.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. DILL. As I understand, this bill provides only for loans to the States; it does not make any provision for loans to cities or municipalities?

Mr. WAGNER. Under the bill the States, after they receive funds as provided, are to make such disposition of them as may be required by the municipalities in the respective States. For instance, in New York to-day the State government contributes a portion of its funds to take care of the needy within the city of New York. So, under this bill, when funds are advanced to a State they are subject to disposition under the laws of the State, and that is not our affair, except that the purpose must be to take care of the needy and destitute.

Mr. DILL. Then the Reconstruction Finance Corporation will give no consideration to appeals from the cities but only to those from the governors of States?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes; that is what the bill provides.

Mr. DILL. Did the committee consider the fact that there are great cities that are in such need that they ought to be loaned money on the basis of their own security without involving the remainder of the State?

Mr. WAGNER. That raises an entirely different question. I may say to the Senator that we have attempted to confine the use of this $300,000,000 to take care of the needy, the hungry, and the unsheltered. When we get into the domain of lending to municipalities upon their bonds a different situation is presented.

Mr. DILL. No; I am not speaking of that, Mr. President; I am speaking of loaning to cities in order to feed their

Mr. WAGNER. That will be done through the State administration. It will be assumed that the money will be distributed among the municipalities by the State governments as the needs are made manifest. That is being done now all over the country. State appropriations are made to help municipalities. It was attempted even in Illinois, but the difficulty there was that they were not able to sell their bonds. However, the money which the State bonds were to provide was to be used to take care of the needs of the city of Chicago. Now the State will be able to get funds under this bill to enable it to take care of such needs.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, on reading the bill I am impressed with the provision that the money is to be repaid by the States by deduction from future allocations of road funds, and I suppose that there is not any method whereby money could be loaned to the cities on the same basis. However. I can foresee a most difficult situation in some States, where the governor, representing the rest of the State, may be unwilling to bind the State for the sake of a single town or city.

Mr. WAGNER. I do not know of any case, I may say to the Senator, where the State government has not been willing to cooperate with any municipality where people were starving or were unsheltered. To refuse to do so would be such an act of inhumanity that I can not conceive of such a situation; and, as a matter of fact, throughout the country, the States are cooperating with their municipalities to take care of the needy.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield. Mr. PITTMAN. In reference to the question the Senator from Washington has asked, as to whether or not the committee which joined with the Senator in drafting this bill took into consideration the question raised as to direct loans to cities and municipalities, I should like to say that it was taken into consideration, and it was determined that there were probably several thousand towns and cities that would apply and that the corporation would have to have a very large body of employees or agents to determine whether they were entitled or not entitled to advances, and to attempt to apportion the amounts. Under this proposition a State is not going to borrow money and pay interest on it unless it knows that it is going to be needed and also knows how much is going to be needed. The State will determine that question by the appeals from the various communities in the State setting out, respectively, how much they need. Then the State, in turn, will lend to the municipalities and will get the proper security from the municipalities before it will let them have the money.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, will the Senator vield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. In addition to what has been so clearly stated by the Senator from Nevada, if the States and municipalities were authorized to make application for loans, there would be such a confusion and overlapping of demands for loans that it would greatly embarrass the administration of the act. If the governor of a State decides there is no condition in his State that would justify the use of a portion of this fund, I think the Congress may well rely on that decision. I believe the provision of the bill makes for clarity and efficiency of administration.

Mr. WAGNER. And removes all danger of possible duplication.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Yes.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. I notice on page 2, line 1, there is a provision which reads:

Such amount shall be apportioned among the several States in the proportion which their population bears to the total popula-tion of the States of the United States according to the Fifteenth Decennial Census.

Did the committee not take into consideration that the fund ought to be distributed according to the need rather than according to population?

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, we were trying to arrive at an apportionment which would take care of the needs of the States and would be as nearly as possible in conformity with those needs. There are only two ways of which I know of apportioning this fund, unless we give some bureau here in Washington the discretionary power to determine whether a State shall have any funds at all or not. Those two methods would be, on the one hand, an apportionment according to population, and, on the other, an apportionment according to the census of unemployment.

Originally when the La Follette-Costigan bill was before the Senate for consideration, I proposed an amendment that we change the method of apportionment from the basis of population to that of the census of unemployment, and, as I recall, the Senator from Idaho was one of those who opposed that method of apportionment as being less accurate than to base it upon population. However, if we do not provide some method of apportioning the fund among the States, then we have got to constitute some bureau in Washington to determine, after a governor certifies to the needs, to how much that particular State shall receive. The committee did not think that was the proper way to deal with the sovereignty of States.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I do not recall the details of the amendment which the Senator offered to the Costigan-La Follette bill: but I certainly did not oppose the proposition of apportioning this money in accordance with the need rather than in accordance with the population. There are some States which would not require any assistance from the National Government. It does seem to me that we ought to provide some method by which we can distribute this money according to the actual demands of the different parts of the

Mr. WAGNER. Of course, if a community does not need assistance, it will not ask for it; but with the widespread suffering and unemployment now, I think myself that an apportionment according to population is about as accurate an apportionment as can be made at this time to provide for the needs of the different communities.

Mr. BORAH. I have great respect for the Senator's judgment, because I know he has studied this matter; but, on the face of it, it seems to me not in accord with the actual

Mr. WAGNER. There is only one other way of doing it, and that is to constitute some board down here to sit as a judge, with all the red tape that is involved in inquiring into the financial condition of the State, the needs of the State, and all the other factors that have to be taken into consideration in determining need. It seems to me the governor of a State is in a better position to know the needs of his community than some bureau set up here in Washington.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WAGNER. Certainly.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The plan in the bill is necessarily somewhat arbitrary. May I point out to the Senator from Idaho that to undertake to incorporate a different provision, such as he has suggested, would involve an almost endless investigation and inquiry on the part of a central board in Washington. Manifestly, hearings would have to be had, surveys would be required, and great expense would be incurred in the administration of the act, with the result that the conclusion probably would not be greatly different from that which would be based on population.

It was argued during the course of the hearings referred to by the Senator from New York on the Costigan-La Follette bill that, after all, the basing of apportionment on the unemployed population would not make a very great difference from the apportionment that would be made on population itself. To require a central board to be created to look into the subject of needs would be to handicap the administration, and necessarily involve discrimination.

So I think that while there is much that can be said in criticism of the plan in this bill, and it is in a measure arbitrary, after all it is the most practical plan if we wish to get results, and get them quickly, and secure them without discrimination.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I desire to submit an observation.

When this matter was last before the Senate upon the amendment proposed by the Senator from Connecticut, I called attention to the fact that in all reasonable probability the statistics of unemployment found in the census take into consideration only unemployment in industrial centers, and do not take into consideration at all the needs of the farming population of the country.

Take the State of Kansas, for instance: In all reasonable probability the number of unemployed in the State of Kansas will be relatively small, whereas there may be in the rural sections all manner of need for relief. That certainly is the condition in my State, and I dare say in the State of the Senator from Idaho.

So I contend that a distribution upon the basis of unemployment as reported in the census would be manifestly unjust and unfair to the rural sections.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, will the Senator permit one more interruption?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes. Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Also, it may be stated that such statistics on this subject as are available have, by the progress of events, become more or less obsolete. Changes are constantly occurring. Many communities are now in need that were experiencing no immediate necessity a few months ago or were able to meet requirements from local resources; and certainly if we go back to the time of the census we will find that unemployment statistics are a wholly unreliable standard upon which to proceed at this time.

Mr. WAGNER. We shall have to adopt one or the other of the two standards. I am quite ready to agree that an unemployment census would be a better method.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. That means that a survey of unemployment would be required now; and, as I stated a few moments ago, it would add to the complexities of administration.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I appreciate the difficulties on both sides of the proposition; but may I ask a question, in order to understand the import of the bill?

The bill says:

Such amount shall be apportioned among the several States in the proportion which their population bears to the total population of the United States.

That would require the authorities to withhold the money that any State might be entitled to according to population. whether it made application for it or not.

Mr. WAGNER. A State can not get an amount in excess of the amount which is apportioned to it. This is only for the period until December. If the situation gets more serious, we probably will have to appropriate more funds; but New York, for instance, under this bill, would have $30,000.-000 assigned to it. It can not borrow in excess of that $30,000,000; but within that $30,000,000 it may borrow such a sum as the governor certifies.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, what would the smallest State get?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, that is not exactly the point I had in mind. The fund would have to be kept intact as to those States which did not make application?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. That is right.

Mr. BORAH. So that that part of the fund could not be drawn upon for those States which did need it. It would have to be held intact for those which had not made application?

Mr. WAGNER. That is true.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. WAGNER. I do. Mr. COUZENS. The very question raised by the Senator from Idaho was raised in the committee; and the Senator from New York will remember that the committee took a vote as to the means of distribution, whether it should be by need or by population. Some of the Senators said that their States in all probability would not apply for any of the funds. It has been said that perhaps 40 States all together would not apply. Then, in effect, we are appropriating or permitting the use of $300,000,000 for the aid of the unemployed and at the same time proposing to tie up most of it by apportionment to States that do not need it or will not ask for it.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, assertions have been made every little while that this State does not need assistance and that State does not need it. I have not heard of a State that is not apprehensive that within a very few weeks it will be unable to cope with the situation unless its moneys are supplemented by some aid from the Federal Government; and that includes New York State.

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WAGNER. I believe that eventually New York will have to take advantage of this act; and I do not think these statements that are made have any other basis except |

Mr. COUZENS and Mr. HEBERT addressed the Chair. The VICE PRESIDENT. To whom does the Senator vield?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. COUZENS. I want to point out to the Senator that during the discussion some Senators made the very definite statement-I do not want to name the Senators, because it might embarrass their States-that their States would not apply for any money; and some of the Senators said that they would be ashamed if their States did apply. I submit that if that be the case, we are tying up on an allotment plan a lot of money or prospective money that will not be

For example, there is no State that is worse hit than Michigan as a result of the concentration of the motor-car industry. Its allotment under this program would be some twelve and a half million dollars, which is wholly inadequate, almost useless so far as Michigan is concerned; and yet Michigan is not going to ask for any money that is not supported by either the surrender of its road funds or the deposit of municipal securities that are adequate.

For example, Detroit is perfectly able to take care of itself if it can finance its securities. Detroit has probably $32,000,-000 of maturing securities that it is unable to renew, because of a lack of market; and yet they could be used, under proper arrangements, as security for a loan from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

So what is the use of fixing the amount at $300,000,000 when we are going to tie up a lot of it, according to the reports, by allocation to States that do not need it, and yet find that we have made wholly inadequate provision for communities like Michigan, for instance, where they need more than twelve and a half million dollars to finance themselves alone, if they do not need it for any other purpose?

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, in the first place, I think the need is universal at this time; and the question which the Senator raises is a fundamental question so far as the consideration of this bill is concerned. We will have to decide to do one of two things: Either to adopt the plan of the bill or to create a bureau here in Washington which will determine the needs of a State irrespective of what the governor may certify are its needs. Then will come all this red tape, which was so clearly pointed out by the Senator from Arkansas-the investigation into what the State itself has been doing, as to its fiscal situation, as to whether it has properly distributed its funds, and so forth. It is, I think, the worst kind of bureaucracy and invasion of States' rights by a Federal bureau. Since this money is being borrowed, and the State is going to pay it back, I should think that its certification as to what the needs are ought to be final, because, after all, it is only an advance or a loan.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New York yield; and to whom?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield to the Senator from Kentucky. Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, the suggestion just made by the Senator from New York seems to me one that we ought not to lose sight of.

In the first place, remarks made in the committee by Members of the Senate as to whether any State would apply, or whether they would be ashamed for their States to apply, have no bearing on this question. This bill does not put on a Senator the responsibility of applying for this fund. It puts it on the governor, Another thing: This is no gift of the National Government. If it were a direct gift out of the Treasury for unemployment relief, there might be some force in the suggestion that it ought to be distributed from Washington; but this is a loan. This whole bill is based on the theory that the Federal Government is not to interfere with the State in its capacity to take care of its local situation, but is merely to aid it in taking care of it. Therefore, this is a loan to the State, to be granted on the application of the governor.

If we provide that this money shall be distributed according to the need, we might very well imagine a situation where the governor of a State, acting in his capacity as chief executive of one of the Commonwealths of the Nation, might certify to the need in his State, and yet some bureau in Washington might decide that he had misrepresented the conditions and deny the relief which he himself, on his responsibility, had certified to the National Government.

Another thing: Of course, if a provision is to be inserted here that the money should be distributed according to need, the first to come would be the first to be served, according to the old standard of country milling.

Another thing, this money is to be repaid to the Federal Government by a deduction in advancements to the States, which are based now upon population and rural-routes mileage. In other words, the repayment of this fund to the Treasury is to be based in part upon the same standard upon which we propose to distribute it among the States; and, certainly, looking upon it from the standpoint of a loan to a State which is promising to repay it to the Federal Government, or if it is not repaid, then to be deducted from any money to be advanced by the Treasury to the State for roads or other purposes, if we can not depend on the integrity and the good faith and the intelligence of the governor who asks for the loan to distribute it according to the needs in the State, we ought to consider very seriously whether we would make any advancement to the State at all.

Mr. HAWES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. HAWES. Possibly Missouri is a typical State. Its limited borrowing capacity is controlled by the constitution. Our leading city is St. Louis, and there is a limit on its borrowing capacity. So that a constitutional amendment would be required to enable the State to borrow any of this money, or an act of the city of St. Louis to secure some of the money. That would, in either case, mean long delay: and I am informed that our people have generously and spontaneously contributed for months and months to the unemployment situation, but they have reached their private limits and something must be done. It may happen that there will be an unequal distribution of this money if we consider State after State, but the passage of this bill will afford means of meeting the immediate necessities of the situation which can be rectified when Congress meets in December.

I understand there would be an option between two or three different ways by which the money could be secured. If a State found itself in the embarrassing situation in which my State is, then the governor would have the option of borrowing the money, and the Government would hold as its security money which might be allocated to the State for road purposes, and any governor who has a choice between starvation and hunger and misery as against the building of roads must, if he is a capable governor, decide in favor of borrowing the money in this way.

I do not see any other method for getting the relief so much needed. My State is a prosperous State. It has bled itself white in borrowing money and taking money from private individuals. There is no return upon that, but there is a limit upon it, and the chief effect of this bill would be to tide over an immediate necessity with various ways of repayment afforded.

Mr. WAGNER. Free from red tape, I may say to the Senator.

Mr. HAWES. As to the matter of dealing with municipalities, it is inconceivable to me that the United States could think of such a thing. If it thought of dealing with counties, there are 3,000 counties in the Union. So it has placed the exercise of proper judgment in the hands of the governor of the State, it being understood, of course, that the representatives of the municipalities and the different volunteer organizations will be called into conference by the governor and the fund allocated where it is most needed.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Missouri a question?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. COSTIGAN. The Senator from Missouri has indicated certain constitutional difficulties with reference to loans to Missouri. For the information of the Senate, may I ask the Senator to explain to the Senate how the governor of that State will justify lending the credit of the State to a loan, even under the provisions of the bill, for repayment through deductions from future Federal road funds? The question is not dictated by hostility to relief legislation. No one more strongly indorses the objective of this proposal. If improvements are not obtainable, I shall, of course, vote for the measure. Personally, however, I see no escape from the definite obligation resting on the Federal Government to make safeguarded grants to the States rather than loans.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield to me a moment?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Touching the matter just now raised by the Senator from Colorado, although the bill uses the word "loan," there would be absolutely no obligation upon a State at all in the ordinary sense. The bill simply provides that if any of this money shall be paid to a State at this time, it will not be paid to the State in the future. That is all there is to it. I can not think that if the Government of the United States sued a State in the Supreme Court of the United States to recover the amount of such a loan, it could prevail in its suit, because the bill expressly provides the way in which the thing is to be paid, if "payment" is the proper word at all. It is simply an advance. The money would be given to a State at this time instead of being given to it at some future time, and if the State does not return it, it will be taken out of the State's allocation of funds in the

Mr. COSTIGAN. The learned Senator from Montana is doubtless right in his interpretation of the purpose of the legislation. If so, however, the Senate is asked to put its seal of approval on a grant to a State, designating the grant as a loan.

The constitution of Missouri provides, in part:

The general assembly shall have no power to give or lend, or to authorize the giving or lending of the credit of the State in aid of or to any person, association, or corporation * for the payment of liabilities, present or prospective.

Under that provision it would appear that the State of Missouri is barred from pledging its credit for a loan of this sort. If we proceed upon the theory suggested by the Senator from Montana that no suit at law or in equity could be based upon the advance of funds under this measure as drafted, the credit of the State would nevertheless be pledged either through legislative action or through the express or implied agreement of the governor of the State.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, may I make this appeal to the Senate? I hope we shall not get into the legalistic arena, in the discussion of this bill, that we got into in December when the La Follette-Costigan bill was before the Senate. Unfortunately, at that time we got into a discussion, but not on the question of the necessity of relief, because, as I analyze the vote, a majority of the Senators of this body said there should be relief. They were persuaded of the necessity by the effective arguments made by the two Senators who sponsored the legislation. But we got into a legalistic argument as to the method to be employed in the distribution of the funds.

I was on the bench long enough to know how lawyers can get into legalistic discussions and forget the main and substantive question involved. Let us not be so concerned with technical language or precedent but let us think of the people we have to feed now.

There is, as the Senator from Montana has said-and I do not suppose there is a more reliable authority upon these questions than he-the thought that at most there is no constitutional prohibition on a State. It can not interfere with the transmission of this money. It is a responsibility which the Federal Government assumes. It says to the State, "Here, you may have this money to feed your people, and if you do not make provision for its return under some borrowing power that you have we will liquidate the debt by subtracting from your future appropriations, by one-fifth of the appropriation each year until the sum is liquidated."

I think it is a plain, simple proposition, which is enforceable in law, and certainly the necessities of the occasion require it. Time is of the essence in this case.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator permit a question?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. REED. Take the position of the Governor of Pennsylvania. Our constitution forbids the State of Pennsylvania from borrowing money unless two successive legislatures shall authorize it and direct the submission of the question to the people. After the action of two legislatures it must then come to a popular vote, and any other loan by the State in excess of $1,000,000 temporary accommodation is absolutely invalid. Pennsylvania is typical of a dozen other Suppose the United States Government did hand over some of this money to the Governor of Pennsylvania. It could not be a loan under our constitution. It would therefore have to be regarded as an advance of Federal aid for highway construction, and our governor would be confronted with the alternative of doing nothing, or of misappropriating highway money to feed people in distress. That would be the predicament in which we would place him. How could his situation be helped? The same thing is true of Michigan.

Mr. WAGNER. The governor would not be in that predicament. The Federal Government would assume the responsibility of advancing to the State moneys for a State as well as a Federal purpose, namely, taking care of the needy, and the Federal Government would place a condition on the transmission of that money, which would be that in the future it should deduct an equal sum from the appropriations to come to the State.

Mr. REED. In other words, it would be an advance out of its expected highway grants.

Mr. WAGNER. It would not be a loan prohibited under the State constitution.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, I find these words in the bill:

Any funds made available to a State pursuant to this act shall be administered by the governor, or under his direction, and upon his responsibility, subject to the laws of the State.

I do not see how the governor of my State could use any of this fund for general relief purposes, or could apportion it among the municipalities of the State, because whether he called it a loan, an advance, or an allotment, it would be received by the governor, there would be a promise to pay interest or to allow an interest charge against the advance. and there is an express limitation that all funds received by the State pursuant to this act shall be administered by the governor or under his direction, upon his responsibility, subject to the laws of the State.

Mr. WAGNER. That is as to the distribution of the fund to the needy. I think almost every State has created under the law an unemployment relief agency or welfare agency which distributes such funds among the needy.

Mr. GEORGE. I had the impression that the money might be used by the State for direct relief purposes or in

Mr. WAGNER. In relief work, yes; but it is to be done as the State directs that it be done.

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield. Mr. HEBERT. I shall respect the wishes of the Senator from New York and shall not indulge in any legal discussion of this problem. I have my own ideas upon it, but for the time being I shall not enter into any such discussion.

I merely rose to say that so far as Rhode Island is concerned, I know of no misapprehension there about taking care of our people. The Senator stated a short while ago that he knew of no State where there was not apprehension. The fact is that in our State we have provided for loans to all of our municipalities out of State funds. We are making these loans at an interest rate of 3 per cent. I have had no information that any needs on the part of any municipality of our State had not been met. I merely wished to make that statement so the record might be clear.

Mr. WAGNER. I congratulate the Senator and his State.
Mr. HEBERT. I think the State is entitled to congratulations.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. WAGNER. Certainly.

Mr. HARRISON. I want to ask a question of the Senator, who is so familiar with this legislation. Suppose in my State we do not want to borrow any money or get this advance for some relief work, but that we are short of funds necessary to pay the teachers and the schools are going to be closed unless we could get money, that it is found that the State can not float bonds to do that and they were then to apply to get a part of this fund to be used to pay the school teachers. Could they get the money for that purpose?

Mr. WAGNER. I doubt it. I think it is confined to the care of the destitute and needy in the State. It would be of course a matter of interpretation by the State itself as to whether that would be a case of caring for the destitute and needy.

Mr. HARRISON. Suppose, because of the condition of the bond market, the State was unable to sell its bonds and as a result some charitable hospitals are going to close, sanitariums for tubercular patients are going to close, and many men be thrown out of employment because of the closing of those institutions. Could the State get any money under this plan of the Senator from New York?

Mr. WAGNER. Under a reasonable interpretation they might be cared for.

Mr. HARRISON. Does the Senator contemplate following this legislation with something else that would permit a State making an honest effort to sell their bonds in order to carry on some of the State institutions, to borrow money from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation?

Mr. WAGNER. I hope very soon to have up for consideration the so-called construction bill, which will involve the question which the Senator has raised here. Undoubtedly he will raise that question when that legislation is before the Senate for consideration, and he may want to attempt to broaden the scope of the power of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation in financing State and municipal projects

Mr. HARRISON. May I say to the Senator that I have had many letters from my State expressing a desire to amend the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act in order to enable the State to sell, at a reasonable rate of interest, some bonds to that corporation, so that the State can carry on agencies of the State, which is more preferable than to get the money in this way to take care of some relief down there. In the consideration of the matter I hope something can be worked out that at least will permit them to go to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and sell some bonds and get some financial aid for that particular work.

Mr. WAGNER. The opportunity will undoubtedly be offered when the construction bill is before the Senate.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. BLAINE. I do respect the Senator's suggestion regarding the discussion of the legalistic phase of the measure, but this is going to become a law. In the first instance, it is for the Congress to place its own interpretation and construction upon it. The Senator will recall that during the consideration of the bill before the committee I invited attention to the fact that whenever the Reconstruction Finance Corporation makes a loan or an advance to the States the amount of such loan will go into the State treasury. It must go there under the constitutions and laws of most of the States.

In most of the States there is a constitutional provision that no money shall be taken out of the State treasury except pursuant to an appropriation made by the legislature, so, in all those States it will be necessary to have an act of the legislature to appropriate the money for the purposes for which it was designed, unless the State has anticipated or contemplated that this kind of relief was going to be afforded and has passed a general law providing that all funds payable into the State treasury for the purposes set forth in this bill shall be distributed as the particular State legislature might have provided. In any event, except in those rare cases where the State had anticipated this kind of legislation, it will be necessary to await the convening of the respective legislatures or for the governor to call the legislature in special session for the purpose of making the necessary appropriation of the specific funds obtained under

Is not that the Senator's view?

Mr. WAGNER. The Senator, I think, is correct. If there is no general provision already to take care of funds of this type, an extraordinary session of the legislature would have to be called to take care of that matter; but after all that is not an impossible thing.

Mr. BLAINE. I was not raising the point in opposition to the Senator's measure.

Mr. WAGNER. I agree with the Senator.

Mr. President, may I at this time offer an amendment to the bill?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill is open to amendment. The Senator from New York offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The CHEF CLERK. On page 1, lines 8 and 9, strike out the words "made available by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act" and insert in lieu thereof the words "hereinafter made available."

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to. The clerk will state the further amendment offered by the Senator from New York.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 4, after line 19, insert the following additional section:

Sec. 4. For the purpose of providing funds for carrying out the provisions of this act, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized and empowered to issue its notes, bonds, debentures, or other such obligations, in an aggregate amount not to exceed $300,000,000. Such notes, bonds, debentures, or other such obligations shall, so far as practicable, be issued in the same manner and be subject to the same terms and conditions as the notes, bonds, debentures, or other such obligations issued pursuant to section 9 of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from New York.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. President, I would like to amend the amendment, if the Senator from New York will accept it, by providing that the bonds or notes issued by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation shall not carry a greater rate of interest than the States pay the United States.

Mr. WAGNER. This does not deal with the interest question at all.

Mr. KEAN. It provides that they shall issue their notes, bonds, and so forth.

Mr. WAGNER. There is another section of the bill which deals with the question of interest. This simply empowers the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to issue its notes, and so forth, up to $300,000,000.

Mr. KEAN. Very well.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from New York.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President-

Mr. COUZENS. May I point out to the Senator-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New York yield, and if so, to whom?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield the floor.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, before the Senator yields the floor, I desire to ask him a question for information. Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, the amendment has not been disposed of.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair understands that the Senator from Michigan desires to discuss it. The Senator from Kentucky is recognized to propound a question to the Senator from New York.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, the Senator from Pennsylvania a while ago suggested that it is impossible for his State to incur any obligation to the United States Government. The same thing is true in my State and in many others. In response to that the Senator from New York said that if the arrangement could not be made to pay the money back it would be repaid by deducting one-fifth of future appropriations to the States for road-building purposes.

I desire to call the attention of the Senator from New York to the fact that one-fifth of the State aid granted to the States will not pay the interest on this loan we are talking about; and if that be true, what would become of the principal?

Mr. WAGNER. In no case is more than one-fifth of the State-aid appropriation to be deducted. It may be it will take 10 years to liquidate the debt, but in no case is more than one-fifth of the appropriation deducted and charged against the State.

Mr. LOGAN. But if one-fifth will not pay the annual interest that accrues, then the debt will keep on growing and will never be paid; and if the State can not pay it, it will have to be repudiated.

Mr. WAGNER. Does the Senator know of such a case?

Mr. LOGAN. I do. I think it will be true in almost every State. Take the State of Kentucky, for instance. We have about $1,500,000 in State aid each year. One-fifth of that would be $300,000. If the State of Michigan receives $12,500,000 under this bill, then Kentucky will receive about one-half that sum, or about $6,000,000. Five per cent interest on $6,000,000 would be $300,000; so it would take our one-fifth to pay the interest, and the entire principal would remain unpaid. The State can not bond itself to pay it. What would become of that debt if the interest amounts to more than the amount provided to be deducted each year?

Mr. WAGNER. I would want to know whether we are talking about an academic question or a real question. I went into these figures some time ago and I know of no such case.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New York yield to the senior Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I suggest to my colleague that if that situation should develop the State would have no complaint. Only the Federal Government could complain, because if the Federal Government did not take out enough for the repayment of the loan each year, but only enough to pay the interest each year, then the State would not have anything to complain about.

Mr. WAGNER. What would happen would be that it would take a longer time to liquidate the debt.

Mr. LOGAN. The debt would be like the frog that jumped up 2 feet and fell back 3 feet trying to get out of the well. It never would be liquidated. My colleague says the State would have no reason to complain. The State would have reason to complain because it would be forced to repudiate the debt, and it would have that debt standing over its people, which they could not pay because it was illegally contracted and could not pay because the plan providing for its repayment in the bill will never repay it. My suggestion to the Senator from New York is if the rate of interest of 5 per cent will take more than the one-fifth which the State would get out of the road-building aid plan, then the rate of interest should be reduced until there may be a repayment.

Mr. WAGNER. The Senator is anticipating a request I was going to make. I think the rate fixed by the committee is entirely too high. I am going to propose a rate of 3 per cent. But I will satisfy the Senator before the day is over that the question he raises is academic. I do not think in reality it can arise.

There is another provision in the bill by which a State may meet its obligations by amending its constitution if the constitution prohibits a loan, or by passing the necessary legislation if the loan may be acquired without amending the constitution, so we have the other method of payment by the State. I do not believe that any State will deliberately repudiate its debt to the United States.

Mr. LOGAN. I do not either.

Mr. WAGNER. I have that confidence in the integrity of our States.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from New York. The Chair understood that the Senator from Michigan [Mr. Couzens] desires to be recognized on the amendment.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, I would like to ask the Senator from New York just why the necessity for section 4 which he has just offered as an amendment, in view of the fact that the corporation has authority now to issue up to $2,000,000,000?

Mr. WAGNER. Because I did not want to interfere with any prior act of Congress. Congress gave the power to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to issue debentures up to $1,500,000,000 for the purposes included in that particular legislation. I did not want to invade that particular territory, but to deal with it as a separate proposition. That is what I had in mind.

Mr. COUZENS. When the Senator from New York comes to take up his other bill with respect to lending to States for the purpose of enabling them to undertake the financing of self-liquidating projects, if the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act shall be amended so that that corporation may loan up to $3,000,000,000, as he proposes, then I ask whether or not the point he has in mind would not in that way be taken care of? What I am trying to suggest is that we are going to have many series of issues apparently for specific purposes, and I think that that is undesirable.

Mr. WAGNER. We are dealing here with a separate proposition. I assume that the Congress wanted to deal with it separately. I have no pride about this matter. If, when the other bill is under consideration the Senate prefers to consider the question of conferring increased power on the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to issue additional debentures and to extend credit, I will not quarrel with that, but I think that as we deal with the subject we ought to deal with it completely. That is what I had in mind.

with it completely. That is what I had in mind.

Mr. COUZENS. I thought that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation ought not to have out more than one kind of security. It seems to me, from reading this proposed amendment contained in the added section 4, there would be different kinds of securities out, securities under this section, securities under the original act, and securities under the act which is going to be proposed later on for the self-liquidating corporations, and I wondered why this should not be withdrawn.

Mr. WAGNER. I think now we are talking of form and not of substance. We are talking of a question of bookkeeping, which I do not regard as very important. If the Senator wants to propose an amendment to the amendment which I have offered so as to make the type of securities universal in their character, I shall not object to that. I repeat, however, we are talking about form, which does not interest me very much.

Mr. COUZENS. I am not so much interested in form, but I see no necessity for the amendment; that is what I am trying to demonstrate. I see no necessity for this amendment, in view of the fact that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation already have authority to issue $2,000,000,000 in the aggregate; and if we pass the other legislation, most of which I favor, they would then have authority to loan up to $3,000,000,000. So my query is, Why continue giving authority piecemeal to issue more securities? I am merely speaking against the amendment, not as to a matter of form, but I see no necessity for the amendment.

Mr. WAGNER. I am quite willing to let the Senate dispose of the question.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from New York.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, which I should like to have stated for the information of the Senate. I ask the attention of the Senator from New York to it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated. The CHIEF CLERK. On page 4, line 14, after the period, it is proposed to insert:

Nothing in this act shall be construed to authorize the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to refuse to make an advance to any State because of existing constitutional inhibitions upon the State or because the State has borrowed to the full extent authorized by State law. The amount for which application is made shall be immediately payable to the State upon the filing of the application and delivery to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation of the receipt required by section 3.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I make no objection to that amendment, and I accept it.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I should like to say just a word or two in explanation of the amendment. I am still concerned in my own mind as to the situation which will confront the States that have constitutional prohibitions against incurring debt. I am apprehensive, I am frank to say, that there may be difficulty even though the legislature of such a State should meet in special session and authorize the governor to make use of these funds, to be deducted out of future Federal-aid highway appropriations. What I seek to accomplish by this amendment is to prevent the Reconstruction Finance Corporation itself from passing on that question. I appreciate the attitude of the Senator from New York, who is the author of the bill, in not interposing any objection to the amendment.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator vield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield. Mr. VANDENBERG. Does the Senator's amendment virtually negative the requirement for a certification of need?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. No; it has no such intent, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I thought, as I listened to its reading, that it required merely the automatic distribution of the funds on a population basis.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Oh, no. The only thing which the amendment seeks to accomplish, Mr. President, is to provide that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation shall not decline to make an advance to any State because of any constitutional provision in the State's organic law; and, secondly, it seeks to make directory the payment of advances upon the filing of the receipt provided for in section 3. It has no relation to section 2, may I say to the Senator from Michigan, which is one of the conditions that must be complied with by any governor before his State would be eligible either to a loan or to an advance.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. WAGNER. I am persuaded that the bill as it now reads does exactly what the amendment proposes to do; but if there should be any doubt, it would be cleared up by this amendment. It does not, I may say to the Senator from Michigan, interfere with the provision requiring certification by the governor.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator a question.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I am glad to yield to the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. WATSON. Does the Senator's amendment negative altogether the idea of the money advanced being a loan? the proposed loans payable from Federal-aid highway ad-

Could it not by the terms of his amendment be converted into a straight gift to the State?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. No; it does not do any such thing. May I say to the Senator from Indiana that this amendment will apply only to States which have constitutional inhibitions against the incurring of debt? If this amendment shall be agreed to, I intend to offer another amendment which in each instance in the bill will insert after the word "loans" the words "or advances." In other words, as I understand, the intent of this measure as reported is that, first, those States which desire to make agreements for loans with the Reconstruction Finance Corporation may do so, in which case the money advanced will be regarded purely as a loan and will be repaid according to such agreement as may be entered into between such States and the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Wisconsin a question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I will yield in just a moment. The second method-provided, as I understand, to take care of States which are not permitted under their constitution to incur debt—is that the State may receive money in advance from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation which shall be paid back out of future Federal highway-aid grants. Therefore I merely wish to make perfectly clear in this proposed act that the legislative intent is that there are these two methods and to provide that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation shall not raise the issue as to whether a State is in a position under its constitution to incur a loan or debt. I now yield to the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, as I understand the amendment, as it now reads, it is designed to prevent the Reconstruction Finance Corporation from passing upon the constitutional authority of the States receiving an advance.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The Senator is correct.

Mr. PITTMAN. I think the Senator's amendment would have been understood much better if he had first offered his amendment proposing to insert in various places the words or advances." As that portion of this bill was originally prepared by the Senator from New York and those who assisted him, the word "loans" was not used; the money distributed through the Reconstruction Finance Corporation was treated solely as an advance because the committee had under consideration the legal questions that have been discussed here.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I think the word "grant" was used in the original bill.

Mr. PITTMAN. The word "grant" was used. However, I think the word "advance" is the proper word. I can not conceive how there can be any legal question if we treat it as an advance, because the Federal highway act is the authority for the Federal Government to advance the money to the States; the Federal Congress has the right to repeal that act any time they see fit, and they have then the right to reduce that amount any time they see fit. What they are doing is to make the States distributing agents for the Federal Government, and at the same time they are modifying the Federal aid highway act by saying, "At a certain date, if you accept this trusteeship, we are going to reduce that advance." So I really think the word "loan" ought to be stricken out of this measure all the way through and the word "advance" substituted in its place; and where reference is made to the interest rate the provision as to the interest rate should be stricken out, and we should authorize the deduction from future advances of road funds, not only of the principal but whatever interest may be agreed on.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. COUZENS. I should like to ask the Senator from Nevada as to whether there is any real security in making vances? In other words, those advances have to be matched by the States, and at any time that a State refuses to appropriate or feels that it has built sufficient roads and does not desire to build any more roads and just stops matching the Federal appropriation, of course, there is not any money coming to that State from the Federal Government.

Mr. PITTMAN. I will say to the Senator that there will be very few States during the next 20 years that will not be getting advances of money for highway construction. It will be understood that the act was passed in the first place on the theory that, after a road was built, from that time on the State should keep it in order; but the interpretation of the act has gone to the point of covering the rebuilding of roads at certain periods. As a matter of fact, every road now is rebuilt about every five years, and between the 5-year period it is kept up by the States at their own expense.

The committee, in talking over the matter with the Bureau of Federal Roads and after investigating this whole question, came to the conclusion that it was certain that there would be advances for a sufficient length of time to pay back this money with interest. That was our information.

Mr. COUZENS. But there is no legislation to that effect now.

Mr. PITTMAN. No; and Congress can legislate itself out of this loan.

Mr. COUZENS. Not only that but the States can legislate themselves out of paying back the loans.

Mr. PITTMAN. Undoubtedly they can legislate them-

Mr. COUZENS. In other words, any time a State refuses to match the Federal money there is no money from which we can deduct these loans.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Oh, Mr. President, may I interject a suggestion at that point? If a State does not appropriate any money to match the Federal aid, then it will not be a deduction of one-fifth; it will be a deduction, so far as the net effect on the Treasury of the United States is concerned, of the entire amount to which the State would ordinarily be entitled.

Mr. COUZENS. Oh, no; that is not so, because the State would not have any money coming from the Federal Government until it had matched it; so that there would not be any sum from which to deduct.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. But the point is we are interested, so far as the Federal Government is concerned, in the amount that is paid out.

Mr. COUZENS. Oh, no! In other words, the Federal Government's interest is in building roads and not in saving any money that might be coming due to the States. We do not enter this cooperative plan of road building for the purpose of either loaning money to the States or for the purpose of saving money for the Federal Government, but rather for the purpose of building roads; so that any time a State says, "We have all the roads we need; we are not going to match any more Federal funds," of course there would be no way of liquidating their loan.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator let me answer that and sit down?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I confess I do not see the point made by the Senator from Michigan. I am glad to yield to the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. PITTMAN. I think the Senator from Wisconsin has practically answered what I had in mind, that the best advice we can get from the Federal Government is that there would be no question about the security; but I will say this: If there was a question about the security, then we find ourselves in the position that the distinguished Senator from Michigan raises in his own mind a legal question against the loan that makes it impossible, and then he turns around and raises a legal question against the advance that makes it impossible, when right now I venture to say that the President of the United States is being flooded with demands for immediate relief, and practically all of these questions have come down to some technicality by which we can do nothing.

I contend as a lawyer—I may be wrong, but I have a right to contend—that while on the loan theory under certain conditions this money might not be available, under the advance theory it is absolutely legal, because we simply make the State the distributing agent for this amount of money, and we deduct it in the future.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Wisconsin permit me to move to strike out the word "loans," on page 2, in line 10, and insert in lieu thereof the word "advances"?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I stated before the Senator rose that I had an amendment which I intended to offer following the action upon this amendment, which in each instance throughout the bill would insert, after the word "loans," the words "or advances."

Mr. GEORGE. I was asking to make that amendment because there was one other that I wished to propose before the amendment which the Senator now offers is voted upon; but if he prefers to have a vote upon his amendment, very well.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, responding to the suggestion made by the Senator from Nevada, I think I shall withdraw this amendment temporarily, and offer an amendment to insert the words "or advances," and let us pass on that question first. I have no desire, however, to interfere with any amendment which the Senator from Georgia thinks should be acted on prior to this one. Therefore, I will not offer it at the moment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator withdraws his amendment.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I am quite willing for the Senator from Wisconsin to offer it; but I had in mind offering the amendment in this form—that beginning on page 2, at line 10, the words "or advances" be inserted following the word "loans."

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I have an amendment which will do that all the way through the bill.

Mr. GEORGE. But will the Senator permit me to ask him if his amendment strikes out the word "loans," or does it merely insert "or advances"?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. No; it inserts "or advances" after the word "loans."

Mr. GEORGE. I am quite willing for the Senator's amendment to be acted upon, then.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I offer the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Georgia withdraws his amendment, and the Senator from Wisconsin proposes the amendment stated by him.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President-

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield to the Senator from California.

Mr. JOHNSON. Why not strike out the word "loans" altogether?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. If the Senator will look at the printed amendment, that is what I intended to do; but after conferring with the Senator from New York and the Senator from Nevada and the Senator from Michigan, they convinced me that it was desirable to leave the word "loans" in for the purpose of permitting States that desired to do so to enter into an agreement with the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to make loans which will not be deducted from future highway funds.

Mr. JOHNSON. Could they not enter into such an agreement just as well regarding advances, or if the money were extended in any other form than by a loan? The use of the word "loan," as the bill now stands, is a mere protective coloring, it strikes me, and is of no value at all.

I do not press the question. It is a mere question that I asked.

Mr. WALCOTT. Mr. President, I agree with the Senator from California that the word "loans" is a rather slim protective coloring; but it may add a little bit to the dignity of some of the States, because there are a good many States that would prefer to look on this whole transaction as a collateral loan. The word "collateral" is in no sense expressed in the bill, but it may be implied by reading here on page 3, commencing with line 6:

Whenever any such deduction is made the Secretary of the Treasury shall immediately pay to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation the amount so deducted. Such deduction shall not be made with respect to any State which, within a period of two years from the date of enactment of this act, shall enter into an

This is the important point, and this implies a definite loan and might be construed to imply even a collateral loan_ shall enter into an agreement with the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for the repayment of the amount of the loan or loans to such State with interest thereon as herein provided, in such installments and upon such terms-

And at the appropriate time I should like to offer an amendment to insert the words, "and at such rate of interest," because, in my opinion, if it is going to be a loan, the rate of interest stated in the bill, 5 per cent, is too as may be agreed upon between such State and the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. REED in the chair). The amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin is pending; so the amendment suggested by the Senator from Connecticut would not be in order at this time.

Mr. WALCOTT. No, Mr. President; I said that at the appropriate time I would offer that amendment. I am speaking to the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin.

I see no objection to using the words "or advances"; but I believe it is quite important to keep the word "loan" or "loans" wherever they may appear in the bill, because of the feelings of certain States, and because of the particular clause which I have just read, which distinctly implies a loan rather than an advance.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I should like the attention of the Senators who have given definite study to this bill.

I beg to say that in the State of Illinois, which I have the honor to represent in part, we have a number of institutions which are themselves incorporated, separate municipalities, some of which are in the city of Chicago, some of which are in different parts of the State. I am moved to note that under this bill the loan is fully administered by the governor, under his direction or upon his responsibility; but I see a complete absence in the bill of any authority on the part of the governor to advance any part of the loan to any of the political subdivisions of the State or of the cities in the State.

I take the liberty to suggest, for the consideration of the gentlemen having charge of the management of the bill, that on page 4, line 14, following the phrase "Any funds made available to a State pursuant to this act shall be administered by the governor, or under his direction, and upon his responsibility, subject to the laws of the State," there be added the following words:

Nothing herein forbids the governor of any State advancing a portion of the loan to any department or separate political organivation of the State.

Mr. WAGNER. There is no objection to that. Mr. LEWIS. If that is acceptable, I will put it in a little more definite form.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment can not be offered at this time, because there is an amendment pending.

Mr. LEWIS. I was unconscious that I was intruding upon that. Then at the proper time I will return to the question and present the amendment anew.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, I think the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin is very important. At least, it affects my State, because I am quite sure that Kentucky would have no desire to accept any money when it knew it would not be able to repay it; and I believe the Reconstruction Finance Corporation would be justified in refusing to make any loans to any State when there was an inhibition in its constitution against its burdening itself with further indebtedness.

While I have the floor, however, I desire to take a few minutes' time to express my views about this entire legislation.

This bill has been prepared by Senators in whose judgment I have great confidence. They are leaders on this side of the Chamber, and I assume they have been assisted by some of the leaders on the other side of the Chamber; and, after all, I might well be guided by their judgment. But there are some things so fundamentally wrong in the entire proposal that I beg to state my opinions about the questions involved in this legislation.

I think it would be far better if we proposed to make a donation to the States, and did not attempt to conceal our act in verbiage and by provisions which do not mean very

I am not unmindful that there is more suffering in the Nation to-day than at any time since its foundation. I am not unaware that millions of children are crying for bread while the mothers, pale and wan, can only pray, although more than half believing that God has turned His face away. I can but hear the tramp of millions as they vainly seek for work, with downcast eyes and lagging steps, wondering why men must suffer and women must weep, while their children starve

Indeed, the situation is one calling for the best thought of the best minds of all the people of the Nation; but withal there must be sober judgment. It is better that great fortunes disappear, that industry vanish away, that hunger prevail, than that the Nation be destroyed, or its life greatly endangered

Natural laws can not be created, repealed, or modified by legislation. Congress should know there are many things which it can not do. It can not legislate prosperity into the Nation. About all that it can do is to regulate the relationships of the people the one toward another under rules that are fair, and allow them to work out their own salva-

It is now proposed to make the Federal Government the guardian of its citizens. If that should be done, the Nation soon must perish. There can only be a free nation when the people themselves are free and administer the government which they have set up to protect their rights. Where the general government must provide work, and incidentally food and clothing for its citizens, freedom and individuality will be destroyed and eventually the citizens will become serfs to the general government. They are no longer free and they no longer support the government when they look to the government to support them. The government then becomes an absolutism. It can support its citizens only by going into private business for profit, with the resulting destruction of all private profits.

The General Government has fallen into hard lines. Its citizens can not support it easily, so it is proposed to reverse laws formerly thought to be sound and go into the business of supporting citizens apparently with little understanding that the Government is but a collection of all the people. If the people, therefore, at this time can not support the Government, how can it be reasonably said that the Government can support the people?

It is proposed that the Government embark upon a great program to give aid to the unemployed. This sounds well when so stated, but it will not work. It can not work, because it is an effort to reverse the operation of a fundamental law. The plan admits that the Nation is burdened with debts and it is attempting to make the debts less irksome by creating more debts. The States, counties, and municipalities are now indebted beyond their ability to pay, so the plan is that they shall cure their ills by heaping up more debts. Debts must be paid or repudiated. If they are paid, the burden must rest upon those least able to pay. many must pay because they have no way to protect themselves from the exactions in the form of taxes.

We have recently talked much about taxes and taxation. There are wise men who believe that the rich and powerful can be taxed and the poor may be allowed to escape. Their belief is a delusion. Taxes always sift downward until they find lodgement on those least able to bear them. That is one reason why the many stay poor and the few are rich. The poor largely support the Government. A great blessing will come into the world when they are made to understand that the people but add to their own misery when they induce their Government to make appropriations of money supposedly for their benefit.

The plan now before us for the relief of a distressed people and to bring prosperity to a prostrate Nation is like unto a farmer who finds that he can not pay his interest, his bills for necessaries, or the expenses for the education of his children, and says:

I am broke and bankruptcy seems just around the corner, but I know how to remedy my condition. I will pull down my old barns and build new ones. I will place a third mortgage on the old homestead, obtain more money, increase my interest charge, hire more men to till the farm, and erect new buildings.

The intention of such a farmer may be good, but his neighbors would say of him that he was crazy.

Or the plan is like unto a certain railroad which found that it could not earn anything available for betterments, interest, or dividends. Its board of directors decided that it would increase wages, employ more men, double track its system, and pull down its old depots and build new ones. Such a board of directors would be deservedly censured by the angry stockholders of the corporation.

Or the plan before us is like unto a certain merchant who found that his sales had fallen off until he could not pay his bills, and who said:

I will buy more goods and put up a new storehouse, and I will sell more goods on credit.

His end would soon be in the bankruptcy courts.

The Senate of the United States has greater responsibilities than any like number of men in the world. No plan or chart for the Nation can be devised without the approval of a majority of the 96 men who constitute the Senate. The happiness and prosperity of the people of the Nation depend upon what the Senate does, and the happiness and prosperity of the world depend largely on how we chart the course of our own Nation. The responsibility of a Senator is, therefore, great. He should never fail to act as one having upon him large responsibilities. With these vast responsibilities resting upon the Senate, what is the real problem confronting us? The revenues of the Nation have dried up as the streams in a great drought. The prospects are that we will derive no more revenue in the years of the immediate future than is necessary to pay those charges which can neither be reduced nor eliminated. The interest and amortization of the public debt and the obligations to veterans already incurred aggregate about $2,000,000,000. If it takes all of our revenue to discharge these obligations there will be nothing left with which to pay the ordinary running expenses of the Government. The Nation, therefore, is in the plight of the farmer, the railroad, and the merchant I have mentioned. The wisdom of the Senate may determine that we should do that which in the business world would cause those acquainted with our acts to regard us as unfitted for the high trust which has been vested in our hands. What I am saying will not be popular, but it is the truth. Believing that I am right, I dare to stand alone if necessary. I would prefer to follow the right course alone than to follow error with a multitude.

I would not have it understood that I am unwilling to vote for a measure that will aid in bringing relief to those who are suffering through no fault of their own. If we must relieve distress, and I think we should, let us do it boldly, and make such a donation out of the Treasury as the necessities of the occasion may require.

It is true that we may carry on a great program of public works by selling bonds, but with failing revenues interest rates will have to be increased if the bonds are not to fall far below par. Even with increased interest rates we can not continue to sell bonds indefinitely. I have heard it suggested that because of our vast values represented by the assets of the people of the Nation there is almost no limit to the amount of money we can raise through the sale of bonds.

That is a fallacy. We can maintain the credit of the Nation only so long as we can meet all of our obligations by reasonable tax rates. When we are forced to go above rates that are reasonable, then comes confiscation, and a nation can not long exist when it must confiscate the property of its citizens to pay its debts.

There is a greater reason however, why the proposed legislation is dangerous. Centralization of power is the greatest danger that confronts any republic. The downfall of free governments, if I understand history aright, has been caused by the centralization of the power of administration. Generally the greater the power placed in the hands of the administrators the less the power of the people, with a necessarily corresponding reduction of rights, or the limitation thereof. With every step in centralization of power there must be the surrender of rights by the people, and if the process is carried far enough government by the people ceases and government for the people becomes supreme. It is then that free government, as we understand it, ceases to exist.

The downfall of free nations in the past may have been contributed to by lack of the federal principle and the failure to divide the powers of government into branches, each acting as a check upon the other; but the prime cause has ever been the centralization of power in the hands of officials who, through errors, shortcomings, or corruption, have trespassed upon the rights of the citizens until disaster came, bringing with it ruin.

That which has happened to free nations of the past will recur when the same or similar conditions prevail. Centralization of power eventually brings its ruthless exercise, and always to the detriment of the public welfare, resulting in injustice, inequality before the law, the creation of poverty, misery, and unhappiness, and when pressed too far will bring violent revolution and the destruction of all functions of government. At such a time it is not a dictator we need, whether he be an Alexander, a Cæsar, a Napoleon, or a Mussolini, but the need is for the decentralization of power and the restoration of rights to the people. Those who have been favored with power, position, or wealth should not forget these first principles of statecraft.

The makers of our Constitution were men not unacquainted with the history of nations. It has been said that there is little new in that instrument other than the federal principle. It was the application of age-old principles to new problems. Knowing the weaknesses of the free governments of the past, the makers of our Constitution sought to guard against these same weaknesses. It was in their minds that they must build bulwarks against the centralization of power in the hands of the officers of the Federal Government. It was therefore provided that the powers of government should be divided into three coordinate branches. and that, in so far as possible, each should be independent of the other. The powers of the Congress were limited and strictly defined, as were the powers of the judicial and executive branches. It was thought unwise to allow the President to do more, so far as legislation was concerned, than to point out to the Congress the state of the Nation from time to time, leaving it wholly to the Congress to find solutions for the problems needing attention. When a solution was found and expressed in an act, the President was given power to show his disapproval by a veto.

It may be that it was well that the makers of our Constitution could not lift the veil that shut out a view of the future, else in looking down the aisle of time to the present day they might have desisted from their noble work, believing it would be nullified by the centralization and abuse of power.

The makers of our Constitution provided in it that certain powers should be conferred upon the general Government. It was given the power to raise revenue to carry on the affairs of the Government within constitutional limits; to regulate commerce; to declare war or make peace; to provide an Army and Navy; to coin money, and to regulate the comity and intercourse of the several States. These powers were hedged about with restrictions, and the Federal Government was given no other power through any of its branches. All other powers were reserved to the States. The reservation of those powers was safeguarded with jealous care. It was expected that the States would function as sovereigns, fully exercising every power and right save those surrendered to the General Government. It was intended that the weight of the Federal Government should bear lightly on the States. The States delegated to the Federal Government certain functions that it could best berform for the common good of all of the States. All other matters were to be looked after by the States.

The Constitution was not adopted without a struggle between those, on the one side, who believe that centralization of powers in the General Government was highly essential and those, on the other side, who believe that the powers of the General Government should be severely restricted. Those who favored the former view did not succeed in the convention, and the states ratified the Constitution as submitted, at the time believing that the reserved powers should be more clearly defined. Hence the submission of the first 10 amendments by the First Congress. Each of those amendments conferred powers and rights upon the people. In fact, no amendment has ever been adopted taking rights from the people and conferring them upon the general Government save one, the eighteenth.

The shades of Jefferson and Hamilton have continued their fight over the theories of government that divided them when they lived. Jefferson's theories prevailed for more than three-quarters of a century, and generally during that period the people were ever vigorous in defense of the rights vested in them by the Constitution. But the rights of man can be maintained only by eternal vigilance, and the sentinels on the watchtowers finally slumbered. Gradually at first, and with more rapidity later, the Hamiltonian theories replaced those of Jefferson, until the theories of Hamilton largely prevail at this time. The reserved powers and rights have been invaded and almost entirely swept away. The sad part of the story is that the States have consented to their own ravishment. They have, in a large measure, surrendered their sovereignty in consideration of gold appropriated out of the Federal Treasury, and in their eagerness to obtain it they have increased taxes and debts until they are deluged with evils which they at one time thought were blessings. The powers of the States have become paralyzed because of their failure to exercise them. They have tasted the fleshpots of the Nation's Capitol and year after year they return and, like Oliver Twist, they hold out their porridge bowls and ask for more.

And the voice of Jefferson is stilled. His spirit walks no more. The Hamiltonians, like Jeshurun, have waxed fat and kicked.

A Member of Congress is too often judged back home by what he has been able to obtain in money from the Federal Treasury for distribution among his constituents. If he gets much, he is an able Member; if he gets little, he is weighed in the balances and found wanting. Neither should the Members be blamed too harshly for their activities in securing appropriations for their constituents. Many Members must abhor it, but when it rains money they would be subject to censure if they did not turn their plates right side up.

We have followed wrong theories of government until we have brought about the conditions which destroy free governments. The Nation will struggle along for a while with its ever-increasing burdens, but unless we chart a different course and sternly walk therein the Nation will fall as others have fallen. Decentralization of power and the exercise of their sovereignty by the States is the remedy whereby salvation must be found. The Federal Government should look after Federal matters and the States should look after their own affairs. That is the road back to the place where we lost the way.

When the Israelites had forsaken their laws and thereby brought great tribulations upon themselves; when they were eating of the bread of adversity, as we are now, and had lost the way, as we have, the old prophet said to them:

And thine ears shall hear a word behind thee saying, "This is the way, walk ye in it; when ye turn to the right hand and when ye turn to the left!"

So should it be with us in this dark hour. The word of our fathers is behind us. They knew the way. All along the road there are voices—deceptive voices—calling us to turn to the right or to the left and follow in a new way. When we consider a turning, let us listen to the word behind us, because it contains the wisdom of the ages.

We need to consider at this time the problems that confront us fairly and dispassionately. It is useless to discuss the party responsibility that has brought this evil day. Our great task is to solve the problems and talk about blame or credit thereafter. It is enough to say that during the past few years we have sailed the ship of state in a sea of glory—dreaming the while rainbow-tinted dreams. But the dreams are ended, we have awakened, and there is a gray mist on the sea's face and a gray dawn breaking.

There has been much talk about the departments, establishments, bureaus, boards, and commissions. Indeed, there are far too many of these; but I do not rail at them. Congress created them. There is no denying that as long as they function they must be supported by appropriations. Many of them exist because of the centralization of powers in the Federal Government. We should gradually withdraw all appropriations now made to the States and make no new ones. If we follow that plan we will be able to reduce the expenses of government by abolishing the instrumentalities now engaged in rendering aid to the States.

The Congress has been making appropriations conditioned upon the matching of the appropriation by State legislatures for this, that, and the other project. As a result, the States have incurred indebtedness and increased taxes, believing that they would lose their part if they neglected to take advantage of the offer made them by the Congress. The carrying out of the joint enterprise has been the chief cause of the many bureaus now in existence at Washington, and bureaus are always certain evidence of the centralization of power.

Some vote for these appropriations to the States on the ground that a few of the richer States pay the greater part of the taxes, and that the appropriations for the building of roads and other State-aid projects is a justified redistribution of wealth. It would be far better if the laws should be such as to prevent any groups receiving, in the first place, more than a fair proportion of the earned wealth of the Nation. If it has been through the favoritism of law that the citizens of certain States have acquired great wealth it does not seem to me that the distribution of wealth by making appropriations to the States can therefore be justified. It is true that some of the States receive more money from the Federal Treasury than they pay into it, and it may be admitted that it is difficult for some of the States to take care of the governmental expenses incident to the conduct of their governmental affairs. None of these things justify the appropriation of money directly to the States and the resultant creation of bureaus to look after its expenditure.

The cost of all government in the United States has grown to such immense proportions that everyone agrees that there must be a reduction. The people in the smaller units of government are clamoring for a great reduction in the expenses of operating the Federal Government. No doubt the expenses of operating the Federal Government should be very greatly reduced, but relief can not come to the people solely through the reduction of the expenses of the Federal Government. The people need to economize in the local units. In 1923 the cost of local government—that is, counties, townships, and municipalities—was $4,793,000,000. That cost increased every year until 1932 when it was $8,292,000,000, or an increase of $3,499,000,000, which means that the expenses of local government for the 10-year period increased 73 per cent. In 1923 the cost of State government was $1,242,000,000. That cost steadily increased until 1932 when it was $2,364,000,000, or an increase of $1,122,000,000, which means an increase of 90 per cent during the 10 years. In 1923 the cost of the Federal Government was $3,885,000,000, which had increased to $4,434,000,000 in 1932, or a net increase of $549,000,000, which means an increase of 14 per cent for the 10-year period.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. George in the chair). Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. LOGAN. I yield.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. In connection with the figures the Senator has just presented, may I remind him that I introduced in the Record yesterday a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury showing that the interest payments made by local governments annually now amount to a trifle over $1,000,000,000, and the interest payments on loans of the United States Government, State governments, and local governments, approximate $2,000,000,000 annually?

Mr. LOGAN. That is true. I am very glad the figures were placed in the Record, because we ought to make the people of the United States realize that we can not relieve them of very much of their tax burdens even if we abolish all the departments and bureaus in Washington. It is not possible. The heavy burden is in the local governments and the State governments.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Incidentally, it might be added that all of that interest which is being distributed annually passes practically untaxed.

Mr. LOGAN. Yes; nearly all of it.

So far as tax burdens are concerned and the cost of Government, it will be seen at a glance that it is the local and State governments that have increased their cost most rapidly. The cost of all government for the present fiscal year will aggregate, according to the figure given above, $15,090,000,000. If the entire expenses of the Federal Government should be eliminated, the cost per capita of local and State governments would be above $88. It is well for the people to insist that Congress cut down expenses, but they ought to be told that the tax burdens can not be greatly lightened if nothing more is done than to reduce the expenses of the Federal Government. They must commence at home and see to it that reduction is made in the cost of local government and State government.

It must be admitted, however, that the example of the Federal Government in distributing its funds with a prodigal hand has encouraged State and local governments to increase their expenses. High income-tax rates have contributed much toward the cost of these governments. In seeking for tax-exempt securities encouragement has been offered to States, counties, cities, and municipalities to embark on the expenditure of money for projects in many instances not absolutely necessary. The ability of these governments to sell bonds at a low interest rate has contributed greatly to their present unfavorable condition. The favorable terms on which the bonds could be sold has been brought about largely by reason of high income taxes which have caused those seeking a way to avoid them to search diligently for securities exempt from such taxes.

It is now proposed that we go farther than we have ever gone before in assuming the functions of the State and local governments. I do not think we should take this further step. It is a violation of fundamental principles, and however great the need the evil which will flow from it will be greater than any good that can be derived.

It may be well argued that the people must have relief. That may be admitted; but it would be a lesser evil if, representing all the taxpayers of the Nation, Congress should make a donation, through proper channels, to help relieve suffering. Individuals are called upon to do so, and their contributions have not been sufficient; and while it may be wrong in principle, yet with the needs so great an appropriation for direct relief might be justified.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. LOGAN. I yield.

Mr. WAGNER. I take it the Senator's attitude is that the whole appropriation should not be in the form of a loan or an advance, but a direct gift to the States?

Mr. LOGAN. I will say to the Senator from New York that under the great emergency which exists, the need makes it imperative that we shall violate some fundamental law of government, and instead of covering matters up by making it appear that it is a loan to the States, when in truth it is not a loan to the States, because it is not expected the States will ever pay it back unless the Government gives them the money to return, the proper thing to do would be to make a direct appropriation and allow the governors, through the State agencies, to distribute the money to suffering people as a gift.

Mr. WAGNER. The reason why I ask the question is not because I am quarreling with the Senator's philosophy. I voted for the direct-gift plan when we had up that proposal.

Mr. LOGAN. So did I.

Mr. WAGNER. Yes; I know the Senator did. In analyzing the vote I decided that a majority of the Senators were opposed to a gift and in favor of some form of a loan. It was for the purpose of composing the difference which divided us here that this proposal was advanced.

Mr. LOGAN. I realize, may I say to the Senator from New York, that the man who has a goal out in front of him and wants to get there sometimes must walk a tortuous path, because he must take into consideration conditions as they exist and not as he would have them. I fully understand that.

We have read through the newspapers and heard through many public speeches the words "dole, dole" until Congress has become afraid and Senators, I think, apprehend that they might have some difficulty in explaining that they had voted for that which is called a dole. Indeed, it would not be a dole. It would be a donation, just as the Senator makes a donation to welfare out of his pocket. We represent the people. When the people are unable to feed the hungry, then, instead of having these voluminous plans which will absorb much of the money that ought to go to feed the hungry, let us give it direct, boldly admitting that it is fundamentally unsound, but that events justify it.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, permit me to say to the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. Logan] and to the Senators who have listened, I am sure, with admiration to the Senator from Kentucky, that the Senate expresses a legitimate obligation for the historical and fundamental treatise of the eminent Senator from Kentucky. I might say, sir, harking us back to those fundamentals of governments, ancient and modern, fulfilling at this time the necessity of complying with the sacred doctrine and admonition of the fathers crying out now unto us, "Remove not the ancient landmark thy fathers have set."

But I wish at this moment, sir, to ask if the amendment which I offered is timely now, or has the Senator from Wisconsin disposed of his amendments, which would make this the appropriate time for me to offer my amendment?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I have not yet had action on the amendment pending, and as soon as that is disposed of I desire to offer the other amendment which I have printed and lying on the table.

Mr. LEWIS. I must admit, sir, that my amendment is subordinate in time to the two amendments of the Senator from Wisconsin. I bide my time until he has concluded.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the amendments now pending may be considered and voted on en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent to have the amendments considered and voted on en bloc. Is there objection?

Mr. BULKLEY. Mr. President, I ask that the amendments be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments of the Senator from Wisconsin will be stated for the information of the Senate.

The legislative clerk again read the amendments.

quest of the Senator from Wisconsin to vote on the amendments en bloc? The Chair hears none.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I now offer the following amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 4, line 14, after the period insert the following:

Nothing in this act shall be construed to authorize the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to refuse to make an advance to any State because of existing constitutional inhibitions upon the State or because the State has borrowed to the full extent authorized by State law. The amount for which application is made shall be immediately payable to the State upon the filing of the application and delivery to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation of the receipt required by section 3.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE].

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin furnishes as good an opportunity as any other for brief reference on my part to the subject now before the Senate. It was not my purpose to speak on this occasion. My interest in the main subject, however, is of such a character and was evidenced so early in the present session that I do not feel warranted in voting without indicating some serious defects, which, in my judgment, inhere in the proposed legislation and the true legislative path Congress should now pursue.

In so saying, as already stated to the Senator from Missouri [Mr. Hawes], I have no disposition to halt or interfere with any reasonable effort which will extend relief in this critical hour to the stricken people of the United States. The emergency is so great, the necessity for the relief of suffering so compelling, and the obligation resting on the Government of the United States so primary, that no one here is justified in delaying even for a moment on purely technical ground any effective Federal relief. Certainly we all rejoice that legislation which was taboo in January is sanctified in June. However, in fairness to the permanent reputation of some Members of this body, it should be emphasized as already in some measure suggested by various tendered amendments, that the bill sponsored by the able Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] and his colleagues lacks both adequacy and safeguarding administrative features.

Senators on this floor to-day have properly pointed out the subterfuge resorted to by provisions in the pending bill for "loans." when in essence it must be the underlying intention of Senators who are behind this proposed legislation really to authorize grants, with a view, no doubt, to ultimate cancellation of such obligations as are for the time being to be imposed on future Federal highway funds of the several States.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator from Colorado yield to me?

Mr. COSTIGAN. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. I have been present during the entire discussion, and I am somewhat amazed at the statement made by the Senator, because I had supposed that it was fully understood that the advances to be made under the proposed legislation were to be regarded as loans which ultimately must be paid by the States, either in direct appropriations or to be subtracted from the road funds which might be allocated to them. If this bill provides for a direct gift to the States, and we are guilty of a subterfuge, to use the Senator's language, I should be disposed to vote against it. At any rate, I should find very great difficulty to reconcile with my judgment and my conscience the approval of a bill that called for direct gifts to the States, because it must be evident that the money is to come from the people of the various States; we have a dual form of government, and there are obligations resting upon the States. I see no reason, if ample time shall be given to the States and ample opportunity shall be afforded to them to make payment to

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the re- | the Government, why we should say the money to be advanced under this bill is a gift to the States. Therefore I inquire of the Senator whether he interprets the bill to provide for gifts and whether he thinks that back of it is the intention to cancel any obligation whatever upon the States to make return to the Government?

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, the Senator from Utah must and doubtless will follow his judgment and conscience as a legislator, but anyone who has observed the course of the arguments this morning, together with amendments already approved, must conclude that, so far as practicable. the Senate is now engaged in the task of separating itself from the announced Federal purpose of this bill to make loans by substituting "advances" to the States. Indeed, the absurdity and injustice of the loan proposal have not been made manifest for the first time on this floor this morning. Months ago the constitutional inhibitions barring many of the States of the Union from contracting indebtedness by way of loans for the relief of individuals were demonstrated to the Senate. Constitutional clauses of State after State of the Union have been drawn to our attention. As a practical matter loans of the character provided for in the bill are idle gestures toward some of the States, except on the assumption that the loans are grants in aid and that deductions from future road funds will ultimately be forgotten.

A State presumably does not escape its constitutional obligation with respect to loans by agreeing to future deductions from a road fund or any other property interest of the Commonwealth. The loan is still a loan. Indeed, if I correctly gathered its meaning, the purpose of the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin, now pending before the Senate, is to remove from the States which have such constitutional restrictions as have been mentioned the duty of pledging the credit of the State for unemployment relief purposes.

I come back, therefore, to my original suggestion that we have here an effort on the part of the framers of this proposed legislation under the form of loans to make, in substance, grants of Federal funds to the States. In any event, in the long run I have no doubt, if the course now mapped out shall be followed, and certain States take what are termed loans, while other States receive what they consider unconditional gifts, however camouflaged, such unequal conditions will be created that Congress, if only under the pressure of equity, will ultimately feel constrained to cancel all obligations so initiated. Nor do some of us who for six months have urged national remedies for a national economic calamity, comparable to the scourge of pestilence or war, shrink in the slightest from a frank advance acceptance of the realities.

By way of further comment, if we adopt literally and seriously the policy of providing for deductions from future Federal highway funds, we are destined to do serious damage to combined Federal and State road-building programs in various sections of our country. It goes without saying that such a development would be unfortunate.

Some other features of the measure fall short of desirable legislation. For example, the amount now sought to be appropriated, however, determined under presidential guidance, falls far short of the needs of the country. Even more unfortunate, there are no safeguards in the bill insuring that the appropriated funds will be distributed where most needed, with full utilization of the knowledge, experience, and efficiency of trained social workers. Emphasis on the view that the States are to receive loans from the Federal Government without Federal guidance, supervision, and restraint customary in laws authorizing Federal aid to States suggests to the States freedom to do as they see fit with funds so contributed by the Federal Government. Moreover, the pending bill unfortunately allocates all appropriated funds on the basis of population, ignoring the crying importance of a reserve fund available for human need in regions without resources and for the army of transient and homeless wanderers for whom local communities are disposed, wherever possible, to deny responsibility.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. COSTIGAN. I yield.

Mr. DAVIS. I am in receipt of a letter from the Governor of Pennsylvania which sets forth that the attorney general of the State has advised the governor that there are but two methods by which the appropriation contemplated in the Wagner bill may be rendered available for work relief in Pennsylvania, because our constitution prohibits the making of loans without a vote of the people. As to these two methods the letter states:

They are-

1. To have the Federal Government itself construct in Pennsylvania projects self-liquidating in character, instead of lending the money to Pennsylvania to construct such projects; or

2. To have the Reconstruction Finance Corporation itself construct these projects.

Only by amending our constitution could the State be authorized to borrow money from the Federal Government or otherwise, and amendments can not come before the electors of this State earlier than the election to be held the first Tuesday after the first Monday in November, 1933.

So, under the provisions of the Wagner bill, the State of Pennsylvania would be prevented from borrowing money from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, the Senator from Pennsylvania was out of the Chamber prior to the adoption of certain amendments offered by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. La Follette] designed so far as possible to correct the objection raised by the attorney general of Pennsylvania. The words "or advances" have been added to the word "loans" in the bill of the Senator from New York, and there is now pending before the Senate an amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin designed, as I interpret it, to relieve the States, if and when they accept Federal aid, from the State constitutional ban against pledging State credit.

Mr. DAVIS. I want the Senator to understand that I am friendly to this measure; and what I wanted to do was to have it so framed that Pennsylvania might enjoy under it the same benefits that will accrue to other States.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Doubtless the humane Senator from Pennsylvania is seeking what other Members of the Senate desire at this time; and my own criticisms of the bill are directed solely to establish that, though the purpose of the pending bill is meritorious, it is highly desirable that adequate and far better safeguarded legislation be enacted than is here presented.

I shall say little more concerning standards of administered relief which ought to be supported in this projected legislation. Those standards were fully maintained in bills, subsequently combined, presented to the Senate last January by my friend the Senator from Wisconsin and myself and discussed at that time in much detail. Too many of those safeguards are lacking in the bill now submitted.

The Senator from Pennsylvania, of course, need feel little concern, I assume, so far as his Commonwealth is involved, because the governor there, whose disinterestedness is known, will doubtless turn the funds wisely toward human relief; but it is entirely conceivable that in other parts of the country urgent needs of individual groups of citizens for financial assistance may outweigh the needs of the unemployed. I venture, therefore, to urge the attention of the Senate while there is time to the lack of safeguards with respect to the State distribution and use of these funds.

Such distribution, so far as possible, should be through established and trusted State public welfare agencies, yet the bill is silent in that respect.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COSTIGAN. With pleasure.

Mr. DAVIS. When the funds are turned over to the State, does not the Senator think it would be advisable for the governor, where there are relief agencies in the several communities, to turn over the money to them?

Mr. COSTIGAN. Without question, in my judgment, the funds, wherever practicable, should be distributed through established welfare agencies under the administration of trained social workers.

Mr. DAVIS. I am in hearty accord with the Senator.

Mr. COSTIGAN. For the reasons assigned, sir, without further elaboration of my views—with which the Senate has long been familiar—it is my intention before the bill of the Senator from New York is submitted to the Senate, to offer for consideration, by way of substitute and for the sake of the permanent Record, another bill now pending before this body.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. La Follette].

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, may we have the amendment stated?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The Legislative Clerk. On page 4, line 14, insert the following:

Nothing in this act shall be construed to authorize the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to refuse to make an advance to any State because of existing constitutional inhibitions upon the State or because the State has borrowed to the full extent authorized by State law. The amount for which application is made shall be immediately payable to the State upon the filing of the application and delivery to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation of the receipt required by section 3.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, in my State we have a constitutional prohibition against the State's borrowing funds in excess of $400,000 save through and after a direct vote of the people. In other words, the legislature must propose the form of loan, it must be referred to the people at an election, and the electors must express themselves in favor of the loan before it can be legally made. Therefore the terms of this bill would make available the sum of only $400,000 to my State as its provisions are now formed.

I think I understand the provisions in the form of the amendment submitted by the Senator from Wisconsin. To the end that my interpretation may be stated, I submit the text of an amendment and ask that it be stated for the information of the Senate. After it is read, I desire to ask the Senator from Wisconsin whether or not, in his opinion, my amendment would do the same thing in effect as his pending amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. It is proposed to add to the end of line 14, page 4:

Provided, That where constitutional or legal limitations or prohibitions exist against the incurring of obligations by any State, the said Reconstruction Finance Corporation, relying upon the self-liquidating provisions of this act and the future act or acts of such State receiving such loan to protect the financial power and credit of such State, is authorized to make such loan as provided herein, notwithstanding such limitation or prohibition.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I think I can assure the Senator from Oklahoma that the objective which he seeks to accomplish by his amendment is fully accomplished by the one which is now pending. In other words, what is desired here is not to give any discretionary power to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to withhold loans or advances to States because of the constitutional provisions or the statutory provisions of any State against incurring loans; and once a State has filed its application through its governor, and filed its receipt as provided in this bill, it is then made directory upon the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to pay out the sum allocated to the State.

Therefore I can assure the Senator that this amendment fully protects the State of Oklahoma and other States which may have constitutional provisions against the incurring of indebtedness.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, may I submit a similar inquiry to the author of the bill, the Senator from New York?

Mr. WAGNER. I concur in everything that the Senator from Wisconsin has said. Of course, I have contended that the original bill amply protects the States.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. My purpose in suggesting this amendment was to have an interpretation; and, relying upon the answers given me by the author of the pending amendment and likewise the author of the bill, I shall not urge the amendment, and content myself with having it printed in the Record.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. La Follette].

Mr. BULKLEY. Mr. President, the pending amendment is exactly in accord with the purpose of the authors of the bill. Strictly speaking, I do not think it is necessary; but as it tends to clarify the intent of the bill, I sincerely hope it will be adopted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment. I desire to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that, apparently through an inadvertence, one of the elements in this Government that is a very large tax-payer and a very large contributor to the Federal Government has no opportunity of receiving any benefit under this bill, although it must share its financial responsibilities. I refer to the Territory of Hawaii, which contributes over $10,000,000 a year of internal-revenue taxes, or as much as 10 or 12 States that might be mentioned.

I am not at all sure that the Territory will apply for relief any more than that some of the States, like the State of Rhode Island or the State of Connecticut, will do so; but it seems to me that in fairness the bill should be amended by including, after the word "States," the word "Territories."

Therefore, in line 4, page 2, I move that, after the word "States," the words "and Territories" be inserted.

Mr. BULKLEY. That is fair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BINGHAM. Now I ask unanimous consent that the clerks may insert at the proper places in the bill, wherever the word "States" or "State" is used, the words "Territories" or "Territory."

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, that order will be made.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, the amendment which I am tendering was discussed by me for a moment this morning; and the Senators who are in charge of the bill, understanding its purpose, announced their willingness to accept it, recognizing its propriety.

I would only say this, sir: I do not wish to disguise from the generous Senators, nor from anyone, that in placing in this measure something of an inverted order of consent that the governor of the State may advance a loan to the local political bodies within the State if, in his judgment, it is proper; I am referring to the school board of the city of Chicago, whose school-teachers have gone for so many months without pay and without the necessities of life, and suffering under hardships indescribable; the police of the city, with the risks of life they are compelled to assume every hour of the day, due to conditions in my city, and the surrounding country; the firemen, and such other organizations as there are, 39 in number; particularly the pressing needs of the drainage district.

I deplore to say that a great State such as Illinois, a wondrous imperial municipality such as Chicago, should still remain under that archaic form of government with 39 taxing bodies within its principal municipality.

This measure, may I say to the Senator, sensitive that I am taking more time than necessary, is with a view of allowing the governor to advance any loan that may be extended to the governor to any one of these departments which he may feel has conditions and circumstances justifying the advance.

I beg that the amendment be stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 14, page 4, following the word "State," insert:

Nothing herein forbids the governor of any State advancing a portion of the loan extended to the State to any department or separate political organization of the State.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator whether, in case the amendment is adopted, the Government would still hold the State of Illinois responsible for any advance that she may make to any subdivision or agency within the State.

Mr. LEWIS. I think it is so provided, as the amendment, if my able friend from Utah will note, merely says that it does not forbid the governor. The governor can not extend that loan, however, excepting to those whose security he is willing to take in the fulfillment of the obligation imposed on him for the kind of security he must extend before he can get a loan at all.

Mr. SMOOT. I have no objection whatever to the bill allowing the State of Illinois to make the loan; but under the wording of the amendment I was a little fearful whether technically the Government of the United States would have to look to the subdivision or the parties to whom the State might loan the money.

Mr. LEWIS. I think my friend at my right had that in

Mr. BULKLEY. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. SMOOT. I do.

Mr. BULKLEY. On that subject I have consulted with the Senator from Montana [Mr. Walsh], and he thought that the bill would not be subject to that objection; but the very fact that the Senator from Utah has some doubt about it renews in my mind the suggestion that, perhaps, some limitation might be desirable.

Mr. LEWIS. Will the Senator from Utah suggest a phrase which he thinks would cover the matter? I am anxious not in any wise to disturb the harmony of this whole arrangement.

Mr. SMOOT. Will the Senator let the amendment lie on the table a moment and call it up later?

Mr. LEWIS. At the pleasure of the Senator from Utah. Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, if I may intrude, I think that under the proposed act as it is now the governor would have the right to do exactly what it is here suggested that he may do; and for that reason the amendment in no way affects the power of the governor to loan part of this money to municipalities, provided it is for the purposes contemplated by the act.

Mr. SMOOT. What was in my mind, Mr. President, was this: The bill itself, I think, specifically allows that very thing to be done, but if we put this amendment into the bill, then the question will arise, Why is that language in the bill? If the amendment should be agreed to, and it were found that Congress had put in authority for loans to the States, and then qualified it with this amendment, in my opinion, it might be construed that that amendment would authorize the lending of the money through the State to the different agencies, and the Government would have to look to the agencies.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, it will be observed that the amendment merely says that there is nothing in the act which forbids the governor, in the distribution, from choosing some of these organizations which may be representing the poor and the miserable and the depressed by some form of organization or as political organizations. It does not forbid him advancing the money directly to them to carry out the purposes of the loan.

Mr. SMOOT. There is nothing in the bill, in my opinion, which would prevent the governor from doing it now.

Mr. LEWIS. On the other hand, with great respect for the opinion of my able friend from Utah, suppose with perfect silence that language goes into the bill and these different organizations seek relief, and it should be decided that there was nothing in the bill authorizing the governor to make an advance to the organization, right then and there would there be obstruction, and no chance of rescue would come.

Mr. BULKLEY. Mr. President, when the Senator from Illinois first suggested this amendment I made to him practically the same suggestion that has been stated by the Senator from Utah. But after private consultation with the Senator from Montana it developed that he thought there was no danger in that direction, and I therefore withdrew the suggestion. But, as I have said, the very fact that the Senator from Utah finds the same doubt makes me feel that a limitation ought to be added, and I am sure the Senator from Illinois will not object.

Mr. LEWIS. No; whatever words meet the approval of Senators I will agree to.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Utah yield?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield.

Mr. BRATTON. It seems to me that when we keep in mind the following language, on page 2, beginning at line 16—

The amount of loan or loans to each State, with interest at the rate of 5 per cent per annum upon any unpaid balance, shall be reimbursed to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation by making from its allocations of Federal-aid highway money, and so forth, we must agree that that carries a definite commitment on the part of the State either to pay the money or to have it deducted from its annual allocation of Federal-aid highway funds, and the Government is amply protected for the repayment of the money in that way. I do not anticipate any difficulty and have no fear that the bill could be construed as absolving the State of its obligation to repay the money, either in cash or by deduction from its annual allocations of Federal-aid highway money. Let me call the attention of the Senator from Utah to the fact that the language is that—

The amount of such loan or loans to each State, with interest at the rate of 5 per cent per annum * * * shall be reimbursed to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation by making annual deductions.

Mr. SMOOT. That is true, as far as that is concerned, but those words are in the measure as it will be passed, if there is no amendment. It seems to me that that virtually would give the States the authority to lend or do whatever they wanted to with the money.

Mr. BRATTON. So it would; but it would not absolve a State of its obligation to see that the money was repaid or have it deducted from its Federal-aid highway money.

Mr. SMOOT. I agree with the Senator; but if an amendment such as that offered by the Senator from Illinois should be added to the measure, I think the question would be, Why was that put into the law? The measure itself is plain—that the money shall be loaned to the States. I think a State, after it got the money, could do just as it pleased with the money without any act of Congress; but when we begin to qualify the measure then the question will arise. Why was that put in?

Mr. BRATTON. Simply to free the State in the use to which the money might be devoted, but it would not absolve the State, in whole or in part, of its obligation to see that the money was repaid, nor would it limit it in any wise.

Mr. SMOOT. If that is the opinion of the attorneys in the Chamber, I shall not say another word; but it struck me just as I have stated. I know the Senator from Illinois did not want to accomplish anything such as that suggested.

Mr. LEWIS. No. I would prefer that there be harmony, but my two able friends from my right consoled me with the thought that the amendment did not disturb the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from New York [Mr. Wagner].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, I want to commend the gentlemen who have introduced this bill. I want to congratulate them upon recognizing our emergency and presenting finally to the Senate the particular mode of distribution of funds of the United States Government in that emergency.

I want particularly to congratulate the Senator from New York [Mr. Wagner]. The Senator from New York, with a pertinacity, a perseverance, and an ability which do him infinite credit, with a statesmanlike vision possessed by few of us, in season and out, ever since the emergency arose for aid to the unemployed in this country, and ever since there was need for governmental action as this bill contemplates, has done ably, not only his full duty but has labored in a fashion, sir, that has endeared him to those of us who believe in human beings as the greatest asset of this Nation, and those of us, too, who can appreciate statesmanlike efforts by a Member of this body.

In passing, I wish, as well, to compliment the Senator from Colorado [Mr. Costigan] and the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. La Follette] for so well pioneering the way in the last session in the matter of emergency relief.

The principal thing I rose for to-day, Mr. President, at this moment was to say that at last, at last, after three years of depression, after three years such as this Nation never before has known, after three years of suffering of our people, after three years of unemployment in this country, which the wildest imagination never would have conjured up, after three years, sir, the administration of the Government of the United States finally recognizes the emergency that exists and finally reaches a conclusion, after having had 62 other conclusions upon the subject, that relief is essential from the Government of the United States unto its suffering citizens.

At last, sir, we have reached the time now, in this bill, however it may be written, however I may think that it be filled with gaps which ought to be in some fashion filled up, however uncertain it make be in some of its terms—at last, Mr. President, we have reached the stage in this country, after three years of hell, when the administration finally bows its head and admits the conditions which exist and is ready to relieve our people in their dire distress.

I recall, sir, when I presided over the Committee on Commerce during March and April, 1930, how there came before us then three bills designed to aid the unemployed in this country, three bills, sir, which had a vision in them as to how to deal with the problem of depression, bills introduced by the Senator from New York [Mr. Wagner].

I recall the testimony that then was taken before the Committee on Commerce. I remember the difficulty we had in putting out upon the floor the bills which were then presented by the Senator from New York, and I am proud of the fact that I contributed, in very small degree, to that particular consummation.

I recall that when we were taking the testimony, and those from New York, from Philadelphia, from Chicago, and from other parts of the United States, came before our committee, at a time when it might have been possible for us to have halted the awful situation which now confronts us, how they testified to the necessity for action upon the part of the Government of the United States. I remember the testimony then of the president of the American Federation of Labor. I remember he said there were 3,000,000 unemployed in this Nation then-now there are three times that number-and how he sounded the warning before our committee; how the officials of New York State, of Illinois, and of Pennsylvania, sounded the warning, too-and I remember, sir, when those bills of the Senator from New York were before our committee and we were considering them. how every statement of necessity and emergency was denied publicly and officially by the administration which now recognizes both and the results of the unpardonable delay and how every obstacle then was put in the way, in March and April, 1930, of the Senator from New York and the Committee on Commerce, which was endeavoring to act, by the present administration, and every effort made to prevent any kind of amelioration, any kind of relief, and to thwart every endeavor to meet the situation which then was presented.

I recall, sir, how in the ensuing days and the ensuing years every time the endeavor was made, either upon this floor or elsewhere, to lay bare the situation which existed and presented it to our people, we were met with statements which had to be recalled a few days after they were made, how every single suggestion of a remedy or means of relief was met with an opposition it was impossible to overcome. Until finally, now, sir, when we are in the depths as we have never been before, finally, let us thank God that even finally it has come; the administration has recognized the situation that is presented, and the administration concedes that it is essential that there should be accorded direct relief to the States of this country and relief unto those who are shelterless, those who are hungry, and those who are unemployed.

It is a glorious day, Mr. President. I do not care for the specific provisions in the bill. Some of them seem to me so bizarre from a legal standpoint that I would not attempt to discuss them in any degree whatsoever. I do not care that they may not meet the technical requirements of some of the constitutions of the States, or that they may meet only in small degree the requirements of a particular locality. That is not the point. The principle has been recognized now after nearly three years of denial of it by the administration.

Finally, sir, we have come to know that Government has an obligation; an obligation not only unto one class, not only, unto those who have and those who represent great institutions, but an obligation unto plain men and women and children, and that that obligation must be fulfilled so far as Government is able to fulfill it.

The bill, sir, is a mere drop in the bucket. The bill, in the amount appropriated, even if it were doled out—oh, what a terrible word that was! I beg your pardon for using it, sir. What a terrible word that was only a few months ago! Even if it were doled out to the States of the Union and given to those who are entitled to it, all of it upon the proportions that are proposed in the bill to be given, even then it will not accomplish great results. I recognize that fact. I recognize as well that in order to call this thing by some name that will make it sweeter to those who have to swallow it, a very nauseous dose, we use the word "loan" in the bill.

There is not any such thing and there will not be after we pay the money out under this bill. We may pretend it and, like God has furnished some of the birds of the air and the beasts of the field, we may give to the bill its protective coloring by asserting that loans are made to the States and that loans ultimately will be repaid by the various States under the United States Government.

I do not care whether it is one sort or another, that it contains this kind of a provision that I do not like or that kind of a provision that I think unworkable. This marks the day of the principle! It is the triumph to-day, sir, of the principle for which the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] has contended, for which the Senator from Colorado [Mr. Costigan] made his glorious fight in conjunction with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] last year. It is the principle that after all, when we have done our duty by the great financial institutions and have taken to the utmost the resources of the Nation that the banks may enjoy some measure of freedom and success, and that railroads may continue in the fashion in which they have continued in the past-it recognizes the principle finally, sir, that we owe an obligation, too, to what is called the under man, the man indeed who after all is the backbone of the citizenship of the Nation and upon whom this Nation must depend in every time, whether of prosperity or adversity. So it was, sir, that at this day when finally has triumphed a great principle of recognition of the obligation of government and a response to that obligation, that I rose, sir, merely to compliment all those who have been engaged in the endeavor and all those who have pioneered the way.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I desire to have read at the desk a passage from a letter which I have just received from a citizen of my State, a former member of the legislature of the State and a former candidate for governor. I do not care to disclose his name.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Oklahoma? The Chair hears none, and the clerk will read, as requested.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Of course, the Government has not so far done anything for them, and as far as the average man is able to discern the Government has no intention of trying to do anything in the immediate future, unless it might appropriate some more wheat from the quantity in the hands of the Farm Board. This will only make more parasites looking to the Government for charity. Each time the State has tried to aid by way of charity it has definitely made the parasitical group larger, and the recent wheat appropriation and flour distribution have just increased that group. The people do not need charity, but they need work and a living wage.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I submit that passage for whatever it may be worth. I make no comment upon it. I make no comment upon the pending legislation. Neither shall I undertake to forecast its consequences.

On a previous occasion I made some comments upon the effect of free wheat, free pork, free wine, and free shows in ancient Rome. They changed the Roman character. They destroyed the Roman Republic. They destroyed the liberties of the Roman people. It is an old saying, it is an old warning, that no man and that no people should calculate that he or they will constitute an exception to a general rule. I see many footsteps in the past leading in this direction. I see few footsteps returning. I think that this Congress should converge its efforts to change existing conditions and to counteract the causes which have brought these conditions upon us. I regard this as a palliative, not a cure—fortunate if it be a palliative and not a poison.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, I have been very deeply impressed with the words just spoken by the distinguished Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. Gore]. I agree with everything that he has said. I have also been deeply impressed with the eloquent address just made by the senior Senator from California [Mr. Johnson]. I realize that with his long experience he has a keen perception of legislative matters. In view of what he has said and the statement he has made I shall vote against the bill.

Mr. President, in my opinion this Government was formed to take care of the general welfare of the States and not of the people therein, that being the duty of the States and the municipalities themselves. In the opinion of the people whom I have the honor to represent on this floor, it is the duty of the State and the municipalities and the localities to look after the poor and unfortunate. It is being done in the State of Connecticut and will continue to be done. I can assure those within the sound of my voice that my State, although it has to bear a portion of whatever charges may come from this bill, will not ask for any loan or advancement under it, preferring to believe in State rights, preferring to believe in State responsibility for its own citizens. We believe that when a great Government like that of the United States, with 125,000,000 people, attempts to look after the interests of the individual citizen and to relieve the States of the responsibility to look after their citizens, we face the turning of the ways, as the Senator from California has said.

If it is true, as he said, that the word "loan" is a protective coloration, and that this is a gift to the States to be given to the people for their relief—if it is true, as he said, that this is a recognition on the part of the Federal Government that it will use its power in taking money away from the taxpayers of the States and turning it back through channels to those who can not pay taxes and who are in an unfortunate condition, then, Mr. President, I believe it is true that this is a most momentous occasion. I regret that this bill, obviously, is going to pass. I regret that some States are in such difficulties that they find it impossible to look after their own people. I am proud of the fact that the people in my State propose to look after their own poor and unfortunate in the best way they can. I believe that is safety in government.

I believe in State rights. I believe in local self-government. I believe that the money of the taxpayers, when it is used to relieve the poor and distressed, can be better and more safely used when it is controlled closely by those who are in touch with the taxpayers, namely, the officials of the States and municipalities concerned. Therefore, Mr. President, regretfully, and hoping that my motives will not be misunderstood, I shall find it necessary to vote against the bill.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated for the information of the Senate.

The CHIEF CLERK. At the proper place insert:

All or any parts of such grants may be disbursed in aid or furtherance of any program or programs of unemployment relief based on the location of those deemed entitled to relief on farm lands either in such State or elsewhere, and either by direct expenditure or by loans to any approved agency or to groups or individuals.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, without attempting in any way to answer the speeches by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. Gore] and the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. Logan], I only wish to say that in the face of human distress, misery, and starvation I am ready to disregard many principles which I have always nurtured; I am ready, as I have been for many months, to disregard the form of the measure presented and to look to its substance and to contribute my vote toward procuring the enactment of legislation for the relief of the destitute in those localities, at least, where the States and their local agencies have come here and stated to the Congress that they are no longer able to go forward with relief benefits.

Having stated that, Mr. President, I want to address myself to the amendment which I have just proposed and which has just been read at the desk.

The plan embodied in the pending bill provides means with which, in large part, our great emergency may be temporarily cared for. From the funds to be made available it seems to me that we should provide, as far as we can, for permanent relief.

I have offered an amendment to the bill which does not require any additional appropriation and does not make its application compulsory, but it does specifically authorize a State to use money made available to it for putting into execution the program stated in the amendment.

The amendment is as follows:

All or any part of such grants may be disbursed in aid or furtherance of any program or programs of unemployment relief based on the location of those deemed entitled to relief on farm lands, either in such State or elsewhere and either by direct expenditure or by loans to any approved agency or to groups or individuals.

The plan proposed involves a reappraisement of social and economic conditions, and also planning for permanent relief for a large number of families who are now in the destitute class. I pretend no originality in conception of the suggested program. It has had wide consideration by students whose minds have tried to rebuild an enduring social and economic structure and who entertain no satisfactory reassurance that temporary aid for the unemployed will permanently solve the most important of all the problems confronting our country.

Food and shelter for all who are willing to work and for all who can not secure gainful employment is the paramount slogan in the heart of every true American. I have no formula for a full and complete solution of our ills. The backto-the-soil plan is tendered as a partial solution only, but one under which the credit extended will pro tanto permanently solve the problem of present peril for many people.

It is evident that our social and economic life is now in the process of readjustment. The machinery and gasoline age and the World War brought about a general shift in the affairs of men.

In former days there existed a balance between the number engaged in agriculture and industry. The necessities of the World War, followed by a period of excessive inflation, brought the era of mass production. A great draft of farmers and their sons to industry followed.

Inventive genius produced new machinery to displace man power. Production was thereby increased and gross earnings of the working class correspondingly decreased. Then came the crash of 1929, since which time the wheels of industry have constantly slowed down. The number of workers unemployed has constantly increased. With millions now unemployed and their accumulations exhausted, everyone is asking: "What can be done?" "When will business improve so that the unemployed can have work?"

It is likely that it will be too long to wait for a sufficient revival of business to engage all the men drawn into industry during the last decade. For some years we have had a degree of production and business activity never before witnessed. Can we reasonably expect an early return of such conditions and the early reemployment by industry of the great army of the unemployed? It takes great optimism to generate much confidence in such a happy result. Some people seem to think that it is the duty of the Government to provide employment for all who want to work. Without entering into a discussion of the principles of government involved, the suggestion may be disposed of now with the statement that under prevailing conditions it is impossible to carry out the suggestion. While it may not be the duty of the American Government to furnish employment, it has a direct responsibility for legislation and actions which result directly or indirectly in unemployment. As I am considering remedies for our unhappy plight, I shall not give expression to my views on unwise legislation during recent years which may be responsible for prevailing conditions.

Everyone with a normal heart is grieved when he witnesses distress being suffered by his fellow men. Generosity in helping the needy by those who have a surplus beyond their actual requirements stirs us with emotions higher than mere admiration. Much of that sort of helpfulness is now necessary, but in my opinion such aid hereafter will be entirely inadequate to care for the destitute.

A large public-works program will, of course, be helpful. It is doubtful if such a plan, however, can be financed on a scale commensurate with the requirements of the unemployed in all sections of the country. Such public works must of necessity be carried on in selected spots. Additional employment will be provided in the fortunate localities. That will be helpful; but when the work shall be finished what then will be the situation? Those furnished employment will again find themselves unemployed, and the program may not be repeated indefinitely. It seems to me that it would be wiser to devote some part of the available credit of the Government to some plan which looks to permanent, rather than temporary, relief, if such a recourse may be found.

How many years lie ahead of us before industry can again employ all the idle workers? What is to be done before that time comes if it arrives during the present generation? Can a more evenly balanced coordination between the number engaged in industry and agriculture be reestablished? Can society be readjusted to normal conditions which prevailed before the orgy of industrial production held out false hope of permanent employment to so many who were otherwise employed and to so many farmers and sons of farmers?

When America was establishing itself on the firm basis of growth which brought it to the forefront of nations, there were few industrial workers. An overwhelming proportion of our population tilled the soil or engaged in business directly related to agriculture. It can be done again. It seems inevitable that many who were raised upon the farm must return to the soil. If employment can not be found in the cities and towns, a living can be dug out of the earth. Unfortunately for many people, prevailing conditions do not present a free choice of occupations. Dire necessity decrees for many for a time at least that any honorable work, urban or rural, should be accepted that will keep the family together and the wolf from the door until something more suitable can be found.

A picture of the shift from rural to urban population may be had by reviewing the census reports on rural and urban population. The last four census reports showed the percentage of rural population as follows:

	Per	cent
1900		60
1910		54.2
1920		48.6

Towns with less than 2,500 population are counted as rural. Using 123,000,000 as the total population for 1930, it appears that if the same ratio had been maintained between rural and urban population, there are now in the cities 6,000,000 people who, under the 1920 ratio, would be in the rural classification. Based on the ratio of 1910, there are 12,500,000 people who would now be in the rural classification. Based on the ratio of 1900 there are 19,700,000 people now in the cities who would have been in the country. These figures present a startling shift from rural to city life. The census reports for 1920 and 1930 separate the rural population into rural farm and rural nonfarm population, thereby separating the population in the small towns and in the country not engaged in farming. In 1920 the rural farm population was 29.7 per cent of the total. In 1930 it was 24.6 per cent. It is significant that lacking only one-tenth of 1 per cent the entire shift to urban from rural population from 1920 to 1930 was from the rural farm population, numbering 6,000,000 people, according to the ratios, if they had been maintained.

Mr. President, it may be suggested that there is now an overproduction of farm commodities. With staple cash products, such as cotton and wheat, that may be true from the standpoint of the ability of consumers to buy. The farmers' trouble is not the absence of home necessities. He has food and feeds in abundance. His problem is keeping the sheriff from his door because of debts incurred when one bale of cotton would pay as much on his debt as four bales will now pay, or one bushel of wheat would buy as much as four bushels will now buy. If the average farmer could forget his old debts he would not be prosperous but he would not be destitute.

The question arises, How can the unemployed go to the farm when he has no farm, no work stock or implements, no food and no feed?

If 1,000,000 men now unemployed could be financed under a back-to-the-soil program, an improvement in business conditions would more quickly afford work for others unemployed, and would remove several million people from the ranks of the very large number who are anxiously thinking of food for to-morrow.

Farm leaders for years have urged the establishment of a large fund to buy surplus commodities out of the market. For more logical and stronger economic and humane reasons a large fund to lift the surplus of unemployed workers out of the industrial market and from the domain of benevolence can be sustained.

If a fund of $1,000,000,000 should be applied to aiding unemployed who desire to return to the farm or to a subsistence home, it could probably be so used as to place 1,000,000 or more men with their families on productive land. It should not be forgotten that there are millions of acres of improved farm lands which under present conditions can be rented at small costs. With the acreage-reduction program under full swing there will be more millions of acres of improved lands which could be rented. Work stock, farming tools, and supplies are cheaper than they have been for years. Many farms can be bought for a very small initial payment. Land can be bought for little more than current taxes.

Would this addition to the 11,000,000 men now engaged in agriculture aggravate their present plight? It will not if farmers become convinced that their main business should be producing "a living" at home and some cash commodity as a side line. They were in much better condition when a larger proportion of our population was rural.

The money furnished should not be a gift; it should be a loan with installment payments over a reasonable time, and secured by continuing liens on crops and stock and land. The difficulties of private capital doing the financing are recognized. Profits would be limited to interest, and there would be losses of invested capital. The attractions of industry lured countless thousands from the farms. The lure not being sustained, industry should support a program to help get them back to the farm. A large movement from congested urban centers to the vast spaces of rural opportunity would to that extent aid in readjusting an economic unbalance between workers and jobs in industry. Under this plan, decentralization would be and should be accelerated.

It should not be forgotten that rural life has in recent years been vastly changed. With good roads, rural mail delivery, improved school facilities, consolidated schools with free bus service, free transportation to high schools, rural telephones, and many other advantages, country life from a social standpoint is in large measure comparable to suburban opportunities.

A large back-to-the-farm revolving loan fund would be a source of relief to worthy, good citizens, farmers by training, who are anxious to engage in any honorable work that will preserve their home circle and provide a way for them to embark upon an enterprise which may be temporary or permanent according to the unfolding of the future for each individual.

If it may be a long time before all who have been engaged in industrial work can get work again in industry—white collars and overalls—why not bridge over the chasm, and help those who desire to do so to establish themselves in self-supporting work?

The immediate helpful effect of the expenditure of such a sum of money, distributed largely among farmers in the purchase of farming outfits, is a consideration not to be ignored.

To buy a million cows, a million mules and horses, a million sows and millions of pigs, a million broods of chickens, millions of bushels of corn and hay and potatoes, and all the other things necessary to establish a family on a farm, would put most of the money in circulation where it is sorely needed, and provide present farmers who sell to the new farmers additional debt-paying power. A new market would thus be provided where there is now no market. Farm prices would be stimulated, and land values made firmer. In the construction of many small homes the building trade would greatly benefit, and work would be afforded for many now unemployed.

The suggestion of aiding former ruralists to get back to the soil does not involve the idea of placing all of them in the business of farming, nor of the acquisition in all cases of large acreage. For those who now live in large industrial centers, and who prefer to remain in close proximity to openings for industrial employment, a few acres of land with a very modest home would serve the purpose. The principal object is to provide a place where with thrift, frugality, and industry they can work out from the soil a subsistence for themselves and their families, and as a side line find employment here and there, now and then, until a better day dawns.

Those who conceive that few would, in good faith, take advantage of a back-to-the-soil movement must not know the heartburns of millions now drifting without chart or compass and with hope fading away; they do not realize the ardent craving for some humble place to call home, where the family circle may be kept inviolate, and where there exists the assurance that nature, with the cooperation of the family, will furnish the necessities for actual subsistence.

Mr. President, there will be no paucity of applications if this Congress shall pass a bill providing financial aid for acquiring country homes by purchase or lease for those who formerly engaged in farming. The great problem will be taking care of the large number of jobless men, now walking the streets in despair and desperation, who want to return to "nature's storehouse." With a cow and a sow, a hoe, a spade and a plow, and with food and feed supplies for a season, those who will can thereafter produce and preserve the food and feed necessities for the home, and be permanently removed from the large mass of the unemployed. Prospects for luxury? No; but removed from the bewildered and heart-bleeding mass of the unemployed, and with pride, confidence, and self-respect reasserted. Every one so removed from the ranks of the unemployed will not only lessen the requirements now resting so heavily upon State and city, and upon the charity of the public, but will also make room at the employment gate when industry can use more men.

I have outlined the effect of assisting a million or more families to get reestablished in subsistence homes in the hope that in any further legislation for unemployment relief, the suggested plan may secure further recognition.

In my State, if specific authority is given, I am assured that the State agencies intrusted with the administration of the money allotted to Alabama will lead the way for other States.

Plans are now being worked out, with the governor and business and public-spirited and charitable citizens taking the lead, to put into prompt operation the removal of former farmers to subsistence farms. The plan includes a comprehensive survey for locating units in colonies, and also in individual homes, in the communities, if desired, where the destitute formerly resided.

I am informed that in setting up organized units the State will make available its road machinery and, if found feasible and desirable, will supply convicts to open roads, dig drainage ditches, and help erect houses.

The fact should not be overlooked that probably a majority of the destitute in southern industrial centers are colored people who were raised on farms. I speak with knowledge of Birmingham. Our white people, with big hearts and great generosity, have been providing for them, in addition to the heavy burden of aiding the destitute of our own race.

I ask you to agree to the amendment I have offered. It merely gives each State the option of applying the plan.

I sincerely hope that the Senator from New York, who has done such valuable work on this entire program, will agree to the incorporation of this amendment in the bill. It leaves it purely optional with each State to put it into application and effect.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, naturally one votes against a bill of this nature in a very sober spirit. A man would be very insensitive who did not realize the amount and degree of distress that now prevails in the United States.

I know that this bill is going to pass. I have no intention of delaying it by making a lengthy speech; but I want the RECORD to show, in brevity, my reasons for voting against it.

I believe that the historian of the future who writes, perhaps, upon the decline and fall of the American Republic, will point to to-day as one of the milestones upon the road to disintegration of this Government.

These are not loans that we are providing for the States, and we might just as well be frank enough to acknowledge that no one of us thinks they are loans. Not one penny of this fund will ever be repaid to the National Treasury.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The Senator from Michigan [Mr. Couzens] has been particularly solicitous of having the bill provide specifically, if it does not so provide in general terms—we have convinced him that it does in general terms—that any State may go to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and, by pledging with it proper securities, secure a loan; and that, of course, would be repaid in order to redeem the securities thus pledged.

Mr. REED. I had not overlooked that, Mr. President. I know that a State will have the option of making a loan with security; but, on the other hand, it will have an option of accepting this grant in effect as a prepayment of the Federal aid toward highway construction. If 10 years in Congress has taught me anything, it has given me a moral certainty that when the time comes for repayment by deductions from those Federal-aid appropriations for highways Congress will increase the amount to be appropriated so that, after making the deductions, the States will get as much as they otherwise would, and we will have repaid ourselves by the gesture of increasing those appropriations.

Certain States of the United States are unable, under their constitutions, to borrow. I think some 12 or 13 States have that constitutional prohibition. That was the outcome of long, sad experience in borrowing. The voters of those States had learned that, given the authority to borrow without limitation, State bankruptcy lay ahead; and the long and disgraceful history of repudiated State bonds illustrates the wisdom of the precautions they took.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?
The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. WAGNER. If the Senator is persuaded that there is need for this supplemental aid by the Federal Government to cope with the situation of distress in the States, how would he provide that the Federal Government shall discharge its obligation in that regard?

Mr. REED. But I am not persuaded of it. I believe that the States have a wider taxing power than the Federal Government has, and that they themselves, if they are faced with the necessity, and can not pass over the responsibility to us in this fashion, can just as well raise from the human beings who constitute their population an adequate relief fund as we can raise it from those same human beings; because the populations of the several States constitute the populations from which we will raise the money to create this fund.

What we are doing here, in effect, is to toss to the winds those prohibitions against State indebtedness which experience had shown to be wise. We are turning a fund of $300,-000,000 over to the governors to spend as they see fit, without one syllable requiring them to account to us or to anyone else. We are turning it over to those governors because we have not the courage to specify the manner in which the largesse shall be distributed, and we are setting no rule whatever to guide them. As surely as that the sun will rise to-morrow, some one or more of those 48 governors will apply that fund in such strange manner as to create a national scandal, and it will be our fault. Let us face that responsibility.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I shall be compelled to leave the Chamber for a while, and, with the permission of the Senator from Pennsylvania, I should like to register now my dissent from the correctness of the assertion the Senator has made that the proposed advance or loan will never be reimbursed in any part.

There is, of course, the possibility that losses may result, but I do not believe that the Senator would wish to stand upon the proposition that when a State accepts a fund of the nature contemplated for the purpose of supplying the immediate wants of its citizens, which the State, by reason of previous expenditures for such purposes, is unable to meet, that State will resort to processes of evasion; or that the Congress will nullify the agreements and arrangements entered into and release from all liability.

It is all right to say that the States have the taxing power and that they can levy such tributes upon their own people as may be required to meet the necessities of their citizens. It is also true, and proper to observe at this point, that for almost two years there has been a constant drain on local institutions and resources, which, according to all the evidence before the Senate, has about exhausted those re-

The Senator has said that this measure marks a milepost on the way to the disintegration of our Government. I wonder whether, in making that declaration, he has taken into consideration the conditions which exist in almost every part of the Republic. I wonder whether it is his proposal that the National Government shall take no action whatever and shall refrain from any assistance, in this time of very great necessity, to the local authorities and agencies charged primarily with the responsibility of meeting the demands of the needy. There is danger of the gravest consequences if no action is taken by the National Government

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I was within three minutes of concluding. I did not understand, when I yielded, that the Senator meant to make a speech in my time.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Certainly I shall discontinue, if the Senator desires.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I am perfectly well aware that nothing that I say to-day can in the least avail to change the determination of any Senator. Every one of us has made up his mind as to how he is going to vote and has satisfied himself as to the reasons for his vote.

I speak with the utmost solemnity of which I am capable. I believe that this appropriation is only the beginning of a series which will grow and grow until it breaks the back of the Federal Treasury. I believe that to-day we are lifting the lid of Pandora's box, and we will never be able to close it again, and that the troubles that will come from it will overwhelm us. I would be false to myself if I did not rise to voice my belief that that is what will happen.

I believe this is the first step toward making mendicants of our people and making mendicants of the sovereign State governments upon which this Government is built. I believe the pressure for further advances of this sort will be utterly irresistible, and that Congress will never be able to withstand the demands which will come to us when we meet again in December.

I shall vote against this bill if for no other reason than that history may know that at least one voice was raised against this step which we are taking toward that chasm to which the Nation seems to be hurrying.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I do not see in this situation the question of State rights. I do not see how that is involved. Here is a national emergency, a national problem, a national disaster. Indeed, it is international in many of its aspects, and it does not seem to me that the proposal before us is a digression from sound principles with reference to the relationship of the National Government to the States. The problem of caring for the unemployed, like the problem of aiding business, calls for the cooperation of the State and the National Government, for the cooperation of the thought and purpose of all the people in all walks and stations of life. Are State lines to disappear when private business in the States is in distress and to stand as a barrier when the people in the States are hungry? I readily admit that the first duty is with the State but when the State can no longer meet the situation the duty of this Government is plain and imperative.

After more than two years, this depression is as inexplicable as it was in the beginning. In its scope and resistless force it has the impartiality and the appalling horror of divine wrath-none escape and no words can tell of the agony of mind and heart which accompanies it in its remorseless course. It hovers over and envelops the whole vast domain of human activities and darkens and endangers and confuses the purposes and the plans of the great as well as the humble. We have now reached the point when its effect no longer encompasses the fortunes of individuals merely but when the whole social structure seems threatened. No one has been able accurately to tell why it is here; at least, there has been no agreement among people as to why, and certainly no one has been able to devise a method by which we can escape sources and the power of those institutions to meet the | from it. It is a calamity which is apparently not understood by those who are ablest to solve such problems.

In the midst of that condition of affairs our own people are overtaken with this disaster, and in many places are on the verge of hunger and starvation. It is my opinion that this will continue for some time to be a national question.

We have from the beginning been disposed to treat this economic breakdown as a thing of no great moment, something that would pass in a few weeks or months. We have stubbornly, and in the face of fearful facts, refused to regard this depression as different from other depressions. Men of wisdom and men in authority have insisted that it is all a matter of mentality, that we are the victims of fright, that we are lacking in confidence. But certainly this view must now be disregarded. Nearly three years have passed, fortunes have been dissipated, profits in business have disappeared, 70,000,000 people, including dependents, in the different countries out of work-it is no ordinary depression. The causes which lie at the bottom of it all are no ordinary causes. There is more to this situation than want of confidence, than an ungrounded fear.

This condition came upon us at a time when we were possessed of all kinds of courage and all kinds of initiative, when all fear, all timidity, had been banished from the business world. It came when men were at work, full of hope; when business was big with vast plans for the future. It fell like a night upon noon. Let us, therefore, be rid of the thought that this fearful catastrophe is not a reality. It is the result flowing from the violation of the most salutary principles of humanity, of justice, and of economic sanity, by the leaders of the nations of the world. We are compelled by events to put aside our first theories and meet the depression as a great national and international problem. These citizens hungry and on the verge of starvation are a part of our great national assets and national wealth which we are undertaking to take care of and preserve. It has passed beyond the power of the States to control or meet it.

It has been said several times in this discussion that we are repeating what took place in old Rome. To my mind, there is as wide a difference between the two as there is between night and day. The forces which led to the fall of the Seven Hill City and which gathered in the people from the colonies into the great city were wholly different; the influences upon the citizens were wholly different from anything which has been intimated or indicated in the United States. We are taking care of a people overtaken by a fearful calamity. We are not feting and flattering the people in the interest of a Cæsar but feeding them that they may not die. We are caring for a people overtaken by disaster, not buying a retinue of retainers for an ambitious general. And last but not least in importance, we are extending aid to men and women just as loyal to these institutions and to the principles of free government as the men who sit in this Chamber. No government ever forfeited the respect or loyalty of its people by standing between them and a consuming disaster for which they were not to blame.

If we should approach the 8,000,000 people who are to-day out of employment and their dependents, constituting perhaps 30,000,000 people, and offer them an inducement, political or otherwise, such as was offered in Rome, or offer them an opportunity to earn their daily bread by toil as American citizens, they would turn to their job and thank you for the other hollow compliment.

These people are not idle because of any desire to be idle; they are not out of employment because they refuse to work; they are not disloyal in any sense to the principles of the American Government, nor are they shirking the responsibility which rests upon American citizens. They are, like the greatest of the land, the ablest of the country, unable to understand the cataclysm which has overtaken them, but ready at any moment, when any avenue of escape is offered, through work or otherwise, to accept it.

Mr. President, in my opinion if we could devise here some method by which to give these people employment, they would reject any assistance from the States or the National Government without hesitancy. But so long as we are unable, as leaders, as men in authority, to lead our people out of this distress, can we complain of them if they themselves are unable to find a solution of the problem? No solution being at hand, we are under obligation, as counties, cities, States, and Nation, to help bridge over the condition which now confronts us.

The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] says, with a great deal of earnestness and solemnity, that in his opinion this bill would mark, in the eyes of the future historian, the beginning of the fall of the American Republic. If this were the first instance of the kind, the Senator might be justified in his gloomy prognostication. But things similar to this have been done over and over again. The effects were not serious. Beginning far back in the history of the country, the Nation has over and over again gone to the aid and help of those who were in distress in the States. When a great calamity has overtaken them, we have not considered State lines. We have not considered that the duty rested upon the State alone and not upon the National Government, and the present, in my judgment, is no different in principle from instances to the number of 25 or more which might be cited.

Let me say further to the able Senator from Pennsylvania, I do not believe that this is marking the beginning of the fall of the American Republic, nor do I believe that the American Republic is going to fall. The reserve power of the Anglo-Saxon race in every difficulty and every depression and every distressful period through which it has passed has always been equal to the emergency.

One of the unsolved mysteries of history is the capacity of the people, after an unspeakable scourge, to come back. The people, regardless of what the depression or what the distress might have been, have finally recovered their position and gone forward in the same old way.

Let me say to the able Senator from Pennsylvania that the Anglo-Saxon race has never yet retreated from or abused free government when it has once taken possession of it. I do not feel uneasy so long as no more unwise thing is done than that of extending help when the people are in distress.

England has gone through depressions or through conditions infinitely worse than anything we have experienced. Look at that great country after the Napoleonic wars when there was distress upon every hand, when it seemed that the physical and moral fiber of the people was being eaten out. But they came through and established the principles of free government upon a firmer basis than they had ever been before. It belongs to the race to do these things.

There is infinite reserve power in the people of the United States. They are a moral people, they are an intelligent people, they are a patriotic people, and they can endure hardships as well as any people on earth. I do not know how long this depression will last. I do not know to what condition it will bring us. I do not know how much we will have to suffer. But I venture to say to my able friend from Pennsylvania that, while I may not, he will live to see the American people as independent, as self-helping, as resourceful, as self-reliant in the future as they have been in the past. To help them when they are on the verge of hunger, when they are starving, when their families are being separated is not to undermine character. It is to implant in them the belief that they have a Government which looks after their interests when they are unable to look out for themselves, though doing the best they can to meet the situation. Our experience may yet be a bitter one, but even in this bitter experience there may be compensation. A common sacrifice, common hardships, common suffering, will at last bind us to a common purpose and strengthen us for a common and triumphant victory over our misfortunes. I do not believe we are on the way to ruin. The greatest period in American life is before us. The most sublime triumph of this Republic is ahead.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President, the theory seems to have grown up in the Senate that the Government of the United States deals only with the States themselves. We have heard two or three times to-day, especially from the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BINGHAM], that the general welfare which the United States should promote is the welfare of the States. It seems to me that no consideration has been given to the very soul of the Constitution itself. It seems to me if the Senator from Connecticut would read the first words of the Constitution, he would never again say that on the floor of the Senate. It starts out, "We, the people of the United States." Does that mean State organizations? Does that mean that we are considering only these organizations set up in the various States of the Union?

We, the people of the United States, in order to form a more perfect Union, establish justice, insure domestic tranquility, provide for the common defense, promote the general welfare, and secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and our posterity, do ordain and establish this Constitution of the United States of

To "secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and our

Does that mean the States? There is no warrant for such a conclusion anywhere in the great American declaration of the Government of the United States or its preamble which states its purpose in terms that can not be misunderstood. Then to-day we are told that if this relief goes to the folks themselves, if it goes to the people, it is unconstitutional, and we are laying the foundation for the overthrow of the Government itself.

Mr. President, last year, in 1931, the year of the great depression, we had a national income of $60,000,000,000. That was the gross income. That was $2,500 for each average family in the United States. But the net income, the portion of that which was saved, went mostly to Connecticut, to Pennsylvania, to New York-in fact, to only 10 different States. There was no net income in most of the States of the Union, but there was a great net income of billions to the few States whose enterprises reach out over the whole United States and take profits from all the people everywhere. Therefore, as a matter of justice, the Federal Government owes it to the people of the United States, when any portion is in distress, to tax the other portions which take the earnings of those people in excess profits, and relieve them from that distress.

This particular bill provides for loans to the States and then provides for repayment of those loans by cancellation of a portion of their Federal aid for public roads. I want to discuss the public-road feature just a moment.

The Federal Government started the plan of building the hard roads of the United States. It started by providing for payment of 50 per cent of that expense. It was to be a 50-50 proposition between the States and the Federal Government. But the big-income taxpayers of those States that now see the overthrow of government in a bill like this did not like that plan because they pay most of the income taxes into the Federal Government. In my own State of Iowa there is about $10,000,000 of income taxes paid by 27,000 people. There are 2,273,000 people in the State who do not pay any income tax at all.

The total Federal expense of the State, the allotment of tariff and excise taxes and all, is about $20,000,000. If the State paid taxes in proportion to its population, if these Federal taxes were levied per capita instead of per income, the State of Iowa would pay about $80,000,000 into the Federal Treasury. Twenty million dollars is paid in the State and the other $60,000,000 then is paid by income taxpayers outside of the State, and those are in the 10 fortunate States which have these nation-wide enterprises that reach out with their business into all the States and take profits from all the people of the United States. Therefore it is only just that they should pay into the Federal Treasury taxes greater than the proportion of their population. It is an economic equality that is certainly desirable if we want to preserve the American Union at all.

Recurring now to the road question, the Government started that plan by paying 50-50 of the expenses. The bigincome taxpayers did not like that situation because they must pay half of it into the Federal Treasury and many of the States, because they have no net income, pay but a small share. So they went out into the States and organized roadbooster associations and they boosted for gasoline taxes and county bonds and State bonds, and immensely increased the local expense of the building of hard roads. In fact, in 1930 the total expense was, I believe, $910,000,000 for all the States, but the Federal appropriation was only $125,000,000. Therefore the Federal Government failed to pay any considerable portion even of its half of that expense. In 1931, I believe, the expense on behalf of the States was $1,000,000,000 and the Federal Government again contributed only $125,000,000. Then the economy wave came into this session of the Congress, and the appropriation was cut down to $106,000,000. Therefore, Mr. President, the Federal Government has wholly failed to contribute its share toward the construction of those roads.

In the State of Iowa in 1930 the expense rose to about $33,000,000 and the Federal aid was a little over $3,000,000 toward the construction of hard roads, every one of which was an interstate road, every one of which was a post road, every one of which was a military road.

Therefore, I not only favor the making of this loan but I hope before the time comes for repayment that, instead of deducting it from Federal aid to the States, that portion of the law will be amended and canceled and that the Federal Government will thereby contribute a little more toward its just share in the building of the hard roads of the country. In fact, the Federal Government, instead of spending $300,-000,000 as this bill provides, ought to have spent $500,000,000 each year for the last two or three years for that purpose in order to pay its share of this road construction.

Therefore, Mr. President, I am in favor of the pending bill. The only regret I have is that it is about one-tenth of what it ought to be. Congress fails all the time to do its duties. It just takes a little bite out of the apple and leaves the proposition then to fall down because it has no adequate support. I think one surmise of those gentlemen who are predicting the overthrow of the Government is possibly correct, and that is if we start this thing we can not stop. It is a principle which I believe will push us forward and instead of overthrowing the Government it will save the country. The Government of the United States is overthrown now. The Government of the United States is now under the dictation of these same financial forces which are seeking to avoid the payment of these taxes in their just share to the Federal Treasury.

Mr. WALCOTT. Mr. President, I regret exceedingly to find myself speaking in opposition to my colleague and my intimate friend the senior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BINGHAM] and the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Reed]. I find myself agreeing entirely with the eloquent Senator from Kentucky [Mr. Logan] in his address on the fundamentals of government, and with the distinguished and eloquent Senator from Idaho [Mr. Borah] in his impassioned address to show that relief at this time will not make beggars but a stronger people. Of that I am convinced, and I hope to be able to convince some of the Senators, because I have had, perhaps, a unique experience for an American in seeing what wholesale starvation is.

While I dislike to take the time of the Senate and thus postpone a vote on the bill, I think it may be worth while to spend a few minutes viewing a picture such as I know or hope we shall never see in this country, but which we might see if we do not come to the front now with courage and generosity.

Mr. President, we talk quite loosely at times about hunger and starvation. We have several million people in the country out of work, perhaps 8,000,000 jobless, perhaps more. If you Senators will put yourselves in the position of any one of the poorer of those men who are out of work, particularly those who have families, who have wives and children to support, children to educate, unless you have actually been a working man on a low daily wage and realize that every week of your life you are not more than two or three or four weeks away from hunger if your job stops, you may be able to realize the feelings of the man who is in that position to-day.

In the hearts and minds of the men and women who are sleeve for bringing to-day without jobs and who are only two or three weeks stage of starvation.

from actual shortage of food even when they are employed—and there are millions of those people in the country as there are in every country—there is absolute despair. Those people who are confronted with that nightmare must be helped and helped promptly. It is amazing to me that these men and women have shown such wonderful resistance and fortitude, so much good nature, and so little disposition to riot or make their demands by force.

When we talk about hunger, we mean going without food, with no prospect of getting food in the near future; in other words, when we talk about serious hunger among the unemployed, we are talking about facing starvation.

Now, Mr. President, let me tell you what starvation is. I have seen it. I was in Warsaw at the beginning of 1916. The Germans had driven the Russian Army back through Poland into White Russia, so-called, beyond Brest-Litovsk. In the trail of that march the Poles had gathered by the thousands to follow the Russians, fearing the German Army would devastate the country. The Russians in their retreat had burned most of the buildings and had destroyed all the crops and foodstuffs they could not take with them. There were possibly half a million refugees, poor peasants living on the farms along the highway which stretched for about 200 miles from Warsaw to Brest-Litovsk, near the border line of Russia. It was estimated by General Falkenhayn, who was then Governor General of Poland, the man who took Antwerp, a great artillery expert who gave me these figures, that probably 300,000 refugees, caught between these two armies, the one retreating, the other advancing, died of starvation along that roadside over a period of about four weeks.

Going over that road by motor with a German colonel, we tried to count the little wicker baby baskets which were along the roadside. Those were the baskets in which young children are placed; the baskets swing by a rope from the rafters of the peasant's cottage over the dirt floor, swinging back and forth, rocking the baby to sleep. The fleeing peasants took those little wicker baskets with the babies inside of them and carried them along with what few household goods they could take, using perhaps a horse and a cart, others on foot. When we left Warsaw we began counting the baby baskets, with the little bones inside, but we gave it up within a few miles after the count had run into the hundreds. Three hundred thousand people died of starvation along a 200-mile road.

On the northern road, which passes through the Polish swamp, it was estimated that 200,000 troops, who had been driven into the swamp by the aggressive German army, had died. That, however, is another story; that was a direct result of war, while starvation is the indirect result. Starvation in the particular case to which I have referred was the result of a great retreat by one army and the advance of a conquering army. This was followed by a food shortage as a result of the allied blockade, so that hundreds of thousands of innocent men, women, and children were undernourished for the next two and a half years until the war was over.

Let me say further, Mr. President, that, going out into the streets of Warsaw every evening after dinner, we would fill our pockets with everything we could obtain from the table in the way of rolls, crusts of bread, whatever we could pick up, knowing that just outside the doors, sitting on the curb or in the doorways, there would be rows of children from 5 to 6 years old up to as old as the pages sitting below the Vice President's chair. It was in the middle of winter, in January, in a climate like that of New York State. The children would be there huddled up, almost unconscious, some of them quite unconscious, and practically all of them so far gone that they could not lift an arm to take a crust of bread; some of them could, but most of them could not. It was necessary to get the arm of the child limbered so that he could feed himself or wait until he became a little more conscious.

The first act of that child almost invariably would be to take hold of your coat sleeve, draw it to his lips and kiss the sleeve for bringing that little relief. That was just the first stage of starvation.

Then over in the public buildings were to be found hundreds of children, segregated, with little or nothing to eat, with straw on the floor on which to sleep or perhaps nothing but the bare stone floor, with no blankets, with rags covering their emaciated bodies. There we found the second stage of starvation. These little fellows, boys as big as our pages, and in many cases grown people, had reached the stage which is known as "starvation bloat," when the abdomen becomes frightfully distended by gas and the gnawing pains become excruciating; then comes a state of coma, and then death. That, Mr. President, is starvation. That is a spectre that follows a man who has seen it all his life; and I have seen it in hundreds and thousands of cases, and Mr. Hoover also has seen it as I have.

God forbid that we should ever approach even serious hunger in this country. We have a country which according to recent statistics has approximately half of all the wealth of the world. We have approximately 47 per cent of all the copper above ground ready for sale, and we have 50 per cent of all the cotton; we have 40 per cent of all the gold in the world; we have foodstuffs enough to keep us going for a year and a half or two years, most of which is in warehouses, elevators, and granaries. Its maldistribution may be a monetary problem, but I believe that we are going to be wise enough to solve it before more serious conditions confront us.

I believe sincerely that we are at the bottom; and, while we may bump along on the bottom for a while, I am not willing to admit that we in this country are not smart enough to distribute our riches so that there will be no hunger, so that there will be an average prosperity in due time; but, Mr. President, I am not willing to sit here in the Senate and see a measure of this character defeated if I can do anything to help secure its passage.

The bill as a legislative measure may be entirely unsound, as the Senator from Kentucky has said. I do not dispute that; and I may add that a great many other measures we have passed during the last three months are, in my opinion, unsound in principle during normal times; but we are not in normal times; we are in the most violent, the deepest, the most serious depression that we have ever known. The whole world is stumbling along, groping for some remedy, and it is up to us to find remedies because we have the wealth; we should be able to distribute it properly, and we will eventually, in my opinion, lead the other civilized nations of the world that are suffering very much as we are out of this morass.

We know and there is not a man in this country who dares dispute this statement—that we are in the midst of real and very great suffering on the part of hundreds of thousands of people. The mental suffering is perhaps just as serious as is the physical suffering; it may be even more serious, because a very large part of it is dread of the future, the dread of hunger; and the dread of hunger is almost as bad as hunger itself. This bill provides relief to the extent of $300,000,000, which is a vast sum of money, almost as much as we debated 10 or 12 years about and finally put into the Panama Canal; and I can see this bill bringing not only mental but physical relief to hundreds of thousands of people who have been waiting for something of this sort. If we have not the courage to stand up like men and pass this bill to-day, the Senate will rightly be accused of being cowardly; and we can not stand that. It is wrong to say that we can not afford, under the circumstances, an expense of this kind.

Mr. President, let me say just a word about the method of distribution, and then I am through. I happened to be a member of the subcommittee that discussed the details of this bill; we considered them at great length, and I feel that our decision was wise. The question was whether the Reconstruction Finance Corporation officials should take the responsibility of distribution in the States or whether, being loaned to the States, the whole responsibility for the distribution of the funds should be put upon the States. We decided in favor of the latter course, because it is obviously impossible in the time allowed—and this is an emergency measure, and time is of the essence-to create a Federal organization sufficiently large to reach out into every State, to determine the necessities in the various States and the cities and rural districts in the respective States, and then allocate the correct amount for each district, with the needs radically changing every week and every month. It would be an impossible task, and in the work of such an organization there would be many mistakes; countless delays would result which would cause apprehension everywhere; and, in the long run, the distribution would be no more effective than would that made by the States themselves. So the committee decided unanimously that the governor of each State should be held solely responsible. We thought of adding other officials, such as the secretary of state and the attorney general, to act with the governor and divide the responsibility with him, but we finally decided to center the entire responsibility upon one man, the governor, the certificate of necessity and the problems of the distribution of supplies, whether or not in the form of money, to a local organization such as the Red Cross in some of the large cities or to some charitable organization to be distributed by them according to the conditions they might find. So, it seemed wisest and best to lodge full responsibility in the governor.

Now, as to the question of loans. In every case we wanted the amount advanced by the Federal Government to be a loan, believing that the States would pay; but that is obviously impossible, because the laws of many States do not allow borrowing by the State without a special act of the legislature. So we have accepted the La Follette amendment and added the words "or advances" wherever the word "loans" appears, so that it is optional whether it is a loan or whether it is an advance.

We retain in the bill certain drawback provisions so that the Federal Government may get back at least a portion of its money by taking from the States in the future funds available under the Federal roads act, and such a provision is in the bill.

I do not think any of us are fooling ourselves as to the liberality of this bill. It is not a business proposition. It is an emergency relief measure for real destitution. State wishes to treat this money as a loan, it may and it should pay back the loan. It can offer State bonds, if they are worth anything. It can offer municipal bonds. There are some States in this country, however, which are perhaps the hardest hit by destitution, which can not borrow, which can not raise any money by the sale of their bonds, and they need immediate relief. There are many municipalities that are in the same situation. I can speak thus freely because I happen to come from a State which is entirely independent, with a substantial surplus to-day; and, so far as I know, my State, Connecticut, would not think of borrowing from the Federal Government for this purpose. We are in a fine condition, relatively speaking, and so are many other States that have been thrifty, that have conserved their resources, that have believed in and practiced the pay-as-you-go policy, which we have been following in Connecticut for many years.

So I am not speaking from the want of my State. I am speaking from an absolute conviction as to the danger of what we are facing, and the positive necessity of relieving it quickly, both mentally and physically.

I hope the bill will pass.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PATTERSON in the chair). Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. WALCOTT. I do.

Mr. JONES. I am heartily in favor of this measure. I confess, however, that I was really shocked when I read in the bill, in view of the character of the measure, that 5 per cent interest is charged upon the money that is to be given to relieve the distress of the people of the various States.

The Senator from Connecticut helped to prepare the bill. I know there must have been some good reason why that provision was put in the bill, and I should be very glad if | an advance, in the case where a loan could not be made, the Senator would explain it.

Mr. WALCOTT. I shall be very glad to do so.

The 5 per cent applies to the drawbacks only. That is, the money carries with it a charge of 5 per cent interest, on the assumption that the provision for drawbacks is going to be valid and that we can withdraw this money by failing to appropriate Federal funds for Federal-aid roads. That carries a charge of 5 per cent. I should like to offer an amendment, which I think answers the Senator's question entirely.

On page 3, line 15, after the words "upon such terms," insert the words "and at such rates of interest"; and then it goes on, "as may be agreed upon between such State and the Reconstruction Finance Corporation."

Then, if the Reconstruction Finance Corporation sees fit, it can put a premium on the State funding its obligations. Suppose, for instance, drawbacks carry 5 per cent interest. A State, however, which is able to fund its loans by its bonds, municipal or State bonds, may then go to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and agree upon such terms and such rate of interest as may suit the corporation; and the corporation certainly would be willing to put a premium on the loan being refunded by the State. They could say, "We will accept your refund on a basis of 3 per cent from the beginning of the loan," or 31/2 per cent, or whatever the prevailing rate at that time for Government money might be.

Mr. JONES. Does not the Senator really think that under the conditions that confront us-under the conditions that make it necessary, I think, for the National Government to take some action along these lines-we really ought to apportion this money to the States without asking for any interest at all, and of course let it be paid hereafter from the general Treasury of the United States; let it become a part of the national debt, if you please, to be repaid hereafter by all the people of the country in such manner as we may raise money?

Mr. WALCOTT. Mr. President, of course it is a matter of opinion as to how generous we should be, and to what extent we should forsake all business principles; but we must not fool ourselves about this. We must remember that the Government has not this money now. The Government will have to raise it by taxes or by the sale of bonds. Therefore, although it is a lending and not a spending corporation, the Government ought to be able to charge as much as the money costs it, which would not be less than 31/2 per cent, and at the present time it would be 4 or 41/4 per cent.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. WALCOTT. I do.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I wish to direct the Senator's attention to the amendment which he has just suggested.

The Senator's amendment, as I understand it, would take care of the States that are able to enter into an agreement to borrow this money from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation; but it would not take care of the situation of the 12 or 13 States which have constitutional inhibitions against incurring debts, and which will have to take this money as a result of advances made, to be deducted from the future highway funds.

I see no reason in equity why a State, merely because it has that constitutional provision, should be charged a rate of interest of 5 per cent, while a State which has not that constitutional provision will be able to get this money at a lower rate of interest.

I wanted to suggest to the Senator, although I do not know that the amendment is properly worked out, that if an amendment were inserted on page 2 (if the Senator will refer to a copy of the bill), line 18, after the word " of " to insert "not to exceed," and after the word "annum" to insert "but in no case shall the interest rate exceed the average rate of interest paid upon the outstanding obligations of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation," that would result, or at least the intent of the amendment would be to provide that the rate of interest charged either upon a loan or upon should not be in excess of the average rate at which the Reconstruction Finance Corporation obtained the money which it was thus loaning or advancing to the several States.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, the original bill as we proposed it provided for no interest. We followed rather the philosophy of the Senator from Washington [Mr. Jones] that in a matter of this kind, in which we were dealing with a humanitarian question, the matter of interest should not enter; but the majority of the committee thought otherwise. I suggest, however, that we fix a definite rate of interest, and that whether the State borrows under its constitutional power or whether it borrows by taking an advance and having it liquidated by reductions from the Federal aid to State highways, the rate ought to be uniform. Otherwise, I think it would leave it open, perhaps, to unintentional favoritism; or, at any rate, different States might be dealt with differ-

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I agree with the Senator that in my judgment it would be a great mistake not to have a uniform rate of interest. I do not believe we ought to have a different rate in one State than we charge another State; but this is the point to which I wanted particularly to call the Senator's attention:

These obligations of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation are, for all practical purposes, Government obligations. The Government guarantees the interest and the principal: so it would seem as though the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, on the bonds that it issues to get money, would not have to pay any higher rate of interest than the Government itself would pay if it were borrowing the money directly. Was there any contention in the committee that the Government would have to pay 5 per cent interest to borrow this money?

Mr. WAGNER. No.

Mr. NORRIS. Then, assuming that the States would pay back all they got, the Government would make a profit out

Mr. WAGNER. That may very well be. I see that the Senator from Michigan is on his feet.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, if the Senator will

Mr. WALCOTT. I yield the floor. Mr. COUZENS. I should like to say in this connection that I was in the committee when this rate was fixed. It was generally stated, as I recall, that the banks and the railroad were paying 51/2 per cent upon loans made by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation; and it was also pointed out that there is considerable expense incurred in operating the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, which should be taken care of out of the earnings of the corporation, so as not to be an expense upon the taxpayers.

Many of us have said, on the floor and in correspondence. that the operation of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation was not a burden upon the taxpayers; that all that was used was the taxpayers' credit and not the taxpayers' money. So, while I do not desire to mention the name of the Senator who made the motion in the committee to fix this rate at 5 per cent, I think it was generally agreed that it would require that rate of interest not only to reimburse for the borrowing of the money but to pay the operating expenses of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

Mr. WAGNER. I intended, I may say to the Senator. upon my own responsibility, to move an amendment making the rate of interest lower; but, if I may make this suggestion, since the work which the Reconstruction Finance Corporation has to perform under this act is of a very simple character-upon the certification of the governor, automatically the fund is given to the State-I do not think it will involve any very great additional expense of operation.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, it would not be a serious matter if the Government lost money on this operation. It is almost the same thing to take this money and give it to the States as though we did it directly. In fact, if we had the machinery, or could get it together without any great expense, I would prefer to do it that way myself.

money out of one pocket and putting it in the other. A Senator says it would not balance the Budget. That may be true; but if the Budget can be balanced by a mere shifting of bookkeeping, the importance of its balancing fades into insignificance.

I do not believe that we ought to make any profit out of this thing, take it from the States, and give it to the Federal Government. It is not a business proposition that we are going into. It is not profit that we want. On the other hand, suppose the Federal Government loses the money. If it loses it, it is because the States do not pay it; and if we paid it out directly in charity and lost it, it would not be any greater burden. It might be divided just a little bit differently; but perhaps some of the States would not borrow up to their proportionate share and others would, so it would not be serious.

Why should the Government insist on what I believe would result in making a profit? The greater additional expense that is to come to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation on account of this bill, if it is passed and becomes a law, will be very slight as compared with the amount of money involved. A very small per cent, a fraction of 1 per cent, will much more than pay all the expense that this adds to the financial burdens of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. They exist anyway; and on this large amount of money a rate of interest that is perhaps 2 per cent higher than the Government will have to pay for the money would mean an additional burden that must be paid by the people who get the money, really, to help the unemployment situa-

I think well of the suggestion made by the Senator from Washington that we could do it without any interest. It would cost something, and the Federal Government would lose it; but it is to save the situation, it is to improve the business conditions of the country; and if it will do that, and get rid of a large share of the unemployment, we could well afford to let it go that way.

I hope the Senator from New York, or some other Senator connected with the committee, will make the motion. The interest ought to be very materially lowered, it seems to me.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, a German mathematician has recently observed that the World War resulted in casualties of 11,000,000 killed and 19,000,000 maimed, with an expenditure of more than $500,000,000,000, a sufficient amount of money to buy a $2,500 home in a 5-acre plot, with $1,250 worth of furniture, for each and every family in the United States, Canada, Australia, England, Belgium, France, Russia, and Germany, and in addition a hospital, university, and schools, including the salaries of teachers, nurses, doctors, and professors, for every group of 20,000 inhabitants.

With this enormous sacrifice of human lives and wealth it is no wonder the world is now experiencing a reaction and is in a distressed condition, and even in this glorious country the need of relief is keenly felt and must be met.

Mr. President, I favored this kind of relief legislation many, many months ago. When I was fortunate enough to be on the subcommittee with the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. La Follettel which considered a relief measure I did not feel that I could support the measure being considered in its entirety. I offered an amendment to the bill of the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin and the distinguished Senator from Colorado in the way of a substitute. That substitute carried an appropriation of $300,000,000 to be used by one group of States in this Union which could negotiate for a loan of this character, and $200,000,000 to be used by another group of States, those which had no borrowing clauses or restrictive clauses in their constitutions, and an additional $110,000,000 to take care of the public buildings which have been allocated but not appropriated for, making a sum total of $610,000,000.

Mr. President, I am glad of the opportunity which will be presented to me soon to cast my vote in favor of relief legislation, so that the 48 States in this Union will have an opportunity, through the Treasury of the United States, and

So suppose we do lose something: It is only taking the | by means of the instrumentalities of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, to assist needy and distressed people. It will afford them a facility, in the way of a credit, of which they are deprived at the present time due to the inability of the States, in many instances, to sell gilt-edged bonds upon the markets of this country.

I feel that this relief legislation should have come a long time ago and that it will bring great help to the families in the respective States of the Union.

I offer for the RECORD a copy of the amendment which was proposed by me on this floor when the relief bill was introduced by the Senator from Wisconsin and the Senator from Colorado, to show to this body that I was in sympathy with the effort to grant relief then as I am in sympathy with the movement at this time. There is no piece of legislation which this honorable body has considered at this session that will give to each governor and each group of States a greater lift, a greater support, than the bill which the distinguished Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] is championing at the present time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from West Virginia?

There being no objection, the substitute bill formerly submitted by Mr. HATFIELD was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

the Record, as follows:

ance with existing law.
"SEC. 5. The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to make all rules and regulations necessary to carry out the provisions of this act.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I take a sympathetic view concerning the proposition advanced by the junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] in the amendment which is pending. I think the movement it suggests is one which merits very general approval. If we got these people off on to farms or little patches of ground which they could cultivate, they would at least be assured of something to eat. There would be a social advantage to it which it is impossible to measure in dollars and cents, and it would undoubtedly be of very great value.

I hope, however, that the Senator from Alabama will not press his amendment to this particular bill. This bill has for its purpose the immediate relief of pressing want, of want which needs relieving immediately, whereas to utilize any of these funds for the purpose of making what might be regarded in the nature of a capital investment, the acquisition of farm or garden properties, or the leasing of farm or garden properties, with the necessary tools and equipment for the purpose of operating them, a house to live in, and the buildings appropriate to the vicinity, would be, it seems to me to utilize the fund for a purpose entirely apart from that contemplated by the pending bill.

I call the attention of the Senator from Alabama to the fact that the subject was not without consideration by the committee from which the bill originated, and in its bill, which it is expected the Senator from New York will press for consideration at the very earliest possible date, provision is made for just exactly that kind of thing. I call the Senator's attention to section 2 of Senate bill 4755, which reads as follows:

The Reconstruction Finance Corporation is further authorized and empowered to make loans (1) to States, municipalities, and political subdivisions of States, public or quasi-public corporations, and public or quasi-public municipal instrumentalities of one or more States to aid in financing projects authorized under State or municipal law and which are self-liquidating in char-

The Senator has in mind projects which are self-liquidating in character. The moneys invested in them will eventually, it is hoped, be returned so as to satisfy the loans. The moneys provided by the pending bill are not expected to be utilized in projects of that character, except as is indicated in the opening paragraph of the bill, which provides that the funds shall be used in furnishing relief and work relief. That is rather remote from the idea of acquiring lands upon which to settle persons who might cultivate them.

If the Senator from Alabama is not convinced that the provision of Senate bill 4755 to which I have called his attention will meet the cases he has in mind, I am very sure that those of us whose names are appended to the bill as sponsors for it will be very glad to make such amendment of it, or to accept an amendment tendered by the Senator from Alabama to it as would seem to meet the situation. But it does seem to me that it is quite apart from the purpose of the bill before us.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I greatly regret the position taken by the eminent Senator from Montana, for whom I have the highest regard, especially as he is in sympathy with the program outlined in my amendment. Here is a bill which we all really believe will promptly pass the Congress and will have the approval of the President. It apportions to each State an amount of money based upon the population of the State. It leaves to each State in a general way the manner of the distribution or apportionment within the State.

The Senator from Montana, for whom I have both affection and the highest respect, suggests that while the purpose of the amendment I have offered meets his approval, and in the very face of an opportunity to incorporate it in a bill which will doubtless become law, this provision be deferred, to be put into a controversial bill, a bill which we have no assurance will pass Congress and be approved by the President.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. VANDENBERG in the chair). Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Let me say to the Senator from Alabama that I am in exactly the same situation in which he finds himself. There are provisions in the other bill to which I am very particularly wedded. I believe that the best possible relief we can extend to those people who are without work is to give them work.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I agree with the Senator.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I am very much in earnest in supporting the provisions of the other bill, which provides for loans for self-liquidating projects and loans for public works, but I do not feel as if I ought to try to inject into the pending bill those particular provisions of the other bill to which I am particularly attached.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, it has been suggested to me that under the general provisions of the bill specific authority for the purposes indicated in my amendment is not necessary because it is already granted. I hear the further suggestion that the power is not incorporated and that it ought to be put into some other bill. I do not know just which conclusion or construction is right; but if any State, such as my State, is apportioned under the pending bill a fixed sum of money for relief, I can not understand why Senators should object if we are given merely the option of administering the fund in a way which we think will produce not only temporary relief but in large measure permanent relief, so that those to whom we now give the relief will be removed from the list of those who are from time to time requiring emergency relief.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, that is exactly the objection I have made to the bill. To use any of the funds for purposes such as suggested by the Senator will, of course, in the long run, afford relief, but it will afford no immediate relief. It does not help a man just now to give him a farm upon which he can work and get a crop which will be produced a year from now and sold 18 months from now.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, it does him a world of good if you take him and establish him on a little farm, and make a sufficient advancement of money for supplies and feed and food to sustain him until he does make a crop.

Senators talk about getting relief for these individuals from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. That may be all right for what are commonly known as self-liquidating construction programs, where financiers come and present their plan, with their statements of probable receipts and disbursements, so as to convince the hard-boiled members of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation that there will be sufficient returns, including profits from the project, to liquidate their investment.

I would like to know what chance the farmer in Alabama or Florida, who is destitute, who left his farm as the result of the lure of industry and went to the industrial centers, would have before the Reconstruction Finance Corporation here in Washington to secure a loan to establish a little subsistent home upon the idea that the loan was placed upon a self-financing proposition?

As I said earlier in the day, in the city of Birmingham, the greatest industrial city in our State, 60 per cent or more of the people—and I hope Senators will mark this statement—are colored, colored men with their families, who have been drawn away from the farms into that city to work in industries there.

The white people of that section have been just as good and generous and kind to them as they can be. They have been given the same attention as the white people from the community chest. But the time has come there, as it has come elsewhere in the United States, when they are unable to go forward continuously with their program. In advance of this legislation, in anticipation of it, in the hope that in some way the plan may be worked out, the industrial leaders, the community chest, the Red Cross leaders, in cooperation with the Governor of Alabama, have already developed plans to aid these poor former farmers, both white and black, but mostly colored, to go back into the country on little subsistent homes and to take care of them until they are able to dig out of the ground a vegetable crop and another kind of crop of some kind to keep their families together, and to have an opportunity to earn at least a bare living of some kind in the old line of occupation in which they were raised—that of tilling the soil.

If we want to use part of our money in that way—and it is our money if Congress distributes it to us—why should any Senator object? It is proposed to leave in large measure to the discretion and judgment of the governor or the administrative board of each State the manner of distributing these funds, and while it is my real thought that it could be done under the general provisions of the bill, still a strict constructionist governor or administrative board might think otherwise. The only purpose of my amendment is to give each State, at its own election, the right, without challenge, without being questioned, to use such part of this fund as it sees fit for that purpose, which is not only temporary but I submit in large measure will furnish permanent relief for those who are given that temporary relief.

What objection could anyone have to it? No objection has been made except that we ought to wait and put it in another bill. It does not in any way increase the appropriation in this bill. It does not in any way change the purposes of the bill. It is absolutely consistent with the purposes of the bill because it carries immediate and temporary relief. If the bill is passed, according to my advices from my home State, within the next two or three weeks large numbers of these destitute families will be placed under the provisions of the bill. It is not intended as a self-liquidating proposition. If the money is given to the States, they may use it as they see fit, but of course it is better in placing these people upon farms to remove them from the thought of a gratuity or a gift, to let them buy these little places and give their obligations for them. If the State authorities ever get back the money, they are just that much ahead in the matter of the reduction of these loans. If they do not get it back, then I submit they have performed a real act of charity and mercy, and connected with it have done it in a long-time planning system of removing that number of people possibly from the gratuity of Congress at some subsequent session.

So I appeal to Senators to incorporate the amendment in the bill. It can have no injurious effect. In each State we have to entrust State officials with the proper administration of the fund. I insist that this is purely an option, which I hope the Senate will give to the States with the assurance that my own State stands ready to put it into prompt execution to relieve destitution among the colored and the whites.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do.

Mr. WHEELER. I notice the Senator's amendment states that—

All or any part of such grants may be disbursed in aid or furtherance of any program or programs of unemployment relief based on the location of those deemed entitled to relief on farm lands either in such State or elsewhere.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The thought in the use of that language was that we adjoin the State of Florida where the climate is fine and the soil suitable for the cultivation of quick crops and winter crops. If some of our citizens prefer and desire to establish a colony just across the line on the bay, then we would be authorized to do it. That is the only object. I have no objection to having that expression "or elsewhere" stricken out, but that is the purpose of the language.

Mr. WHEELER. It is doubtful whether the governor of the State would have a right to loan money for any purpose whatsoever outside of his own State.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Since the question is raised, I am content to strike out the words "or elsewhere."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator modifies his amendment as stated.

Mr. WHEELER. The Senator's amendment further provides "either by direct expenditure or by loans to any approved agency or groups or individuals." It seems to me that last provision would give the governor authority and power to make a loan to any corporation.

Mr. BANKHEAD. No; it does not say corporation. Mr. WHEELER. It says "to groups or individuals."

Mr. BANKHEAD. The agency which we have in mind is the Red Cross, whose officials there are already on the ground and in full accord with this plan.

Mr. WHEELER. I would not have any particular objection, but I think frankly under the terms of the bill that the governor of the Senator's State would have authority in his discretion to make any kind of a loan he wanted to make for the relief of the unemployed.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I have frankly stated that I entertain the same view. The question has been raised by the Senator's very able lawyer colleague the senior Senator from Montana [Mr. Walsh]. We all have complete confidence in his judgment. If there is any question about the absolute right, although many Senators think it is proper, I will make that language specific so as to give full assurance of protection to the administrative agencies in those States that see fit to use it as a part of their relief program.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, let me say just a word about the amendment of the Senator from Alabama. The language of the bill is quite broad. It does not expressly include such disposition of the funds by a governor as is contemplated by the amendment, but nevertheless on the whole the amendment is an alteration of the primary purpose of the bill, and if it should be agreed to and any governor should carry it out, it would result in limiting—mark my statement in this particular—the benefits of the bill to a very small number of persons.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I yield.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I think the Senator ought to recognize that that depends entirely upon the number to whom the benefit is to be given. I can not see why the Senator makes that statement.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I will explain to the Senator from Alabama. Assume that $10,000,000 is available for any State under the provisions of the bill for relief work and that it is all expended in accordance with the amendment proposed by the Senator from Alabama. How much would it be necessary to advance to each individual in order to transport him from the congested centers, procure for him a farm or the necessary land, and place him in a position to cultivate those lands? Estimating the figure at $2,000, then $10,000,000 would afford relief to 5,000 persons.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I yield.

Mr. BANKHEAD. A gentleman here a few days ago, one of our outstanding men, said that the Red Cross and the business interests there had estimated that they could place a very large number of families on such farms at a cost of $250 each.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Of course, anyone who has had any experience in farming knows that he can not for $250 buy land adequate to support a family, equip it with the stock and implements necessary to cultivate it and with the supplies essential to carry on the farming activities. The fact that the amendment is based on that kind of an estimate is to my mind a conclusive argument against its adoption.

The purpose of the bill is to afford immediate emergency relief to those who are in such distress that they can not procure food, clothing, and other absolute necessities of life. To enter upon a program such as is contemplated by the amendment of the Senator from Alabama would be to divert the use of the fund from its primary purpose. Without doubt, it is desirable that some arrangement should be made for a "back to the farm" movement. It is a very helpful movement. But much more credit will have to be provided than the $300,000,000 carried in the bill. The plan will have to be worked out with some degree of caution and should not, in my humble judgment, be entered upon in this way. It is an important movement and a proposal that deserves consideration by itself. It should not be injected into this so-called emergency relief measure.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Alabama.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, I send to the desk and now offer an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and substitute certain language.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, before the Senator offers that substitute I desire to offer an amendment so as to perfect the text of the original bill. I was advised that the Senator from Montana [Mr. Walsh] had prepared an amendment which perhaps includes the amendment which I wish to offer. I shall be glad to yield to him to offer his amendment.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, if it is the desire of other Members of the Senate that their amendments shall be considered before my substitute is offered, that course is entirely agreeable. I simply do not wish to lose the opportunity to present my substitute.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. This will be, of course, for the purpose of perfecting the text. I was impressed, Mr. President, as I am sure every Member of the Senate must have been, by the observations made by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. BLAINE] and also those advanced by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. George], to the effect that if these funds went into the State treasury in many States, I dare say in most of the States, it might be urged that they could be withdrawn from the State treasury only in pursuance of an appropriation made by the legislature of the State. Provisions of that kind are found in the constitutions of most of the States as a similar provision is found in the Constitution of the Federal Government. I am not sure that the situation can be adequately met, but I now offer an amendment, which perhaps will accomplish the purpose of freeing the funds from the strictness of the constitutional provisions to which I have adverted. The amendment reads as follows:

Any sum received by any State under this act shall be held as a special fund to be applied as herein provided by the governor thereof without regard to the restrictions applicable to the ordinary revenues of the State.

In order words, we segregate this fund from the funds to which the constitutional provisions would be applicable.

Mr. President, I offer this amendment in connection with the language on page 4, to strike out all after the comma in line 14, so that that portion of section 2 will read:

Any funds made available to a State pursuant to this act shall be administered by the governor, or under his direction, and upon his responsibility.

Then I propose to insert:

Any sum received by any State under this act shall be held as a special fund to be applied as herein provided by the governor thereof without regard to the restrictions applicable to the ordinary revenues of the State.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana offers an amendment which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 4, line 14, it is proposed to strike out all after the comma, following the word "responsibility," and to insert:

Any sum received by any State under this act shall be held as a special fund to be applied as herein provided by the governor thereof without regard to the restrictions applicable to the ordinary revenues of the State.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Montana.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I am quite satisfied that that amendment meets the difficulty which I wished to indicate, particularly in connection with the State of Georgia and no doubt as to other States.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Montana.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I wonder if the Senator from Montana will accept an amendment to his amendment? I will read the amendment I propose:

Provided, That in States where there is a State board constituted for controlling the financial affairs of the State such board shall distribute, under the supervision of the governor, the amount allotted to any such State.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, may I be so bold as to suggest to the Senator that I think that an amendment tendered by myself a little earlier in the day, providing that separate bodies of the kind referred to shall have the right to administer the fund, under the governor, covers the thought he has in mind.

Mr. McKELLAR. Has that amendment been adopted? Mr. LEWIS. Yes, sir.

Mr. McKELLAR. If such an amendment as that has been adopted, I will examine it, and I will withdraw my proposed amendment for the present.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Montana.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, in view of the discussion of the subject of interest, I desire to offer two amendments. In line 16, page 2, I move to strike out "5" and to insert "3," and I also propose the same amendment in line 18 on the same page.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Montana will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 2, line 16, it is proposed to strike out the numeral "5" and to insert the numeral "3," and on the same page, in line 18, to strike out the numeral "5" and insert the numeral "3."

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I call the attention of the Senator from Montana to the fact that the amendment of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. Læwis], which I have just read rather hastily, does not seem to cover what I think should be embodied in this bill. Therefore I will offer my amendment, and I do not see how there can be any objection to it. I will read it again so that Senators may understand it. It is as follows:

Provided, That in States where there is a board constituted for controlling the financial affairs of the State such board shall distribute, under the supervision of the governor, the amount allotted to any such State.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I see no objection to that amendment.

Mr. McKELLAR. I offer that as an amendment to the amendment of the Senator from Montana.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In that event it will be neces- amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado provides sary to reconsider the vote whereby the amendment of the Senator from Montana was agreed to.

Mr. McKELLAR. Then I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment of the Senator from Montana was agreed to.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, there can be no objection to the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee and he can offer it as an amendment to follow the amendment adopted on my motion.

Mr. WALCOTT. Mr. President, I do not understand the amendment.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I will ask the clerk to read it again. I am quite sure there will be no objection to it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK, On motion of the Senator from Montana [Mr. Walsh] the following amendment was adopted:

Any sum received by any State under this act shall be held as a special fund to be applied as herein provided by the governor thereof without regard to the restrictions applicable to the ordinary revenues of the State.

To which the Senator from Tennessee offers the following

Provided, That in States where there is a State board constituted for controlling the financial affairs of the State such board shall distribute, under the supervision of the governor, the amount allotted to any such State.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment offered by the Senator from Tennessee may be considered as a separate amendment and it is not necessary to reconsider the vote whereby the amendment of the Senator from Montana was adopted. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Tennessee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question now is on the amendment in the nature of a substitute offered by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. Costigan], which the Secretary will state.

The CHIEF CLERK. The Senator from Colorado offers a substitute to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert what is known as Senate bill 4592.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I should like to inquire of the Senator from Colorado if the amendment he has offered in the nature of a substitute is what is known as the Costigan-La Follette bill.

Mr. COSTIGAN. It is in substance, with slight modifications, the same as the bill introduced be me on May 4 (calendar day, May 6), 1932.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. And the amendment, in substance, embodies the general provisions contained in the bill

Mr. COSTIGAN. As originally introduced, it provided for a bond issue of $500,000,000, which, to meet the present mind and mood of the Senate, has been reduced in this amendment to $300,000,000. The funds are to be administered by a Federal board consisting of four members of different political parties, appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate. Sixty per cent of the appropriated amount would be distributed among the States according to population. The remaining 40 per cent would go into a reserve fund, to be applied on the basis of need, as urged by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. Borah] this morning. Furthermore, the safeguards incorporated in the bill introduced by the Senator from Wisconsin and myself in January, with respect to the handling of the funds, are contained in the amendment now offered.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. COSTIGAN. Certainly.

Mr. WAGNER. The fundamental difference between the amendment the Senator is offering as a substitute and the for a direct grant to the States, whereas the bill which is now under consideration provides for a loan, to be liquidated in one of two methods?

Mr. COSTIGAN. It is my understanding that the bill of the Senator from New York, in effect, provides for grants to the States. So the real distinction, as I view it, is one of administrative safeguards thrown around expenditures.

The amendment offered by me also explicitly deals with certain problems which are ignored in the bill of the Senator from New York. For example, we have in this country, as the Senate well knows, a large migratory population. Most transients, as they drift over the country, are outside the specific protection of the relief laws of the various States. This bill directs special attention to the migratory problem and provides that a portion of the funds shall be applied to the protection of the mounting flood of workers now shifting up and down this land, homeless and penniless, looking for Work

The most striking contrast, as I view it, between the bill of the Senator from New York and the amendment I propose as a substitute, outside of differences already stated, relates to the manner in which funds are to be distributed. Under the bill of the Senator from New York the funds committed to the charge of the governors of the respective States may be disbursed within the States largely within the discretion of the various governors. It is to be feared that part of the funds may not be applied to the purposes for which advanced by the Federal Government. So wasteful extravagance and misapplication are easily possible under the measure which is so generally sponsored here to-day, and serious charges of diversion may easily follow the legislative carelessness here sanctioned.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield further to the Senator from New York?

Mr. COSTIGAN. Certainly.

Mr. WAGNER. The Senate just adopted an amendment offered by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKellar]. which provides that where there is an agency created by a State for the distribution of funds of this type, such agency shall distribute the funds. So there is that safeguard, in addition to the responsibility of the governor for the proper administration of the funds.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Of course, I do not wish to enter into controversy with the able Senator from New York, for whom I have great regard, but it is my judgment that, notwithstanding the clause to which the Senator calls attention and which appears to have only limited application, the funds distributed under the Senator's bill may in part fail to reach the field in which they ought to be applied.

Knowing the mind of the Senate and changing economic conditions hurrying its judgment at this hour, I have no reason to suppose that the substitute I intend to offer will be approved. In that event I will, of course, vote for the next best available form of relief. However, I feel that in justice to the Senate, to sound standards of administered relief which this country for years has indorsed, and having regard for relief which ought to be extended on the basis of need, even more than population, particularly at this hour of special distress of the migratory homeless in America, the Senate would render a much finer service to humanity and our country by supporting the substitute measure I have proposed.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, in view of the statement made by the Senator from Colorado, would there be any objection to an agreement to dispense with the further reading of the substitute?

Mr. COSTIGAN. Not at all. If there is any Senator who desires the reading, of course it can be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the further reading will be dispensed with.

The amendment of Mr. Costigan is as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

bill which is now under consideration is, is it not, that the states in providing temporary emergency relief from the hardship resulting from unemployment, there is hereby created a special fund in the Treasury to be known as the emergency relief fund and to be administered by the Federal Emergency Relief Board created by section 2. The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment, in the nature of a substitute, offered by the Senator from Colorado.

The amendment, in the nature of a substitute, was rejected.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I shall not detain the Senate long before it votes on this measure; but inasmuch as I have given a great deal of time and thought to this subject. I do not wish the vote which I am about to cast to be misinterpreted.

I have maintained from the beginning of this depression that unemployment relief was a joint responsibility of the local, State, and Federal Governments. There are no logical arguments to support the contention, reiterated again on this floor to-day, that unemployment relief is solely a problem of local and State governments. The Senator from Idaho [Mr. Borah], said this afternoon that we are in the midst of a nation-wide economic breakdown. The innocent victims of this depression are not responsible for the desperate situation in which they have been for two and a half years, nor is the State government nor the municipal government responsible for having created the depression that has overtaken the country.

If any governmental entity is solely responsible-which I do not claim—then certainly it is the Federal Government; for it is the Federal Government which enacts the laws that affect the fiscal policy, the credit policy, the fariff policy, and all the other great economic questions which influence and control either adversely or favorably, the economic trends that prevail in this country.

Mr. President, I do not think that the future historian, as suggested by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED], will look upon this act-taken two and a half years after this major economic cataclysm swept over this countryas a milestone on the road to the disintegration of this Republic. On the contrary, I venture the assertion that future historians will be amazed that a representative Government could have been so blind and so callous during these long, weary months to the suffering, the hardship, the want, the hunger, the disease that have taken their heavy toll from millions of innocent citizens of this Republic.

Mr. President, in view of the testimony presented to the Senate last February, when the Costigan-La Follette relief measure was taken up for consideration by this body, and in view of the subsequent testimony gathered by the committees of the Senate, it seemed to me an amazing thing that any Senator could rise in his place on this floor and contend that there was no necessity for Federal action to meet the unemployment relief problem.

The remarks made by some of the Senators to-day are as shocking to me as was the statement made in the address of the Secretary of the Interior when he spoke in Philadelphia to an informed audience, namely, the social workers of this country gathered at a meeting. There the Secretary of the Interior said:

Personally, and speaking broadly, I think that unless we descend to a level far beyond anything that we at present have known, our children are apt to profit rather than suffer from what is going on.

Mr. President, that statement was made in the presence of social workers from the city of Philadelphia, in which this gathering was held. Shortly prior to the time the Secretary's address was made, the funds for relief in the city of Philadelphia had been exhausted for 11 days. On May 9 there appeared before the subcommittee of the Committee on Manufactures, considering the substitute bill which has just been rejected by the Senate, Mr. de Schweinitz, who has been secretary of the relief organization in the city of Philadelphia. I want to direct the attention of the Senate, for the sake of the record, to the testimony given by this well-informed individual, whose authority can not be impeached by anyone. He said:

I want to tell you about an experience we had in Philadelphia when our private funds were exhausted and before public funds became available.

On April 11 we mailed to families the last food order which they On April 11 we mailed to families the last food order which they received from private funds. It was not until April 22 that the giving of aid to families from public funds began, so that there was a period of about 11 days when many families received nothing. We have received reports from workers as to how these families managed. The material I am about to give you is typical, although it is based on a small sample.

We made an intensive study of 91 families to find out what happened when the food orders stopped.

Mark this, Mr. President:

In a little less than 9 per cent of these families there were pregnant mothers, and in a little more than one-third of the families children of nursing age.

This is how some of these families managed:

One woman said she borrowed 50 cents from a friend and bought stale bread for 3½ cents per loaf, and that is all they had for 11 days, except for one or two meals.

With the last food order another woman received she bought dried vegetables and canned goods. With this she made a soup, and whenever the members of the family felt hungry they just ate some of the soup.

Here is a family of a pregnant mother and three children. They had only two meals a day and managed by having breakfast.

They had only two meals a day and managed by having breakfast about 11 o'clock in the morning and then advancing the time of their evening meal. Breakfast consisted of cocoa, bread, and butter; the evening meal of canned soup.

one woman went along the docks and picked up vegetables that fell from the wagons. Sometimes the fish vendors gave her fish at the end of the day. On two different occasions this family was without food for a day and a half. One family had nothing the day the food orders stopped until 9 o'clock at night. Then the mother went to a friend's home and begged for a loaf of bread.

This woman finally got two days' work at 75 cents a day. She bought a little meat and made a stew from vegetables picked up which they cooked over and over again each day to prevent its which they cooked over and over again each day to prevent its spoiling.

Another family's food consisted of potatoes, rice, bread, and coffee, and for a period of a day and a half they had no food at all.

Here is another family which for two days had nothing to eat but bread, and during most of the rest of the time they had only two meals a day. Their meals consisted of bread and coffee for breakfast and bread and raw or cooked carrots for Another family did not have food for two days. Then the husband went out and gathered dandelions, and the family lived on them.

Here is another family which for two and one-half days went without food.

Still another family, thinking to get as much as possible with their last food order, bought potatoes, and for 11 days lived only on them.

Mr. President, how shocking it is that a Cabinet officer could claim that the depression was good for children in the face of these facts!

Mr. President, in Philadelphia there were 238,000 unemployed in December. There were 298,000, estimated, on the 9th of May, in contrast with forty to fifty thousand in normal times. In December, 43,000 families were receiving relief. On the 9th of May 55,000 families were receiving relief. Per family, they were receiving $4.39 in December. In May they were getting $4.23 per family, of which $3.93 was for food, about two-thirds of the amount needed to preserve health.

In view of those conditions, how can any Senator contend that unemployment relief is the sole responsibility of the local and State governments? How any Senator can maintain that there is no need for action on the part of the Federal Government is more than I can understand in the face of this uncontroverted evidence of the terrific human need in this country, beyond the ability of any man to describe in words.

Mr. President, I wish to direct the attention of the Senate to the record taken on the 9th day of May by the committee to which I have referred.

Few cities are providing shoes, or clothing to destitute families, according to Mr. H. L. Lurie, who is the director of the Bureau of Jewish Social Research, a national survey and research organization. No money is available for necessary medical or dental care. No payment is made for gas or electricity, and increasingly public and private relief agencies are unable to pay rents. Relief has been continuously and gradually reduced, so that whole families are getting an average of $2.39 a week relief in the city of New York, the richest city in the United States, with $3 and $4 and at most $5 a week per family in other cities. A number of quotations from reports which follow indicate the desperate straits in which relief agencies are finding themselves in attempting to supply some aid, even if meager, to families without other resources.

Here is a report from Houston, Tex.:

Following earlier reductions there has been a reduction in the weekly grant of from 20 to 30 per cent.

From Pittsburgh:

Relief averages from $5 to $6 a week per family, but a further reduction of 50 per cent is contemplated, since relief funds are low.

From St. Paul:

We are merely trying to prevent hunger and exposure.

From Cleveland:

The payment of gas and light has been discontinued except in health cases.

From Toledo:

Conspicuous reductions in relief standards until at present there is only a commissary available for most families which is distributing the cheapest grades of food. They are only able to allow 2.14 cents per meal per person per day.

From Scranton:

We are holding taxes down and spreading relief thin.

From Cleveland:

Rents are paid only when families are evicted when only 25 per cent of the rent is offered for one month only.

From Syracuse:

No more than a minimum of $15 rental is paid. Housing congestion is being intensified, and there is a gradual lowering of housing and living standards.

From Scranton:

As rents are paid only upon eviction, and then only for one month or a part of the month, many families have experienced eviction two, three, and many more times during the year.

From Omaha:

Relief has seen a 40 per cent decrease in adequacy during the past winter.

From Dallas:

There has been a 40 per cent increase in applications with only 10 per cent increase in funds available.

From Chicago:

Some families are being separated, husbands being sent to the men's shelter and wives to the women's shelter.

Mr. President, in the city where the national conventions of the two old parties will meet this month there is one of the most critical unemployment situations that exists anywhere in the United States to-day. In April, 1930, there were 167,000 unemployed in Chicago. By January, 1931, there were 448,000 out of work. By October, 1931, there were 625,000 out of work. In May of this year there were 700,000 persons out of work in the city of Chicago.

For the State as a whole, as in Pennsylvania, one-third of the workers usually gainfully employed are out of work.

In March, 1930, there were 12,984 families receiving aid. In March, 1932, two years later, 130,000 families were receiving aid in the city of Chicago.

Other resources were completely exhausted on February 1, after most generous response to charitable drives and other efforts made to raise funds.

Then the State provided $20,000,000 through tax anticipation bonds or warrants in order to meet the crisis. There was virtually no money for rent, none for clothing, none for medical and dental care, only money to pay for food, gas, and electric bills, and similar absolutely unavoidable costs. Relief expenditures in Chicago are now at the rate of $3,250,000 a month. If rents were to be paid in that city, another $756,000 a month would be required.

In addition to the 130,000 families, an average of about 13,000 single men and transients are given shelter, lodging, and food in shelter buildings.

No need for Federal action, Mr. President? I wish to direct attention to the situation concerning the children of this country, the future citizens of this Republic, upon whom its security will rest in the next generation.

On July 1, 1931, there were 284,000 children in institutions or foster homes in this country. Eighteen months later—that is, on the 1st day of January, 1932—there were 400,000 children in these same institutions, an increase of 40 per cent in two years' time.

What do those statistics show? If we look back to them, we see a picture of misery and distress which should arouse a sympathetic response in the heart of any Senator or any other person charged with the responsibility for governmental policy in this crisis. The 40 per cent increase in the number of children in institutions means that families have been broken up, homes destroyed, ambitions of a lifetime wiped out. All sacrifices having been made to hold the family together as a unit, finally overwhelmed by this economic disaster, the parents have been forced in their extremity to give up their children to these institutions rather than to see them starve to death before their very eyes.

Mr. President, my first criticism of this measure is that it comes belatedly, from a grudging Government, instead of sound legislation enacted at a time when it could have afforded relief to millions of families in this country and have prevented their being broken up.

My second criticism is that it does not recognize the principle which I believe indispensable to a sound and just solution of this problem, namely, a joint responsibility on the part of the Federal Government with the cities, counties, and States in meeting the terrific problem of unemployment relief.

I also criticize the measure because it does not provide an intelligent method of dealing with the problem which confronts us. It proposes to apportion the entire fund on the basis of population, without regard to varying needs which exist in the several States.

It does not create any emergency fund to be used to meet emergencies which may occur in the respective States after the funds apportioned to them have been exhausted and before the Congress shall meet next December.

It provides no supervision over the expenditure of these funds, and, in so far as the Federal Government is concerned, it can not assure that a single dollar of this money will be expended for the purposes for which it is given.

Also, may I point out that in case there is a misappropriation of these funds, in case they are wastefully or extravagantly used or otherwise misused, there is no opportunity, under this measure, for the Federal Government to insist that the plans under which those funds are being expended shall be altered so that the relief will reach those who need it with as little waste as possible.

Mr. President, I am confronted with a legislative situation. This measure, inadequate in amount and wrong in principle, is the only one which can be passed at this time to meet the enormous problem of human need in the United States to-day. Therefore, so far as I am concerned, I shall at this time waive my own convictions as to its lack of adequate administrative safeguards and its failure to embody the principles which should be recognized by the Congress.

I serve notice now, however, that I have not waived those principles permanently; and when the time comes to discuss the question whether or not the States shall be required to repay the loans which they have sought, or when the time comes to require them to have their advances taken from future highway funds, I shall feel free again to contend on this floor, as I contended last February, and as I contend to-day, that it is a disgrace for the Federal Government to seek shelter behind a technicality in the face of a national emergency which is a responsibility of all governmental

Why do we tolerate government? We tolerate it because we must band together in an organization in order that we may do as a group what we can not do as individuals; and for any man to say that in the face of national disaster affecting millions of our citizens the Federal Government has no responsibility is, in my judgment, to admit that the individuals who compose the Government have no responsibility to their fellow citizens in a national disaster.

For the reasons which I have briefly outlined, I shall vote for the pending measure on its final passage.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. President, nothing is further from my desire than to delay the vote on this important measure; and I realize, as I am sure every other Senator realizes, that there is no necessity that I should add to the testimony which has been put before this body by the able Senators who have spoken before me with respect to the need for emergency relief at this time.

I simply want to say, and very briefly, that I am wholeheartedly in favor of the pending measure. I feel that I have, in a humble way, contributed in certain respects toward its development; and I mention that without taking away in any degree the credit due the illustrious junior Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] and his colleagues.

Mr. President, I hope very much that in an entirely bipartisan way we may all join in speeding the passage of this legislation, so needed at this particular time.

Mr. HAWES. Mr. President, it is not my intention to detain the Senate more than one moment, but I can not allow to pass unnoticed the observation which has been made here to-day that the States which may receive the benefit of the money proposed to be appropriated would not repay their obligations. I can speak only for the State of Missouri, which, because of its constitution and because of limitations in the charter of St. Louis, can not immediately raise relief funds; but our citizens have gone the full limit that is permitted them by their private pocketbooks. But I state now with full confidence, knowing the people of my State, that every dollar which is advanced for their benefit at this time will be repaid. I think that can be relied upon with full confidence. I would feel ashamed did I not make this statement in view of the insinuations that these loans would never be repaid.

Mr. President, there are here to-day representatives of the governor of my State, the mayor of my city, the comptroller of my city, financial representatives of the State, who have within the last moment handed me a statement on this subject which I would like to have placed in the RECORD at this point in connection with my remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The statement is as follows:

STATEMENT ON RELIEF SITUATION AS PRESENTED BY SPOKESMEN OF ST. LOUIS, MO.

We present our views on program of Federal relief as the spokes-men of our own community, St. Louis and St. Louis County, Mo. While we are quite conscious that such representation is not only our privilege but our responsibility, we realize at the same time the tremendous difficulty which confronts the Congress in its legislative task because of the many conflicting interests and opinions presented.

Just because of this difficult situation we know that the interests we represent go far beyond those of our own community. We know that they are the interests of hundreds of thousands of Americans who, through no fault of their own, to-day find themselves in a desperate struggle for mere existence—and that paradoxically enough in the very midst of plenty.

The people of St. Louis and of St. Louis County fully share the traditional Missourian attitude that the relief of needy families is primarily the responsibility of the local community. The public opinion of St. Louis goes even beyond this attitude, since it holds that family relief should, whenever possible, be kept outside of governmental activities.

governmental activities.

St. Louis, therefore, only with every reluctance, determined in November, 1930, that voluntary effort was not strong enough to meet the increasing needs for family relief created by the growing unemployment situation. In November, 1930, the mayor of the city appointed a citizens' committee on relief and employment to unite the strength of government and of private effort to meet the city's unemployment situation in as far as it concerned relief. The result was a plan of relief worked out jointly by representatives of the city government, the relief agencies within the community, and the general public. The entire community got together for a common cause and as a community has, until now. met within its own resources the distress problems growing out of unemployment.

unemployment.

The problem has now grown beyond local and State resources; it has reached the point of demand on our National Government. It appears that the National Government now is in exactly the same situation which confronted the municipal government in St. Louis in the fall of 1930 and which confronted hundreds of American municipalities at one time or another during the past 18 months. Together, these many communities have until now met their problems without the aid of the National Government. We believe that the time has come for the Nation to face the situation, as local governments have already faced it, squarely and courageously. It is time, we believe, to lay aside our reluctance to have the Federal Government enter what heretofore has been considered as the field solely of the local community. It is time, we are sure, to recognize that in the final analysis the common welfare, the right of the citizenship to at least the minimum necessary for bare existence, is paramount to and supersedes tradition and fear.

The St. Louis situation is no doubt typical of the country-wide sedes tradition and fear.

The St. Louis situation is no doubt typical of the country-wide development and will serve to make clear the basis for our contentions and our views.

The number of families in need of public relief and who are receiving it increased from 5.314 in January, 1930, to more than 25,000 in May, 1932, and this number is on the increase. Our local resources, in spite of all efforts made to keep pace with the demand, have now been exhausted to the point that within six weeks from June 15, unless additional resources are somehow provided, relief will have to be withdrawn from approximately 15,000 families, with, of course, no additional applications being received.

The planning of the St. Louis committee was done with a view to conserving resources with the utmost care and with a view to insuring to its needy families the necessities of life and at the same time a service calculated to safeguard privacy and home. The committee has used existing agencies, and thus has taken advantage of trained workers and experienced leadership. This arrangement also insured economy, since it required the creation of very little new machinery.

arrangement also insured economy, since it required the creation of very little new machinery.

By means of, and through the medium of, the citizens' committee St. Louis pooled its financial relief resources, spending both tax and voluntary funds under one central directing body.

Because of this close control, which is shared by the participating agencies and, therefore, quite fully accepted, St. Louis has been able to exercise an effective selection of needy families, as well as foresee from month to month what its obligations were likely to be likely to be.

During the calendar year 1931 the number of relief families increased steadily, each month showing an increase of from 87 per cent to 219 per cent over the corresponding month in the year 1930. The number reached in December, 1931, the total

Our total relief expenditure for 1931 was $1,732,457, of which Our total relief expenditure for 1931 was $1,732,457, of which amount the participating agencies spent from their own budgets as received from the community fund, invested endowment funds, and other sources, $734,624, and from citizens' committee funds, $997,833. Of this latter amount, the city appropriated from tax funds $539,958, the balance, $457,875, being secured through special campaigns for unemployment relief.

Reference has already been made to the increase in case load which continues from month to month, until in May the combined agencies were caring for more than 25,000 families, or more than 100,000 individuals.

From January through April the citizens' relief committee than 100,000 individuals.

From January through April the citizens' relief committee spent a total of $959,516, or just under the amount spent for the whole of 1931 (this expenditure again is over and above the amount spent by the participating agencies from their own budgets). March, 1932, showed a 50 per cent increase over the estimate made for that month in January, and April an increase of 100 per cent over the estimate made for that month. April took us far enough into the year to indicate clearly that there was not the slightest hope of even a seasonal summer decline and that our the slightest hope of even a seasonal summer decline and that our January estimates were quite out of line with reality.

We made a careful analysis of the entire load of relief families, and on this basis, in the light of known trends in employment and wage decreases, arrived at a new month-by-month estimate which totals for the period May 1 through December, 1932, $2,631,250.

Over against this our resources as of May 1, estimated throughout the balance of the year, are as follows:

$108,601 Bank balance. Spring campaign collections due up to and including 482, 939 December campaign collections due up to and including 264, 415 December ______City appropriation_____ 20,000 County appropriation ___

1, 135, 060 Total cash resources ___. This amount falls short of the amount needed by $1,496,190.

Over against the imperative need of continuing to take care of all family problems that come to our attention and can be met by means of relief, we are confronted with the following met by means of relief, we are confronted with the following difficulties:

1. The city must levy special taxes for relief funds, and this procedure meets not only with the usual resistance from special interests affected but threatens the loss of certain local enterprises because of such opposition.

2. Contributors are now paying to the voluntary fund monthly installments on two campaign pledges and can hardly be induced to pledge for a third series of monthly payments.

3. Our income is on a monthly basis, except for tax funds, and can not be anticipated, either by loan or discount.

The first and second difficulties obviously make the securing of additional local funds exceedingly difficult, if not impossible.

The third difficulty, since the citizens' committee can neither borrow nor incur a deficit, forces tapering off the relief work to the extent of our monthly income, with the result that on June 15 the case loads will have to be pared down by a gradual elimination of families now under care, so that within six weeks' time a total of approximately 15,000 families will be without relief recourse, though their need will continue. All this for the want of $1,496,190, and in the fact of the obvious calamity to the individual family and the almost equally obvious dangers to community and country.

It should be represent that relief money as it can come only a total of approximately 15.000 families will be without relier recourse, though their need will continue. All this for the want of $1,496,190, and in the fact of the obvious calamity to the individual family and the almost equally obvious dangers to community and country.

It should be repeated that relief money, as it can come only from the Federal Government, is needed; not in 60 or 90 days but at once, for our shortage of funds begins in the present month. Our estimates are minimum needs only. We now have less than 35 per cent of the total number of families affected by unemployment under care. Even a speedy economic recovery, which is not at all likely, would not prevent a large proportion of those we do not now know from reaching the end of their resources before employment opportunities can possibly reach them. No one can doubt, excepting by a process of deliberate self-deception, that the present need is desperate and that it will inevitably increase.

Conditions in St. Louis are typical of conditions esisting in other cities. Indeed, they are very likely a bit better than those found in most other communities. Without question, the great difficulty met elsewhere, as well as in St. Louis, in the face of the constantly mounting need, is in the effort to discover new forms of taxation which do not impose new burdens on those who are already overburdened or which do not drive out industries on which the community depends.

Any property tax levied is bound to fall most heavily upon that class of property which for one reason or another is already carrying vastly more than its fair share of the tax load, namely, real estate. Local sales, luxury, and occupational taxes become trk-some because in many instances they are duplicated by similar taxes carried by other governmental agencies. Where they are not uniform in a given territory, they frequently cause industries to move out of one community into another in order to escape the tax, thus causing a double loss of revenue.

Moreover, because of lack of adequa

"self-liquidating" projects of public interest. These bills are good so far as they go, but for various reasons their provisions do not meet anything like the whole situation.

One fundamental objection to these bills is that as drawn all States are not able to take equal advantage of their provisions, so that from the very outset there is bound to be discrimination in the distribution of the funds made available. While the terms upon which the money may be advanced to the States or through the States to their subdivisions are in themselves liberal enough, all the bills provide for repayment in one of three ways—either by the assumption of the obligation on the part of the State or the political subdivision sought to be benefited; by directly withholding from the State, beginning with the fiscal year 1937, a proportionate part of the Federal grant for highway construction until the debt is repaid; or by withholding such highway aid only in the event that the State or its political subdivisions shall have failed to arrange for repayment within a given time.

Another feature common to all legislation at present proposed is that the States are to be the units through which relief is granted.

is that the States are to be the units through which relief is granted.

The objections to this feature in the plan of relief are that:

1. Many States and many cities by reason of constitutional, charter, or other legal restrictions are not able to take advantage of a loan without a delay of months and a popular vote, if at all.

2. Where it is provided that a loan may be made on the assurance of the governor that the question of repayment will be presented to the proper legislative authority at the earliest opportunity, this imposes upon the governor a grave responsibility, especially when the alternative to repayment is the withholding of funds necessary for important road-construction work.

3. The need for assistance in proportion to population is greater in some States than in others, so that where the allotment of loans is proposed to be made to each State on the basis of its population, this will not afford all the relief required.

4. The acceptance of loans by States, in which there is legal obstacle to such acceptance or in which the governor is willing to give the required assurance will, in view of the possibility or perhaps even probability of repudiation or cancellation of the debt, give to some States what is in effect an out and out donation, and will result in unfair discrimination against the needy in those States which because of the restrictions in their laws or because of conscientious scruples on the part of the governors are not able to accept a loan.

5. The problem of unemployment is nation-wide and results. accept a loan conscientious scruples on the part of the governors are not able to accept a loan.

5. The problem of unemployment is nation-wide, and results from causes which are national in their scope. Neither the extent nor the character of the relief required is in any sense determined or determinable by State boundaries. For this reason and because of the proportions the need has assumed, the problem of administering relief has become essentially a national one.

6. Aside from such obligations as arise out of the situation looked upon from the standpoint merely of effectiveness and uniformity in the administration of relief, it can not be questioned that with the facilities it has at hand and those available in the form of local relief organizations, the Federal Government is in a better position than the States or their subdivisions are to devise and to execute a practical plan with a central directing body, as it is in a better position by a uniform system of taxation to place the burden of the relief fairly and without unnecessary duplication upon all those by whom the burden should be borne.

Therefore, speaking for the citizens of St. Louis, we recommend that a national plan for direct relief be immediately devised and a central agency established to administer such relief under Federal control wherever need for such relief may be found to exist, with the aid of such local agencies as may now be operating satisfactorily, but without regard to State boundaries and upon such terms as may be deemed advisable so long as they are applicable throughout the Nation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the passage

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President, I rise to ask unanimous consent that after the vote is taken upon the passage of the pending bill, Calendar No. 780, a bill (S. 4536) to amend the agricultural marketing act, approved June 15, 1929, may be made the order of business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, I regret very much that I shall have to object to the request, as it is very necessary to get the next District appropriation bill before the Senate. It is my intention to call it up just as soon as the measure now before us is passed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is made.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President, out of order I move that Calendar No. 780, the bill to which I have just referred, be made the order of business at the close—

The VICE PRESIDENT. That motion is not in order at this time. The only motion that could be made would be to displace the pending measure.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President, after the vote has been taken, I shall then ask for a vote upon my motion to make Calendar 780 the order of business. I want to say to the Senate that we are now considering urban relief. We have been talking for months about farm relief. I believe it is fitting and proper that the farm relief bill should follow the urban relief bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the bill

DEDICATION OF REPLICA OF FORT NECESSITY—INVITATION TO MEMBERS OF SENATE

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by Fort Necessity Chapter, No. 12, Pennsylvania Society Sons of the American Revolution, Uniontown, Pa., unanimously extending an invitation to the Members of the Senate to be present on July 3 and 4, 1932, at the dedication of the replica of Fort Necessity, the unveiling of tablets, and other memorials of various patriotic organizations, which was ordered to lie on the table.

DISPOSITION OF USELESS PAPERS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a list of documents and papers on the files of the Washington Quartermaster Depot (1917–1920) which are not needed in the conduct of business and have no permanent value or historical interest, and asking for action looking to their disposition, which was referred to a Joint Select Committee on the Disposition of Useless Papers in the Executive Departments.

The VICE PRESIDENT appointed Mr. REED and Mr. FLETCHER members of the committee on the part of the Senate.

ADDITIONAL PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a telegram in the nature of a petition from Elmer R. Murphey, of Pasadena, Calif., praying for the passage of the so-called Dies bill, providing for the deportation and barring of alien communists from the United States, which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

He also laid before the Senate a petition of sundry citizens of Waupaca, Wis., praying for the maintenance of the prohibition law and its enforcement, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, of Dwight, Ill., opposing the resubmission of the eighteenth amendment of the Constitution to the States, and favoring the making of adequate appropriations for law enforcement and education in law observance, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the City Council of Evanston, Ill., protesting against the passage of legislation for the expenditure of several billion dollars for public improvements, such as post offices, highways, etc., not productive of revenue, and particularly against the expenditure of public funds in the city of Evanston, Ill., which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the council of the city of Staunton, Ill., favoring the passage of legislation authorizing a bond issue in amount not to exceed $5,000,000 to aid in financing municipal public improvement projects, so as to aid unemployment, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a resolution adopted by Col. John Jacob Astor Camp, No. 6, United Spanish War Veterans, Washington, D. C., signed by Lewis H. Forsyth, camp commander, protesting against the "findings and recommendations of the Senate Economy Committee pertaining to veterans' legislation," except that part with reference to appointing a joint committee of Congress to investigate and report concerning veterans' legislation, which was ordered to lie on the

He also laid before the Senate a concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of New Jersey, favoring the appropriation of sufficient funds to carry out the provisions of the national defense act of 1920, etc., which was ordered to lie on the table. (See concurrent resolution printed in full when presented to-day by Mr. BARBOUR.)

He also laid before the Senate a letter from Henry Woodhouse, president of the Aerial League of America, New York City, N. Y., inclosing copy of suggested legislation proposing "that the National Capital Park and Planning Commission be, and is hereby, authorized to acquire by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, on such terms as may be most favorable to the Government of the United States, the land embracing the properties known as Washington Airport and Hoover Field and any other lands within the area situated adjacent to the right of way of the Washington & Virginia Railway on the south and east, the Boundary Channel on the north, and the United States Agricultural Experimental Farm and the right of way of the Rosslyn branch of the Philadelphia, Baltimore & Washington Railroad on the west, for the purpose of converting said lands into part of the park, parkway, and playground system of the National Capital," etc., which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 11361) making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against the revenues of such District for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, and for other purposes.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, does the Senator expect to proceed further this evening with the bill?

Mr. BINGHAM. I hope we may proceed until 6 o'clock. I shall not ask the Senate to remain in session longer than that, However, if the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNary] desires to ask for an executive session, I am willing to suspend the consideration of the appropriation bill sufficiently before 6 o'clock to afford time to have an executive session.

Mr. KING. I wish the Senator would not take up the bill to-night. Many of us have had no opportunity to read the bill at all.

Mr. BINGHAM. I do not believe it will be possible to complete its consideration to-night.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Connecticut.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 11361) making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against the revenues of such District for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, in order to save time, I make the usual request that the formal reading of the bill may be dispensed with and that the committee amendments may be first considered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, that order will be made.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator from Connecticut yield to me?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. BINGHAM. I yield.

COST OF MEAT CHOPPERS, OPTICAL AND DRAWING INSTRUMENTS

Mr. REED. Mr. President, a few days ago, at my request, the Senate adopted a resolution calling for certain information about the cost of production of meat choppers, optical instruments, and fire-control instruments. I find now that the language of the resolution as adopted would require more work of the Tariff Commission than it was intended to place upon them. Its language was too broad, and would require the ascertainment of the cost of a great many optical instruments that have nothing to do with fire control. I therefore should like to offer another resolution to take the place of the one heretofore agreed to so as to cut down the list of the subjects as to which the Tariff Commission is called upon to make inquiry.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President—
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. BINGHAM. I yield.

Mr. HARRISON. I will say to the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] that the other day at a meeting of the Finance Committee, when the Senator was not present, and this general question was taken up, though not this particular resolution, it developed that the sentiment of the members of the Finance Committee who were present was that all resolutions calling on the Tariff Commission to make investigations should first be referred to the Committee on Finance so that they might be properly framed.

Mr. REED. I was well aware of that decision.

Mr. HARRISON. It seems to me, and I am sure the Senator from Pennsylvania will agree, that it is a pretty wise course that resolutions calling for such investigations should first be referred to the Finance Committee.

Mr. REED. I agree with the Senator as to that, but the resolution I now intend to offer merely proposes to relieve the Tariff Commission from a part of the work that has been imposed upon them.

Mr. HARRISON. I shall not raise any objection to the Senator's resolution, but hereafter I hope some member of the Finance Committee who is present will object to any such resolution being adopted without it first being referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. REED. I am inclined to agree with the Senator from Mississippi. I now offer the resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 227), as fol-

Resolved, That Senate Resolution 219, Seventy-second Congress,

Resolved, That Senate Resolution 219, Seventy-second Congress, first session, is hereby restinded; and

Resolved further, That the United States Tariff Commission is hereby directed to investigate, for the purpose of section 336 of the tariff act of 1930, the differences in the cost of production between the domestic articles and the foreign articles, and to report, at the earliest practicable date, upon the following articles:

"1. Meat or food chopping or grinding machines, and parts thereof, designed for hand operation and used as kitchen utensils and composed wholly or in chief value of metal."

"2. Optical instruments of a class or type used by the Army, Navy, or air force for fire control and parts thereof,"

"3. Precision drawing instruments, and parts thereof, wholly or in chief value of metal."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution submitted by the Senator from Pennsylvania?

There being no objection, the resolution was considered and agreed to.

REPORTS ON INVESTIGATION OF CHAIN STORES

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President-

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. BINGHAM. I yield.

Mr. BROOKHART. Out of order, I send a resolution to the desk, and I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 228), as follows:

Resolved, That the reports which may hereafter be filed with the Secretary of the Senate, pursuant to Senate Resolution No. 224, Seventieth Congress, first session, relative to the investigation by the Federal Trade Commission of chain stores, be printed, with accompanying illustrations, as Senate Documents.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa having been granted unanimous consent to submit the resolution, now asks unanimous consent for its present consideration. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and, without objection, the resolution is agreed to.

RECOMMITTAL OF A JOINT RESOLUTION

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President—
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. BINGHAM. I yield.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, on yesterday, on behalf of the Committee on Indian Affairs, I reported favorably the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 167) to carry out certain obligations to certain enrolled Indians under tribal agreement. At the request of the author of the resolution, my colleague, the junior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. Gore], I now ask unanimous consent that the joint resolution may be recommitted to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, that order will be made.

PHILIPPINE INDEPENDENCE

Mr. HAWES. Mr. President-

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. BINGHAM. I yield to the Senator from Missouri. Mr. HAWES. Mr. President, in 1930 the Senate held long and exhaustive hearings on the question of Philippine independence, and the committee reported to the Senate favorably a bill designed to settle the issue. Beginning with the present session of the Congress, hearings lasting for some weeks were held by a committee of the House of Representatives, and for a week or 10 days by a committee of the Senate. Of the 21 members of the House committee all but 1 or 2, as I am informed, voted to report favorably the bill providing for Philippine independence.

When the House voted upon the Philippine independence bill, the vote in favor of its passage was 306; the total vote against it was 47; not voting, 79; number of votes paired for the bill, 20; number paired against it only 10; number of Democrats in favor of the bill, 186; number of Republicans in favor of the bill, 119; and the Farmer-Labor Representative voted for it. Of the 79 absentees at least 46 have since that time stated that if present they would have voted for the bill.

Mr. President, 306 is an unusual number of votes for any controversial bill to receive in the House of Representatives, and it indicates beyond dispute that in that body, numbering 435 Members, there were less than 65 votes in opposition to Philippine independence.

On April 4 of this year the House passed the Philippine independence bill, and it came to the Senate. The Senate committee considered the measure and amended the House bill by substituting the Senate bill for it. That bill is on the calendar. The friends of Philippine independence, realizing, of course, that revenue measures, relief measures, and other measures of great importance deserving the first consideration of the Senate, have occupied very little of its time, they have contented themselves with trying to get into the Record all the facts that relate to this important subject.

Now, it is stated that in a short while the Congress will adjourn. If so, there will be left a most peculiar situation. The House of Representatives passed the bill granting independence to the Philippines by an almost unanimous vote, and the Senate committee, by unanimous vote, have brought that measure before the Senate for our consideration—not a Senate bill, but a House bill which was passed on April 4—and it has remained upon our calendar, and it has remained there without action.

Senators talk about passing bills for the relief of the farmer and say that such measures should have priority. Well, Mr. President, if there is any bill that is of great interest to the farmer, it is the Philippine independence bill. Senators also talk about union labor. Union labor, with its 5,000,000 votes, is asking for the consideration of this bill. The American Legion is asking for it. We may call such interests selfish, if you please, Mr. President, but there are 17 beet-growing States that want this question decided; there are 5 cane-producing States that want it decided; the Pacific Coast States, without exception, want it decided; all Representatives and all Senators want the immigration problem determined.

In the meantime, Mr. President, the Filipino people can not adjust their domestic affairs; they are in confusion politically and economically; they can make no advance; they are waiting for the Senate to consider and to come to a determination of the question upon which the House of Representatives has acted and to give them an assurance as to the future of the islands. Now their status is uncertain. Our interests in the Philippines likewise are uncertain.

The two great parties are about to hold their conventions. The Republican Party, in its 1924 platform, declared that this was a nonpartisan question; but how can we prevent it from becoming a partisan question if, with this record before us, with a Democratic House having passed an independence bill, we pass it over until December because a Republican Senate refuses to consider the bill that came from the House last April?

Mr. President, I do not want to interfere with the consideration of any proposed relief legislation or with any of the other great bills which must be passed. I do not want to interfere with the bill of the Senator from Virginia [Mr. Glass], nor with the Muscle Shoals bill of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Norris]. I recognize the great importance of both bills.

Now, I propose a unanimous-consent agreement, which, if agreed to, will not interfere with the orderly procedure of the Senate, which will not occupy the time of the Senate to any undue degree, but which will give three or four evenings to a discussion of this subject, so that it may be settled, so that the Filipino people may know and the American people may know what is the determination of the Congress.

I know of no great bill during my service in Congress which has been allowed to remain upon the desk without any consideration so long as has the Philippine independence bill, which has been on the calendar since early April. It may be due to some modesty upon the part of the friends of Philippine independence; it may have been modesty on their part, but I think that we have put the necessities of the American people above those of the Philippines. However, if we are to adjourn within the next two or three weeks, it seems to me in the interest of labor, in the interest of the farmer, in the interest of the dairy industry, in the interest of numerous States, and especially, Mr. President, in the interest of these 13,000,000 wards of ours we should at least give some opportunity during night sessions for a discussion of this question.

I send to the desk and ask to have read a proposed unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. CUTTING. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Connecticut has the floor. Does he yield to the Senator from

Mr. BINGHAM. I yielded for the purpose of having the unanimous-consent agreement offered, Mr. President; but I am perfectly willing to yield to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. CUTTING. The Senator from Missouri said that we were going to adjourn in two or three weeks. I wonder why the Senator from Missouri makes that statement. Is there any reason why we should adjourn until we have accomplished the work which is lying before us?

Mr. HAWES. Personally, I hope we will do what the Senator suggests.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, I hope we will not get into a discussion of adjournment now. I yielded for the purpose of having a unanimous-consent agreement presented

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The unanimous-consent request will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

I ask unanimous consent that the Senate be in session on Friday, the 17th day of June, from the hour of 8 p. m. until 10.30 p. m., and that at said hour of 8 o'clock any unfinished business then before the Senate, except a conference report, be temporarily laid aside and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the process of the consideration of the process of the consideration. tion of H. R. 7233; and that if a conference report is pending at said hour, that said H. R. 7233 be taken up upon the final disposal of such conference report, and that such consideration of sald bill continue between said hours on said 17th day of June, unless final action on said bill is taken prior to the completion of such period; and that if final action is not taken on said bill (H. R. 7233) at such time that under the same terms and conditions it be taken up at the same hour and for the same period of time on the 18th, 20th, and 21st of June unless final action is taken on said bill prior to the expiration of such time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will be compelled to hold that inasmuch as the unanimous-consent agreement looks to a final vote upon the bill, it will require the calling of a quorum.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made.

Mr. HAWES. Mr. President, I call the Chair's attention to the proposed agreement. It does not provide for a final

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair so understood it; but, at any rate, objection has been made.

Mr. HAWES. May I ask who made the objection? The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Washington [Mr. DILL].

Mr. DILL. I made the objection, Mr. President. I objected, because I am opposed to tying up the Senate a week or 10 days ahead.

PAY OF LABORERS AND MECHANICS ON PUBLIC BUILDINGS

Mr. SMITH obtained the floor.

Mr. METCALF. Mr. President-

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. SMITH. For what purpose does the Senator rise?

Mr. METCALF. I desire to call up a bill which is on the desk. It will take only a moment. It is a bill that has passed the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3847) to amend the act approved March 3, 1931, relating to the rate of wages for laborers and mechanics employed by contractors and subcontractors on public buildings, which was to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the act entitled "An act relating to the rate of wages for laborers and mechanics employed on public buildings of the United States and the District of Columbia by contractors or subcontractors, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1931, is amended to read as follows:

Sec. 3. This act shall take effect 30 days after its passage, but shall not affect any contract then existing or any contract that may thereafter be entered into pursuant to invitations for bids that are outstanding at the time of the passage of this act.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the bill has just come over from the House. We have had no opportunity to examine the amendment. I shall have no objection to its being taken up the first thing in the morning.

Mr. METCALF. Mr. President, will not the Senator withhold his objection? This bill has already passed the Senate once, and has passed the House. The House cut out one part of it, and in order to make it correct I have had two amendments proposed to cut out some of the language in the other parts of the bill. The same thing has passed the Senate, and also the House.

Mr. KING. The matter is one of great importance. I was familiar with the Senate bill; but it does seem to me that the Senator ought to wait until to-morrow morning. I will join him in asking that it be taken up the first thing to-morrow morning.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the matter will go over.

THE COTTON CROP

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, on account of conditions over which I have no control, after to-morrow I shall be indefinitely absent from this body. I desire to take this occasion, here and now, to call attention to what seems to be a matter of more or less indifference to some persons, but which is actually a fundamental matter, to the relief of which we must give attention, if we are to emerge from this terrible depression. I am speaking of the agricultural condition in this country.

Immediately after Congress convened an S O S cry came from organized business. We promptly responded by taking up the time of this body with and passing a $2,000,000,000 relief bill. In that measure we specifically stated what character of business would receive the benefits of the taxpayers' money in the form of the bonds that were authorized in that act.

The act has been in operation for more than a month. I do not deny, nor do I detract from, the good work it has done in the specified field of its operation. It has been of benefit in keeping certain financial institutions from going into the hands of receivers, or failing.

Subsequently to the passage of that act, we have discussed bills every one of which is for the benefit of the creditor class. No bills have been introduced here, save one or two—and they have not been discussed—that take cognizance of the frightful condition in which twenty odd million American citizens now find themselves.

We underwrote, or prepared to underwrite, the frozen assets of the railroads, the insurance companies, banks, and trust companies; and not one dollar have we appropriated or made available for the frozen assets of the farms of this country.

No man on this floor will dispute the fact that the products of the farm are the fundamental necessities of this country, and not the stocks and bonds of our industrial institutions. We have accepted or authorized the acceptance of certain securities which, by the very nature of the progress of modern affairs, may be of less value, no matter if prosperity should come back, than they are to-day.

Yesterday, wheat and cotton reached a level lower than ever before in the history of the trading in those two commodities. The price of wheat has fallen so inordinately low that those who produce the bread that the nations eat are bankrupt and ruined. The cotton crop of this year will bring to the farmers of the South and of America $871,000,000 less than the cost of production.

We accepted the bonds and securities of these corporations as security against a loan on the part of the Government. There have been produced by the faithful yeomanry of the South 12,000,000 bales of cotton which will be available on the 1st day of August, 1932, this cotton having been made in 1930 and 1931. In other words, we have a year's supply of cotton already on hand. Another crop added to that spells absolute glut and destruction of the cotton market.

The cotton that is on hand to-day is now being sold around 4½ cents a pound, as against 20 cents three years ago. That means that cotton now, according to the Department of Agriculture, is selling for anywhere from $20 to $25 a bale lower than the cost of production.

I ask the Senate and ask the Nation at large if it is not the part of wisdom and economy and the part of statesmanship for the Government to purchase this cotton now at this ridiculously low price. Ten million bales of it can be bought for $250,000,000, as against $800,000,000, which is the cost of production. That cotton could be bought now and allocated to the growers. Every grower in the country could be given the opportunity of substituting this cotton, already made, for that which is growing in his field. The cost of picking and ginning and the bagging and ties that go on it will almost equal the price of a bale of cotton to-day.

I have introduced a bill appropriating $200,000,000 to enable the Government to buy this surplus, $20 a bale below the cost of production, and then, through the agencies already set up by the Agricultural Department under the appropriation I got for crop production, to take the contract of the grower that he will not produce this year in excess of 50 per cent of the 1931 crop, and the Government will substitute the other 50 per cent out of this cotton that is already on hand, thereby giving him an equity in the frozen asset that he has produced, so that by reducing the production of this year and at the same time reducing the surplus the farmer will get the benefit of what now threatens to be his destruction.

I went before the Agricultural Committee with this bill. The Secretary of Agriculture did not agree to it, on the ground that it was not practicable. I submit to any man, if here is an agricultural product that is indestructible as long as it is kept from fire and water, and if that cotton can be bought from $15 to $20 a bale cheaper than the farmers can produce it, why can not the Government appeal to the common sense of the cotton grower and say, "We will substitute your next year's supply, which is already in existence, if you will agree not to produce this year within 50 per cent of what you produced last year"?

The commissioner of agriculture of the State that makes one-fifth of the cotton made in America said that if this bill was passed he was perfectly willing himself to graze his cattle on his cotton fields, even though the cotton was produced.

The bill I introduced included both wheat and cotton. The wheat people have a different problem; but I submit, Mr. President, that cotton can not be shipped to any spot in the world without satisfying some demand and resulting in a lowering of the price.

I charge now that those of us who represent the cottongrowing States have been derelict in our duty. No voice is lifted here; nothing is said here that will result in succor to those who are losing their homes, who are being turned out into the roads, after they have produced the raw material out of which the clothing of the nations of the earth is made.

We can stand here and grow eloquent over feeding the hungry; we can grow eloquent over going to the rescue of the railroads and trust companies; we can grow eloquent over a tax bill which in its last analysis will rest upon the shoulders of these very destitute farmers; we can pass an economy bill which in its ramifications will subtract from the small wage earner; oh yes, we can pass a bill to balance the Budget, and unbalance the budget of every home in the United States. Had we been possessed of proper statesmanship and the proper attitude, we would first have balanced the budgets of the people, and then they would have balanced ours.

I feel that I myself have been derelict in my duty in not every day and every chance I got standing on this floor and demanding the recognition to which those who feed and clothe this country were entitled. Not a word has been said along that line.

Cotton is a commodity which is imperishable when any care is taken of it, a commodity which has held the balance of trade in favor of the United States for 70 years and has no competitor, but the producers of it are reduced to beggary and to abject poverty, and not a word is being said in their behalf or a measure being introduced for their relief.

America's monopoly of cotton is no more jeopardized to-day than it was before the war. We heard much about the sale of Russian cotton. Russia has not been making as much cotton since the war as she made before the war.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to

Mr. SMITH. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator said a moment ago that no relief measure had been introduced. I want to call his attention to the fact that I have a bill pending to direct the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to use $250,000,000 of its assets to aid in exporting wheat and cotton by lending to exporters and lending to foreign interests which may desire to buy. Does not the Senator think that would be helpful?

Mr. SMITH. I do not know about wheat; but I do know that we could not export cotton now, with another crop coming in, without doing the very thing we are trying to avoid, namely, deflate the price. We have to reduce the surplus, and the only way to reduce the surplus is to prevent cotton being reproduced on the farms. If we can reduce the present crop to some five or six or, say, eight million bales, and then let the cotton that is purchased by the Government be carried into 1933 and then amortized on the same terms, within two years we can get rid of the surplus for the benefit of the grower without the Government losing a cent.

Mr. President, I do not know whether it is indifference, or whether it is ignorance of the subject; but I do know that, so far as this calamity that is facing my State and every cotton State, including the State of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. George] is concerned, unspeakable in its result, no helpful measure has been enacted. The calamity can not be averted by furnishing the exporter with money to send cotton abroad because the surplus, plus the incoming crop, will be too great for the world to absorb. We have to make provision for reducing the total by not duplicating the surplus from the fields this year and next year.

I am glad to say that the leading economists of this country have indorsed the proposition I have advanced. Members of the Senate and the House, in the room of the Committee on Agriculture of the Senate, indorsed it. For nearly three years we begged the Farm Board to adopt the plan of financing cotton for the benefit of the farmer, and holding it in trust for him upon his enforceable contract that he will not duplicate it.

What man having sense enough to keep out of an asylum would not rather have his crop sold for him at the present price and held for him until the crop season is past than to make a crop which he knows, after his labor and the gathering and the marketing, will not give him back as much as it cost him to make it?

It is a simple proposition. You can buy it cheaper than you can make it, and as I said a moment ago and repeat, citizens of Arizona were in my office, as well as citizens of New Mexico, Texas, and Oklahoma, and said that if this bill could be passed, they would graze their cattle on the growing crop, because they would have one already guaranteed to them by the Government cheaper than they could make it, and they could at least have the extra crops of whatever character they could plant between now and when the season is too late.

I have introduced a bill to grant some relief, but I have to leave the city, and I do want my colleagues from the South and from the other cotton-growing States to take that measure up and see if it is not possible to get the relief that would come from it.

Bills are pending before the Committee on Agriculture to buy the Farm Board wheat and to distribute it through the Red Cross and other agencies in order to reduce the surplus. On March 1 we had 500,000,000 bushels of surplus wheat. We have something like 400,000,000 bushels now, with the Nation starving and another crop coming in, both winter and spring wheat. How can we expect farmers to get a living out of the price of wheat when there is a year's supply brought over from other years?

Senators sit here and say, "Well, it is not practical," but it was very practical to run and take the doubtful securities of the great trusts of this country. It was all right to put a billion four hundred million dollars on the backs of those who were already penniless and bankrupt. Oh, yes; you could do that; that was very practical.

We heard that miserable slogan, which nobody had ever heard of before this good year of our Lord 1932, "Balance the Budget." A lot of those who cried out to balance the Budget now wish to God they had not said anything about it, because part of the balancing will come out of their own budgets, which are also unbalanced.

Senators here were stampeded by a miserable propaganda which meant nothing. Through the power of eminent domain this Government, our Federal Government, is the proud possessor, so far as taxes are concerned, of every piece of property in America. She will never go bankrupt. never default on a payment, because she can cash in whenever she sees fit. But under the sinister influence of forces that you and I know were at work the slogan was sent throughout this country, "Balance the Budget," and we fell for it and imposed on the backs of our suffering and helpless people $1,400,000,000 of extra burden. The crop of the very people I have described this evening, which, up until last year, brought into America every year from $750,000,000 to $800,000,000 in gold that is kept out, and the producers are bankrupt and ruined. There is the golden grain of the West, which has been the great granary of America, feeding from Florida to Canada and from New York to San Francisco abundantly the 120,000,000 people of the country, the producers of which necessity of life are to-day bankrupt and ruined and losing their homes, while we, with tender solicitude, are taking care of the corporations.

Who stood here and said let us save the wheat farmer, let us give him a royal living, as he has fed us all; let us take care of the wool and the cotton producers, as they have loyally clothed us all? No. We say, "Oh, no; oh, no; he is not organized; he can not concentrate and make himself felt at the ballot box. Therefore he is the Chinese of American economy, greater in number than all the balance, but disorganized."

Mr. President, if I had been talking about getting some money for a bank or making a provision to go down and help out some institution, those things which are organized, many more Senators would have been here honoring me with their attention.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I am here.

Mr. SMITH. I want to state for the Record that I believe as sympathetic a man as there is in this Chamber toward the cause of the farmers of this country is the junior Senator from California [Mr. Shortridge]. They always get a sympathetic reaction from him.

I do not know just what is going to be the result of this frightful condition that has gradually grown until at last it has reached the point where wheat and cotton are cheaper than they ever were before in the history of the production of those two commodities.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. SMITH. I yield.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. First thanking the Senator for his kindly words, he will not overlook the fact, which I never overlook, that California has become a great cotton-producing State, wherefore I have been intensely interested in the thoughtful remarks of the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. SMITH. I want to say to the Senator from California that the production of cotton in California was such that when they first tried the seed of the Egyptian cotton they produced a cotton equal, both in length of staple and character, to the parent cotton from which it was derived.

Mr. President, I am now about through. I took the bill which I introduced before the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. The question was asked, How much does it cost to put in the fertilizer? How much does it cost to plant it? How much would it cost up to the present time? Being told, it was said that is about a quarter of its general cost. Picking and ginning and harvesting would cost about how much? "If you would go and buy this cotton, you would run the risk of paying insurance and storage, and we do not think it is a practical thing." God help us! Here is cotton that some one is talking about producing. When we pay for fertilizer, cultivation, picking, and ginning and selling at the present time, it is now selling $25 or $30 a bale below the cost of actual production. Then talk about remedying it by sitting down and talking about shipping it to some market where American products do not penetrate. Where does anyone suppose any such place is? Where in the world could we send our surplus bales of cotton where American products have not penetrated?

If I were not forced to leave the Chamber, I would, now that all the balance of the American world has been accommodated, everybody has been handed out a gift, Santa Claus has passed around his gifts to the railroads and the banks and all those institutions, and even to the urban population that is starving, and God knows I would help them—

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President-

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. SMITH. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. When the Senator rose to talk he said because of circumstances over which he had no control he would have to leave. We all hope that before he returns he will have resumed control of the circumstances which take him away. [Laughter.]

Mr. SMITH. I thank the Senator.

Mr. President, I wish we were in as intimate touch with the lonely farm home as we are in touch with the urban home. I wish we knew just what terror is facing that farm life which has been so happy through all these years and a majority of whose sons sleep under the poppies on Flanders field. Leave them alone! They have no voice here. Our lobby, as we all know, has been crowded by those interested in every bill that we have brought up here.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President-

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. SMITH. I yield.

Mr. LEWIS. I wish to assert for myself that I am able to say that which has been the experience of many other Senators, that if it be true I have not been keeping in touch with my constituents in the State where I live, I never fail to feel the touch when my constituents arrive here. [Laughter.]

Mr. SMITH. Yes; but those who touch the Senator, I am very confident, do not touch the plow handles.

Mr. President, I do not know whether during this session of Congress any practical effort, any common-sense effort, is going to be made to reduce this surplus through Government agencies. Those who do not know a cotton stalk from a Jimson weed have no right to set themselves up as judges of what would be practical for the cotton grower.

Mr. NORBECK. Mr. President-

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. SMITH. I yield.

Mr. NORBECK. I am much interested in the discussion of the Senator from South Carolina. I realize and appreciate his sincere interest in the problem of his people and other farmers. While we know very little about cotton, we understand it is largely an overproduction problem. I just want to state that with wheat it is somewhat different. While the wheat farmer has been suffering the same as the cotton farmer from overproduction, the fact of the matter is that we produce less wheat per capita than we did 30 years ago or 20 years ago. Of course, a surplus has developed in some other countries and has depressed the world market. The solution seems to lie along different lines. While our export of wheat is only one-twentieth of the world consumption, the South sends into the world market more than one-half of the world's consumption of cotton. Therefore the American crop dominates the world market in cotton and has a very slight influence on the world market in the case of wheat.

I wanted to make that observation so the impression shall not go out that the agricultural problems have come to us mainly as a result of increased production.

The problem is alike both North and South. Production costs are high. The exchange value of the farmer's commodity is low. Both cotton and wheat are sold at less than cost of production. Almost everything the farmer buys is high. It actually takes most of the crop to pay the interest on the mortgage. We need not only a fair exchange for our commodities but we are sadly in need of a lower interest rate on farm mortgages. Unless we can get a substantially better price the mortgages can not be paid, and they will not be paid. A few years ago the creditor class was sitting pretty. The issue is now one which also concerns the creditor, and it better be his concern. His unwillingness in the past to give agriculture a square deal will yet prove to be his own loss. He has been shortsighted. We are reminded of the man who killed the goose that laid the golden egg. He wanted the gold; he was not willing to wait, so he destroyed his own chance.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, the overproduction, so called, is having a material effect in this depression. In 1926, 1927, and 1928 the consumption of American cotton was more than 15,000,000 bales. The depression came on, the purchasing power of the world, both in America and abroad, was destroyed, and the consequence was there was a surplus accumulated out of what before that was just a normal crop. Of course, in the last year we did produce an abnormal crop. We produced perhaps 2,500,000 bales more than the average.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President-

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. SMITH. I yield.

Mr. GEORGE. The Senator will bear me out in the statement that during the last marketing season he and I worked very faithfully with the Farm Board and with the reserve bank system, in fact, all the governmental agencies, trying to persuade them that 1932 production of cotton could be completely controlled or adequately controlled by doing what the Senator has outlined in the bill which he has offered to the Senate.

Mr. SMITH. That is true. May I say to the Senator from Georgia that as I look back on it now I think we were somewhat derelict in our duty. We ought to have paid no attention to those departments, who either do not know or are indifferent to the circumstances. The Senator was convinced, as every representative of a cotton State was convinced, and we were waiting to get the opinion of those who knew nothing about it. What we ought to have done was to enact the law. Our friends here would have listened to us. We should have formulated the bill and enacted it into law and made it mandatory, and ourselves assumed the responsibility of success or failure.

As I have said, we have handed out relief to everybody else, and now we are about ready to adjourn and go home. Have we discharged our duty? We have taken care of everything that can contribute to a campaign fund, to those who can go around and manipulate things, so why worry? If these fellows die, there will be that less number to consume. Leave them alone and that is exactly what will happen. Senators from the South and Senators from the West, are we going to adjourn and go home and leave this unspeakable condition resting upon those who feed and clothe us?

Mr. President, I want in conclusion to say that I hope the Senators from the South will take up this bill, or one that will accomplish the same purpose. I am going to call them together to-morrow morning before I leave Washington and ask for an honest expression of opinion as to whether an honest effort is going to be made to start a reduction of production and a diminution of the surplus.

Mr. McNARY obtained the floor.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President-

Mr. McNARY. I yield to the Senator from Washington to present a conference report.

LEGISLATIVE APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT Mr. JONES submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11267) making appropriations for the legislative branch of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 14, 19, 33, 34, 36, 38, 42, and 43.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 10, 11, 12, 13, 15, 16, 17, 20, 21, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 35, 37, 39, 40, 41, and 44; and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 9: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 9, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment, amended as follows: In lieu of the sum named in said amendment insert "$3.500"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 18: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 18, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment amended as follows: In lieu of the sum named in said amendment, insert "$150,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 22: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 22, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$67,500"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 23: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 23, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$58,500"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 24: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 24, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$170,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 45: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 45, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "$76,000; in all, $210,800"; and the Senate agree to the same.

The committee of conference have been unable to agree on amendments numbered 46 to 168, inclusive, to Part II of the bill

W. L. Jones,
Reed Smoot,
Frederick Hale,
E. S. Broussard,
Sam G. Bratton,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
John N. Sandlin,
Louis Ludlow,
Guy U. Hardy,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. JONES. This is a report on the first part of the legislative appropriation bill. There is no disagreement of any consequence between the House Members and the Senate conferees. The House receded on practically all the amendments we put into the bill. We receded, I think, on about seven minor amendments. They expect to appoint new conferees on the economy part of the bill, and that is the reason why I report this partial disagreement. After this report is adopted I want to ask that our disagreement be insisted upon, that conferees on our part be appointed, and then the House will appoint a new set of conferees. I ask for the adoption of the report.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, there is a very small attendance here at this late hour.

Mr. JONES. This report simply deals with the first part of the bill, the legislative feature. There is no difference of any considerable moment at all. The House receded on practically all of the amendments we put into the bill.

Mr. BLAINE. But there is a disagreement on the bill as a whole?

Mr. JONES. Yes; there is disagreement on the other part of the bill.

Mr. BLAINE. I inquire if it is not a very unusual proceeding?

Mr. JONES. The proceeding on the part of the House to appoint a new set of conferees for another part of the bill is a very unusual proceeding. I never before knew it to have been done. We do not expect to appoint different conferees ourselves, but I understand that is what the House will do. We report a disagreement on the second part of the bill, and I understand they are going to appoint a new set of conferees; but of course that rests with them.

Mr. BLAINE. I am not familiar with that unusual proceeding. The Senator suggests that this is probably the first time that it has been done. In view of that fact and that the Senate has to act on the conference report, unless there is a quorum called so Members of the Senate who are absent will have an opportunity to consider the matter, I think it should go over until to-morrow. I am not interposing any objection to the conference report itself.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I want to say that there is no possible objection to the first part.

Mr. BLAINE. If there is not, why not let it go over until to-morrow morning?

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, I should like to say that it has been a frequent occurrence that a conference committee on the part of the Senate reported an agreement as to some of the amendments to a bill and a disagreement as to the others. There is nothing unusual about that. May I say to the Senator from Wisconsin that all the Senator from Washington is asking is that the Senate agree to that portion of the report where the House has practically not disagreed at all to what the Senate desires.

Mr. JONES. And that the Senate agree to the disagreement as to the other portion.

Mr. BLAINE. If the Senator will yield, may I suggest that the matter go over until to-morrow morning? There will be no delay then.

Mr. JONES. I thought it would save us a day or two. The House can not consider the report until it has been printed for a day. If we were to act now, of course, they could act on it to-morrow, and then the new conferees could be appointed, if they want to appoint them.

Mr. BINGHAM. As a matter of courtesy to the House, they should be permitted to follow what seems to them a desirable procedure.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oregon has the floor and yielded for the purpose of having the conference report, which is a privileged matter, presented. The question of agreeing to the conference report is debatable. The Chair wishes to say, if he may, for the information of the Senate, that while it is true that conferees frequently report a partial agreement and then continue their labors, it is a most unusual proceeding for new conferees to be appointed in connection with a single portion of any bill which is in disagreement. However, the Chair wishes to know what is the will of the Senate.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I want to suggest that the fact that the House may appoint new conferees is not a matter for us to consider; it is none of our business what they may do in regard to the amendments in disagreement; but, as Senators want this question to go over, however insignificant these matters are, I am perfectly willing that that be done.

Mr. McNARY. I suggest to the Senator that he allow it to go over until to-morrow. We do not want a roll call now; it is pretty late.

Mr. JONES. I withdraw the report for to-night.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Why may not the Senator present the report now and have it printed in the Record and call it up to-morrow? It is a privileged matter.

Mr. JONES. It would then be in a different status from what it now is if it were ordered printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Very well. The Senator from Washington withdraws the report.

CONSIDERATION OF AGRICULTURAL RELIEF MEASURE

Mr. HOWELL. I ask unanimous consent that, following the disposition of the District of Columbia appropriation bill, Calendar No. 780, being Senate bill 4536, to amend the agricultural marketing act approved June 15, 1929, may be made the unfinished business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, before consent is given, I think we ought to have a quorum, because I think it is unusual to ask for consent of that kind with so few Members present.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, I know some members of the Appropriations Committee who are not present who have appropriation bills they desire to bring up, and on their behalf I feel constrained to object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. McNARY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

POSTMASTER AT PRESCOTT, ARIZ.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, under Rule XXVI, I respectfully move to discharge the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads from the further consideration of the following subject, to wit, the nomination of Miss Helen A. McNutt, to be postmaster of the city of Prescott, Ariz.

I make this motion because the nomination has been before the committee for more than 50 days; no charges have been filed against the nominee, but for some reason I have been unable to secure a report from the committee. If I understand the rule correctly, the motion must lie over for one day. Am I correct in that, I inquire of the Chair?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Not necessarily unless some Senator objects, but the present occupant of the chair, in his capacity as a Senator and in the absence of the chairman of the committee, would feel constrained to object. So that the motion will go over for one day, anyway, until the next executive session.

Mr. ASHURST. I wish to serve notice that just as soon as another executive session of the Senate is held I shall ask for action upon my motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion will be entered in accordance with the rule.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I can assure the Senator from Arizona that we will have an executive session on Monday.

REPORTS OF THE POST-OFFICE COMMITTEE

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Reports of committees are in order.

Mr. McNARY (for Mr. McKellar), from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably sundry nominations of postmasters.

Mr. ODDIE, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably sundry nominations of postmasters.

Mr. SCHALL, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably several nominations of post-masters.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reports will be placed on the calendar.

TREATIES-REGULATION OF WHALING

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further reports of committees, the calendar is in order.

Executive A (71st Cong. 3d sess.): Protocols concerning adherence of the United States to the Court of International Justice, transmitted by the President of the United States on December 10, 1930, was announced as first in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In the absence of the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, the Chair assumes that all treaties on the calendar may go over.

Mr. NORBECK. Mr. President, I inquire of the Chair if the chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee asked that the treaty regarding the regulation of whaling go over? I know he is very much interested in having that treaty ratified, and he is not here.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will say that he acted on his own initiative because, noticing the absence of the chairman of the committee, and being himself a

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, before consent is given, I member of the committee, he assumed that the treaties link we ought to have a quorum, because I think it is ought to go over.

Mr. NORBECK. The chairman of the committee requested me to explain it if it came up. That is the reason I asked the question. I do not think there is any objection to this treaty. Twenty-seven nations have signed it. It is simply for the protection of whales; to prevent the killing of immature whales, and it will become effective as each country passes the appropriate laws.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the Chair may still function as a Senator, he will state that everything the Senator from South Dakota has said about the particular treaty is absolutely accurate, and the Chair merely entered the request because the chairman of the committee is not present. There was absolutely no difference in the Committee on Foreign Relations regarding the treaty, and, in view of what the Senator from South Dakota has said, the treaty Executive A and the treaty Executive K will be passed over and the treaty Executive J will be considered.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the treaty Executive J (72d Cong., 1st sess.), a multilateral convention for the regulation of whaling, signed by the United States at Geneva, on March 31, 1932, which was read, as follows:

ARTICLE 1

The High Contracting Parties agree to take, within the limits of their respective jurisdictions, appropriate measures to ensure the application of the provisions of the present Convention and the punishment of infractions of the said provisions.

ARTICLE 2

The present Convention applies only to baleens or whalebone whales.

ARTICLE 3

The present Convention does not apply to aborigines dwelling on the coasts of the territories of the High Contracting Parties provided that:

(1) They only use canoes, pirogues or other exclusively native craft propelled by oars or sails:

(2) They do not carry firearms;

(3) They are not in the employment of persons other than aborigines:

(4) They are not under contract to deliver the products of their whaling to any third person.

ARTICLE 4

The taking or killing of right whales, which shall be deemed to include North-Cape whales, Greenland whales, southern right whales, Pacific right whales and southern pigmy right whales, is prohibited.

ARTICLE 5

The taking or killing of calves or suckling whales, immature whales, and female whales which are accompanied by calves (or suckling whales) is prohibited.

ARTICLE 6

The fullest possible use shall be made of the carcasses of whales taken. In particular:

1. There shall be extracted by boiling or otherwise the oil from all blubber and from the head and the tongue and, in addition, from the tail as far forward as the outer opening of the lower intestine.

The provisions of this sub-paragraph shall apply only to such carcasses or parts of carcasses as are not intended to be used for human food.

2. Every factory, whether on shore or afloat, used for treating the carcasses of whales shall be equipped with adequate apparatus for the extraction of oil from the blubber, flesh and bones.

ARTICLE 7

Gunners and crews of whaling vessels shall be engaged on terms such that their remuneration shall depend to a considerable extent upon such factors as the size, species, value and yield of oil of whales taken, and not merely upon the number of whales taken, in so far as payment is made dependent on results.

ARTICLE 8

No vessel of any of the High Contracting Parties shall engage in taking or treating whales unless a license authorising such vessels to engage therein shall have been granted in respect of such vessel by the High Contracting Party, whose flag she flies, or unless her owner or charterer has notified the Government of the said High Contracting Party of his intention to employ her in whaling and has received a certificate of notification from the said Government.

Nothing in this article shall prejudice the right of any High Contracting Party to require that, in addition, a license shall be required from his own authorities by every vessel desirous of using his territory or territorial waters for the purposes of taking, landing or treating whales, and such license may be refused or may be made subject to such conditions as may be deemed by such High Contracting Party to be necessary or desirable, whatever the nationality of the vessel may be.

ARTICLE 9

The geographical limits within which the articles of this Convention are to be applied shall include all the waters of the world, including both the high seas and territorial and national waters.

ARTICLE 10

- (f) When fœtus is present, length and sex if ascertainable:
- (g) When practicable, information as to stomach contents.
- 2. The length referred to in sub-paragraphs (e) and (f) of this article shall be the length of a straight line taken from the tip of the snout to the notch between the flukes of the tail.

ARTICLE 11

Each High Contracting Party shall obtain from all factories, on land or afloat, under his jurisdiction, returns of the number of whales of each species treated at each factory and of the amounts of oil of each grade and the quantities of meal, guano and other products derived from them.

ARTICLE 12

Each of the High Contracting Parties shall communicate statistical information regarding all whaling operations under their jurisdiction to the International Bureau for Whaling Statistics at Oslo. The information given shall comprise at least the particulars mentioned in Article 10 and: (1) the name and tonnage of each floating factory; (2) the number and aggregate tonnage of the whale catchers; (3) a list of the land stations which were in operation during the period concerned. Such information shall be given at convenient intervals not longer than one year.

ARTICLE 13

The obligation of a High Contracting Party to take measures to ensure the observance of the conditions of the present Convention in his own territories and territorial waters, and by his vessels, shall not apply to those of his territories to which the Convention does not apply, and the territorial waters adjacent thereto, or to vessels registered in such territories.

As regards any Member of the League or non-member State on whose behalf an instrument of ratification or accession is subsequently deposited, the Convention shall enter into force on the ninetieth day after the date of the deposit of such instrument.

ARTICLE 18

- 2. Denunciation shall be effected by a written notification addressed to the Secretary-General of the League of Nations, who shall inform all the Members of the League and the non-member States of each notification received and of the date of its receipt.
- Each denunciation shall take effect six months after the receipt of its notification.

ARTICLE 20

- 2. Any High Contracting Party may give notice to the Secretary-General of the League of Nations at any time subsequently that he desires that the Convention shall apply to all or any of his territories which have been made the subject of a declaration under the preceding paragraph, and the Convention shall apply to all the territories named in such notice ninety days after its receipt by the Secretary-General of the League of Nations.
- 3. Any High Contracting Party may, at any time after the expiration of the period of three years mentioned in Article 19, declare that he desires that the present Convention shall cease to apply to all or any of his colonies, protectorates, overseas territories or territories under suzerainty or mandate and the Convention shall cease to apply to the territories named in such declaration six months after its receipt by the Secretary-General of the League of Nations.
- 4. The Secretary-General of the League of Nations shall communicate to all the Members of the League of Nations and the non-member States all declarations and notices received in virtue of this article and the dates of their receipt.

ARTICLE 21

The present Convention shall be registered by the Secretary-General of the League of Nations as soon as it has entered into force.

In faith whereof the above-mentioned Plenipotentiaries have signed the present Convention.

Done at Geneva, on the twenty-fourth day of September one thousand nine hundred and thirty-one, in a single copy which shall be kept in the archives of the Secretariat of the League of Nations and of which certified true copies shall be delivered to all the Members of the League of Nations and to the non-member States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution of ratification will be read.

The resolution of ratification was read and agreed to, as

Resolved (two-thirds of the Senators present concurring therein), That the Senate advise and consent to the ratification of Executive J, Seventy-second Congress, first session, a multi-lateral convention for the regulation of whaling, signed at Geneva,

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That nomination will be passed over on request.

ASSOCIATE JUSTICES, PHILIPPINE SUPREME COURT

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Carlos A. Imperial, of the Philippine Islands, to be associate justice, Supreme Court of the Philippine Islands.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The nomination just read and the one following it on the calendar, being Calendar No. 4675, will be passed over at the instance of the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING].

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, did I understand the Chair to say that the junior Senator from Utah objected to the nominations of judges of the Philippine Supreme Court?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The junior Senator from Utah, being under the obligation to leave the Chamber, asked the Chair to request that the nominations of Philippine judges should go over.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, there is very great need for their prompt confirmation, in view of the fact that the next session of the court is about to be held, and there is no quorum present, and so the court is unable to function. I hope very much that in the very near future the nominations of these judges may be taken up, and that they may be confirmed.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, for the reason stated by the Senator from Connecticut, there was great pressure upon the Judiciary Committee to get these nominations before the Senate; they are unanimously recommended; and I was wondering whether it would be unusual to permit them to be voted upon, with the understanding that the Senator from Utah may move to reconsider if he should desire to do so?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The present occupant of the chair was merely acting in conformity with senatorial courtesy in saying that the junior Senator from Utah wished the nominations to go over, and the Chair will hold that they go over.

CECIL H. CLEGG

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Cecil H. Clegg, of Alaska, to be judge, district of Alaska, division No. 3.

POSITION OF EX-PRESIDENT COOLIDGE ON WAR DEBTS

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, at the request of the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. HATFIELD], I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD an article from the Journal of Commerce of June 10, entitled "Congress Indorses Coolidge in Holding Europe to War Debts."

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Congress Indorses Coolidge in Holding Europe to War Debt—"IF We Do not Collect It," He Says, "We Must Collect from Taxpayer"—Senators, Congressmen Support Ex-President— Curtis, Borah, Watson, Wagner, Smoot, Bingham, Snell, Crisp, Robinson of Indiana Back Stand

By Clarence L. Linz

Washington, June 9.—Repayment of European war debts to the United States under the terms of existing funding agreements will be expected by Congress.

Such was the sentiment expressed by leading Members of both Houses commenting upon an article by former President Calvin Coolidge in the current issue of Cosmopolitan Magazine out tomorrow.

morrow.

"The money we furnished we had to borrow," suggested Mr. Coolidge. "If we do not collect it from Europe, we must collect it from our own taxpayers."

Wrestling to-day with the problems incident to the balancing of the Budget, made intricate by manipulation of the Government economy measure. Senate leaders have shown some irritability over suggestions that Europe would not make anticipated interest and principal payments as they become due in December.

DEBT TIED TO BUDGET

The whole program of Budget balancing is predicated in part upon receipt of such payments from all war debtor countries that it may not be necessary to "collect it from our own taxpayers." The Coolidge statement, giving opportunity for Members of Congress to express themselves on the subject of war debts, is seen as having an important effect upon both the attitude of the administration in that respect and in the drafting of the War Department plant by the Republican National Congression. partment plank by the Republican National Convention. Further it would appear to give assurance that Congress will decline to ratify any agreement that the President might undertake with foreign governments for extension of the life of the present moratorium.

It is recognized that there is a great deal of sentiment in the East and in certain sections of the Middle West favorable to further aid to Europe. Much has been said in Congress also that it was a foregone conclusion that foreign governments would repudiate their debts in some way or another. Nevertheless, the legislators, nearing the end of the session, tired and harassed by importuning constituents and lobbyists to do all sorts of things, plainly are out of patience with the talk of war debt revision, much less cancellation.

DEMOCRATS ARE PROVOKED

Democratic Members are rather provoked over the Alfred E. Smith proposal recently made that war debtors be forgiven a portion of their debt upon the consummation of purchases of American products in stated amounts. They look upon this as impracticable and undesirable.

impracticable and undesirable.

The Government economy bill was sent to conference to-day in a form estimated to save only about $120,000,000 at the outside, which is less than half of what President Hoover would like accomplished by this particular piece of legislation.

Reductions to be effected under Budget estimates for various Government activities also are likely to fall short of the goal.

The revenue revision law, just enacted, will not yield all of the additional funds originally hoped for.

To add to these deficits the loss of the whole or any part of the $258,000,000 which will otherwise be paid by the war debtors in interest and principal, plus something like $25,200,000 in an installment upon deferred payments of the present fiscal year, would further throw the Budget out of balance.

There are to be heard in Congress expressions of apprehension that President Hoover will act to aid European nations after Congress adjourns.

Congress adjourns.

PRESSURE TALKED OF

There is declared to have been pressure brought to bear upon the Chief Executive and his advisers to make further representations to Congress. It is recalled that influential persons in private conferences, particularly one at the home here of former Secretary of the Treasury Mellon, had urged upon Mr. Hoover at the outset to seek a two or a three year moratorium, a proposal which Congress would not heed.

posal which Congress would not heed.

An unfortunate situation may arise in the event that leading debtor nations fail to make stated payments. It was related to-day by Representative Crisp, of Georgia, who has been acting as chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee during the illness of Chairman Collier, that foreign governments literally had to be forced into settling their debts by an implied threat of having proposed private loans discouraged.

While there is dislike on the part of certain leading Members of Congress, outstanding among whom is Senator Carter Glass (Democrat, Virginia), to State Department supervision of private loans to foreign nations, nevertheless, there is likelihood that such action would officially be fostered if foreign debtors fail to observe their obligations.

to observe their obligations.

CURTIS AGAINST CANCELLATION

"I always have been against cancellation of the war debts," asserted Vice President Curris. "I have repeatedly held that the war debts should be repaid."

Senator Borah, chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, is very positive and outspoken in his views.

"The key to the European situation, good or bad, is the reparations proposition," asserted Borah. "If Europe can not solve the reparations problem it is useless to talk to the American taxpayer about aiding Europe by canceling the debts, or to the American banker about aiding Europe by loaning it more money." "Who said cancellation?" inquired Senate Republican Floor Leader Watson. "The way for scaling down the debts is for them to pay them down."

"I am not a recent convert in opposition to the cancellation of

"I am not a recent convert in opposition to the cancellation of the war debts," suggested Senator Reed Smoot, chairman of the Senate Finance Committee. "I have been opposed to that from the very beginning.'

WAGNER INDORSES COOLIDGE

"Standing by itself it is a very sound, logical statement," asserted Senator Wagner (Democrat, New York).

asserted Senator Wagner (Democrat, New York).

"The statements of Mr. Coolidge are sound, New England common sense—exactly the kind you would expect from him," commented Senator Bingham (Republican, Connecticut). "I particularly like his expression that if we want to go into the subsidy business we can form concerns of our own and find governments outside of Europe where we could make the operation much more profitable."

"Mr. Coolidge is right," concluded Representative SNELL, House Republican floor leader. "I am unalterably opposed to any reduction, cancellation, or war-debt moratorium."

"I, too, am in accord with former President Coolidge," said Representative Crisp, who was a member of the World War Foreign Debt Commission which negotiated the funding agreements. "Foreign nations easily can make these payments."

"These nations were entirely content to pay the debt, with interest, at the time they contracted for the money," suggested Senator Robinson (Republican, Indiana). "Mr. Coolidge is very conservative—they not only were willing to accept the obligation for payment but insisted upon it as a right."

Mr. McNARY. I move that the Senate take a recess until to-morrow morning at 11 o'clock.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Oregon.

The motion was agreed to: and (at 6 o'clock and 26 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until to-morrow, Saturday, June 11, 1932, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

FRIDAY, JUNE 10, 1932

The House met at 12 o'clock noon. The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Most Merciful God, just now our first thought is of Thy fatherhood; the second is of the far-reaching brotherhood to which we belong. We pray Thee to regard and bless these relationships. Increase the power of our faith, our hope, and our sympathy as they move toward our fellow men. Do Thou more and more incline us to hold up one another, pitying one another and helping one another. O may we do most for those who need us most. We thank Thee that Thou hast determined by Thy great heart of love that man should not earn his bread by the breaking of his heart. O God, lead us in some way to follow this Divine purpose. As this is Thy will, it is destined to survive the disturbances of time, ever responding to the worth of man. At Thy mercy seat, our Father, we breathe this prayer in the blessed name of the world's Saviour. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate by Mr. Craven, its principal clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 11337. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to exchange the Federal building site in Dover, N. J., for another site.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 11897. An act making appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7912) entitled "An act making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, and for other purposes."

MATERIALISM AND SPIRITUALITY

Mr. BOLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD, and include the commencement address delivered by the Resident Commissioner from the Philippines, Mr. Camilo Osias, at the Waverly High School, Waverly, Pa., on June 3, 1932. This is a school situated in one of the cities of my congressional district.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The address is as follows:

Once while a supervising teacher in the Philippine Bureau of Education I was traveling on horseback one night from my official station, Bacnotan, La Union, to my home town, Balacan. On the way there was a river named Darigayo which I had to cross by means of a bamboo raft. It had been raining that afternoon. The stream was swollen and the current was rather swift. The men in charge, whom we call balceros, informed me that it was dangerous just then to attempt to go across. I, therefore, tarried for a few hours awaiting the stream to subside.

While chatting with the men I saw fire at a distance at the foot of the mountains in the east. I asked one of them, "Where is that fire?"

He answered, "That's at the barrio, or village, called 'Cabali-tocan.'"

Now, balitoc in my language means gold and "Cabalitocan" means a place where gold abounds. So I inquired, "Why is it called 'Cabalitocan'"? And the man related the following legend: Once upon a time there was a man who went fishing on the river in his little banca, or canoe. For hours and deep into the night he worked, but he did not have any luck catching fish and he was disappointed to have not a single fish in his fish basket. Paddling his banca in the darkness of the night, however, he saw something glittering along the bank. He went for the object and to his surprise he found it was a piece of gold about the size of a grain of rice. Full of glee he took the precious metal and thanked his stars, for he knew it was worth more than any fish he could have caught.

his stars, for he knew it was worth more than any nsh he could have caught.

He then and there decided to go home. As he glided along he saw not far away another shining object on the bank, and thinking it might be another piece of gold he paddled his banca toward it. He picked it up and found that it was, indeed, a piece of gold the size of a guava fruit. So elated was he at finding a larger piece that he threw into the river the first piece he had.

Proceeding along he again saw not far away a still larger piece, which was shining and bright. This time it was about the size of a coconut. He took this one and threw away what he had.

Hurrying homeward he again saw a still larger piece. Not doubt-

Hurrying homeward he again saw a still larger piece. Not doubting that it was gold, he threw away what he had and hastened to pick up the great big piece of metal about the size of a mortar. To his dismay he found it so heavy that he could not move it an

Remembering the pieces he had previously thrown away, he retraced his steps, as it were, to look for them, but to his disappointment none did he find, and when he returned to look for the large piece of gold, it, too, could not be located.

That tale has remained indelibly in my mind. The more I think of it the more clearly I at the large piece.

That tale has remained indelibly in my mind. The more I think of it the more clearly I see the great moral lesson it teaches, which in times like these we would do well to bear in mind and heed.

This simple legend shows that although the material in life has its place, it is never wholly satisfying. It reaffirms the truth illustrated in the renowned story of King Midas, who, in quest of what he thought was the greatest thing in the world, was given the power to turn into gold whatever he touched, a power which he later had occasion to regret, because the child he so dearly loved was also turned into gold in his clutches as he held her in a fond embrace. fond embrace

Let me state that I recognize the worth of the material, the practical, the economic in earthly life, yet I cling steadfastly to the belief that the idealistic, the moral, the spiritual constitute in the last analysis the really elemental, satisfying, and permanent. The material is temporal; the spiritual is elemental. Materialism is founded upon things that perish; the spiritual has an immortal basis basis.

Shortsighted are they who permit their better nature to be obscured by their worship of the material. The farsighted are those who, seeing the things that are, can project themselves into the realm of the imponderables and discover, through the maze of things immediate, the image of what they conceive to be the eternal verities of which spirituality is the embodiment.

Your schooling so far has enabled you to catch a glimpse of the real on earth through the agency of the common subjects. Your taste of a little science may have led you to the conclusion that only the physical is what is real, but, school man that I am myself, I have no hesitation to affirm that spirituality is the true reality.

The youth of the present study various texts and read several references, but I wonder if they grasp and assimilate their contents. I fear that in the face of the avalanche of so much printed matter they fail properly to separate the grain from the chaff and get a warped view of things. I fear they are neglecting the beautiful depicted in classical literature and the great truths embodied in the Book of Books: "What shall it profit a man if he shall gain the whole world and lose his own soul?"

Life in the present workaday world tends altogether too much to the immediate, the obvious, the material. To many of the youth, indeed, materialism has become a god. This can not but sadden the hearts of your elders who wish you well. Ask any of them and, if he be a true guardian of your best interests, he would in his best moments tell you that above the things earthly are the things heavenly; that within what is obvious and tangible in ourselves is the invisible and the intangible which we call a soul or a spirit.

It is this soul that is life. It is this spirit that is real. Only if this reality in ourselves is attuned to the greater soul or the greater spirit may it be said that we are in truth and in fact genuinely educated.

genuinely educated.

A common criticism against the existing institutions of learning is that they are academic and impractical. Ordinarily, it is meant by this that they are not sufficiently effective in preparing young men and young women for practical life. Practical life in turn is narrowly interpreted, and is made synonymous with the chase of the dollar. The dollar is used as the criterion of success. It is the yardstick by which achievement is gaged. Only he who succeeds in amassing material wealth is adjudged successful. A premium is placed upon material mindedness. This way lies the road to perdition.

Let not the materially ridden social order forget that more important than earning one's livelihood is living an abundant life. True abundance is found in rich spirituality. Hitching our wagon to a star means lifting ourselves from the common level of the material into the lofty heights of the spiritual. This way lies the road to sublime immortality.

I doubt not that perhaps some of my hearers even now are inwardly criticizing me as being but a theoretical and academic schoolman. I do not mind. If to indulge in such thoughts is to be theoretical, then make the most of the charge. Such is my nature and I do not purpose to change it merely to conform to the standard that has become so current in an accursedly ma-while I believe I am practical enough to realize that there need not be an irreconcilable conflict between sane materialism and practical spirituality, I am insistent in pressing upon my listeners the idea that spirituality should be exalted above materialism. I am emphatic in asserting that the spiritual, not the material, is am emphatic in asserting that the spiritual, not the material, is what is soul satisfying.

Lest I be too much misunderstood, I again advert to the thought already expressed that the material is not without importance, but at best it is only foundational. Upon it must be built a superstructure of character so good, so perfect that teachers and parents alike shall cheerfully realize that the sacrifice they have made for the education of those who graduate has been worth while. In the attainment of righteous spirituality is found the true reward of both the patient teacher and the solicituus parent.

Go forth, I adjure the graduates, consciously striving for that higher and better and nobler something we call spirituality. For you this course and the meaning of the injunction will gain in worth and clarity in proportion to the intensity and seriousness of your compliance. Truth, virtue, happiness—all the things that are held priceless—will become more likely to be yours if you succeed in resisting the temptations that will come to you and if you emerge unscathed in the fierce struggle.

you emerge unscathed in the fierce struggle.

As a man interested in education, I am naturally anxious that some such arresting and challenging thoughts should climax the rich and promising life of youth. My concern is to see the youth avoid the pitfalls which we, who are older have experienced, so that each succeeding generation may be better than that which preceded it. Only thus is the continuity of progress assured. I am personally filled with misgivings as I see a growing tendency to weigh questions of profit and personal gain against such ideals as liberty in the consideration of causes affecting human rights. It is with no little alarm that I should see on every side evidences of so many people finding thrill in the thought of millions and the figures of millionaires, while but few get enraptured over the pursuit of perfection and happiness.

Those who are bent on amassing fortunes are numerous, but limited is the number of those who are devoted to the prosecution of higher objectives content in sinking their selves in great causes.

of higher objectives content in sinking their selves in great causes. The trouble is that we are living in an age more bent on getting rich than in becoming good; more desirous to become prosperous than to be free; powerful, rather than peaceful; strong, rather than happy. The very momentum, indeed, seems to be solely in than happy. The very momentum, indeed, seems to be solely in the direction of knowing and doing rather than of being, gathering and getting rather than of giving.

As in years past, we are erecting false gods, though these assume slightly different forms. I am tempted to assert that if Jesus should reappear in His old benign simplicity and in His traditional perfect goodness this world would probably not welcome Him. Perhaps it would laugh at Him. He would be deemed a simpleton. He would be regarded as an object of curiosity, misunderstood, and unappreciated. He would again be made to suffer mental and moral anguish. Yes; perhaps He, as in the days of old, would be crucified. old, would be crucified.

Neverthless I do not allow myself to be plunged into the morass Neverthiess I do not allow myself to be plunged into the morass of pessimism. I pick up an American silver coin. Fingering and examining it I derive no little delight that upon it I should see the imprint of the image of Liberty and the immortal motto, so wonderfully inspiring and thought provoking, "In God we trust." Not yet, after all, has materialism, despite an orgy of speculation and a saturnalia of extravagance, succeeded in effacing ideals and principles so uplifting and so ennobling!

principles so uplifting and so ennobling!

Individuals as such and humanity as a whole are and will be to the extent that they approximate the truth and reality of ancient and tested ideals. They shall be great to the degree that they lift themselves up to the height and broaden themselves to the dimensions of true idealism and real spirituality.

Just as I would enjoin my fellow orientals to value and conserve the best that there is in their oriental heritage and absorb the contribution of the Occident, just so do I now urge upon my friends of the West to keep and value the best that there is in the Occident and absorb the force, the power, and the beauty of the life of the Orient. of the life of the Orient.

As a man coming from that oriental world whence came every great philosophy, every great religion that has spread over the world, I shall in closing leave this simple message: Do not underestimate the material but identify yourselves with the spiritual. Concern yourselves more sedulously with the search of the universal, the elemental, and the eternal. These you are more likely to find in the realm of spirituality rather than in the domain of materialism.

DEPRESSION AND WANT OF CONFIDENCE

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on the subject of the depression and want of confidence.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. Speaker, many times have these words been heard in committee hearings, in debates in Congress, and in the press of the country. A condition confronts the country in which widespread depression, discontent, and want of confidence exist. What causes enter into this condition? Commodity prices have fallen below the cost of production, the buying power of the farmer is gone.

Agriculture has in the past annually created new wealth, amounting to sixty or seventy billions of dollars, a year, as estimated. Mother Earth has been the salvation of the country. To-day her corn, wheat, cotton, cattle, and hogs and other products of the farm are without a market. High walls of protection surround the United States and all countries of the world, so that the surplus products of the farm and factory are without a world market. Trade and commerce, the life of nations, have halted. The lands and products of the farmer no longer give him credit at the banks; the merchant can not sell his goods nor buy from the wholesaler. The manufacturer closes his doors and discharges his employees, and idle labor walks the streets. Banks close their doors and go into the hands of receivers. Business everywhere lags, while unemployment increases. Is it any wonder that a depression and want of confidence are widespread and that the people have lost in a large degree confidence in the financial institutions of our land and in the ability of the Government to find a remedy, to restore confidence, and banish depression? Is it any wonder that the people have lost confidence in the ability of the party in power to restore prosperity, so often promised by those in control of the Government? Is it any wonder that the party in unbridled control for nearly 12 years no longer has the confidence of the masses, who cry out for relief from an intolerable condition?

Our present condition is due in a large measure to the intense speculation in stocks of all kinds, sold to the public throughout the length and breadth of the United States at inflated prices, hoping to get rich quick. Brokers and speculators handled the money of the country, drained it of its money, and when the crash came in October, 1929, the loss to the country amounted to sixty billions or more of dollars-the highest estimate one hundred and fifty billions-and the country lay prostrate. Many believed that the Federal Reserve Board, of which Mr. Mellon, the Secretary of the Treasury, was ex officio head, did not discharge its full duty to the public.

The public was encouraged to buy inflated stocks by utterances of those in high authority, while the general public suffered from enormous losses. It was stated in the August number of 1930 of the Harpers Magazine, quoting the New York Times, that a Pittsburgh dispatch of May 22 to the Times estimated the profits of the Mellon family in aluminum and Gulf oils alone, on the basis of shares owned, as over $300,000,000, so apparently the Mellon family must have cashed in in May, 1929. All did not lose.

Mr. Mellon and other members of the Cabinet and the President by frequent utterances had encouraged the public to buy. This intense speculation in stocks, ending in the crash of October, 1929, with the enormous resultant loss to investors in stocks, was an outstanding element in producing depression and want of confidence, that will take a long time to restore. The undue inflation of the better class of stocks to high levels beyond their real value also carried upward and flooded the market with worthless stocks, the sale of which to the uninformed public was pure robbery, and millions suffered enormous losses, while the few were enriched by sales at great profits. Cities Service stocks sold above 60, while agents everywhere boosted these stocks, which later dropped as low as 2, and left their victims bankrupt. The wild speculation in stocks ending in the crash of October, 1929, will long be remembered in millions of homes as one of the chief causes of this depression that hangs like a curse over our land.

Much of the money accumulated by investments and otherwise by the insiders controlling business is now invested in Canada and in European and South American countries, avoiding taxation in the United States and to secure cheaper labor and foreign markets, now denied the surplus products of the farm and factory in the United States. Many billions have been loaned since the World War by the United States Government, and many other billions loaned by private individuals and corporations in Europe and South America.

Now these private interests have urged that the foreign debts due the United States be canceled, so that payment of private investments abroad be made certain. President Hoover proclaimed a moratorium and held out hopes to European governments that said debts would be canceled and payments due the United States cease, thereby adding to our strained financial conditions, cutting short our revenues, and helping to unbalance our National Budget. Then, again, great banking institutions invested in hundreds of millions of German bonds, cashed enormous commissions, and shoved the purchase of these German bonds on to the public, and quickly the value of the bonds dropped to low levels, adding to depression and want of confidence.

The condition in the country is abnormal, largely as the result of the World War. Large incomes increased enormously, to such an extent that 511 people in the United States in 1929 had a net annual income of $1,000,000, while in 1914 only 60 people in the United States had such a net income. The number of people in 1930 having a net income of $1,000,000 had fallen to less than 150 persons. A reaction set in and the wealthy class suffered when the masses lost their incomes, and when commodity prices fell to low levels, due to excessively high tariffs, erected in all countries, destroying commerce and trade, the life of nations, so that the surplus products of the farm and factory lost their foreign markets; and with agriculture stricken down and impoverished, prosperity left the farms and mortgage foreclosures increased enormously, and bank failures multiplied, and unexampled unemployment resulted, for when agriculture failed to furnish its annual supply of new wealth, business conditions suffered, and labor walked the streets and crowded the highways, and breadlines formed as never before, and demands for relief cried aloud, and demand for new taxes came from the party in power. Depression and want of confidence fill the country and the public mind.

In 1928 and 1929 stock speculations multiplied, encouraged by those in high authority, ending in the crash that came in October, 1929, resulting in a loss variously estimated from sixty billions to as high as one hundred and fifty billions. The country had been literally drained of money, was bled white when people of all classes were induced to part with all their money, owned or borrowed, to get rich quick. The well informed took their profits, hoarded their money, or invested their earnings in untaxed Government securities. The distressed condition of the country to-day is largely due to stock speculations ending in that great crash and to high tariff walls, builded around all countries, largely in retaliation against the Hawley-Smoot high tariff law, thereby destroying commerce and trade, so that the surplus products of farm and factory could not be sold abroad, thereby forcing to a low level commodity prices below the costs of production.

Too much of the money of the country has been taken from production and used in the gambling operations of the stock exchange, with the full knowledge and consent of the great banking institutions of the country and without the restraining influence of the administration in charge of the Government or of the Treasury Department, whose Secretary was ex officio chairman of the Federal Reserve Board when these gambling operations in Wall Street ended in October, 1929, in the greatest stock crash in the world's history, a tragedy without a parallel in all time. Why should not these gambling operations that have monopolized the moneys of the country, the very lifeblood of the Nation, be taxed? The people in all parts of our country were lured by agents everywhere to invest their earnings and all they could borrow in stocks and bonds, worthless many of them, to obtain large and quick profits, with scarcely a word of warning from those in high authority and in control of the money of the country.

Much criticism—and apparently just—has arisen from the fact that over $3,000,000,000 of taxes have been refunded to the big rich and to corporate wealth. What a contribution this would have been to reduction of our World War debt—and mark you, after sworn returns were made through the aid of expert accountants but refunded through the aid of highly paid experts and attorneys, who fattened and grew rich through this depletion of the Treasury.

When Congress met shortly after the stock crash the administration, of which Mr. Hoover was the President and Mr. Mellon the Secretary of the Treasury, a dominating influence of said administration, urged Congress to turn back to the large income-tax payers about $200,000,000 of income taxes due and about to be paid into the United States Treasury as a salve for their supposed losses by reason of the stock crash.

That Congress yielded to this demand was a monstrous wrong. The depression that is abroad in the land to-day is in my judgment due in a large degree to the stock speculations that ended in the stock crash, to the high wall of protection built around the United States and the rearing of alike tariff walls by foreign nations in retaliation, thereby destroying in a large measure the commerce between the United States and other nations, by which the surplus products of the farm and factory could not be shipped abroad. Added to this the enormous loans of money and investments of capital of the United States in foreign lands, followed by the purchase of three billions of German bonds, negotiated by big banks with large commissions, and passed on to the American public, and now depreciated to one-third of their face value.

Then comes the moratorium, invited by President Hoover, with the result that foreign countries have stopped payment of their annual dues of hundreds of millions due the United States, for billions loaned to rehabilitate Europe after the World War. Is it any wonder that the masses of the people are without money, that the prices of agricultural products have broken down, that banks everywhere refuse to lend the moneys locked in their vaults, and have closed their doors by the thousands, that the people are afraid to deposit their moneys in banks, that have grown timid for fear of runs that may start at any time. Is it any wonder that unemployment is abroad in the land, while millions walk the streets hunting for work that hunger may be satisfied for themselves and families.

To stay depression extraordinary demands are made on Congress for legislation to stay impending disaster, and the Government responds through Congress by passing quickly an act creating the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, through which $2,000,000,000 are being loaned to railroads, banks, and other large concerns, to safeguard big business, and other legislation and other large appropriations are being pressed through Congress to meet the dire necessities of the country. Now there is pending here this great revenue bill, deemed necessary to raise by taxation moneys to pay the expenses of the Government, whose annual expenses exceed four or five billion dollars, one billion of which is for interest due on the debt of the United States, resultant from the World War. The Budget is out of balance and the money must be raised by taxation or by sale of bonds or both. Business everywhere is crying aloud against additional taxation. The masses are without means to pay. In daily debate through the Representatives in Congress we hear of the distress and depression that is abroad in the land, of the inability to pay taxes, or to borrow money, of the foreclosure of mortgages, the failure of banks, and widespread depression. The depression here in Washington is not so great, for here is the great Government pay roll of the United States. Here there is an activity more apparent than elsewhere, buildings all along Pennsylvania Avenue are being torn down, mighty structures raised, and costly buildings being erected, and labor employed, costing millions of dollars to meet the supposed needs of Government and to beautify Washington. But we must look beyond the Capital City of the Nation to know and feel and realize the actual condition of the country.

We need a change. We need a reduction of the expenditures of Government, a reduction of taxes wherever possible, a revival of business, a market for the products of the farm and factory with reasonable prices, a revival of agriculture, so that Mother Earth may render her annual contribution of wealth to meet the world's necessities. The prosperity of the farm must return or business will not revive.

The present condition is a legacy of Republican control through three national administrations—Harding, Coolidge, and Hoover. Capitalism has ruled and controlled the affairs of the Nation. The lending of money largely abroad, speculation in stocks and bonds, foreign investments, the enactment of unjust laws have aided in the unjust distribution of wealth and the centralization of wealth and power in the hands of the few.

A voice in another body proclaims we need a Mussolini; a cry from a potent voice in Wall Street says abolish Congress and suggests a dictator. Are the people ready to surrender representative government and look and listen only to the Chief Executive, whose duty is to execute the laws enacted by Congress, in whose Halls the representatives of the people speak the mind of their constituents, who elect them to temporary office? Jefferson believed in a representative form of government and the ability of the people to govern themselves. It is said Hamilton did not believe the people were capable of self-government and believed in a strongly centralized Government. Congress may make its mistakes but will right itself when it hears the voice of its well-informed constituents. The press may deride and seek to discredit Congress for selfish reasons. In the recent debate on the economy bill Mr. Fish, of New York, said:

My reason for rising to-day is to pay my respects to certain large New York newspapers controlled by the big interests that have viciously and maliciously sought to undermine our representative system of government, and particularly the House of Representatives, by publishing editorials that are false, malicious, and absolutely contrary to the fact. Nothing is more needed at this time than confidence and faith in our country and in our republican form of government and in the Congress of the United States.

Is it the voice of Hamilton crying aloud for a reassertion of his doctrine that representative government is a failure? The President of the United States may attack Congress because it refuses to accept his views, and he may help to destroy its program of economy and then appeal through the controlled press and chambers of commerce and associated industries to the people to attack Congress for its failure to speedily accomplish economy and to reduce expenditures of the Government, multiplied under Republican administration—a hard task, with Executive opposition to any Democratic program for economy, reduction of salaries, and appropriations.

INTEREST ON GOVERNMENT LOANS

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for three minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nebraska?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, my attention has been called on several occasions recently, and particularly this morning, to a peculiar situation in our country. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation loans money to big banks at as low as 5½ per cent interest. Congress voted a large sum of money to the Federal land banks to aid the unfortunate mortgage victims of that bank, helping them to pay taxes where necessary, and interest where due, and it is now kindly charging those poor unfortunates 8 per cent for carrying them along in the same helpful way the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is carrying the railroads that have been in trouble.

Mr. BLANTON. They are carrying mighty few, if any, farmers. Farms are being foreclosed daily, and we must provide for their redemption.

Mr. HOWARD. Now, Mr. Speaker, I do not know how this hideous situation can be remedied, so I am appealing now to the splendid minds on our Judiciary Committee and asking that committee if it can not possibly devise some plan whereby this House may take action during the few days intervening between now and adjournment so that this evil situation may be corrected. It is shameful that always and forever in affairs of government our people on the American farms must be given just a little bit the worst of it in all their contacts of government in comparison with those mighty masters of money for which and for whom our Government is now so kindly caring.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOWARD. I yield.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. I notice the gentleman's reference is to the Judiciary Committee. Is it due to the fact the gentleman thinks this conduct is a crime, because that committee only has jurisdiction of crime?

Mr. HOWARD. Indeed, I do. The gentleman is eminently correct, as he nearly always is, except on the soldier

CORRECTION

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for one-half minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, on Wednesday I inadvertently referred to the legislative counsel of the House as having prepared the amendment to a bill in reference to the District of Columbia. I meant to refer to the corporation counsel of the District of Columbia, and I wish to correct my statement.

Mr. STAFFORD. Then that explains the form in which those amendments were prepared.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, I present a conference report on the bill (H. R. 7912) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

WHAT THE WORLD COURT WOULD SAVE IN ARBITRATION CASES

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks on the second deficiency bill passed yesterday.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, I note on page 27 of this bill, H. R. 12443, making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1932, a provision continuing the unexpended balance of the appropriation of $56,000 to pay the expenses of the arbitration between the United States and Sweden. This is one of those appropriation boards set up by our Government to ascertain the damages and loss to Sweden for keeping her ships in American ports during the World War.

The Foreign Affairs Committee of the House has reported out a resolution known as H. J. Res. 378, authorizing the appropriation of $53,895.85 to pay our proportion of the expenses of the International Court of Justice, commonly known as the World Court, for the calendar year 1932. The United States has been represented on this court since its establishment, the Hon. John Bassett Moore being our first representative, the Hon. Charles Evans Hughes, now Chief Justice of the United States, our second representative, and the Hon. Frank B. Kellogs, formerly Secretary of State, our third and present representative upon this court.

The United States, according to the charter of this court, has a right to submit its cases for decision to the court.

We have not done so, because we have awaited the approval by the Senate by a two-thirds vote of the protocols signed by this Government, which would make us a member of the court by treaty. This is all well and good when the protocols are approved, provided the reservations do not destroy the usefulness of the court to our Nation. question, however, is, When will the Senate advise and consent to these protocols? That is something no one can visualize. Inasmuch as our Nation has the right to submit its questions to this World Court, which is said to be the greatest court that has ever been established, having upon its bench the ablest jurists of the world, it would apparently be to our interest to submit our questions for their decision and thus avoid the very expensive and untried arbitration boards we set up. It has every facility for consideration of the cases brought before it. The judges are not only men of great distinction and learning of the law, but men who have had experience in international affairs, and therefore better qualified upon a court of this nature.

If House Joint Resolution No. 378, making an appropriation to the court, had been in effect, and we were thus contributing our proportion of the court's expenses, being around the same amount which England pays, and heretofore stated, we could have submitted this Sweden case, which is costing us $56,000, along with other cases to this World Court. As has been well stated by the Secretary of State in a letter of May 25, 1932, to the Foreign Affairs Committee to wit—

Under the court's charter, we have the right, although not a member of the court, to submit, with the consent of the Senate, such cases to its jurisdiction. That court exists to-day not merely as a group of experienced jurists, but as a tried and veteran institution which has enveloped itself beyond any other international body with the temperateness, the learning, and the impersonal attitudes which are the essence of sound international progress. If the court, which has long maintained an American upon its bench, could now be granted a contribution toward its expenses in a measure appropriate to the position of this country in international affairs, we might as time goes on employ it as a useful agency within the limits of sound national policy. Quite independent of the satisfaction accorded by the submission of some types of controversy to a tribunal of this sort, the submission of cases to it would afford substantial savings in the increasing volume of expense of minor arbitrations. An appropriation of the type contemplated by your resolution would at least afford the opportunity for the appropriate authorities to consider a policy in this direction which would not involve the deeper issues which have been debated in this country for the past decade.

Very sincerely yours,

HENRY L. STIMSON.

It will be seen from what the Secretary of State says that it is quite possible for us to make a great saving if we but pass my resolution and contribute our proportion of the expenses of the World Court, and not only that, but it will be doing the fair and just thing. We might feel that, inasmuch as we do not submit any cases to the court, we are not receiving any benefits; but such is not the case. The court is in session and there are 48 countries parties to it. Cases are being submitted to the court, and some 44 cases and opinions have been delivered. The decisions in these cases kept the world at peace, and so long as the world is at peace, and this court is an instrument to that end, it is beneficial to the United States as well as to the rest of the world.

We have expended a very large sum of money in establishing these arbitration boards, and the following list will show that some $181,000 have already been expended; whereas had we contributed our part to the World Court, it would only have cost us around $53,000 per year. It is hardly fair to have a judge on the court and let the other nations pay his expenses and salary. It will be interesting to read the following list of these arbitration boards which have been set up, to wit:

* Sweden: Damages for Swedish merchant vessels held in American ports during World War; appropriation, $56,000. We appropriated $56,000 to establish the court of arbitration to settle that question which could just as well have been submitted to the World Court and had the benefit of those eminent jurists, but we set up a separate arbitration at $56,000.

Panama: Damages to American oitizens killed and wounded chiefly in riots in segregated districts during past years; appropriation, $70,000. We set up an absolutely distinct court for settlement of that case, which could have been settled in the World Court.

Cuba: Damages to Charles J. Harrah when Cuban Government seized his narrow-gauge railway operating along Marianao Beach; cost, $30,000. This committee had charge of that matter, if you remember.

Egypt: Damages to George Salem when Egyptian Government held title to certain real estate, thus preventing him from selling it; approximate cost, $25,000. That matter was also before this committee.

Guatemala: Damages to P. W. Shufeldt when Guatemalan Government canceled a contract for the extraction of chicle from Guatemalan lands; cost held confidential.

Spain: Arbitration of damages inflicted in Spanish territory of Spain: Arbitration of damages inflicted in Spanish territory of Florida during invasion of Andrew Jackson in 1814; cost not yet determined.

Mexico: Settlement of American and Mexican claims against the Governments of both countries for damages suffered by the citizens of each; average cost per year, $300,000. That, of course, is not the arbitration cost. The minimum cost of these arbitration cases, exclusive of the Mexican, is $181,000. That is what has been done in slightly more than a year. We have set up separate arbitration courts and we have spent $181,000 when we could have been in the World Court for $53,000, and got the benefit of that experienced tribunal which, as I have said, is said to be the finest that the world has ever set up.

RELIEF OF THE DEPRESSION

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Speaker, to take us out of this depression it is necessary—

First. To stabilize prices of farm products so as to guarantee the former the cost of production and a reasonable profit.

Second. To create a large program of public work so as to furnish jobs for the unemployed.

Third. Cheapen the present value of the American dollar by the expansion of the currency, or the coinage of more silver. This can be accomplished by the immediate cash payment of the soldiers' bonus.

Until you restore the buying power of the farmer any effort at recovery is futile. I am working for and supporting the bill indorsed by the three great farm organizations of America.

In this land of plenty no person should go hungry or unclad. If my advice had been heeded eight years ago, when I urged relief for the farmers, much of the present distress would have been avoided.

This emergency is as disastrous as a war, and it behooves the masses of the people to have in Congress a trustworthy and tried representative.

SOLDIERS' BONUS BILL

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Mr. Speaker-

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Mr. Speaker, I rise to obtain consent of the House for the immediate consideration of the soldiers' bonus bill.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, I object.

MIXED CLAIMS COMMISSION

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the table and consider Senate joint resolution (S. J. Res. 97) extending for one year the time within which American claimants may make application for payment, under the settlement of war claims act of 1928, of awards of the Mixed Claims Commission and of the Tripartite Claims Commission.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That subsection (g) of section 2 and subsection (f) of section 5 of the settlement of war claims act of 1928, as amended by Public Resolution No. 48, Seventy-first Congress, approved March 10, 1930, are further amended, respectively, by striking out the words "four years" wherever such words appear therein and inserting in lieu thereof the words "five years."

The Senate joint resolution was ordered to be read a third | time, was read the third time, and passed.

A similar House joint resolution (H. J. Res. 396) was laid on the table.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to print the report in the RECORD, as it explains the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The report referred to follows:

[House Report No. 1409, Seventy-second Congress, first session] EXTENDING TIME FOR APPLICATION UNDER THE SETTLEMENT OF WAR CLAIMS ACT OF 1928

Mr. Crisp, from the Committee on Ways and Means, submitted the following report (to accompany H. J. Res. 396).

The Committee on Ways and Means, to whom was referred the resolution (H. J. Res. 396) extending for one year the time within which American claimants may make application for payment, under settlement of war claims act of 1928, of awards of the Mixed Claims Commission and of the Tripartite Claims Commission, have ing had the same under consideration, report it back to the House and recommend that the resolution do pass.

The necessity for this legislation is fully set forth in the following letter from Hon. A. W. Mellon, Secretary of the Treasury, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives:

to the Speaker of the House of Representatives:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., February 2, 1932.

The Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Sir: I have the honor to transmit herewith for consideration by the Congress, a draft of a proposed joint resolution to amend the settlement of war claims act of 1928 for the purpose of extending for one additional year from March 10, 1932, the time within which American nationals, who have obtained awards from the Mixed Claims Commission, United States and Germany, or from the Tripartite Claims Commission, United States, Austria, and Hungary, may make application to the Treasury for payment of such awards.

The settlement of war claims act of 1928 originally required that an application for payment of such awards be made within two years from the date of the enactment of that act (March 10, 1928). Due principally to the so-called late claims agreement with Germany whereby American claimants were given an additional time within which to file claims against Germany with the Mixed Claims Commission, the act was amended by Public Resolution No. 48, Seventy-first Congress, approved March 10, 1930, providing that application for payment be made within four years from the date of the enactment of the settlement of war claims act. Thus, the time limit for making application for payment of awards of the Mixed Claims Commission and the Tripartite Claims Commission will expire on March 10, 1932.

The proposed legislation is believed necessary for the following reasons:

(1) The Treasury holds 67 awards entered in favor of American reasons:

(1) The Treasury holds 67 awards entered in favor of American nationals by the Mixed Claims Commission aggregating, with accrued interest to September 30, 1931, about $300,000 for which no applications for payment have been received. Thus far the department has not been able to locate some of these claimants. In addition, the Mixed Claims Commission has not yet completed its work, and, in view of the untimely death of Hon. Roland W. Boyden, the umpire, it is not possible to estimate the time required to finish it, but it is almost certain to extend beyond March 10, 1932. The questions pending before the commission involve claims aggregating approximately $40,000,000. If these claims are allowed it is essential that the American claimants concerned be given sufficient time within which to make application for paygiven sufficient time within which to make application for payment.

(2) While practically all of the awards entered in favor of American nationals against Austria by the Tripartite Claims Commission have been paid, the awards entered by such commission against Hungary have not yet been certified to the Treasury for payment because of the provisions of the settlement of war claims act of 1923, requiring the commission at the same time to certify that the funds deposited by Hungary in the Hungarian special deposit account are sufficient to pay such awards. The Treasury has received from the Government of Hungary the sum of $3,250 in partial satisfaction of these awards, but that Government can not make further payment until a waiver has been obtained from the Government of France of a most-favored-nation clause contained in the debt agreement between that Government and Hungary. The matter is being actively kept before the Government of France, but in view of the uncertainty when favorable action by that Government may be forthcoming, it is believed essential that the settlement of war claims act be amended as indicated in the inclosed draft; that is, by extending the time for making application for payment for one additional year.

Respectfully,

Respectfully,

A. W. MELLON. Secretary of the Treasury.

FEDERAL HOME LOAN BANKS

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 253 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina calls up a resolution which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 253

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H. R. 12280, a bill to create Federal home loan banks, to provide for the supervision thereof, and for other purposes. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed two hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Banking and Currency, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment the committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and the amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be to final passage without intervening motion except one motion

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. PURNELL] to be in turn used by him as he sees fit. I yield myself 10 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, I presume this is the last of the major proposals of the President which the Congress will be called upon to consider. In view of the criticisms that have been leveled at the Congress from various sources, it may not be out of place to remind the country, at least the fair-minded American people, that this Congress has responded favorably to every major proposal that the President has recommended for the economic relief of the Nation.

We came back here in December. The first proposal was the moratorium. There were gentlemen who regarded the moratorium with anything but favorable consideration, but the President said it would better conditions, and we passed his moratorium. The Federal land bank bill was passed. The Glass-Steagall bill was translated into law, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation was created, and then this Congress addressed itself to the major proposal of all the major proposals, to wit, the balancing of the Budget. We passed a measure which had many objectionable features, but we did what the President asked us to do, we provided for raising revenues sufficient to balance the Budget. Then comes this measure, which is highly controversial. Within two weeks, if I remember correctly, after the bill came from the Committee on Banking and Currency we have it here in the House of Representatives, under a special rule, ready for consideration. That this House will pass the bill is, I think, a safe prediction.

In view of the criticism that this Congress has been playing politics at the expense of human misery, in view of the criticisms leveled at us from other sources, I want to ask in all fairness what it is the President of the United States has asked us to do, which he says will better conditions throughout the United States, that this Congress has not promptly responded to favorably? Not once has this House refused to cooperate with the President in carrying into effect his program for economic recovery of the Nation.

It is easy to criticize Congress every time somebody wants to find fault. It has gotten to be a very common, and I think a very cheap, practice that every time anybody has a grievance he proceeds to damn Congress, yet in all fairness I say that in thirty-odd years' experience I have never seen men work harder day and night, some of them at the expense of their health; I have never seen men on both sides of the aisle exhibit more sincere determination to do what is necessary to elevate the Nation, if possible, out of the Slough of Despond into which it has fallen. For my part, I resent these criticisms of the Congress of the United States, when I know that men have worked night and day to do what could be done to relieve this situation. It is a little bit irritating to read these cheap criticisms, some of them coming from high sources, from which you would have a right to expect better.

Mr. Speaker, there is one matter that may not be entirely out of place in the discussion of this rule. I can not take my seat without alluding to it.

There is in the so-called Garner bill an item carrying $100,000,000 to be put in the hands of the President of the United States to relieve hunger and suffering betwixt now and the convening of the next session of Congress. I do not know how you all feel about it; I do not know how the President of the United States feels about it; but I say to you on both sides of this Chamber, as man to man, that I am afraid to go away from here without leaving some such reservoir as that which can be instantly touched in case it becomes necessary. I would like to see that item, if we do not do anything else, enacted into law, by separate bill, if necessary.

We started out in January with 4,000,000 men out of employment; then we heard it was 6,000,000; then we heard it was 8,000,000; and now we are told there are 10,000,000 Americans out of jobs. I say it is to the glory of the American people that up to this time there have been no riots as have occurred elsewhere. We want to make our people feel, if we can, that in this unprecedented emergency hunger and suffering will not be permitted in so far as they can be relieved. [Applause.] I say again that I am afraid to go home without action. I can not sleep at night when I think of these men walking the streets-hungry men and women. I do not think we dare leave without doing something to care for destitution and hunger. I plead with this Congress and I plead with Mr. Herbert Hoover to cooperate with us to raise this great fund, if necessary, and even a greater one, so that in the great cities, in the congested centers, and wherever it may appear that there are suffering and distress, sufficient food can be promptly provided. I hope that every Member who does me the honor of listening to what I am, in my humble way, saying will consider this from now until the day we adjourn.

I do not want to talk about politics; but certainly it can not be charged that the Democratic side of this Chamber is attempting to make political capital when we offer to put this great sum in the hands of the President to use in any way he sees fit, through the Red Cross, through the Salvation Army, or through the great charitable organizations of the country. It seems to me that our great, noble-hearted President would feel constrained to say, "Yes; I will agree to take charge of this fund." It is a situation the like of which no man or woman has ever seen and which I pray Almighty God with all my heart and soul we may never see again. [Applause.] Let us not adjourn without passing some legislation which will be a sufficient guaranty that there shall be no army of starvation in America.

OUR COUNTRY TO-DAY

Mr. NELSON of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WOODRUM). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin? There was no objection.

Mr. NELSON of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, the subject I wish to discuss at this time is Our Country To-day. On May 3 I printed in the Record an address made by me in presenting, on behalf of the Bicentennial Commission, a bust of George Washington to Governor La Follette, of Wisconsin. I pointed out the fundamental principles which Washington made the guiding forces of his own life and sought to express in the life of the Nation of which he was the first President. Following these ideals we were led as a people, to the very heights of greatness.

It is now my intention to point out, by way of contrast, conditions to-day, 200 years after his birth—our present standards, our deviation from those fundamental principles, and the adjustment that must be made for the perpetuity of our institutions and the welfare of our country.

THE MEMBERSHIP OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

In the consideration of my subject, my point of view is the membership of the House of Representatives. Who will represent the people in this branch, the most important under our scheme of Government, in the next Congress, is, of course, of great personal concern to every one of us. I desire at once to admit that I have a personal interest, and I shall point out the rule to follow in dealing with one's personal interest and the welfare of the people at large.

There are three possible methods to follow: (1) To sacrifice public good to one's personal interest; (2) to compromise by devoting part of the time to one's personal interest and the rest of the time to public good, and (3) to subordinate one's personal interest wholly to public good.

All of us have some self-interest; but the wise way, the right way, and the constructive way is to seek one's personal interest within the general interest, our private good within the public good. To sacrifice public good to our private interests is parasitism; but to sacrifice private interests to public good is patriotism. To compromise is to be part of the time a patriot and the rest of the time a parasite.

Let me comment briefly on this point, for in the adjustment of our private interest to the public interest lies the simple solution of every national problem. The root of all evil conditions that now perplex and vex us like this depression, high taxes, agricultural distress, pensions, and war, is nothing more nor less than sheer selfishness. This takes many forms. I shall mention but three-appetite, ambition, and greed-for these are the taproots of the world's woe to-day. There is no hope to be found in any form of selfishness, whether it be economic or political. There is only one solution and it has to be worked out at first individually; we must keep down our appetites, our personal greed, and our selfish ambitions. Then we must hold others down who let these selfish motives control their conduct in public or in private life. It is a great mistake for anyone to be governed by selfishness. I have never seen anyone reap good out of a selfish act; instead, only disappointment and unhappiness. On the other hand, I have found over and over again that the highest form of unselfishness becomes, in the end, the best service to self.

There is nothing nobler, better, nor more profitable in the world, paradoxical though it may seem, than service to others through sacrifice, for it is the sign and seal of love. The true patriot, whether he be giving his life on the field of battle or living his life for public service, is he who spends it for his country and the good of all. In the very giving of his life he finds it. The best exponent and standard of human sacrifice in private life is a mother's love. The Good Book says that God Himself is love, and no more profound truth has ever been uttered in this world than by the Master almost 2,000 years ago: "He that findeth his life shall lose it: and he that loseth his life for my sake shall find it."

Science, history, and the sacred literature of the world proclaim the truth that the rewards of sacrifice and the penalty of selfishness are inherent in every act.

There are, of course, short-sighted and selfish groups who would have their representatives subordinate everything to their individual demands; but the rank and file act upon the higher motives of justice and the common good. The great majority of the American people will realize that we can not solve the problems that now baffle the best minds of the Nation by considering only the preferences of individuals or even of powerful organized minorities. It is the character of our citizenship and the statesmanship of our public men that will determine our present welfare and the permanent life of our Nation.

THE IMPORTANCE OF THE ELECTION OF A MEMBER OF CONGRESS

There is the mistaken idea that the election of a Member of Congress is of no great importance. To correct this misapprehension I wish to call attention to a Congressman's place in our Government. From long observation I can say that the election of a Member of Congress is of the utmost importance to the people. This is especially true in time of depression, in case of war, or in any other national emergency when the highest form of statesmanship is essential if the country is to find its way out again to peace and prosperity.

The Representative is the people's closest contact with the affairs of state. He is the means or instrument through which his constituency must make their adjustments by law with the conditions that surround them. He is not only the people's direct means of protection, but their lever of power.

hold their positions for life. They are far removed from the people, and the latter have little or no control over them. The same may be said of the officials of the administrative branch of the Government, who hold office for life, except the President, his Cabinet, and a few of his higher appointees. But the President himself is not responsible to any particular constituency, not even to the people of one State alone, but to all the people, and holds office for four years. A Member of Congress is controlled directly by his constituency. He must come before them every two years to prove his fitness for his high office, his faithfulness to their interests, and his efficiency in the discharge of his important duties. There are many reasons for this, but I will mention only two that lay in the minds of the framers of our Constitution. In the first place, they deemed it of utmost importance that the people's direct representative should have control over the public purse strings. So, under our form of government no tax can be levied upon the people, and no appropriation bill passed which does not originate in the House of Representatives.

Moreover, in a Member of Congress is lodged, for the people's safety, the power of impeachment. Through him his constituents can impeach any judge in our Federal courts or the head of any administrative department, including the President himself, bring him to trial, and have him removed from office if found guilty of misconduct.

Therefore, because the House of Representatives is the governmental agency closest to the people, the Members guard the interests not only of their respective constituencies but of the country in general as well, and hold the other departments in check for the people's good. It is highly important, therefore, that the electors of the country should take greater interest in the election of their Representatives in Congress. They should study the records of those whom they have put in office, their qualifications, and proved efficiency.

It has been popular with some newspapers to criticize and condemn Congress, but Congress is just what the people make it. I must admit that Congress has, more or less, broken away from its moorings since the World War. Is this not due to the fact that the people themselves have grown careless and let down the standards of the qualifications of their Representatives? Besides this, it is apparent that there has been a breaking down of moral standards among the people, causing them to rush to Congress for laws to hold in check evils of their own creation, until Congress is simply overwhelmed with demands for laws of every kind. Many of these laws restrain the liberties of the people.

Therefore, the electorate of the country should be not only interested in the choice of their next Congressman, but they should see to it that the men they choose have the qualifications necessary to safeguard the highest interests of the people.

What we need in Congress to-day is loyalty, wisdom, and courage, and above all, unselfishness; without these our democratic form of government is doomed. The inevitable result of the people's indifference to this need will be either a dictatorship of plutocracy under a Mussolini, or a dictatorship of the proletariat under a Stalin, as we now see in Italy and Russia respectively.

and Russia, respectively.

The people of every district should realize, therefore, that the Congressman is their closest contact with the Government of their country; that a Representative in Congress is, as I said before, their direct means of protection, their lever of power. Through him, more than through any other agency, the people must make their adjustments by law for their own interest and for the good of the whole country.

ADVANTAGES AND DISADVANTAGES

While it is a wise provision that a Member of Congress be in close contact with the people, the short term of two years works a great hardship upon the Member. No one knows how great this hardship is if one has not had the experience. The elements of this hardship are the labor and anxiety, the time and energy required for the campaign, and the expense of it, which is frequently very large.

Look at the other branches of the public service. Judges | No one likes to be defeated. Moreover, a Congressman must bld their positions for life. They are far removed from the cople, and the latter have little or no control over them. | and, frequently, he has to give up his business or profession.

Now, it seems to me that we have turned things around. The office ought to seek the man, not the man the office. The people should make themselves familiar with the qualifications of their Representatives in Congress. The utter indifference of the people in many districts over the actions of their representatives is astonishing. There are some who vote contrary to the highest interests of their constituents, and yet they are returned to Congress year after year because the people do not look into their records at all.

Many candidates for office have removed the financial hardships entirely by accepting contributions from campaign committees and from wealthy men. This is not a safe course to follow, for it is sure to impair at times the independence of a Member of Congress and his freedom to vote in the interest of the public good.

The people themselves, however, could lessen these hardships and minimize this abuse by taking greater interest in the selection of their Congressmen.

May I call attention to the fact, also, that in comparison with other branches of the Government there is a distinct disadvantage in being a Representative in Congress? He is not entitled to retirement with salary no matter how long he has served.

In the administrative branch, clerks are permitted to retire after a certain term of service. I am thinking especially of the Army and Navy. There, officers that are barely 50, having served 30 years in either branch of the armed forces of the United States, may retire with comfortable salaries for life.

In the judicial branch the judges of our Federal courts have also this high privilege.

Some one may ask: Why has the Government adopted this policy? Because it is believed to be a wise policy to encourage men to give their lives to public service. It is essential that public officials, especially in places of great responsibility, should have large experience and skill in the discharge of their very important duties. Certainly this applies to Members of Congress who are the most influential factors in the guidance of the ship of state. They have the Nation's business in their keeping, involving the life, liberty, property rights, and happiness of 125,000,000 people. This calls for the highest possible equipment in statesmanship.

But I do not complain of these disadvantages and hardships. It is, in fact, a wise provision that Members of Congress should come back frequently to the people to give an account of their stewardship.

There is, however, a bright side to the service of a Member of the House. There are not only hardships and disadvantages but there are great compensations. During my long service I have seen how the people in congressional districts, East and West, South and North, often keep their Representatives in Congress for life. For instance, Congressman Cooper, of my State, who was a Member of the House for 36 years; Congressman Haugen, of Iowa, now the dean, is serving his thirty-sixth year; Speaker Garner has been returned to Congress for the fifteenth time.

The elder statesmen are the real counselors of Presidents and their Cabinets. They shape the Nation's course in peace and in war, and they are the men of standing and influence in the Government. They are either the ranking members or the chairmen of committees, and the presiding officers of both branches of Congress.

MORAL STANDARDS

Let us now consider how the election of the membership of the next Congress will work into the solution of the problems confronting our country to-day. I have in mind the depression and the way out; taxation and equitable assessment; the cost of government and economy; agricultural distress and farm relief; liquor agitation and the remedy; party politics and the elimination of party prejudices; reform of the rules of the House and greater legislative freedom; the pension system and how it can be saved from collapse by its tremendous weight; and, finally, the next war, how to be prevented or postponed. Surely the solution of these problems, and of many more before Congress to-day, is vital to our best interests and to the good of our country. It is obvious to any thoughtful person that we can not merely let things alone or simply drift out of our difficulties.

To enable us to see our way ahead, we must, first of all, set aside our narrow, local, and personal views and think of ourselves as representing all the people of our country; in short, merge ourselves wholly into the common good.

My point of view is that of one of the older lawmakers of the House, having served under six Presidents of the United States. In fact, there are only one Senator and four Representatives who have been in Congress longer. As I have been a "will cell" in Uncle Sam's soul for nearly a quarter of a century, I have had the opportunity to become familiar with his every thought, his every purpose, his every heartbeat, and have come to know and love him well. I would gladly help him if I could, but there is no panacea or cure-all, and I have no pet scheme of my own to offer for his present troubles.

At the present session of Congress we have been merely treating the symptoms; we have been trying to keep the patient alive. The permanent remedy is not, however, economic. If Congress should vote billions of dollars to the people, that would not cure Uncle Sam's ailments. It might relieve the distress for a time, but these billions would have to be paid, and then the trouble might be worse. Nor do I see the remedy in changing political stewardship. If that alone were done, it would not help matters at all. The solution of the problem is moral rather than economic or political. An economic change would help only if brought about by a change in principles. A political change could help only if with the new set of public servants came higher principles. In other words, a reform in our economic system or the passing of governmental control from one party to another without moral readjustments would be a deep disappointment, an incalculable waste of time and effort.

We must revise our principles and practices as a people if we would solve our present problems with any degree of permanency. To state it more clearly, we must raise our moral standards. I do not say maintain the existing standards, because that would not be of much assistance, for they seem to have gone down almost to the bottom. My earnest plea is that we raise our moral standards.

What is it that determines the level of a nation's life? The standards of morality of the people as reflected in their laws determine the levels of life, liberty, prosperity, and happiness of nations. This is seen over and over again in the history of the world, both secular and sacred. When moral standards fall, with them fall the levels of life. When they are maintained the levels of life are maintained. And when the standards of morality are raised the levels of life are raised.

In pointing out the close relationship between the moral standards and the levels of life, liberty, prosperity, and happiness, I realize fully that I am not propounding anything new or original. I am merely restating that which we all know, for we have been told it over and over again by our parents, by our teachers, and by our preachers; that every violation of the moral law carries with it its own penalty. This is the lesson, the supreme lesson, of all history, secular and sacred. There are no better teachers of the inevitable consequences to nations of infractions of the moral law than the Hebrew prophets, of whom Milton, the great English poet, said:

In them is plainest taught and easiest learned, What makes a nation happy and keeps it so, What ruins kingdoms and lays cities flat.

From the first to the last, the Holy Scriptures teach that a nation's strength does not consist in its wealth, not in its armies, nor in its diplomacy. The true palladium is its moral character.

Now, let us see what science has to say on the subject. A writer of biblical commentary says:

Life, we are told by scientists, consists in an adaptation of organism to surrounding; when the adaptation is complete and the surroundings merge with the organism, there is health; when it is impaired, there is sickness; when it is broken, there is death. Human life has both a material and a spiritual environment.

Is there a more outstanding authority in the scientific world than Herbert Spencer? His writings have influenced scientific thought more than any other person's. He called himself an agnostic. He observed the existence of law in nature, and that all things work out according to that law. As a scientific philosopher he defined life as "the continuous adjustment of internal relations to external relations." Or, as stated by the biblical commentator just quoted, "life consists in an adaptation of organism to surrounding."

Let me illustrate the truth of this definition of life. Let us take a plant, which is an organism with life. It must be adapted to its surrounding; in other words, it must be adjusted to the earth, the water, the air, and the sunshine. If the adjustment is poor, life in the plant begins to fade; and if the adjustment is cut off completely, life ends. This illustration applies to the human being; and as a nation is made up of human beings, it must apply also to nations.

Of the relation of life to morality, Spencer said:

Only by entire fulfillment of the moral law can life become complete; and now we shall find that all life, whatever may be defined, is a quality of which aptitude to fulfill this law is the highest manifestation.

Explaining this aptitude, he says:

To see clear how right and wrong generates consequences, internal or external, that go on branching out, as the years progress, requires a real power of analysis.

And he proceeds:

Indeed, the very idea that reforms may and ought to be effected peacefully, implies a large endowment of moral sense. Without this, such an idea can not even be conceived, much less carried out; with them it may be both.

I will quote Spencer once more, to give his own illustration of this theory of adaptation:

All evil-

Says he-

results from the nonadaptation of constitution to conditions. Does a shrub dwindle in poor soil or become sickly when deprived of light or die outright to cold climate? It is because the harmony between its organization and its circumstances has been destroyed.

Let us not forget that both Scripture and science reveal that we live in two worlds—the spiritual and the material. We can separate them in thought, but in fact they are so interwoven that they are one and inseparable. It is the moral or inner world, however, that is most important and controlling. In fact, the outer or material world is but the reflection of the inner or moral world. If we do not understand this connection and merely look at the material conditions, we must utterly fail to understand life and its contents. Or if we consider these material conditions without regard to moral principles, we can not understand our problems at all nor their right solution.

Not only are the material and moral worlds closely connected, but the principles that govern each are really identical in operation. Thus the principles of the moral world may be summed up in what is known as the law of morality. and the principles governing the material world in what is known as the law of gravity. As the principle of gravitation keeps things in their places, people on earth, and stars moving in their courses, so the principles of morality govern human relations. But there is one essential differencethe material objects-earth, moon, stars-are compelled to move in obedience to immutable physical laws. Human beings, however, have freedom of will. They can violate to a limited extent both moral and physical laws. If man obeys the principles of the moral and material world he is rewarded; when he disobeys them he is punished. reason for this is that material bodies are not responsible, whereas moral beings are responsible for their acts. Let me illustrate. If I violate the law of gravity just a little by forgetting one step, I may feel a jolt. If I violate it a little more by stepping off a platform or a roof, I may break a limb or lose my life. Just so in the moral world. If I violate a principle of morality a little, I shall have a shock; | if I violate it much more, I shall have a broken reputation; and if I commit a great crime, I may lose my life.

Insight, experience, and the Holy Writ reveal the truth to us that these penalties and rewards in both the material and moral worlds are for our good. They are for our guidance and the protection of life, liberty, prosperity, and happiness.

It is by means of law that as a people we make our adjustments, our adaptation to our surrounding, or, as Spencer says, "the continuous adjustment of inner and outer conditions."

We are constantly changing our laws, economic and political, and our success or failure as lawmakers depends entirely upon the extent to which our laws obey or violate moral principles.

Only in the light of these profound facts and principles can we understand the evils that have come upon us as a people, and determine their remedies.

SPEECH OF HON, U. S. GUYER

Mr. GUYER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by including therein a speech I made at the Kansas Retail Grocers' Association just before leaving for the Congress.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. GUYER. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks, I include the following speech, which I delivered at the State convention of the Kansas Retail Grocers' Association at McPherson, Kans., October 5, 1931:

INDIVIDUALISM, THE KEYSTONE OF ANGLO-SAXON CIVILIZATION AND SOCIETY

Mr. Toastmaster, ladies, and gentlemen. Individualism is the keystone of the Angio-Saxon civilization and society. It is imbedded in the solid masonry of the foundation of our governmental structure. It is the basis of our national progress and achievement. It saturates our Constitution, which was written for the protection of the individual, his life, liberty, and property. It has long been our proud boast that the child of the humblest citizen, under the protection and favor of that Constitution, could rise to the highest position of power and opportunity. That here, under the protection and inspiration of equal opportunity, such a child could develop to the limit of his capacity.

Again and again have we demonstrated the truth and possibility of that claim. Here, encouraged by this equality of opportunity and inspired by the ideals of our forefathers, we have wrought achievement unparalleled in the history of mankind. Under the magic of this ideal of individualism we have built the richest nation in the history of the earth and the builders were men and women of humble birth but who triumphed by reason of this good old Angio-Saxon principle of individualism.

Lincoln, though born in a habitation more poverty stricken than the manger of the Man of Galilee, rose to a pinnacle of fame and power not excelled by a score of men in the history of the earth. And he led his country through a weltering sea of human blood in defense of that very ideal of individualism. Human slavery was the implacable foe of individualism. It smothered not only the hopes of the black man, but it alike quenched the inspiration and opportunity of the poor white man and deadened the stimulus of the slave owner and his child. This Nation was never founded for any kind of slavery, intellectual, spiritual, or industrial.

The World War was occasioned and fought over that very principle. It is a singular and interesting fact the two opposing spiritual, or industrial.

The World War was occasioned and fought over that very principle. It is a singular and interesting fact the two opposing ideals or ideas that precipitated that war had their origin in the same country, in the free forests of Germany among the Teutonic peoples in the long ago. They gave to the world its highest conception of individualism. Later they gave to Germany the principles and system of collectivism which was the Prussian or Hohenzollern idea of government. Under it the individual must bow to the will of a powerful state wherein his initiative and opportunity was submerged in the domination of the state. Finally this system seemed so good to the Emperor of Germany and the ruling class that they determined to impose it upon the councils of the world.

Two thousand years ago a great Roman historian by the name of the world.

Two thousand years ago a great Roman historian by the name of Tacitus went up into the forests of Germania and recorded in imperishable Latin literature the story of a wonderful people who loved liberty above everything else and where in that time even the women possessed equal rights with men in the crude forms of government that they possessed. She shared not alone in the government but also in the hardships of that northern life and when necessity demanded drew her sword in defense of her own. Here the individual was free to act as long as he did not intrude upon the same sacred rights of others which became the foundation of Anglo-Saxon government and society.

About 450 A. D., when Rome withdrew her legions from Britain where Cæsar had placed them 500 years before, the Angles, Saxons, and Jutes crossed the narrow sea to Britain and conquered her native Celtic peoples and brought with them their Teutonic ideal of individualism or of individual liberty and to this day that ideal is upheld in the British Empire. Over a thousand years later our Puritan ancestors brought those same ideas and ideals of individual liberty to America and it became the foundation of our system of government and society.

But let us see what became of this ideal in Germany, the land where individualism was born. By reason of constant wars against and around them they had to maintain a large and powerful army and the Hohenzollern dynasty headed and led by the Great Frederick used that military machine to build up a powerful state in which the rights of the individual were overshadowed by the collective will which inhered in the head of the state. So the Hohenzollern kings of Prussia trampled under foot the rights of the individual which were subordinated to the will of this powerful state. Under that system with its key word "kultur," individual enterprise and initiative were smothered until William II, the last of the Hohenzollerns finally declared that in his acts as sovereign he was responsible only to his conscience and his God. And for the protection through the years of this powerful army and potent state the German people through the centuries gave up little by little their traditional individual rights while their brethren who centuries ago had gone to England still clung to their ideals of individualism.

In England there were monarchs a plenty who would have taken away these rights of the individual, but they had no army suffi-

In England there were monarchs a plenty who would have taken away these rights of the individual, but they had no army sufficient to accomplish it. The English Channel, like a watery moat, protected the British Isles so that for a thousand years no enemy's foot touched her shores. England had and needed no great standing army. So far in our country individualism has been maintained, but not without a constant struggle against its enemies.

MONOPOLIES FOR TO INDIVIDUALISM

I have dwelt at length upon this historical background to bring I have dwelt at length upon this historical background to bring again to our minds the origins of the principles involved in our industrial and commercial life in America. So we will appreciate the significance of it when we see selfish and greedy interests strive to crush the individual and individual enterprise and initiative. Individualism has a thousand foes to contend with. Every monopoly is a foe of individualism. Every combination tending toward centralization of money and power is a foe of individualism. The powerful and selfish oil interests that to-day import oil and oil products to cripple our own oil industry is a foe to individualism. Every combination of capital and business which by unfair competition and cutthroat prices tries to crush the individual merchant is a foe of individualism.

There are those who defend monopolies. Who assert that by mass production and centralization control they cheapen the

There are those who defend monopolies. Who assert that by mass production and centralization control they cheapen the product to the consumer. But only until they have crushed competition. One of these apologists and defenders of a giant corporation declared: "Do we not clip off many buds in order that we may have one superlatively beautiful rose?" The answer to that is that cheap products are always too dear when bought at the price of the tragedy of individual bankruptcy.

CHAIN STORES DISTURB MERCANTILE WORLD

I oppose all agencies, combinations, and monopolies that reared on the ruins of individual enterprise. Here the individual falls beneath the force of unfair competition and cutthroat prices which delude and at the same time rob the public when competition has vanished. The chain store is one of those combinations that disturb our mercantile world.

First, I want to discuss the chain store, unchained, as it affects the community where it does business. We live in a rapidly changing world. The whole scheme of life has changed so rapidly that we hardly realize it. Life in the country has particularly changed. The automobile has abolished space and obliterated the connect. The automobile has abolished space and contented the zones. The auto has made us all gasoline tramps. There was a time within the memory of some of us when we could tell a country boy or girl by their mode of dress and manners. That is now impossible. We all dress alike and act much alike. All a result of our common rapid transportation. A boy used to know result of our common rapid transportation. A boy used to know those around his home as far as a horse and buggy would take him in a couple of hours. Now he has friends in towns a hundred miles apart. Thirty-five million autos and busses! Two and a quarter billion bus passengers every year. Six million a day. And the end is not yet. The country and the country town are no longer a provincial community. They are highly sophistocated elements of our common country, enjoying the same daily papers, the same movies, and a common society.

How about the small town and its destiny in this fast-changing country and age? What will its future be when the hard-surfaced road, the chain store, and the mall-order concerns have all operated on it? The facility of transportation has enabled its former customers to trade in larger cities within reach of the gasoline buggy. This has been the small town's greatest disadvantage. It has lost much of its home trade. The lure of the city has dimmed its luster. On the other hand, the hard-surfaced road may bring back more than it has taken away. Industry is decentralizing. Once factories had to locate at great railroad centers for adequate transportation facilities. This, too, is changing. Small towns Once factories had to locate at great railroad centers for adequate transportation facilities. This, too, is changing. Small towns have less expensive real estate, lower taxes, and living in general is cheaper. Take the packing industry. I used to raise stock southwest of here in Stafford County. My stock was shipped always to Kansas City. Now I would load it on a truck or two, start to Wichita at 3 a. m. and be there when the yards were open. Wichita, Denver, Sioux City, and many other minor packing centers are getting business from the larger centers. So it will be, no doubt, with many other industries. That will aid the smaller town. And then there is growing up a sort of auto trade from the city. They buy anything from sausage to antiques that were made last week.

CHAIN STORES HAVE NO INTEREST IN COMMUNITE

But the chain store, too, is coming to the smaller town. I can see no redeeming feature to its coming to the smaller town. It is an alien and a stranger. It is not the kind of stranger that you want to take in. It takes you in. What it receives goes almost wholly to New York or some eastern center. It has no pride or interest in the community. All it is interested in is what it can get out of the town. It has nothing to put into the town or its life. It is a sort of vampire that lives upon the lifeblood of the It either drives out the resident merchant or makes his town. It either drives out the business unprofitable.

The resident merchant has grown up with the town, supporting its schools and churches and making his life a part of the history of the community. He does not get rich, but he was a substantial citizen. He was on the building committee when they built the church. If it was a hospital, his money and counsel went into it. Then a chain store comes to town and counsel went into it. Then a chain store comes to town and they built the church. If it was a hospital, his money and counsel went into it. Then a chain store comes to town and with its unfair competition and cutthroat prices drives him to the wall. Over 300,000 of these independent merchants have been driven out of business and they and their employees are now a part of this great army of unemployed. No greater tragedy ever occurred in the history of American business.

The chain store employs the minimum of workmen at the lowest possible wage. You carry your purchases away under your arm or in a basket. In other words, it takes everything away and contributes little or nothing to the life and welfare of the community. Its interests are scattered over hundreds of towns and cities like yours. It is interested in one thing only and that is how much profit is there flowing into the coffers in New York. Its interests end with the balance sheet. interests end with the balance sheet.

UNFAIR COMPETITION

If competition was fair, there would not be so much com-plaint. But they know that if competition was fair, they could not compete with the home merchant with all his acquaintance. By fooling the people with unfair competition they crush com-petitors. Then they monopolize trade and gouge the customer. How are we going to prohibit this unfair competition?

CAPPER-KELLY TRADE BILL AID TO INDEPENDENT MERCHANT

I shall say nothing about State legislation unless to merely state that the States may by taxation help the independent merchant if so inclined. I am a more competent witness concerning national legislation. Of course, I refer to the Capper-Kelly fair trade bill, known to us in Washington as H.R. No. 11. Members of this convention are no doubt as familiar with the provisions of this measure as I am. In my opinion it will be of immense aid to the independent merchant by giving him an even break and protecting him from the cutthroat competi-tion, which has driven hundreds of thousands of merchants out of business, a competition that injures everybody except those who employ it.

You are familiar with the situation. Here is a small manu-

You are familiar with the situation. Here is a small manufacturer of high-class goods of fine quality. He has put his life into perfecting and improving these goods. His guarantee goes with them. They are so good that the public approves them. That makes them "bargain bait." The chain store uses these goods for "bait." They sell these goods below cost. The independent merchant is angry. He blames the manufacturer. The manufacturer is helpless and his independent customers refuse to sell an article upon which no profit can be made. Then when competition has vanished the chain sells a substitute. That small manufacturer wants this fair trade bill to pass and become a law as much as does the independent merchant. It would, in my judgment, be tremendously advantageous to both.

How about the wholesaler? He has a business built up through the years with independent merchants. He sees that chain stores drive his old friends and customers out of business and he is helpless to aid them and at the same time he becomes a victim of their rapacity. The chains have their own wholesale agencies.

helpless to aid them and at the same time he becomes a victim of their rapacity. The chains have their own wholesale agencies.

How about this independent merchant who has spent a lifetime building up a business and serving his friends and neighbors? He grew with the town, prospered when it prospered and asked only enough profit to afford him a living. Then comes the chain store. There is the usual campaign with ruinously low prices on popular, well-known goods. The chain makes up its losses on other goods. The customers of the independent merchant drop out and the independent merchant closes his doors, a victim of cutthroat prices and unfair competition. This is not fiction. Hundreds of thousands of them have gone this route.

out and the independent merchant closes his doors, a victim of cutthroat prices and unfair competition. This is not fiction. Hundreds of thousands of them have gone this route.

We want the Capper-Kelly bill passed to save the manufacturer, the wholesaler, and the retailer. In our opinion it would be of great value to these necessary elements of our business world and do no injustice to these great nation-wide organizations whose immense capital enables them to compete unfairly with independent merchants. The Capper-Kelly bill passed the House last spring on Kansas Day, January 29, 1931, but did not pass the Senate

What does this bill provide? Section 1 provides that a contract what does this bill provider Section I provides that a contract is legal between vendor and vendee which stipulates a resale price of a trade-marked, identified article which means fair and open competition with commodities of the same general class produced by others. It is, of course, a voluntary contract. There is nothing obligatory in the bill. Only the manufacturers and merchants who want to cooperate to protect a standard price will use this contract. Of course, manufacturers who have a monopoly will not use this contract.

Section 2 provides that all purchasers from the vendor for resale in the same city must be granted equal terms as to purchase and resale price. This is unnecessary probably because the manufacturer who uses this contract is interested in a uniform price for his widely advertised product.

Section 3 provides that no validity shall be given to contracts between manufacturers or between wholesalers or between retailers as to sale or resale price. The purchase of the biller than the price of the biller than the price.

ers as to sale or resale price. The purpose of the bill is to prevent such agreements.

vent such agreements.

Section 4 merely defines "producer" and "commodity."

But I need not analyze this measure further, for you are perfectly familiar with it, no doubt. It seeks to promote fair play for the independent merchant, to preserve the ideal of individualism in American business that has produced such marvelous results in the past and at the same time give a square deal to the purchaser of merchandise. I confidently believe it will tend in no small way to do this. I sincerely hope that this bill will become a law at the next session of Congress.

FEDERAL HOME LOAN BANKS

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I agree with much that the gentleman from North Carolina has said in so far as attacks upon Congress are concerned; but I had understood we were met here to-day to give consideration to the home loan bank bill, a matter which has been before the country for the last few months, a piece of legislation which is aimed to give relief and comfort to the small home owner of America.

I regret that my good friend from North Carolina, in the beginning of the discussion of this nonpartisan measure, has seen fit to criticize the President of the United States and give to the very beginning of the debate a tinge of partisanship which has no place in any relief legislation in this body to-day. [Applause.]

Oh, my heart is as great and as big and as generous as is the heart of the gentleman from North Carolina, and for one I shall never knowingly permit anyone in America to starve, if a vote or any action on my part in this body will bring about relief.

The gentleman says he fears to go home. He says he fears what will happen. He says it is marvelous that we have had no riots. I have a lot of respect, admiration, and faith in the American people, in the very kind of boys who sit in the gallery to-day asking something at the hands of Congress. They are Americans. They believe in America. They know we can not all get what we want at all times, and I have faith enough in them to believe that if they do not get what they want they appreciate the fact that they are still Americans, and there will be no riots so far as men of that type are concerned.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. MICHENER. Not now; no.

I do not believe in inviting riots or predicting riots or suggesting riots. We are not going to have a riot because men in America are not going to starve.

The gentleman from North Carolina calls attention to Title I of the Garner relief bill providing that $100,000,000 be placed at the disposal of the President and inferentially criticizes those who opposed the entire bill. Had it not been for the stringent gag rule preventing amendments, and if members of the majority party had been permitted to use their own good judgment, the "port-barrel" provisions of the relief bill would have been stricken out and some honest-to-goodness relief bill might have been on its way to the White House.

Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHENER. Not just now. I have just a little time, and I want to say something about this bill, because that is what we are here to consider.

The home loan bank bill is the medium through which assistance and relief are to be given to over 13,000,000 home owners in this country, of the type who carry their dinner pail and answer the call of the whistle in the morning and in the evening. The size of the loans is limited. This bill will be of no direct value to the owner of the castle. This bill is a part of the President's reconstruction program, and it would be too bad to pass the other legislation suggested and not do something to assist the home owner with the mortgage on his home and with what little saving he has, tied up in a building and loan association, from which organization it is impossible for him to withdraw his funds at this time, even though these funds are necessary to sustain the family. There is some $20,000,000,000 in mortgages on small homes in the United States; nearly eight billion of these mortgages are held by building and loan associations. Their securities are as sound as any we have in the country, yet because of the credit situation their assets are absolutely frozen. The building and loan associations are not to blame. The laws controlling them are not to blame, and surely the people whose savings are thus locked up are not to blame. The home-loan bank system to be provided for will do for the home owner what has already been done for the farmer, because agencies have been provided through which the farmer may borrow on his farm. This legislation will do for the building and loan associations what the Federal reserve banks do for the banks, and it will be possible for these associations to raise funds upon their seasoned home-mortgage loans.

Much discussion has been had as to the purposes for which the funds provided in this law will be used. Extensive hearings have been held before the Committee on Banking and Currency. All interests involved have been heard, and the preponderance of opinion is that this wholesome legislation will accomplish the purposes hoped for and should be enacted. The hearings developed that the funds provided will be used for several purposes, chief among which are:

First. To refinance existing mortgages so as to permit smaller payments, and to accommodate the needs of withdrawing members and depositors.

Second. To give the institutions funds permitting them to tide over, or carry along, worthy borrowers who are having difficulty meeting interest or installment payments.

Third. To assist borrowers in paying taxes and insurance costs, which must be maintained regardless of conditions.

Fourth. To provide funds for modernization, repairs, and maintenance of existing homes, thus increasing employment.

Fifth. To provide a source of funds to refinance the thousands of short-term mortgages, which have been called for payment due to bank failures and due to like financial institutions converting their resources into liquid funds. Thousands of home owners are in distress for mortgage

Sixth. For such building of small homes as may be desired and needed in many localities, thus giving employment to those engaged in the building trades.

The purpose of this law is not to cause the immediate construction of a large number of homes. I think, as a general proposition, the country is pretty well built up, yet there are communities in which home building should be carried on and is needed, and it is safe to say that none of the money provided for in this bill will be used for extravagant building. This bill has been designed both to take care of this emergency situation and to function as a permanent institution, eliminating to a large extent the very distressing condition which now confronts our building and loan associations. It is true that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation has been of great assistance to building and loan associations, as well as to the other institutions, yet when we remember that this agency is not permanent and that loans are made for only a period of six months, it will readily be observed that they can be of very little help to building and loan associations, whose securities or mortgages are necessarily of the long-term kind.

This is not new legislation. Some years ago Senator Calder, of New York, and Congressman Nolan, of California, introduced bills in Congress covering the same subject matter, yet there was not urge enough back of these bills to secure accomplishment. To-day the need is urgent, and this will not only assist immeasurably at this time, but will prevent reoccurrences of distress in the future. The measure was suggested by the President, was thoroughly considered by the Banking and Currency Committee, a majority of whom are not of the President's political faith, yet all of these people are agreed as to the wisdom of this legislation.

I am thankful, indeed, that the majority of the House. even at this late date, is permitting this legislation to come on the floor, and I hope from now on that politics may be abandoned during the consideration of the bill and that we may discuss the merits of the bill.

Mr. McDUFFIE rose.

Mr. MICHENER. I yield to the chairman of the Economy Committee.

Mr. McDUFFIE. I simply want to join the gentleman in his hope that politics may be adjourned for a while, but I want the gentleman to practice what he is preaching. [Applause.]

Mr. MICHENER. That is a very good suggestion and I give the gentleman the promise now that if you do not provoke it, if the Democrats will refrain from getting on the floor and making Democratic speeches day after day, you will not hear the subject opened on this side; but when a Democrat takes the floor and makes a political speech and criticizes the President of the United States and the Republican Party for things for which they are not to blame, we are human over here, and you can hardly expect us to sit here, as we have for days and days, and take it on both cheeks without resentment. Patience sometimes ceases to be a virtue.

Now, let us get down to the consideration of the bill. Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MICHENER. Just for a question.

Mr. MAY. I want to ask my amiable friend from Michigan if he does not think that at this particular time in the history of the country even a "pork barrel" would be better than a garbage can. [Laughter.]

Mr. MICHENER. I do not appreciate the significance of the gentleman's question, but it is just about as intelligent as many of the question that are asked here. We are trying to get away from politics and I hope the gentleman will

This home loan bank bill is urgent legislation and will be applicable generally throughout the country. I well understand that there are some States at this time where the State laws must be changed before advantage can be taken of the act. This was true when the Federal reserve act was passed, and there is nothing compelling any State or institution to accept the benefits of the law unless so desired. This is real help for the little fellow—the man with the weekly wage, and will undoubtedly save many homes from a mortgage sale; will permit frugal wage earners to reap the benefit of their savings in these times of depression; will strengthen the local bank which has been assisting the local building and loan associations, and will inspire faith and confidence in these splendid associations, which have done so much to make our country a land of homes. I am sure that the rule will be adopted unanimously, and I hope that there will be very little opposition to the bill. [Applause.]

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH].

Mr. SABATH. It is to be deplored that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER] should have attacked the sincere appeal of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. Poul in behalf of the millions of suffering people as being a political gesture. During my many years of service I can honestly say that I have never heard so strong and patriotic an appeal, and I can not understand how anyone can construe, by even the longest stretch of the imagination, that it was a political speech.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to God that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Michener] and his colleagues on his side, as well as the President, would stop political talk. But every time any Democrat makes an appeal to the country or to you, though it be made with the best of intentions, he is immediately attacked for bringing up politics.

Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Michenerl, as well as others, knows that these charges are not true. The Democrats have willingly followed the recommendations made by the President with the hope that real, permanent relief would be forthcoming and that the conditions which face the country would be improved.

I am not going to detract anything from the President and the Republican Party, but when the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Micher] and others here take credit for everything and blame the Democrats for things for which they themselves are responsible, we must protest. The Garner bill that the gentleman attacks is the only bill that is really a relief bill, in that it provides and will create work for the unemployed. And yet the gentlemen on the other side of the House designated it as "pork-barrel" legislation. I concede that it is not a perfect bill, but I think it is legislation in the right direction, and it follows the recommendations of the President before his managers set him to work playing politics.

I feel the country will appreciate the fact that it is the intention of the Democratic Party to provide work for the unemployed. Only a few weeks ago the conference on unemployment decided on and unanimously recommended a governmental construction program calling for the erection of public buildings, the building of roads, and the improvement of rivers and harbors. What has the gentleman from Michigan to recommend or what has the President recommended that would put the 10,000,000 to 12,000,000 unemployed to work? It is true that the President recommended the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, the amendment broadening the power of the Federal Reserve Board, and this bill, and, above all, demanded the balancing of the Budget by the imposition of additional taxes and by the reduction of salaries, so that the securities held by the international bankers and our foreign credit would not be affected.

The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER] gives the President credit for this bill—a bill which I have long advocated. Mr. Speaker, for over a year I have appealed to the President for this legislation, and have joined in the country-wide request to call a special session of Congress. He referred me to Mr. Eugene Stevens, chairman of the Federal Reserve Bank of Chicago. On June 13, 1931, I received the following letter from Mr. Stevens:

JUNE 13, 1931.

Hon. A. J. SABATH,

Chicago, III.

DEAR MR. SABATH: I understand that you have recently sent a wire to the President at Washington relative to the banking situation in Chicago, which has been referred to me through the Federal Reserve Board.

I should like very much to have an opportunity to discuss this matter with you, and wonder if you could find it convenient to come into my office the early part of the week. There are some things about this situation which we might be able to discuss to our mutual advantage.

Very truly yours,

EUGENE M. STEVENS, Chairman.

At this conference he assured me that legislation to relieve the home owner was badly needed. But notwithstanding this and the fact that I pleaded with the President to call a special session so that his legislation, or any other legislation, could be enacted in order to relieve the distressing conditions, he refused to act and instead issued new assurances that conditions were improving.

The record will show that I have pleaded with the Federal Reserve Board in 1930 to accept for rediscount short-term municipal paper to relieve the municipalities and the people of the country, which the board could have done under the law, if authorized by the President. But again the President refused to act.

The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER] in his adroit way charges the House with delay in bringing in this legislation. He fails to realize and recognize the fact that the subcommittee held a hearing and worked on this bill for more than two months before it was able to agree on many of the provisions that would make the bill workable and bring about relief that was originally intended by those of us who had for nearly two years advocated this beneficial legislation.

If the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER] and other gentlemen on his side were fair, they would be obliged to admit and concede that not only in this but in the last Congress and the Congress before that I advocated and pleaded for this legislation. In 1930 I urged that the home owners of America be aided and saved from the loss of their homes and ruin by urgently requesting the Federal Reserve Board to accept for rediscount not only Finance Corporation securities but also mortgages on homes, as well as the municipal short-term securities, bonds, and anticipating warrants; but the administration refused to grant any relief, notwithstanding the fact that such legislation would have been beneficial to approximately 12,000 institutions and approximately 30,000,000 people.

Therefore I feel that it comes with poor grace from the other side to charge us at this time with delay, when it was within the power of a Republican House and a Republican Senate and a Republican President to adopt this legislation two years or at least a year ago, and when the Federal Reserve Board was in position at all times to purchase or accept for rediscount these securities.

It is amazing to what extent some of you gentlemen and the Republican press will go in the hopes of misleading the American people and unloading upon us Democrats all of your misdeeds. The facts are that the Republican press, which you control, in the last few months has in every way endeavored to lay the responsibility for existing conditions upon the present House, because, fortunately for the country, it is a Democratic House, though by a small majority only. Anyone familiar with conditions can not help but understand that it was a Republican administration that not only permitted but encouraged the international and Wall Street bankers and the stock exchanges to fleece, yes, to call it by a better name, to loot the American people by unloading upon them not millions but billions of dollars of worthless foreign as well as domestic securities, thus not only ruining individuals but ruining all of the smaller banks of the Nation by causing the withdrawal of deposits that were used for the purchase of these worthless stocks and bonds, and also causing the withdrawal of millions of dollars from building and loan associations by those unfortunates who followed the advice of President Hoover and Mr. Mellon to invest in these securities that are to-day worthless and that, even at the height of prosperity, had a small value. It is these things that brought about a situation that has caused the loss of millions to hundreds of thousands of home owners and has brought ruination to the banks and that now compels us by this legislation to aid the millions who have not as yet lost their homes and who can not obtain renewal of their mortgages on their small homes, because they are unable to pay their interest and taxes.

This bill, if enacted into law and faithfully and honestly administered, will be a blessing to millions and will indirectly aid municipalities, inasmuch as many of the loans that will be granted will be used to pay back taxes owed to the municipalities.

This is a bill that is entitled to the support of every well-meaning Member, and inasmuch as we have appropriated millions for relief of the farmers, for the Farm Board, for the land banks, and other agricultural agencies, I feel that you gentlemen are in honor bound to vote for this proposed legislation.

Though I have advocated the law as provided for in this bill for nearly two years, the credit for having originated it must go to former Secretary of Labor William Wilson and to ex-President Woodrow Wilson, under whose direction a bill containing the principles of the one now before us was introduced, which a Republican Congress refused to pass.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Dieterich].

Mr. DIETERICH. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I am still new enough in the Congress to avoid entering into the spirit of partisanship that seems to be displayed when measures of this kind are brought up. In this I mean no criticism of the remarks of the chairman of the Rules Committee. I consider the remarks of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER] as unwarranted.

This resolution should be adopted and the bill providing for the Federal home loan bank should pass.

This bill is not perfect, but, with a few minor amendments, it presents a sound, a practical, and useful scheme which will be helpful to the home owners of this country.

Heretofore practically all of the important measures that have been presented for consideration of this Congress have been emergency measures brought out on the floor without adequate time for discussion or proper amendment, all designed to meet existing emergencies.

This is the first measure that is aimed to effect a permanent remedy of an existing condition.

There is nothing more important to the prosperity of the various communities that compose the various States of this Union than proper and adequate credit to the citizenship and the institutions which go to make up the particular community.

The general trend for the past decade has been to restrict and interfere with the extension of credit by the community banks, loan associations, and other credit agencies to the extent that to-day they are not permitted to render that service for which they were established and which purpose they served years past.

I desire to call the attention of the Congress that it was this interference with community service more than any other that has brought about conditions of depression in communities where such conditions were practically unheard of in years past.

The Federal Government, in its supervision of the banking institutions, not only passed on the value of the security of the loans made by such institutions but directed the class of securities in which a bank should invest its depositors' moneys.

They even went so far as to direct the amount of deposits that the institution could invest in local loans and directed that a certain amount of money should be invested in so-called liquid securities issued by the industries of other States and other nations.

When this policy was adopted the community bank ceased to be the community servant and the individual and institution within the particular community was denied the just and reasonable credit to which they were entitled.

Among the first to be affected by this policy was the real estate and the home owner, in that real-estate loans which were perfectly safe were listed as frozen assets which the banker was instructed to liquidate.

This bill has for its purpose the reestablishment at least in a limited degree of the credit, at the present time denied but which was formerly enjoyed, by the home builder.

This Nation will not and can not recover from the present condition until a like credit and a like privilege of rediscounting real estate and other loans is afforded to the local bank and other local credit agencies.

Prosperity will not be secured until the community bank is permitted or rather encouraged to reestablish itself in the community service.

By community bank I mean to include the banks in the smaller cities throughout the rural communities of our country and in such places in the urban sections where the matter of convenience necessitates the establishment of banks to serve their needs.

In an earlier address to this Congress I called attention in more detail to the policy of the Government which had for its purpose the centralization of the moneyed wealth of this Nation in which it encouraged the discontinuance of local loans and encouraged investment in securities not only of this but of other nations of the World, this policy is responsible for the tremendous number of bank failures that have taken place within the last three years.

I consider legislation along the line of this bill which has for its purpose a correction of the errors of the past and the return of credit to the average deserving citizen as the most important legislation to which this Congress can give its attention.

Of course, much will depend upon the manner in which the act is administered. If properly administered it will be productive of much good, if improperly administered it will only prove another expensive experiment. [Applause.]

Mr. PURNELL. Mr. Speaker, I regret that I was not present when this debate started. I also regret that when I did step into the Chamber I found it surcharged with politics. I came here to-day to seriously contribute in my feeble way toward the passage of a bill which I regard as of the greatest importance to the country. I am not going to enter the political argument which has been thrust into the Chamber this morning, but I call the attention of the House to the fact that on the 13th day of last November, before Congress had convened, the President of the United States issued a statement in which he said:

I shall propose to Congress the establishment of a system of home loan discount banks for four purposes.

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. PURNELL. No; I have not the time. The President then set out the four purposes. They were:

1. For the present emergency purpose of relieving the financial strains upon the sound building and loan associations, savings banks, deposit banks, and farm loan banks that have been giving credit through the medium of small mortgage loans upon urban and farm properties used for homes, thereby to relieve pressures upon home and farm owners.

upon home and farm owners.

2. To put the various types of institutions loaning on mortgages in a position to assist in the revival of home construction in many parts of the country and with its resultant increase in employment.

3. To safeguard against the repetition of such experiences in the

4. For the long-view purpose of strengthening such institutions in the promotion of home ownership, particularly through the financial strength thus made available to building and loan asso-

Mr. Speaker, this is the 10th of June. Almost seven months have elapsed since the Congress convened, and up until very recently none of us have been able to drag out of the two committees having jurisdiction over this bill, the Banking and Currency Committee and the Rules Committee, the bill and rule which are now before us; so that if there is any charge laid at the President's door for failure to take action which will help some 12,000,000 small, thrifty depositors in this country, a like charge may be laid at the door of those who are in control of the organization of this House

The rule now before us, if adopted, will make in order the immediate consideration of a bill which has been drafted in response to the President's suggestion. To my mind the home loan bank bill offers immediate tangible relief to more than 12,000,000 thrifty members of building and loan associations throughout the United States whose savings are invested in nearly 12,000 associations with nearly nine billions of assets. Some concern has been evidenced for some time over the so-called "little" or "forgotten man." I do not admit that we have lost sight of the so-called "little man" at any time in our reconstruction program here, but to those who think we have here is a real opportunity to be of service to him.

The agency proposed in this bill is sound and built upon existing institutions which are the subject of inspection and regulation by the States. Its purpose is to give financial support to existing home financing, thrift, or savings institutions which now have millions of dollars of preferred first mortgages on homes upon which they can not raise a single dollar to pay withdrawing depositors and shareholders or to make loans or refinance existing mortgages.

There is nothing new involved in the principle. In 1913 Congress created the Federal reserve system, a system based upon membership—a compulsory membership by all of the Federal banks and an optional membership by State banks. The purpose of that system was to create a reservoir of credit available for commercial banks in time of stress. The system was based upon the rediscount of commercial paper arising out of business as well as some agricultural transactions.

Three years later Congress created the Federal farm-loan system with the purpose of furnishing to agriculture access to greater credit, thus making it possible for individual farmers to secure funds at a reduced rate of interest on farm loans. That system now has something more than a billion dollars of mortgages and has reduced the average rate of the total of farm mortgage interest by 1½ per cent.

The creation of these two systems suggested that a similar system might furnish credit in the building field, and as a result President Hoover recommended the establishment of a system of home loan discount banks and our Federal land banks. I am sure that no committee of Congress would seriously consider an attempt to repeal either the Federal reserve laws or the Federal land bank enactment and substitute in the place of both or either any temporary relief of credit such as is provided by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act. The needs clearly indicate the necessity of establishing a permanent system such as is provided in the bill before us, and I sincerely hope the rule will be speedily adopted in order that we may begin consideration of the bill.

It is proposed to create a system of 8 to 12 Federal home loan banks in districts to be determined by the Federal home loan board. Building and loan associations, coperative banks, homestead associations, savings banks, trust companies, and insurance companies are eligible for membership. The members supply the permanent capital, and upon becoming members subscribe 1 per cent of the mortgages eligible for collateral or discount, but not less than $1,500. This subscription can be paid on a quarterly basis, and immediately upon payment of the first quarter a member is eligible to borrow twelve times its subscription.

Each of the 8 to 12 banks will start with a minimum capital of at least $5,000,000. Subscriptions are to be opened, and at the end of 30 days the subscriptions are to be totaled, and the Government subscriptions to stock will, if needed, bring the total to initial capital required. The Government's subscription, which may as a maximum reach $125,000,000, is merely an advance and is to be repaid as additional institutions join the system. An early retirement of the Government capital is anticipated by the provisions of the bill, and it is believed not more than one-half the maximum of $125,000,000 will actually be called for.

The bill assumes that it can best serve the small savers and the home owners by serving the home-financing institutions in all the towns and cities of the United States. These home-financing institutions are primarily building and loan associations and the small established country banks. Therefore no loans are made direct to home owners, home buyers, or builders.

In order to keep the 8 to 12 banks in proper condition each one must at all times have an amount of money equal to the capital subscriptions of its members in, first, United States Government securities; second, interest-bearing deposits in banks and trust companies; and third, loans to members with a maturity not greater than one year. Other than this, the funds of the bank, including funds received from the sale of bonds, may be loaned to members for long periods of time.

I shall not undertake to discuss the bill in detail. It is more or less technical and I shall leave to those who have spent weeks in its study and preparation the task of dealing with its specific provisions. I merely want to say in conclusion that in these days of unrest and economic uncertainty an increase in the number of home owners throughout the United States would have a most quieting effect upon the Nation's nerves. I have always contended that bolshevism, revolution, and unrest find little or no opportunity for growth among those who own their homes. If this bill does nothing more than stop foreclosures throughout the country it will have served a most useful purpose. Last year at least 150,000 families lost their homes through foreclosures occasioned largely by the inability of home-financing institutions to function normally.

In addition to preventing foreclosures this measure will enable millions of depositors in banks and building and loan associations to once more draw upon their savings in home-financing institutions, which they can not now do. By so drawing upon the reserves which have been put aside for a rainy day these millions of thrifty American citizens will • be able through their restored purchasing power to make a most valuable contribution toward economic recovery.

I sincerely hope the rule will be speedily adopted and that the bill which it makes in order will be soon enacted into law. [Applause.]

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. McClintic].

Mr. McCLINTIC of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I agree with the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Dieterich] that the credit of various communities is about destroyed. I intend to support this rule; yet I am not sure whether the bill that is proposed to be enacted into law contains all of the features that should be in the legislation to relieve all the different classes that are now in distress.

Every report which I get from home indicates that conditions are getting worse. This legislation is another bill that, in my opinion, begins at the top, with the idea that the relief will work down. As I said yesterday, it does seem to me that there ought to be enough Members of this House in favor of legislation that would begin at the bottom and gradually work up, so that we can rehabilitate this Nation, to the extent that we can put a foundation under the chief occupations so that we may have hope for a return of prosperity.

Now, what will happen if we continue passing legislation that begins at the top? One of these days a pay day will arrive and these institutions that have received aid, in my opinion, unless there can be brought back a degree of prosperity, will be in a position where they must have another blood transfusion so that they can postpone their payments until conditions get better.

What is the situation with respect to the railroads? They are not receiving any increased business. The money that is being loaned to them by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation can not be repaid unless there is a revival of industry in this Nation. I said to this House yesterday that unless the chief industry, agriculture, can receive some kind of rehabilitation, then measures of this kind, while meritorious, will simply mean the postponement of the crisis that is just as sure to arrive as I am standing on this floor. We know that the fountains of production have dried up, and that unless there can be put into law some kind of legislation that will be beneficial we can not hold out much hope for the future.

I say to you that the channels of commerce have been clogged up. We should put into legislation some kind of law which will enable those who produce that which we must have to feed our people, obtain a proper price so that we may continue in a way that will be equitable and fair.

This legislation, as I understand, provides relief for banks. It provides relief for building and loan associations, but the banks of this Nation do not now have the confidence of the people to the extent that the people will put deposits in the same.

Last week in Oklahoma the postmaster of the county seat of my county said he was sending fifteen times more money to the postal savings than he sent last year, which is indicative of the fact that the people are not going to patronize their home banks unless there can be some law passed which will cause them to know when they lie down at night to sleep that their little savings will be safe.

It is for that reason I am hoping that we can enact into law the guaranty bank provision that was passed by this House, so that that will be an aid, in part, to this rehabilitation program, thus causing our citizens to patronize the home banks instead of sending money to Eastern centers, thereby making it possible for such institutions to take care of the needs of our people.

I have just returned from Oklahoma, and I know that our citizens are more depressed than ever before. It is my earnest desire to support every bill that will be beneficial to the Nation, yet I am positive that unless agriculture can be placed on a sound basis all other industries will continue to suffer. This being true, I sincerely hope that Congress will not adjourn until it has completed its legislative program. I realize that many of the Members have opposition for reelection, and that they would like to go home. Yet, in my opinion, it will be far more beneficial to them if they remain here and complete the job.

OFFICE EFFICIENCY-AND CAMPAIGN SLANDER

I want my friends to know the facts as to how I have conducted my office so that they will not be misled by those who are trying to deceive the voters by making misleading statements. I am, by law, allowed to appoint two persons to assist me in taking care of my office work. During the period I was in very bad health it was necessary that I be away from my office a large portion of the time, and in order that I might be certain that every duty was properly looked after, I requested my wife to draw a portion of this allowance and use the same in employing necessary extra help. She opened my personal mail when I was in the hospital and supervised the work in such a way there were no complaints from any source. Some will remember that influenza first carried me to the hospital, and a lung operation made it necessary for tubes to be inserted for drainage, which impaired my left side to the extent I had to go to different health resorts to regain my strength. Evidently this settled in my kidneys, as it was necessary a few years ago to undergo another operation, and one kidney was removed. During this long period of bad health I have been in the hospital four times and have had four operations.

On one occasion I was reelected while in the hospital. On another the House of Representatives passed a special resolution to allow me to take the oath of office while in a hospital some fourteen hundred miles from Washington. It is true I retained my wife in this position so I could use that which she drew to pay extra help. The law allowed me this privilege, and should my health again break down, she will go back in the office and see that the work is looked after in a proper way. No member of my family has ever retained or profited a penny from my office allowance. I have no apology to make for using the one closest to me when I had to have sone one who had my interest at heart, and I am proud that I have the kind of a wife who gladly served the splendid citizenship of the district without the thought of pay. There are now being circulated other kinds of slander and poison that are too foolish to even reply to. I have always conducted my campaigns on a high plane, and if I have to engage in the spreading of poison and untrue reflections on anyone, I certainly will not expect my friends to vote for me.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. PURNELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. William E. Hull].

Mr. WILLIAM E. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I know of no legislation that has been before this House that will mean more toward helping the small man than this bill. The importance of it is so great that I hope we will not delay longer than to-day to pass this legislation. We all know that the young man and the laboring man who has a mortgage on his home can not go to the building association at the present time and get any relief. In other words, he is tied up in this way: He must pay so much each month to keep up his building association payments. If he can not earn that money, when he has no work, consequently he can not possibly meet his payments. What is the result? The result is foreclosure; and what little money he has ac-cumulated for probably the last 8 or 10 years has been deposited in this home. We should not quibble for a moment over this bill. We should pass it to-day and get it to the Senate as early as possible and let it become law.

We all know that the President of the United States is back of this bill. We all know it has been the one bill that he has tried to bring before the Congress of the United States; and, regardless of politics, this is one thing that will help to bring the country back for the man who is unable to secure a job. I entreat everybody, both Democrats and Republicans, to pass this bill to-day and get it immediately to the Senate. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. PURNELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Dallinger].

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Speaker, I am heartily in favor of this bill, House bill 12280, which has been finally reported by the Committee on Banking and Currency and is to be allowed consideration by the House under this special rule. It is one of the pieces of legislation urgently recommended by President Hoover in his annual message to Congress in which he set forth a complete and comprehensive program for the relief of the American people in the present worldwide economic depression. My only regret is that it was not passed months ago so that thousands of our fellow citizens might not have lost their homes through foreclosure proceedings.

And in connection with this subject, let us consider briefly the causes of the present economic depression and some of the remedies that have been and may be suggested to bring about recovery and a return to prosperity.

THE PRESENT ECONOMIC DEPRESSION-ITS CAUSES AND REMEDIES

I am tempted to make a comparison of the present condition of our country with a man who is sick and calls in a doctor. The first thing the doctor does is to ascertain the history of the patient, as usually the illness is due to something the patient has done or has neglected to do in the way of diet, lack of exercise, exposure, and so forth.

What every good doctor then does is to apply remedies that will assist nature to bring about recovery. In such a case it is very apt to occur that from various sources suggestions of quack remedies are offered, which, if applied, are sure to make the patient worse; and finally there is very often the psychological influence of fear which will always retard recovery.

Having this thought in mind, let us consider the history of our patient, the United States, going back to the commencement of the World War in 1914.

THE WORLD WAR AND IT RESULTS

The total cost of the World War in capital wealth destroyed has been estimated to be over $300,000,000,000. The actual cost to the United States up to January 1, 1932, was over $40,000,000,000. Apart from this destruction of capital wealth, the loss of life, the fixed charges settled on the Nation for the payment of interest on the public debt and the care of veterans, the worst result of the war to the United States was the undue expansion of American industry, both agricultural and manufacturing.

Following the expansion of credit which occurs during every war there came the inevitable deflation, reaching its climax in 1920 and 1921, with resulting bankruptcies and unemployment, the number of unemployed at that time being over 6.000.000.

The recovery of the United States from the first deflation came with the enactment of the Fordney-McCumber tariff bill, the protective rates of which came only just in time to save many of our industries from being destroyed by the flood of foreign-made goods which were entering the United States under the low duties of the Underwood tariff law.

Then, after prosperity was restored, in 1925 occurred the Florida land boom and its inevitable collapse, wiping out the savings of millions of people.

THE ORGY OF SPECULATION

In spite of this lesson, however, there then occurred another era of expansion, accompanied by an orgy of speculation in securities, differing from previous periods of stock speculation in that practically everybody who had any money participated—spurred on by the banks, which established agencies for the high-pressure sale of securities at prices far beyond their actual worth. This was accompanied by the floating of large issues of State and municipal bonds for roads and school buildings at the low rates of interest due to the tax-exempt feature of such issues, and also issues of bonds of European and South American countries. Along with this went installment buying on an enormous scale, spurred on by high-pressure salesmanship.

STOCK-MARKET CRASH OF 1929

When, as a result of loans advanced by banks, the price of securities began to advance beyond their actual worth, the Federal Reserve Board might have to a large degree prevented the undue expansion of credit by raising the rediscount rate of interest, but the board neglected to act until it was too late to prevent the excessive inflation and the inevitable crash which occurred in October, 1929.

PRESENT DEFLATION AND ITS CONSEQUENCES

Since then there has been a steady deflation, resulting in a capital loss on paper at least of over $65,000,000,000. This deflation has continued until securities, real estate, and commodities are selling way below their actual value. The resulting panic caused runs on banks throughout the country, causing thousands of banks to fail for the reason that they were unable to secure sufficient funds to meet the demands of their depositors by selling their securities in a falling market. This failure of the banks in turn caused people to hoard their money and the banks that still remained solvent to refuse credit, resulting in a further contraction, both of money and credit.

RAPID FALL IN COMMODITY PRICES

Commodity prices have fallen to such a point that the farmer and manufacturer are not only unable to obtain a profit, but in many cases have been obliged to sell their products at a loss. This has resulted in a depletion of reserves where they existed or failures where, in the absence of reserves, the banks refused to extend credit.

REDUCTION IN WAGES AND UNEMPLOYMENT

As an inevitable result, the wages of employees have been reduced and millions of men and women have been discharged, in many cases becoming public or private charges upon the community.

Every reduction in wages and salaries, which has foolishly been urged as a remedy for the situation, and every discharge of employees, has inevitably resulted in a diminution of the purchasing power of the country, which, in turn, has lessened the demand for the overabundant supply of commodities of all kinds and caused prices to decline still farther.

NECESSITY FOR A SOUND EXPANSION OF CREDIT

Obviously, the first step toward a return to prosperity was to bring about an expansion of the currency and credit by preventing further bank failures so that, the fear of the people being overcome, the hoarded money would again be put in circulation and the banks, being made secure against runs by depositors, could begin again to extend credit to the business men of the country. In order to accomplish this object, Congress enacted on the recommendation of President Hoover the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and the Steagall banking bills. There is also pending legislation to provide for the immediate payment to depositors of closed banks.

HOARDING BY THE BANKS

In spite of the fact, however, that the banks have been assured of Government support through the media of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and the Federal Reserve Board, they have not responded to the demand for loans, but have continued to hoard their currency on the plea that they must remain liquid for fear of possible runs on the part of their depositors.

FORECLOSURE OF MORTGAGES

Moreover, the banks have been foreclosing on farmers and other home owners who have been unable to meet their interest payments, and are refusing to make new mortgage loans to persons desiring to build homes. To remedy this situation, on the President's recommendation additional funds have been provided for the farm-loan banks, and the Committee on Banking and Currency of the House of Representatives has reported the Federal home loan discount bank bill now before us which, if enacted, as it should be, at the present session, will afford needed relief to the home owners of the country.

BALANCING THE BUDGET

All of the foregoing remedies rest upon the credit of the Government of the United States, which for the past two years has incurred a constantly increasing deficit in its running expenses, due to a tremendous falling off in the revenue derived from the tax on incomes. Up to the present time this deficit has been met by the issue of Treasury notes and bonds. As a result some of the issues of Government bonds have depreciated, necessitating an increase in interest rates. It is perfectly evident that this condition of affairs can not go on, and that unless the credit of the Government is to be seriously impaired, the Budget must be balanced by cutting down expenses and by increased taxation. The Bureau of the Budget recommended a decrease in expenditures for the next fiscal year of $365,000,000 over the expenditures for the present fiscal year.

The Committee on Appropriations of the House of Representatives cut the Budget estimates $155,662,816.56, which, with the estimated cash saving in the so-called economy bill of $42,000,000, makes a total saving of $562,662,816.52.

REORGANIZATION OF THE EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENTS

President Hoover has repeatedly recommended a reorganization of the executive departments in order greatly to reduce expenses and at the same time increase the efficiency of administration. In a special message to Congress early in the present session he asked Congress to give him the authority to consolidate, eliminate, and coordinate the executive departments and bureaus. In accordance with the President's repeated recommendation, I introduced H. R. 9492, similar to a bill introduced by me in the last Congress, which reads as follows:

A bill to authorize the President of the United States to reorganize the executive departments of the Government, and for other

Be it enacted, etc., That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized and empowered to remove from office such officers and employees originally appointed by the President or by the head of a department as may be deemed by him to be unnecessary or useless in the conduct of the Government's business, except judicial officers, whether or not such employees have been appointed from lists prepared by the Civil Service Commission and regardless of any classification heretofore established by said commission; and the President is hereby further authorized and empowered to of any classification heretofore established by said commission; and the President is hereby further authorized and empowered to abolish any or all of such offices thereby made vacant and to abolish any or all departments, divisions, bureaus, and commissions by him found to be unnecessary for the proper and economical conduct of the Government's business.

That the President is hereby authorized and empowered, during or after the reorganization of any department, bureau, division, or commission, to appoint by and with the advice of the Senate such employees and officials as he deems best for the Senate such employees and officials as he deems best for the public service, and to establish by proclamation any new department, division, bureau or commission that he deems necessary for the conduct of the public business; and the President is further authorized and empowered to transfer divisions and bureaus from one department to another, and to consolidate or combine departments, divisions, bureaus, and commissions one with another as he deems best for the public service; and the President is further authorized and empowered to create a Central Purchasing Bureau that shall have exclusive power to make tral Purchasing Bureau that shall have exclusive power to make purchases for all Government departments, bureaus, divisions, and commissions

That the President shall exercise the power and authority hereby invested in him, without regard to or recommendation of or restriction of, any existing law, regulation, or classification: Provided, That all authority granted to the resident herein shall cease two years from the date of the passage of this act: And provided further, That all changes in the organization of the executive departments and commissions, or in the personnel thereof, made by the President in accordance with the provisions of this act, shall have full force of law until altered, amended, or repealed by act of Congress. repealed by act of Congress.

UNIQUE QUALIFICATIONS OF PRESIDENT HOOVER

The enactment of such a bill would have solved the whole question of economy in governmental expenditures. We are fortunate in having as President of the United States in this crisis a man with an unusual capacity for and wide experience in executive administration. As directors of the Republic, owing a plain duty to the people of the United States who are its stockholders, Congress should have enacted this legislation early in the session. Loath to give up any of its power over details and raising the same question of the unconstitutionality of a delegation of legislative power that has been futilely urged against the laws creating the Interstate Commerce Commission and the Tariff Commission, the House simply incorporated in its so-called "economy bill" the form of my bill, but so emasculated that its enactment will be of no practical value in the present emergency. Moreover, the titles of the economy bill incorporating the bills creating a public works administration and consolidating the War and Navy Departments, both of which proposals were before the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, of which I am a member, were so drafted as to result in an increase instead of a saving in governmental expenditures.

INCREASED TAXATION

If Congress had been willing in the early part of the session to give the President the authority which he desired to reorganize the executive departments, much of the increase in taxes required to balance the Budget would have been unnecessary. As it was, however, the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives was confronted with the task of raising over $1,100,000,000 of additional revenue.

After an exhuastive investigation they unanimously but with reluctance recommended a moderate manufacturers' sales tax of 2½ per cent in addition to the increase in income and inheritance tax rates that would raise the maximum amount of revenue. The bill which the committee reported, like the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and Steagall bank bills, were nonpartisan measures reported in accordance with the recommendations of a Republican President just as similar nonpartisan measures were passed on the recommendation of a Democratic President during the World War.

UNFORTUNATE DEFEAT OF THE GENERAL SALES TAX

Unfortunately, however, owing largely to the powerful influence of the Scripps-Howard papers, such an antagonism was aroused against the sales tax that it was defeated. This necessitated the substitution of burdensome excise taxes on particular industries and nuisance taxes which were so obnoxious during the war in the endeavor to raise the necessary revenue to balance the Budget. Moreover, both in the House and Senate there were inserted tariff duties ostensibly for the purpose of raising revenue but in reality for the purpose of prohibiting foreign imports from coming into competition with certain domestic industries. Strangely enough the most vehement advocates of these embargo tariff duties have been members of the Democratic Party who have bitterly assailed the moderate duties of the Hawley-Smoot bill and who have advocated the tearing down of our protective tariff in the interest of our foreign trade.

RECORD OF THE HOUSE TO DATE

The House of Representatives has thus passed all the appropriation bills, except the second deficiency bill and the so-called "economy bill," making a total saving of over $562,000,000 in Government expenditures over the present fiscal year. It has also passed a revenue bill which has been somewhat improved and made less burdensome to business in the Senate and in conference between the two branches. The conference report on this bill has been adopted by both Houses and the bill has been signed by the President. In other words, in spite of the unfair attacks upon its membership, the House of Representatives with promptness and dispatch did its part in balancing the Budget. The delay that has been universally complained of has been entirely due to the inaction of another body, which has the unique distinction of being the only parliamentary body in the world that has no effective means of limiting debate.

QUACK REMEDIES

I stated in my opening remarks that when a person is taken ill, quack remedies are often suggested by well-meaning friends that are certain to render the condition of the patient worse rather than better. In the present "repression," as Amos calls it, there are three such remedies to which I desire to call attention.

First. It is seriously urged that we should immediately repeal or greatly reduce our protective customs duties on imports from abroad, and bitter attacks have been made in both Houses of Congress against the iniquitous Hawley-Smoot bill enacted by the last Congress. With the possible exception of the McKinley Tariff Act of 1890 no law has been so misrepresented as the Hawley-Smoot Tariff Act.

Of all the thousands of items in the existing tariff laws only about one-fifth were changed at all. Where increases in duties were made, they were justified by conditions and in many cases were inadequate to prevent the closing of American industries. I can say without fear of successful contradiction that if the Hawley-Smoot bill had not been enacted when it was, in New England there would be twice as many persons out of work as there are at the present time; and the same is true to a greater or less extent throughout the country. Moreover, under the improved flexible provisions of the law, if any particular duty is too high, the President on the recommendation of a bipartisan commission can reduce the rate of duty or vice versa. The best proof, however, of the fact that the proposed drastic reduction of tariff duties is a quack remedy lies in the fact that the Democratic leaders who have so vehemently advocated it, now that they have the power, do not dare to try it in the present crisis for fear that it will make the patient worse instead of better.

The second quack remedy that has been suggested is to so-called "debenture" or export bounty on agricultural commodities to aid the farmers. One great trouble with American agriculture has been an overproduction of certain staple commodities, such as wheat and cotton, and the same thing has been true of oil and other mineral products. In my opinion, the inevitable result of an export bounty would be to encourage more overproduction.

I have already referred to the fact that the worst result of the World War, so far as this country is concerned, was the overexpansion of our agricultural and manufacturing industries. In 1914 we were suddenly called upon to supply the allied countries with the things that 30,000,000 men who were called to the colors had produced. It was inevitable that just as soon as the war was over and those countries began to produce again for themselves our foreign export trade would fall off by leaps and bounds. Moreover, the European countries were bound to enact tariff acts of their own, just as our own country did in 1789, both for the purpose of raising revenue and for the protection and encouragement of their own industries. This, and not our tariff policy, is the sole cause of the decline in our export trade.

The third quack remedy that has been urged is a drastic reduction in wages and salaries. While in cases where salaries and wages were abnormally high, reduction might have been wise, the effect of the general policy of wage and salary cutting that has been going on throughout the country, instead of improving conditions, has steadily made them worse. Every time the storekeepers of a community cut the wages of their employees, they simply diminish the purchasing power of the community, their sales fall off, more employees have to be discharged and another cut becomes inevitable. If they keep on long enough, they will simply put themselves out of business.

To his everlasting credit be it said that President Hoover has never advocated any general reduction of wages any more than he has advocated the other two quack remedies.

REAL REMEDIES AND CONCLUSION

But what can be done to remedy the present distressing situation?

In the first place adequate relief by a sane and comprehensive plan, such as has been suggested by President Hoover, must be provided for taking care of the millions of unemployed men and women and their families.

In the second place the credit of the Government of the United States must be maintained unimpaired by balancing the Budget by means of wise economies in administration and by increased taxation that is least burdensome to the country. To accomplish this I again urge that Congress empower the President to reorganize the executive departments in accordance with the provisions of my bill, H. R. 9492, and I sincerely regret that the manufacturers' sales tax was not incorporated in the revenue bill which has just been enacted.

In the third place we should recognize the futility in competing in the markets of the world in the production of commodities which other countries can produce much more cheaply for themselves and confine our production of those commodities to the protected American market which has always consumed over 80 per cent of all we produce, confining our export trade to those things in which we are ahead of other countries, and which other countries therefore desire to purchase. This can be accomplished by the encouragement of cooperative associations and the limitation of production with the possible application, in the case of agriculture, of some such device as the equalization fee.

In the fourth place, no return of prosperity can be hoped for until there is a rise in commodity prices. The reason why prices of commodities are so low is because the farmer and the manufacturer are making no profit, but on the contrary, are selling their products at a loss. Now, prices depend upon the amount of money and credit in circulation. At the present time, there is a contraction or deflation due to the hoarding by the people on account of bank failures and by the unwillingness of banks to extend credit. Both of these phenomena are due to fear. Fear is the greatest deterrent to recovery from disease whether it be physical or economic. This fear must be removed. It was in order to remove this fear that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and the Steagall banking bills were passed by Congress. Moreover, the Federal Reserve Board has been carrying out the policy directed by the Goldsborough stabilization bill in an effort to expand the currency. If the banks continue to hoard their funds on the plea that they must remain liquid, in spite of the fact that the Government is doing all it can legitimately do to protect them, then in addition to the enactment of the Federal home loan bank bill now before the House, it may be necessary to expand the currency safely by the purchase of silver with the issue of Treasury certificates, behind each of which shall be a gold dollar's worth of silver bullion, as suggested by the gentleman from Nevada [Mr. ARENTZ]. This would provide an expansion of the currency without jeopardizing the gold

Finally, we must reorganize our whole banking system by compelling all banks to join the Federal reserve system, with very much more stringent requirements for the maintenance of reserves, or by permitting branch banking, or by both these expedients, to the end that the savings of the people shall be safe. The fact that throughout this world-wide depression there have been no bank failures in Great Britain, where there are a few large banks with branches throughout the kingdom, is a phenomenon worthy of serious consideration.

Moreover, our whole economic system must be so reorganized that the owners of capital and the consuming public shall no longer reap the entire benefit of the installation of labor-saving machinery. To bring this about reserves against unemployment must be created by industry or a 5-day week and a shorter workday must be inaugurated. If necessary, both these expedients must be resorted to in order that the distress and suffering incident to unemployment on a large scale shall be eliminated once and for all in this favored land of opportunity.

In short the great mass of our people must have the satisfaction of enjoying not only the necessities but also the comforts of the American standard of living during their working years, and the reasonable certainty of security in their old age; or, to use the language of our able and far-seeing President, "Undeserved poverty must be abolished," if our American system of constitutional government with its

the Budget by means of wise economies in administration | fundamental principles of individual liberty and individual and by increased taxation that is least burdensome to the | initiative is permanently to endure. [Applause.]

Mr. EATON of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I welcome the appearance of this legislation before the House as perhaps the first legislation during this entire session that begins to reach the people who are actually in need. I am not sure that this objective will be successfully achieved, but we are at least taking a step in the right direction.

In my home State I have been following the tragedy of home foreclosures. Whole pages of local papers given over to announcements of homes being sold at sheriff's sale—obituaries of all that men hold most sacred in life. In one community I recall 23 foreclosures of little homes in one week. Up to that moment those 23 homes were 23 anchorages to windward, real and effective social insurance of our whole economic and social structure. The day those families were set out in the street you had 23 rebels, and fully justified in their rebellion, against conditions over which they had no control and which undermined every vestige of loyalty and confidence which they had in the institutions of their own country.

I sincerely hope this bill will become law to-day and that we will pass it on to the Senate and that the relief which it promises will be speedily applied to that great group of people in this Nation who are its backbone, the owners of little homes, not the palaces of the rich, not the hovels of the proletariat, but these little homes that represent all that is sanest and best in our American life.

We are working under two delusions in this country. The first is that a part is greater than the whole. Here we have been for six months wrestling with groups and cliques who have been determined to have passed into law something that would benefit them, regardless of its effect upon the Nation as a whole. It would seem that we no longer represent individual citizens but organized minorities, hunting like wolves in a pack and threatening dire retribution if their behests are not obeyed.

The second delusion is that Government can now do for the American people what for 150 years they have been doing for themselves. We have built up here the greatest social structure the world has ever seen. It has given the common man the largest opportunity in life, the highest level of comfort, the widest freedom, the most absolute justice. We are the most hopeful experiment in social progress that the world contains, and we have built up this vast and complex structure on American principles, the principle of individual initiative, of private ownership of property, of equality of opportunity, and legal status for all. We began with the notion that no government ought to do anything for a man that he can do for himself. To-day we have reached a time of chaos, distress, and fear, and everywhere every class of Americans are turning to their governments for assistance and control instead of turning to their own resources and their own powers in the fashion of their

Mr. KELLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EATON of New Jersey. I can not yield now. I want to pursue this subject further, and in the few moments allotted to me leave these gems of thought with you.

Mr. Speaker, I have here, and I hope the Chair will permit me to present it because it is the utterance of a dear friend of his, this statement from the Washington Times, appearing at its masthead:

The Washington Times and other newspapers owned by William Randolph Hearst demand on behalf of their readers that the Government give the veterans jobs or the bonus now.

What does he mean by the Government? No government has anything to give away. All any government can spend, it has to take out of the taxpayers if they can stand it, and Mr. Hearst, who nominated our distinguished friend for the Presidency—which may have been more of a liability than an asset—Mr. Hearst, whether he knows it or not, means by the Government the taxpayers of this country. The taxpayers of this country are in revolt now; they have got about all that they can stand. The Government to-day in this country, if we are to remain America, will have to abandon the Russian idea of taking charge of the people, and we must begin again to let the people do under their own power and with their own resources what they have done for 150 years-create, develop, and preserve the things that make life precious and worth while.

Mr. KELLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EATON of New Jersey. If the gentleman desires to help me in this speech, I will be glad to yield.

Mr. BLANTON. He is a theorist; I would risk him. Mr. EATON of New Jersey. Is he really a theorist?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes. Mr. EATON of New Jersey. In spite of that damaging accusation, I will run the risk of one question if it is not

Mr. KELLER. Can the gentleman tell us what caused this depression?

Mr. EATON of New Jersey. My beloved brother, if I could answer that question, I would be the wisest man in the world, but I will tell you what caused it, in my judgment.

Mr. KELLER. I wish the gentleman would tell us.

Mr. EATON of New Jersey. I believe that the world stands to-day in the twilight zone between two ages, the old age in which for centuries we have been building nations, and a new age in which mankind has got to build a world. This new age, under the inspiration of the Christian religion and the progress of scientific knowledge, has been made necessary by a changed emphasis in social thinking. The time is here when the human being as such has achieved a new value in the thought of men in public and private life, and from now on the new political and social principles and the new economic principles will put the man before the dollar. [Applause.]

Mr. BLANTON. Can the leopard change its spots in the Republican Party?

Mr. EATON of New Jersey. Now, friends, the gentleman from Texas is always most generous to all of us. He persists in helping us right through every one of our speeches with absolute impartiality; but I am going to ask him to make an exception and let me toddle through this statement on my own feet and under my own power.

Mr. BRITTEN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. EATON of New Jersey. I yield.

Mr. BRITTEN. Does not the gentleman seriously think the World War is about 95 per cent responsible for the condition of the world to-day?

Mr. EATON of New Jersey. I think the World War was the inevitable explosion of a worn-out social, political, and economic structure which has crashed in every country and in every civilization. The World War was the tearing down of the old buildings which had become too cramped to house an expanding civilization. In the period of inflation and deflation, of confusion and distress since the war, the world is trying to determine what kind of a new building will best meet our needs.

I believe that in the long march down the ages man has been making progress toward the light, and out of this present gloom, out of this chaos and suffering there will come a golden age in which men shall count more than money and humans more than institutions. [Applause.]

Gentlemen, you and I stand at the crossroads. I hate this abominable governmental despotism that Mr. Hearst proposes to fasten on us. It is un-American, and right here we have got to make up our minds once and for all as to whether in the long future we are going to follow those American principles that have made us the hope of the world or whether we shall adopt Russian principles. [Applause.] As for me, I choose the principles that have made us what we are to-day. I am not willing to have the Government everything and the citizen nothing. I prefer the ancient American plan of keeping the Government the servant of the citizen and not his master.

With these inadequate remarks I will conclude, and I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, we have had manifested here this morning an evidence of how some gentlemen, who are seeking the opportunity to find excuses, may seize upon a very innocent episode or incident in order to undertake to turn the matter to their own partisan political advantage.

Beside me in this seat sits a gentleman—an honored Representative of his people-who has served in the House of Representatives for almost a third of a century. I dare say there is no man in this House freer from unworthy partisanship than the distinguished gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. Poul. [Applause.] He is a man who has served his country, his people, and humanity.

Simply because, forsooth, in presenting this rule this morning he took occasion to depart from a discussion of the mechanism of the rule and the proposed bill to assert what he felt was an imperious necessity resting upon the Congress of the United States to undertake in the closing hours of the Congress to do something to make it possible for the Chief Executive of this country to prevent starvation in America-and that is all he said-the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Michener] seized upon it as a predicate for saying that politics had been injected into this debate. The gentleman from North Carolina did not mention the name of the President of the United States. The gentleman from North Carolina did not mention any man who was opposed to the principles he asserted. All he did say, in substance and in spirit, was to express the impulses of a great heart that the representatives of the American people in this hour of desperation should not overlook what be conceived to be their duty to make some provision against the desperate days that might lie ahead of us. [Applause.]

Then my able and genial friend from Indiana [Mr. PURNELL] took up the echo and deprecated the injection of politics into this discussion and he himself laid an indictment against the Democratic administration of this House and of the Commttee on Banking and Currency. He said that although the President had suggested this legislation in December last that those who are responsible for the control of the House had waited until the 10th day of June to bring it here for consideration. I charge the gentleman from Indiana to go over to the other Chamber and consult with his senior Senator whom, I imagine, the President requested to introduce this identical bill in the Republican Senate last December, and up until this good day it has not even been reported out of the committee in the Senate of the United States. [Applause.]

Mr. PURNELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. PURNELL. I will say to the gentleman that I have consulted with my senior Senator almost every day and he phones me at least twice a day urging action by the House on this bill.

Mr. BANKHEAD. But the gentleman did not castigate the senior Senator from Indiana or the Republican organization of the Senate for their delay, whereas it is stated that the Democratic organization of the House has been remiss in the discharge of its duties as regards this important legislation.

That is but characteristic of everything that has occurred in this Congress from the very beginning, namely, that of undertaking to disparage and to discredit by innuendo and false statements, particularly in the press of this country, that we were not attempting, for partisan reasons, to cooperate with the administration in the discharge of our duties to the American people.

I am willing to discuss politics, as far as I am concerned, if the opportunity offers, from now until the close of this session-however, not to the disparagement of the passage of necessary legislation, because I think the American people in this campaign are going to want to hear a great deal about politics, and I think my friends on the other side are well within their prudence in seeking to put the soft pedal on any discussion of the frailties of the administration. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

DONATION TO THE VETERANS

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to make a statement for about one minute. It is a rather cheerful statement.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to address the House for one minute. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I have just been informed that $5,000 has been donated to the veterans who are here in Washington by the Rev. Charles E. Coughlin, of the Church of the Little Flower, of Detroit. Father Coughlin is well known throughout the country, and it might well be stated that he is a real progressive. I think the reverend doctor is to be thanked and congratulated for his patriotic and generous act. [Applause.]

JOHN HANSON, PRESIDENT OF THE CONTINENTAL CONGRESS

Mr. LONERGAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LONERGAN. Mr. Speaker, early American history has repeated many times the romantic story of colonization, has unfolded with scholarly application the founding of Virginia by the Cavaliers, the settlement of New England by the Puritans, of Maryland by the Catholics under Lord Baltimore, of the Carolinas by the Huguenots, of New York by the Dutch, and of Pennsylvania by the Quakers. Almost obscured in the annals of the Nation is the equally romantic story of that band of hardy souls who set out in accordance with a plan proposed by their late king. Gustavus Adolphus, to found a new colony on the American seacoast to be known as New Sweden.

It is not the purpose of this address to go into the history of their early struggles but only in passing to record the fact that such a colony was established on the Delaware River in 1638, that it was augmented in 1642 by a group led to these shores by Johan Printz in 1643, that the colony expanded and pushed into Maryland and that the grandson of a member of that latter group was destined to play one of the stellar roles in the young Nation's struggle for independence. It is to this latter personage, John Hanson, who, history tells us, was the first "president of the United States in Congress Assembled," that is, the first President under the Articles of Confederation, that this address is devoted.

In the expedition which sought a foothold in the new world were four brothers, sons of the distinguished Colonel Hanson who fell at Leutzen in Saxony in the same engagement which had cost the life of King Gustavus Adolphus. The youngest of the four brothers, John Hanson established his family in Charles County, Md. His son Samuel was elected a member of the General Assembly of Maryland in 1716 and 1728 and served his community in several other official capacities.

This same Samuel Hanson was the father of the John Hanson about whom this address is centered. From his father no doubt John Hanson derived those distinct marks of character which brought him to a high place in later years among his countrymen. Always devoted to the highest ideals of service, stalwart and unmoved in the face of opposition, courageous and undaunted in any fight which appealed to him as just, the young man quickly ascended to a place of prominence in the stirring days into which fate

John Hanson was born at Mulberry Grove, Charles County, Md., on April 3, 1721. He was a member of a large family, many of whom rendered exceptional service in the cause of the country wherein they had had their birth. delegate from Charles County to the lower house of assembly, in which he served nine terms. There he acquired that maturity of mind which thereafter was to remain a marked characteristic of his personality. A man of great personal magnetism, sound judgment, intellectual, honest, he won for himself a considerable following when with his family he took up his residence in Frederick County.

Through his leadership the growing dissatisfaction of the people with the oppressive British rule was crystallized into active revolt. His was the dominating spirit which actuated a small band of patriots in Maryland to openly espouse the cause of rebellion against "the Crown." The movement, given impetus by him, grew until Maryland had definitely severed all allegiance to the mother country and was actively engaged on the side of the revolutionists. It should be stated that allied with John Hanson was that illustrious patriot and Catholic, Charles Carroll of Carrollton, signer of the Declaration of Independence, one of the country's richest men, who unstintingly gave of his great fortune to the cause of freedom. It is also worthy of notice here that when the State of Maryland was delegated to choose its two most distinguished citizens for honor in Statuary Hall in the National Capitol the State selected John Hanson and this same Charles Carroll.

Under John Hanson's insistence Maryland gave the New England States assurance that its citizens would back them to the limit in their fight against British tyranny. Hanson organized the Association of Maryland Freemen in 1769 which pledged its moral, financial, and armed support, if necessary, to the cause of free speech and colonial resistance to the imposition of taxes without representation. At the Maryland Provincial Convention it was he who determined the course of that body to stand by the other colonies in their grievances against Great Britain. It was he who organized two companies of infantry and sent them to Cambridge following the outbreak of hostilities at Bunker Hill. From that time on he continued zealously in the prosecution of the war by arranging for the manufacture of munitions and army equipment and by organizing every resident of the county as a prospective soldier in the event of war. It was Maryland's participation in an aggressive undertaking of this kind that encouraged the other colonists, more especially those in the South, to join the New England group in its fight for freedom.

During the years 1779 and thereafter we find John Hanson, now approaching the three-score mark, engaged in a wholly new rôle. Maryland, again under his leadership, had refused to sign the Articles of Confederation until the question of the western domain was settled by Congress. George Washington was engaged in the prosecution of the war but in the Halls of Congress John Hanson was also doing battle for a principle, the determination of which was of everlasting importance to the integrity of what has since come to be the United States. Vast lands in the Far West were claimed as the property of such States as Virginia, New York, Connecticut, Massachusetts, and a few others. son maintained that these territories be given for all time to the new country then in the making. Naturally a tremendous outcry arose against such a proposal. A crisis of far-reaching effect on the future of the Nation was precipitated.

John Hanson saw the crisis with its multifarious implications. He appreciated the fact that only through union could the perplexing question be solved. He set to work to remove the obstacles which stood in the way of the principle to which he so stoutly adhered. The Delegates of Maryland in Congress were subsequently empowered to subscribe to and ratify the Articles of Confederation. Hanson and Daniel Carroll, who stood with Hanson throughout the controversy, signed the document on March 1, 1781, which was the beginning of the indissoluble union of the United States. This accomplished, he took up the fight on the western land question, which was eventually settled according to the judgment of Maryland. Out of that vast territory which became the common property of all the States arose the States Young John himself first came to notice in public life as a of Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Michigan, and a part of Wisconsin.

Three times thereafter Hanson was elected to the Continental Congress, and after his third election was elevated to the position of President of that body. It was in this capacity that he felicitated General Washington following the surrender of Cornwallis at Yorktown. He subsequently retired to private life. Of a clear mind, stout heart, and incorruptible conscience, he had given his score of years in brilliant service to the Nation. He died at Oxon Hill, Prince Georges County, Md., November 22, 1783.

His life, more dramatic in its scope, moving in broader fields of endeavor, and perhaps more richly rewarded, was the epitome of the stalwartness, courage, and vigor of the lives of those who made up that little band of pioneers from the shores of Sweden. America has benefited greatly by the infusion into its life stream of other men and women from that same shore. From Hanson to Charles Augustus Lindbergh, the names of eminent personages of Swedish origin and descent have been placed high upon the honor roll of this Nation's great.

True to their Viking tradition, Swedish officers manned not a few of the ships, particularly those flying the flag of France, during the Revolution. History, to be sure, gives but a scanty account of the naval operations of the period; but that it was essential and of great consequence to the successful culmination of the war there can be no doubt.

Incidentally, it was Sweden which, as a neutral nation, first recognized the independence of the United States. On April 3, 1783, that country signed a treaty of amity and commerce with the new Nation.

During the conflict General Washington had under his command any number of officers and men who were direct descendants of the Swedes of Delaware. From extant records it is concluded that about 70 officers were in the Continental Army. Two of these, Count von Fersen, aid to Rochambeau, and Colonel Von Stedingk, were elected to the Order of the Cincinnati, of which Washington was the first president. Baron von Fock, Baron Nordenskjold, Magnus Daniel Palmouist, Carl Raab, and the distinguished John Morton, signer of the Declaration of Independence, were but a few of those whose names were indelibly inscribed on the roll of honor.

It was the late President Wilson who, in writing on the memorial to Capt. John Ericsson, inventor of the Monitor, that "cheese box on a raft" which did so much to turn the course of the Civil War, stated:

It is pleasant to think how the United States has been enriched by the character and services of men of Swedish birth or extraction who have made this country their home and the object of their loyal service.

In Philadelphia, on June 5, this year, at the dedication of the John Ericsson room of the John Morton Memorial, John M. Morehead, American minister to Sweden, reminded his audience that "more than one-quarter of the Swedish race lives in America, and Chicago and Minneapolis are, respectively, the third and fourth largest Swedish cities in the world." Congressman Carl A. CHINDBLOM, of Illinois, was one of the principal speakers at this event.

Any recital of the contributions of the Swedes to the life of America must, of course, include the names of the intrepid warriors, General Stolbrand and Rear Admiral Dahlgren, who cast their lot with the forces of the North for the preservation of the Union during the Civil War. In the recent World War the names of Swedish patriots were legion.

Not in war alone, however, have the Swedes of the United States attained distinction. Their contribution to literature and the arts in general has been great. The names of Jenny Lind, Christina Nilsson and, in our own day, Greta Garbo and Marie Sundelius, of operatic fame, at once come to mind. In statecraft, too, they are to be found in positions of eminence. Two States, Minnesota and Montana, have as their governors men of Swedish ancestry. They are, respectively, Governors Floyd B. Olson and John E. Erickson. Former Governor John Johnson, of Minnesota, of course, has not only a place in the history of his State but in that of the Nation as well.

The Swedish people have added their great talents and genius to the complex social phenomenon called America. Industry in the East has had the advantage of their skill and mechanical aptitude. The far reaches of the West have been turned into fertile and prospercus lands under their patient and caressing hands. Legislative halls, State and national, have rung with their glowing oratory in defense of those essential American principles to which each and all have given their allegiance. From John Hanson to our own distinguished contemporaries, they have acquitted themselves as a great people.

FEDERAL HOME LOAN BANKS

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12280) to create Federal home loan banks, to provide for the supervision thereof, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 12280, with Mr. Celler in the

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Steagall] will yield, I now yield 30 minutes of the time allotted to me to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Strong] to yield as he sees fit to those in favor of the bill

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman— Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, this is a very important speech and I make the point of no quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will count.

Mr. BLANTON. I withdraw the point, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I think my statement will not be controverted when I say that during this unusual session of Congress I have not wasted the time of this House in the discussion of politics. I do not believe any committee of Congress that ever assembled at any time in our history, and I say this remembering the trying days of the World War-ever worked more industriously, more unceasingly, or with less manifestation of partisanship than the Banking and Currency Committee of this House has worked during the present session.

Our committee has not delayed any legislation. We met in December. The committees of this House were named on Tuesday, on Wednesday the Banking and Currency Committee took up the Federal farm loan legislation and considered it in committee, on Thursday we reported the bill, and on Saturday we took up the bill in the House and it was passed and sent over to the Senate.

The House Banking and Currency Committee prepared and presented to the House and the House passed the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act ahead of the Senate, and the measure as it was enacted into law was the House bill that bears the number and the name of a Member of this House under which it was introduced.

The same was true of the so-called Glass-Steagall bill.

So it is with the bill before us to-day. The Banking and Currency Committee of the House, the larger legislative body, where there are more difficulties and more reasons for delay, has brought the bill before the House ready for passage, if you see fit to pass it, while it is still slumbering in committee at the other end of the Capitol, now under the control of the Republican Party and its administration. [Applause,]

The plain fact is there is only one charge of delay that can be justified against anybody who is in a position of responsibility in connection with the unhappy situation that confronts the country. That charge can only be lodged against the President. I do not say this in any spirit of through which he is passing at this time. As a good citizen and as a Member of the legislative branch of the Government, I want to support him, and I do not desire to add to his problems or to his difficulties; but the record shows that the President of the United States is responsible for several months of delay. Although urged by Democratic leaders and the public, he waited throughout last summer and fall to give the Congress an opportunity to meet and go forward with the relief program which he had announced to the country.

This is the history of the matter. I have supported the President in all his general suggestions except one.

I did not support the program of our debtor nations in Europe and the international bankers who speak for them here in urging postponement or repudiation of the debts due the people of this country by our allies. These debts represent loans made to them to support their armies when they were engaged in a struggle for the preservation of their lives. If there ever was an obligation, moral or legal, that ought not to be repudiated, it is this one, and I believe the economic difficulties of this country and the world were aggravated by the program put over by the international bankers who committed this country, at least temporarily, to the postponement, if not to a repudiation, of these obli-

The governments of the world should set an example of good faith. They should never have declared their inability to meet their obligations. It was not true, in the first place, and it was not good policy. It has accentuated the difficulties under which we suffer in the United States and throughout the world. I am against it. I am not a communist. I am not a communist here, I am not a communist abroad, and this doctrine that we should give to everybody across the sea who happens to claim he is in distress, this proposition that when some other nation is not able to pay its debts we have got to come in and share their burdens; this doctrine that we are all one and we all stand and fall together, and that their problems are our problems, and their obligations are our obligations is nothing but sheer, downright international communism! I repudiate any such doctrine as a domestic principle and I repudiate it as an international policy.

I followed the President with a great deal of difficulty in the effort to enact the legislation embodied in the bill before us. I will state to the Members of the House that one of the most difficult tasks that has ever been assigned to the Banking and Currency Committee since I have been a member of it was in the effort to put this bill into workable form. I am heartily sympathetic with the purpose of the legislation, as I am sure most of the Members of the House are. I want to do anything in my power that will enable the home owners of this country to continue to own their homes. There are some left who are at least in possession of their homes, and I share with you the desire to assist in any practical measure that will help them to continue to use them as shelters for their children, whether they ever own them or not. Nothing is more inseparably linked with our future welfare and all that patriots hold dear than independent home ownership. It makes for the development of the qualities of morality and patriotism that will preserve Unhappily, home ownership is on the decline. Home owners in towns and cities, like the home owners on our farms, are being driven from shelter, and their homes sacrificed in this period of depression, involving losses to the companies holding home mortgages as security as well as citizens, who are borrowers. All this is due to the nation-wide breaking down of credit. Home ownership and home life, both in the towns and on the farms, are being undermined. I hope that this legislation will meet with a better fate in its administration than has the legislation we passed in the early portion of this session of Congress, designed to save the homes of the farmers of this country.

The Congress amended the Federal farm loan act to provide methods and appropriated $125,000,000 to supply the harsh criticism; I appreciate his difficulties and the trials means to enable the Federal land banks to use common sense and leniency in conducting foreclosures. The purpose was to save the homes of the people and avoid unnecessary and inexcusable losses to the land banks. But the law has not been administered as Congress intended. It has been perverted or disregarded.

There are fewer mortgages being carried by Federal land banks than were carried last November and the banks have less mortgages outstanding than they had then. In addition the land banks have more lands on hand than they had then. This is the result of an administration of the banks conducted with first consideration for the bondholder instead of the farmer home owner of the United States. I am going to support this bill in the hope that it will be more sympathetically administered than the legislation for the aid of farmers who are indebted to the land banks and that will give some measure of relief to home owners throughout the country who are threatened with foreclosure.

In order to hasten the proceedings, with the stupendous program of legislation pending in the Committee on Banking and Currency, we have had four subcommittees at work at the same time, and one of the subcommittees prepared the bill before us. The distinguished gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Reilly] was chairman. He has given able and earnest consideration to the measure and I am going to permit him to follow me in this discussion. I now yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. REILLY]. [Applause.]

Mr. REILLY. Mr. Chairman, the pending measure is designed to carry out one of the recommendations made by President Hoover in his message to the Congress of the United States last December in the fulfillment of his program for the bringing about of a revival of industry.

This bill is intended to create a system of Federal homeloan banks that will serve the home-mortgage institutions of the country as the Federal reserve system serves the national banks of the country. This measure is intended as emergency legislation deemed necessary as a result of the present financial and industrial situation and also as a permanent legislative enactment to encourage home owning in the country, by giving the home-mortgage institutions an opportunity to borrow money on their assets to a greater extent than is possible under present banking and borrowing conditions.

I take it that every well-informed citizen is favorable to any legislative program that will aid in home ownership. Statistics indicate that home ownership in the United States is declining and that we are drifting into a Nation of tenants. The principal reason assigned for this unfavorable situation is the lack of a sufficient amount of low-cost, longterm installment mortgage money. At the present time there are more than $20,000,000,000 of mortgages on the small homes of our country. About eight billions of these mortgages are held by building and loan associations, and the balance by banks, insurance companies, and private Home mortgages constitute sound securities; but because of the depressed conditions and because of the existing financial situation, particularly as regards the loaning attitude of the banks, many of these home-mortgage institutions are in need of financial assistance in order that they may continue to function, and such assistance is intended to be given to these institutions by the pending bill.

The largest number of home-mortgage institutions are represented by the building and loan associations and similar cooperative institutions. These institutions number about

The building and loan associations have two classes of membership, the investing membership and the borrowing membership, of which there are about 10,000,000 of the former and 2,000,000 of the latter. Many of the 2,000,000 borrowing members of the building and loan associations are unable to keep up their payments because of unemployment, and many of the investing members of these institutions, also because of the unemployment situation, are in need, for living purposes, of the funds that they have invested in these home-building institutions, but because of the present financial situation these organizations have no funds with which to meet such withdrawal demands.

This situation arises largely from the fact that the banks are refusing to loan to such institutions, and, in fact, are calling loans already made.

A similar bill to the measure now before the committee is pending in the Senate. A subcommittee of the Senate and the House conducted extensive hearings on these bills, at which hearings some 83 witnesses were examined; 61 witnesses representing 22 States in the Union appeared for the bill and 22 witnesses representing 13 States appeared against the bill. Twenty-two officials of the building and loan associations appeared in favor of the bill and two in opposition. The active heads of the National Building and Loan Association and many well-known figures in the real-estate field appeared in behalf of the bill. General Dawes, of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, urged the passage of this legislation. The representatives of the large life-insurance companies and mortgage companies appeared against the bill. The bankers appearing at these hearings stood 6 for the bill and 6 against.

In the fall of 1931, at the invitation of the President of the United States, there assembled in Washington a conference of the leaders in the home-mortgage field in the United States and representatives of the building industries. This conference approved the plan for the creation of a system of Federal home-mortgage banks as provided in the bill now before the committee.

Last January, in order to find out the needs, if any, for legislation, such as we are considering, the Secretary of Commerce sent out questionnaires to about 8,000 banking institutions and mortgage-loan companies of the country to get their views on the legislation proposed in this bill. The questionnaire contained the following four questions, which are particularly significant:

- 1. Would the facilities provided by the proposed home-loan discount banks for borrowing on your home mortgages add desirable flexibility and security to the conduct of your institution?
- 2. Would operation of the discount banks increase the amount of credit now available for legitimate use in your community?
- 3. Is there a demonstrable need for actual home construction, either new houses or remodeling work, that could be undertaken in your community if credit facilities were widened at the present time? If so, could you estimate the probable extent of such contemplated construction?
- 4. Would the facilities afforded by the proposed discount banks help to relieve the dangers of foreclosures on urban homes and farms?

The following tables give the answers to these four questions as made by the institutions to whom questionnaires were sent:

	Question 1		Question 2		Question 3		Question 4

Accompanying the quesstionnaires sent out to these 8,000 institutions engaged more or less in the home-mortgage business was a statement containing the essential provisions of the bill now before the House.

The answers to the questionnaires sent out by the Department of Commerce clearly indicate that the great majority of the institutions in active touch with the home-mortgage situation are of the belief that the pending bill constitutes needed and beneficial legislation.

These answers, coming from such business heads, ought to settle the question as to the need for the legislation proposed in this bill. OUTLINE OF THE PROPOSED BILL

This bill provides for the establishment of a system of Federal home-loan banks of not less than 3 or more than 12 in number. The Federal home-loan districts are to be determined by the Federal Home Loan Board provided for in this bill, consisting of five members to be appointed by the President.

Building and loan associations, cooperative banks, homestead associations, savings banks, trust companies, and other banks with time deposits, except national banks, and insurance companies, if subject to inspection and regulation under the banking laws or under similar laws of the State or the United States, are eligible for membership. The members will supply the permanent capital and upon joining a bank will be required to subscribe for stock amounting to 1 per cent of the home mortgages held by each such member, with a minimum amount of $1,500.

Eligible institutions in States whose present laws do not permit stock purchase are admitted to borrowing privileges by deposit with the bank of cash or Federal Government securities equal to the amount of the required stock subscription. This will be permissive pending the enactment of State legislation authorizing full compliance by subscribing institutions with the provisions of the act.

The board will determine the minimum capital of each of the Federal home-loan banks, which will not be less than $5,000,000. As soon as practicable thereafter, the board will open books in each district for subscriptions to the capital stock of each district bank, to be paid for in cash or by certified check. Subscriptions can be paid on a quarterly basis. The amount of the minimum capital not subscribed for by members within 30 days after the books have been opened for stock subscriptions is required to be subscribed by the Secretary of the Treasury on behalf of the United States. It is provided in the bill that the funds for this purpose are to be furnished by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, in a sum not to exceed $125,000,000, upon which the Government receives 2 per cent interest. Provision is made whereby, after the amount of capital of a Federal home-loan bank paid in by the members equals the amount paid in by the Secretary of the Treasury, the bank is required to apply annually to the payment and retirement of the capital stock held by the United States 50 per cent of all sums thereafter paid in as capital until all the stock held by the United States is retired at par. The Federal board has full power to retire Government capital earlier, if conditions warrant.

Each of the banks is to have 11 directors, 2 appointed by the Federal board, 3 elected by the small-sized members, 3 by the medium-sized members, and 3 by the large-sized members. All directors are appointive until the members investment is substantial. These 11 directors have the usual and full powers with regard to the conduct of each of the 12 institutions.

All members may borrow from a Federal home-loan bank by placing mortgages with the bank to secure loans. More money is advanced on amortized installment mortgages of a term of eight years or more than is advanced on straight mortgages or mortgages of shorter duration. In no case can the amount advanced by a bank exceed 40 per cent of the value of the real estate. No mortgage on a home of a value greater than $20,000 is accepted. The banks can not advance to any member an amount in excess of twelve times the amount of the capital subscribed by the member. The bonds issued by each bank are secured by seasoned realestate home mortgages, with not less than 190 per cent of unpaid mortgage principal behind each dollar of bond issued. Some short-time loans out of capital subscribed by members are permitted without mortgages being placed as collateral, but funds realized from bond issues can not be so loaned.

The board prescribes all the necessary rules and regulations with regard to the bond issue and the conduct of the banks. The board approves or determines the rates of interest to be paid by the banks upon their bonds or borrowings, and a maximum rate of 5½ per cent is established for the first seven years, after which it is to be 5 per cent. The banks are jointly and severally liable on the bonds; and in order to keep the banks in proper condition to serve their membership, they are required to have an amount equal to the capital subscriptions of their members invested in (1) United States Government securities, (2) deposits in banks or trust companies, and (3) short-term loans to members.

The principal funds of the banks come from (1) capital subscriptions of their members; (2) the issue of long-term bonds, which have limited tax preferences; (3) the initial Government advance, which is to be retired as members come in; and (4) through such deposits as are made in the banks by members only, upon which no more than 2 per cent interest can be paid. These deposits will be entirely of surplus funds of members. The banks are specifically restrained from doing any general banking or commercial banking business. Their functions are confined solely to serving member institutions.

The act requires the banks to accumulate reserves at higher rates than are required in the Federal reserve system. The banks are exempt from taxation and are designated as a depository of public moneys, and their bonds are made legal investments for fiduciary, trust, and public funds.

Broad powers are given to the Federal home loan bank board in regulating the activities of the banks and in providing for the orderly conduct of home-financing activities throughout the country. The board has broad powers in selecting officers, employees, attorneys, and agents, although no compensation is permitted in excess of the salary paid board members. The board has powers of examination and can require periodical statements as well as examinations of Federal home-loan banks and their members. Necessary penalty clauses, and so forth, are provided.

BENEFITS TO FOLLOW PASSAGE OF THIS BILL

If this bill becomes a law, it will enable member institutions of the Federal home-loan banks to secure loans on their seasoned home mortgages, which can and undoubtedly will be used for the following purposes:

- (1) To refinance existing mortgages, so as to permit smaller payments and to accommodate the needs of withdrawing members and depositors,
- (2) To give these institutions funds, permitting them to tide over or carry along worthy borrowers who are having difficulty meeting interest or installment payments.
- (3) To assist borrowers in paying taxes and insurance costs, which must be maintained regardless of conditions.
- (4) To provide funds for modernization, repairs, and maintenance of existing homes, thus increasing employment.
- (5) To provide a source of funds to refinance the thousands of short-term mortgages which have been called for payment due to bank failures and due to like financial institutions converting their resources into liquid funds. Thousands of home owners are in distress for mortgage money to-day.
- (6) For such building of small homes as may be desired and needed in many localities, thus giving employment to those engaged in the building trades.

In connection with this last point a misrepresentation has been circulated concerning this bill. It has been alleged that the design of the measure was to facilitate the construction of 3,000,000 homes. Neither the testimony given before the committee nor a study of the provisions of the measure give any credence to such generalization. True, there may be occasion for some construction, but that will be only incidental and can not come in substantial amount until after the emergency situation is passed.

It is particularly important that the people who have put their savings in the home-financing institutions of the country be afforded relief through this measure and that the dispossession and foreclosure sales on small homes due to the drying up of mortgage money be stopped immediately.

This bill has been designed both to take care of this emergency situation and to function as a permanent institution, thus eliminating to a large extent the probability of a recurrence of the present distressing conditions in the homemortgage field.

While the pending bill is intended as an emergency relief measure for home-financing institutions, it is also believed that it will be helpful as permanent legislation in the interest of home owners. Statistics indicate that in the last hundred years more than 8,000,000 homes have been purchased through the aid of these cooperative building and loan associations.

The investment in the homes of our country is a significant and imposing portion of our national wealth. Funds for home builders should be available at low costs and in liberal amounts at all times. The home owners should not be subject to the vicissitudes of the general money market.

The small communities as a rule are without sufficient normal funds for home-financing demands. In years when there has been ample money in some parts of the country there have been high interest rates in other parts.

This proposed home loan bank bill will provide a banking system which will stabilize the home-financing activities of the country and provide a mechanism through which mortgage funds will flow more freely into the areas where it is needed with resulting benefits to present and prospective home owners.

Some years ago Congress saw fit to provide through similar legislation for the organization of the Federal land-bank system and also for the setting up of a system of Federal joint-stock land banks in this country. Both of these institutions, the Federal land banks and the joint-stock land banks, have mortgages in the sum of only $1,600,000,000, while the building and loan associations and other cooperative mortgage institutions alone have home mortgages in the sum of about $8,000,000,000. There can be no doubt at all but that the Federal land banks and the joint-stock land banks have been instrumental in lowering interest rates in a great many sections of our country, and thereby have been of benefit not only to the borrowers of these banks but to all the agricultural borrowers.

This bill will furnish to the much larger army of small-home owners in ordinary times borrowing facilities that will be beneficial to the small-home owners and to prospective home owners.

OBJECTIONS TO THIS LEGISLATION

On the hearings on this bill before the Senate subcommittee and the House subcommittee the objectors presented four reasons why this bill should not become a law:

(1). It further intrudes the Government into private business.

This argument is no more available against the present bill than against the Reconstruction Finance Corporation legislation recently passed by Congress. The same argument was made against the Federal reserve system, the Federal land bank system, and the intermediate credit bank system.

This is emergency legislation demanded by the financial and economic conditions existing to-day in our country.

The bill provides for the gradual withdrawal of Government funds from these banks; and when this emergency is passed, the members of the bank are undoubtedly going to furnish all the capital required to operate the same.

(2) There is no lack of funds at the present time for the use of home-mortgage institutions, and therefore no necessity for this legislation.

The voluminous testimony taken before the Senate committee and the House committee having consideration of this bill conclusively demonstrates that there is a great demand at the present time for more funds for the use of the home-mortgage institutions of the country. Many of these institutions in the past have depended upon loans from their local banks.

The banks for some time have been refusing to loan money to these institutions, and not only that but in many cases have called loans formerly made. The fact of the matter is that many of the home-mortgage institutions are greatly in need of funds. They have plenty of good securities, but because of the depression they lack liquid funds, and this bill provides a method by which they may secure such funds.

(3) If there is any demand for funds to aid in the functioning of home-mortgage institutions, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation can take care of all such demands.

General Dawes, president of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, appeared before the subcommittee of the House Banking and Currency Committee and approved this bill.

The Reconstruction Finance Corporation has to date advanced several millions to building and loan associations and has requests for many millions more on file. However, the short-term loan requirements of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation are not adaptable to the needs and demands of the home-mortgage institutions.

Judging by the statements of the leaders of the homebuilding industries of this country made before the committee of the House and the Senate, the funds that will be required by these institutions are way beyond any sum that could be furnished by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. It was estimated by competent witnesses that at least $1,000,000,000 would be required to relieve the home-loan institutions of this country so as to put these institutions in a position so that they could meet the demands for legitimate withdrawals, for refinancing mortgages, for repairs and remodeling of buildings, and for new construction wherever deemed necessary.

(4) That the bill will encourage unhealthy home building. This statement is wholly unwarranted. There is nothing in the hearings of this bill to substantiate any such a claim. Sound, conservative home-financing institutions are not going to finance a home-building boom to the detriment of investments already made and which they hold.

The funds secured by these home-mortgage institutions from the banks set up by this bill will be used largely for the six specific purposes set forth in the early part of this

(5) That the bonds of these banks can not be sold.

If the bonds issued by these Federal home-loan banks can not be sold, no bonds can be sold. These securities will represent prime securities. The borrowing members can not secure advances in excess of 40 per cent of the appraised value of the real estate covered by their mortgages. This means the value at the time the advances are made to the members and not at the time the mortgages were made; and behind every dollar of bonds issued will be 190 per cent of unpaid mortgages. It is submitted that these bonds will represent the best possible securities.

PROPOSED LEGISLATION NOT NEW

Legislation of this character has long been considered. During President Wilson's second administration, under the sponsorship of his Secretary of Labor, Wilson, the first home-loan bank measure was proposed and the Banking and Currency Committees of both Houses considered it at that time. There has been a continued interest in and need for an agency to serve the small home owner and home buyer in the cities and small towns, much after the fashion that the Federal reserve system serves the commercial interests of the country and the Federal farm-loan system serves, or supplies credit to, the farmer. The need for the home mortgage discount banks has been much accentuated by the present economic conditions.

EUROPEAN EXPERIENCE WITH MORTGAGE BANKING SYSTEMS

Most European countries, including France, Germany, and Sweden, have a central mortgage banking system. In general, they contain practically all of the principles that are embodied in the Federal home-loan bank system. Their initial capital has usually been provided by the Government and in several cases the Government directly guarantees their obligations. Principal funds come from the issue of long-term bonds. These bonds enjoy a particularly popular market and sell upon approximately the same basis and interest cost as direct Government obligations. The bonds are backed by the obligation of the issuing mortgage banking system and mortgages used as collateral. Usually the mortgages used as collateral do not exceed 50 per cent of the value of the property and the amount of bonds that can be issued by each system is regulated. Additional funds come from deposits.

There is vigorous Government supervision and governmental agencies are practically in charge of most of the mortgage banking systems. A surprisingly low cost of operation is universal, the entire costs of the long-established systems being paid out of the spread of one-half of 1 per cent to 1 per cent between cost of money on bonds and lending to member institutions.

To a large extent the institutions serve cooperative banks or credit societies, some of them being similar to our building and loan associations. In several of the systems the service of the mortgage banking system is decentralized through branches or banks established in different localities but functioning under the central authority.

The systems make loans of varied duration, although preference, or the larger advances, are made upon amortized or installment loans of long duration rather than upon straight loans. Most of the banks do such general banking business as is closely connected with mortgage banking.

As a result of these mortgage banking systems in Europe, there has been a more even supply of credit for European real estate, and practically without exception the purchasers and owners of real property in Europe obtain their mortgage funds at rates from 1 to 2 per cent lower than those which prevail in this country.

The pending bill may not be a perfect piece of legislation, but the subcommittee and the whole Banking Committee have labored long and faithfully to present to this House what we consider a workable bill. This bill may not accomplish all the purposes for which it is intended, but there can be no doubt at all but that at the present time it will provide relief to thousands of home-mortgage institutions and to millions of men and women who, either as borrowers or investors, have their savings and home mortgages in such institutions.

Mr. HARLAN. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. REILLY. I yield.

Mr. HARLAN. Did I understand the gentleman to say that when the mortgages were brought to these central banks, Federal banks, those Federal banks would have the power to issue money on those mortgages?

Mr. REILLY. No. These Federal land banks issue debentures on these mortgages, just as the Federal land bank

Mr. HARLAN. The other question I would like to have cleared up is, for this money that the Federal Government turns over, does the Federal Government receive debentures. or is this simply a gratuity or an advancement by the Federal Government?

Mr. REILLY. The Federal Government receives a certificate for its advancement and is paid 2 per cent on all money advanced to these Federal home loan banks. We have recently passed legislation giving the Federal land banks $125,000,000. No interest charge is made on this advancement to the Federal land banks. The committee thought it advisable to put an interest charge of 2 per cent against the banks on all money advanced by the United States Government. The theory is that the Government will be gradually withdrawn from these mortgage banks and that if the system works out as it is intended to work out, it will not be long before the banks will be financed entirely by their own member institutions.

Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REILLY. I yield to my colleague for a brief question. Mr. MAY. I am inclined to support the bill, but I am just a little skeptical about one feature of it, upon which I would like to have some information, and I am sure the gentleman can give it to me.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Wisconsin be allowed to answer this question. The House wants to know about it, I am sure.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Kentucky that unless the chairman of the committee extends additional time, he can not answer, because the time is under the control of the chairman of the committee.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman from Wisconsin time in which to answer the question.

Mr. MAY. The bill provides for two different classifications in the matter of institutions, a member and a non-member borrower. Why this arrangement?

Mr. REILLY. In many States, institutions otherwise eligible to become members of a Federal home-loan bank are not permitted by the laws of their States to purchase stock in other institutions such as the Federal home-loan bank. In order to take care of otherwise eligible home-loan mortgage institutions in these States the bill provides for two classifications of members—first, a regular member who can purchase stock under the laws of his State; and the other a nonmember borrower, who can get all the privileges of members in one of these banks by putting up securities in lieu of purchasing stock, but who can not become a member under the laws of his State.

These nonmember borrowers do not become members of one of these Federal home-loan banks; but having complied with the requirements of the board in putting up securities, they are open to all the privileges of the bank from a borrowing standpoint.

Mr. MAY. Let me ask one more question. This bill provides no means by which an individual can borrow money on a mortgage on his home from one of these banks?

Mr. REILLY. No. The home owner must secure his mortgage from some institution eligible for membership in this bank.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, I filed a minority report to the bill.

I am in entire sympathy with the purposes of the bill, but there are certain matters contained in it which I endeavored unsuccessfully to eliminate when we were in committee but by a very narrow margin, I believe about a tie vote, on each amendment I lost.

I have always intended to deal candidly with my colleagues both on the floor of the House and in the committee. Therefore I did not reserve my objections but put them in a report which I filed and in which certain other gentlemen joined. I am going to take just a minute to discuss them and that is the principal discussion which I expect to make.

The first objection is to the inclusion of Hawaii and Alaska in the bill. Those Provinces, Territories, or whatever you choose to call them, are beyond our usual land laws.

In the first place, Alaska is not building homes to amount to anything, and it is not in condition to have the purposes of this bill extended to it. A bank situated probably at Seattle or San Francisco would have to have jurisdiction in the matter of inspection. Alaska is so remote that I deemed it unwise to undertake to go to the foreign field with this institution until we tried it out at home where our population is more or less stable and where our land values and our land titles and our supervision are more nearly within our grasp.

Hawaii, of course, makes more appeal than Alaska because they have building and loan associations in Hawaii, but it is a long way to go to get a few associations in, and I predict that if they are engrafted on it we will have something the same situation we have in Puerto Rico, because they induced us to put a branch of the Federal Land Bank down in Puerto Rico.

Mr. HOUSTON of Hawaii. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEVENSON. I can not yield; I have but 10 minutes.

There is no difference between establishing a land bank which embraces Hawaii and one which embraces Puerto Rico or the Virgin Islands which were before us this morning wanting a national bank established, or the Philippine Islands. I content that this system should be tried out in the United States where we are able to supervise it, and where it is right at our door.

Mr. BEAM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEVENSON. I am sorry, I can not yield.

My second objection to the bill is that there has been included State banks and trust companies, and insurance companies in the membership of this institution.

We have abundantly provided for the banks by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, but you will remember this is an institution to handle long-term land loans, that long-term land loans are the prerequisite to their being in here, you will see the reason for my contention that it is a vice to induce the banks and trust companies in this country who take deposits on demand to be tying up their assets in long-term land loans. It is contrary to every principle of sound banking, and that has been demonstrated by the most terrific situation into which we have gone.

I opposed the extension of the land-loan business to the national banks. I am opposed to it and have been, constitutionally, ever since I was in the banking business more than 30 years ago. It is a mistake to induce them to unite with and become members of an institution whose favored land mortgages amortize at eight years. They have no business in here, and all over this country they are loaded up with these mortgages that will be eligible to be used in this institution, and the building and loan associations will be just the same stepchild they have been under the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act. They are small; they have not the power; they have not the representation. The banks and insurance companies will get all the assets, and the associations will simply get what is left.

Mr. PARSONS. Will the gentleman yield for a brief question?

Mr. STEVENSON. I can not yield to the gentleman; I have but 10 minutes.

The other proposition to which I object is in section 10, on page 24, which makes this provision:

Each Federal home-loan bank shall at all times have an amount equal to the sums paid in on outstanding capital subscriptions of its members, plus an amount, equal to the current deposits received from its members and from nonmember borrowers, invested in (1) obligations of the United States—

That is all right.

(2) deposits in banks or trust companies-

That is as far as I want the banks and trust companies to get into this thing. Now, this is the thing to which I object—

(3) advances with maturity not greater than one year made to members or nonmember borrowers, upon such terms and conditions as the board may prescribe, and (4) advances with maturity not greater than one year made to members or nonmember borrowers the amount of whose creditor liability (not including advances from the Federal home loan bank) does not exceed 5 per centum of such member or nonmember borrower's net assets, which advances may be made without the security of home mortgages or other security, upon such terms and conditions as the board may prescribe.

In other words, we are establishing home-loan banks; and it is provided that if the board sees fit it can take every cent of the money that is paid in for stock by the stockholder members and loan it on securities that are not home mortgages at all and on no security if the board sees fit. I propose to offer to amend that by providing that all such loans shall be fully and amply secured. That is an invitation to take $1,500—which is the limit a member can get in onfrom each of them, and much more in places, and loan it to anybody who wants to go on the stock market or use it for anything else if the board sees fit. You say the board would not do that because this is a different proposition. However, we have boards and boards and all sorts of boards. Those are the main objections which I have to the passage of this bill.

Now, the last objection I had was to the tax-exemption business. When this bill was brought from the subcommittee into the full committee it had absolutely tax-exempted them from every kind of taxes. I made the contention we had gone far enough in the tax-exemption business when we are scraping the bottom of the coffin and the top of the house to get enough money with which to balance the Budget. I contended it was time we stopped that kind of thing, and then the committee very cheerfully agreed to make them subject to surtaxes, gift taxes, and inheritance taxes, the same as in the case of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. However, I am still opposed to that feature of it. I propose to move to strike out all of the tax-exemption business. However, I do not hesitate to say I would not want to kill the bill if that were not done; but I do not think it should be in there. I used to think we ought to grant a good many of these tax exemptions, but I have come to the conclusion that Mr. Mellon came to 10 years ago, that we ought to stop the issuance of tax-exempt securities in this country, so that the concentrated wealth of this country can not be hidden from the tax gatherer when we have times like these, when we have to go after all of the taxpayers of this country. [Applause.]

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. WILLIAMS].

Mr. WILLIAMS of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, this bill creates a board of five with authority to establish not less than 8 nor more than 12 Federal home-loan banks, with a minimum capital of $5,000,000 each. Such of the following institutions as have State inspection may become members of one of the home-loan banks: Banking and loan associations, banks and trust companies, and insurance companies. Any institution to become a member must subscribe for 1 per cent of the unpaid principal of its home-loan mortgages, but not less than $1,500. That part of the minimum capital of each bank not subscribed within 30 days by the above-mentioned institutions shall be subscribed by the Secretary of the Treasury in an aggregate amount of not exceeding $125,000,000. Each Federal home-loan bank shall be managed by a board of 11, 2 of whom are appointed by the Federal Board and 9 of whom are selected by the members. Each member institution within the limitations prescribed may secure advances or loans from the bank upon the note or obligation of the member secured by home mortgages and the stock of the member in the bank. Each Federal homeloan bank shall have power to issue bonds bearing a rate of interest to be determined by the board and secured by a deposit of home mortgages, the unpaid balance of which shall equal 190 per cent of the amount of outstanding bonds: to borrow money; to receive deposits; and to make loans. There is a joint and several liability on the part of the banks for the payment of the bonds. The capital and surplus of and the bonds issued by the banks are exempt from Federal, State, and local taxes, except surtaxes, gift, and inheritance taxes.

The Federal board shall determine whether the State law, regulations, or inspections are adequate to protect the operations of the bank in each State, and if, in its opinion, they are not satisfactory, the board may establish such inspection at the cost of the member institutions of that State, or withhold the operation of the bank in such State.

The usual boards, officers, employees, attorneys, and agents are provided for, together with their compensations, and $500,000 is authorized to be appropriated to take care of travel and subsistence expenses, rents, printing, newspapers, periodicals, books, maps, telegraph, reporting and telephone services, and other preliminary expenses.

The bill provides for an outlay of $125,500,000 on the part of the Treasury and puts the Government squarely in the banking business as a partner with the mortgage-loan institutions of the country, the United States furnishing most—if not practically all—the money. What stock is not subscribed for within 30 days by the member institutions the Government must take and pay for in cash. It is a deliberate attempt on the part of the Government to dictate the laws and policies of every State concerning the organization, management, and control of every mortgage-loan concern in the country. It sets up another nation-wide chain of costly and expensive boards, agencies, officers, agents, and employees. It proposes to scatter broadcast another series of tax-exempt securities depriving the Government of further taxes and adding to the already depressed bond market.

There is no general nation-wide urgent need for this extensive and expensive system. Most of the institutions eligible for membership in the system are against it; only a very highly organized few are for it.

It is purely institutional, as distinguished from individual. Only institutions can become stockholders or borrow money. No individual can own a share of stock or borrow a dollar. The need where it exists is purely local, and can and should be taken care of by State legislation. The need for help that can not be met by State law can be satisfied by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. The aid will be to the big loan institutions of the Nation and not to the home owners. The institutions of only a few of the States can come into the system, because the law does not permit the building and loan associations or banks to purchase stock in another corporation. The real estate laws and the laws governing the management and powers of building and loan associations and banks of the various States are so different and conflicting that it would be impossible to get together mortgage securities which would form the basis for a legal bond issue, and the bonds would not sell. The home owner who needs help can not and will not be helped by this legislation. Many of the institutions that are unliquid and unsound can not, or at least should not, be helped by this legislation.

There is a great appeal in this measure, and it seems to be devised not only for the purpose of helping certain loan agencies and interests in the country but it may have some vote-getting qualities. It would be fine to go out to the voters and say, "I advocated the home-loan bank in order that all who desired could obtain the funds with which to build a new home or remodel or refinance one already built." It is desirable that all should own a home, a place where a family is reared, a place where the saintly influences of mother and the tender counsel of father shape the manhood and womanhood of the future, a place where love rules and peace and contentment abide-a nation of comfortable, neatly furnished, and well-equipped homes is the ideal condition to be attained. This measure will not lead us to that end. There is no need deceiving ourselves or trying to mislead the people. The desired help will not come through this legislation.

It is said that this system is modeled after the Federal farm-loan plan, and that since the Government has passed the law under which the Federal farm-loan banks and the joint-stock land banks were organized and subsidized, this act should be passed to aid home owners. If no better or sounder reason than that can be given, then this measure should fail. The land banks were organized to help the farmer, to furnish him credit, to enable him to own a farm through the amortized loan plan. What happened? The entire land-bank system with all its Government aid and subsidy is carrying only 12 per cent of the farm loans of the Nation. When this ruinous panic came, when this devastating depression was upon us, when the farmer was compelled to sell his products at a price below the cost of production, when he could not meet his tax, interest, and installment payments, when he needed credit and an extension of time, did the land banks come to his aid? Instead of helping, they found their own bonds selling for almost nothing, and instead of helping the farmer they came before Congress begging and pleading for help; and this Congress was compelled, almost as its first act last December, to give the Federal land banks of the country $125,000,000 to save the system from ruin. This money was given with the idea that extension of time would be given the farmers in which to make payments, and, new loans would be made This was not done. According to the where necessary. reports of the Federal land banks there were 3.995 fewer loans March 31, 1932, than September 31, 1931; that the banks owned $3,102,000 more real estate in March of this year than they did in September last year, and that they had over $24,000,000 less loaned to the farmers after we gave the banks the money than they had before. The money was not used to help the farmers, but evidently to help the bond market and the bondholders. In the light of such recent experience, is it possible we are to establish a system of banks to loan money to certain mortgage-loan institutions in the belief and with the hope that any of it will reach the needy home owner.

In these times, when there is an earnest and a determined effort to effect economies in government, to consolidate boards and coordinate related governmental activities, it seems inopportune to set up another national system of banks with all its attendant and costly boards, officers, attorneys, and agents. We are to start this institution off at the expense of $125,500,000 to the Treasury. There is not much consolidation or much economy in this measure.

Will it help the home owner? Its primary purpose is not to help the home owner, but to pay off the investors in the building and loan associations. This statement is upon the authority of Morton Bodfish, executive manager of the United States Building and Loan League. In his testimony before the Senate committee this appears (pp. 87, 88, Sen-

Senator Watson. Of all the borrowers of the country, how many have defaulted?

Mr. Bodfish. I do not know.

Mr. Bodfish. We have not had a great number in our building and loan associations. It has been one of the things that has helped the associations through this depression period. Home owners seem to make these monthly payments with surprising regularity and tenacity. I think it is a splendid vindication of the long-term amortized home-mortgage-loan principle or plan. Senator Warson. I do not see, then, the necessity for the passage of this bill to aid building and loan associations, if you are running right along. A man will pay these loans and his life insurance to the exclusion of everything else, will he not?

Mr. Bodfish. True; but, Senator, we have a large number of people who saved their money in our associations and saved it for a rainy day. Due to lack of confidence they want their money at the present time.

Senator Warson. That is, the investors not the Senator Watson. Is there any considerable number? Mr. Bopfish. We have not had a great number in our building Senator Warson. That is, the investors, not the borrowers? Mr. Bodfish. The investors; not the borrowers. Senator Warson. Yes.

Mr. Bodfish. Building and loan associations are not suffering, in my judgment.

There are 10,000,000 investors or shareholders in the building and loan associations where there are 2,000,000 borrowers, and Mr. Bodfish, the executive manager, says the borrowers, the home owners, are not suffering. The money is needed to pay off the investors. It is very desirable for every individual who has his money in an unprofitable or an unsound business to be able to get his money out of that business. But I do not believe that the Government should go into partnership with an institution and furnish the money in order that some of the stockholders of that institution can get their money. Mr. Adams, before the Senate committee, expressed a doubt if the President ever read the bill, and the further belief that there was not a "dollar's worth of relief in this bill for the home owner."

Many banks and building and loan associations find themselves in an unsound and an unliquid condition because-

First. Loans were made on inflated values and on a narrow margin.

Second. Many home owners when credit was easy were induced to borrow and to build beyond their means.

Third. Shareholders were induced to invest their money on the promise of large and certain dividends.

Fourth. In periods of prosperity when money was plentiful large dividends were paid and no reserve was built up.

This bank system can not and should not help this situation. The home owner who borrowed on an inflated value and on a narrow margin finds himself in possession of property whose market value is not equal to the amount of the mortgage due to-day. How can this plan help him when it does not permit him to borrow more than 40 per cent of the value of his property?

The man who borrowed and built beyond his means finds himself in possession of property that he is not able to maintain and not able to make the payments on the mortgage because he has lost his job, his wages have been reduced, or he is working on only half time. These are the men in need of help, but I ask you, How can this or any other sound financial institution help them? As much as it may be regretted, it can not be done. The hearings reveal that there is ample money for conservative, sound mortgage loans. It has been charged over and over again that when the Federal land banks were established many bad, unsound loans were unloaded upon those banks. It is barely possible that an attempt may be made to do the same in this case. This plan will not help the needy home owner. In fact the executive manager of the United States Building and Loan Association says the borrower is not suffering. According to the same authority, the building and loan associations themselves are not suffering. He is quoted by the New York Times as saying:

Evidence of a gradual return of confidence among savings inrestors throughout the country is reported for the United States Building and Loan League through Morton Bodfish, its managing director. He says investors in building and loan associations increased by 10,527 in February, a figure which exceeds by more than 30 per cent the average monthly gain of 7,897 during the boom year of 1929.

If there is a national need for legitimate home loans, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation was created for the purpose of meeting that need. The very institutions which are asking for help in this measure are specifically mentioned in the Reconstruction Finance Corporation actbuilding and loan associations, banks, and insurance companies. This corporation has been in operation only four months. It has scarcely had time and a chance to see what it can do. Only this week the House passed a measure enlarging its scope and increasing its funds a billion dollars. Still we are now asked to pass another bill giving specific aid to building and loan associations, banks, and insurance companies. Is it any wonder that we have men encamped in this city demanding payment of the bonus? In all the anxiety for the big-business interests of the country the man on the street and on the highway seems to have been forgotten. It is claimed by the proponents of this measure that the building and loan associations can not borrow from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. What is the fact? When the officers of the corporation were before our subcommittee about the 1st of April the loans to building and loan associations were between $4,000,000 and $5,000,000. In a statement issued by General Dawes on April 19 the loans had reached over $17,000,000, and to-day the loans of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to building and loan associations are over $38,000,000 in amount and have been made to over 300 institutions in the country, and they are going right ahead. All the sound legitimate needs are being met by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. There should be something to a sound, conservative financial institution besides borrowing money. Mr. Hall, of St. Louis, a member of the legislative committee of the United States Building and Loan League, when before our committee, said that borrowing was only an incidental part of the building and loan business. I observe from the press that a large building and loan association in our State recently failed. Was it on account of not being able to borrow money?

It developed that it had over $1,000,000 borrowed, ten times as much as the average loan by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to the building and loan associations of the Nation. It is further claimed that building and loan associations in some States can not borrow from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation because the State laws do not permit the pledging of their securities as collateral for loans. That exact argument holds good against this measure. the building and loan associations can not borrow from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for that reason, neither could they borrow from these banks, if they were established, for the same reason.

The needs are more or less local. The demand for mortgage money is much greater in certain localities than others. There are few building and loan associations in some States; a great many in other States. Practically half of the building-and-loan-association business is done in three States-Ohio, Pennsylvania, and New Jersey. In normal times through all the years building and loan associations have parts of the country that is still true. Local banks, insurance companies, building and loan associations, and mortgage bankers in ordinary times have taken care of realestate loans. Upon a return to normal times they can do so again, even if they are not able to successfully and efficiently cope with the present situation. The conditions being different in each State, why not let the States provide a mortgage-loan system?

New York has a State land bank called the Savings & Loan Bank of New York, which functions well, and has for a number of years.

Massachusetts, by acts of March 2, 1932, created the Mutual Savings Central Fund (Inc.), and the Cooperative Central Bank. These are central banks the capital of which is obtained from reserves and deposits in the savings and cooperative banks of that State, which are similar to building and loan associations. The funds in the central banks thus established are loaned to the savings banks or cooperative banks of the State just as is proposed by this bill. Here are State institutions just set up under State law and with capital provided by the State banks which serve all the emergency needs of the cooperative banks of that State. A similar proposition is pending in New Jersey. If New York, Massachusetts, and possibly New Jersey can provide State central banks to relieve the situation, why not the rest of the States?

What is known as the guarantee stock plan is principally in use in California, Oregon, and Colorado. Kansas has what is known as the permanent or contingent reserve stock plan, the purpose of which is to act as a reserve.

If these States can provide a safe and liquid system of building and loan associations even in periods of depression, Ohio and Pennsylvania and other States might do the

The real estate laws in all the States are more or less different. Homestead and dower laws vary. The form of mortgage and acknowledgment and the effect of recording the mortgage may differ. The time and manner of filing mechanics' liens are not the same. Methods of foreclosure and rights of redemption are at variance. The amount which member institutions can borrow in different States under the laws thereof, as well as the amount of collateral which may be put up and the purposes for which the money may be borrowed are different. There is a wide difference as to negotiable or assignable paper and reserves that must be carried. With all these differences, variations, and conflicts in the State laws, it will be difficult, if not impossible, to establish a workable national system and bring together in one group strictly legal mortgage assets to furnish the foundation for a nation-wide bond issue.

In how many States will the law permit building and loan associations and banks to subscribe and pay for stock in the Federal home-loan banks if this bill becomes a law? This question has been often asked but never answered. It may be stated generally that banks and building and loan associations can not purchase stock in other corporations. To be sure, the laws of the States may be changed if the legislature sees fit to do so. How many would come in until the law is changed and take the chance of going out at the end of 42 months it is impossible to tell.

Mr. Hall, a member of the legislative committee of the United States Building & Loan League, filed with the subcommittee a statement giving the law of most of the States as received by him from the secretaries of building and loan associations in the different States. From this report it appears the member institutions in 9 States are eligible to become members of the Federal home-loan banks and enjoy the full benefits, that institutions in 22 States are not eligible to enjoy the benefits of membership, 5 States are in doubt. and 12 States did not report. This statement shows that in the following States building and loan associations will be prohibited from participating in the full privileges of the Federal home-loan banks until the laws are amended:

In Maine and Nebraska they (building and loan associations) can not borrow money for any purpose. In Missouri, had all the loans they wanted from the banks, and in many Illinois, Oklahoma, Florida, Iowa, and Pennsylvania the mortgages of the building and loan associations are nonnegotiable and can not be pledged as security for loans. In Vermont the mortgages are negotiable, but the State law does not permit their pledge or assignment as collateral security. In Indiana the mortgages may be assigned with the approval of the circuit court. In Alabama securities may be pledged as collateral for borrowed money, but the money can be used only to pay off shares and certificates presented for withdrawal and can not be used for the benefit of the borrower. In North Dakota the law permits the assignment of mortgages as security for borrowed money, but the collateral must not exceed one and one-half times more than the amount borrowed, less than the amount required in this bill.

> Kansas permits building and loan associations to borrow, but does not permit them to borrow for the purpose of making loans to members unless the loan is obtained from some other building and loan association. A decided difference of legal opinion exists as to several provisions of the Massachusetts law and an effort has been made to clarify the situation by new legislation. However, the new central State banks have been established in this State as heretofore pointed out. In Idaho, while the mortgages are negotiable, the law prohibits borrowing for any purpose. In Montana the associations can borrow money, but can not pledge mortgages without consent of the banking department, and then only in the event the margin of security pledged shall not exceed 25 per cent of the funds borrowed, which is less than this bill provides for. In California the borrowing capacity of the associations is limited to 5 per cent of their total assets and the unpaid balance of the mortgages pledged shall not exceed 150 per cent of the amount borrowed. In New Jersey there is no specific provision allowing or prohibiting assignment of mortgages, and a great difference of opinion exists among lawyers on this point. In Minnesota associations have no power to assign mortgages as security and the attorney general and banking department are of the opinion that the associations can not use their mortgages as collateral to borrow money. In Georgia there is no law to prohibit associations from pledging mortgages, but the practice has been to hold them in the offices of the various associations. In Arkansas the law is uncertain and an amendment is to be presented to the legislature. In Washington all mortgages of the associations are placed in trust with the State department for the benefit of members and can not be pledged to borrow money. In North Carolina the practice is to borrow on unsecured note without collateral, and opinion is that laws must be amended. In Michigan the law is uncertain and may have to be amended. In Colorado the practice is to pledge mortgages as collateral security, but this only gives the pledge a prior lien for repayment on the proceeds of such collateral when collected in the usual way, but does not permit the sale of such collateral.

> A letter from the executive secretary of the Wisconsin Building and Loan League, written since the hearings closed, states that "building and loan mortgages in Wisconsin are secured by nonnegotiable bonds and mortgages," and further states, "So far, we are not interested in the Federal home-loan bank because we believe our associations have borrowed too much money already."

> In addition to the above States, Maryland and South Carolina can not come in under the general provisions of the law for the reason that their building and loan associations are not subject to State inspection. There is a provision that permits them to come in for a period of 42 months in order to give the legislature a chance to change the law in regard to inspection. There is also a provision by which members who can not pledge mortgages as collateral may obtain advances with maturity not greater than one year from the capital stock of the bank but not from the proceeds from the sale of bonds. These provisions are efforts in a measure to satisfy conditions in certain States in order to secure support for the bill. These widespread differences and the conflicting and confusing provisions of the State laws emphasize the difficulty, if not the impossibility, of establishing a national system of home-loan banks. The various States may change their laws to permit the various institutions to enjoy full membership in this system if it is established. Some of these changes are not mere matters of form. They involve fundamental local policies and principles. That the mortgages of building and loan associations shall not be pledged as collateral for borrowed money is regarded by many as the greatest safeguard thrown around the institutions. Whatever the States may think of their policy, this measure says to them, "You must fit into the mold made for you in Washington if you get any benefits from this law."

This bill should not become a law for the following rea-

There is no such general national demand or need for Federal home-loan banks either to meet the present emergency or as permanent institutions to justify their establishment at the expense of the Government.

The urgent need which may exist at the present time in certain sections can be and is being met by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

Such States as desire can set up a central land bank credit pool upon a sound and liquid basis to meet all local demands. Some of the States have done this.

A commission has been authorized to inquire into governmental activity in business. This measure puts the Government into partnership with the mortgage-loan agencies of the country, the Government furnishing the money for the enterprise.

This measure dictates to every State in the Union what laws it shall pass and what policies it shall pursue concerning the organization, powers, and management of its banks and building and loan associations. It takes away the last vestige of State rights on those questions.

In these days when an effort is being made to consolidate boards and coordinate related activities of the Government, this act establishes another nation-wide system of Federal banks to furnish real-estate credits.

In these days of economy this bill creates another army of Federal officers, agents, and employees at an initial expense to the Government of $125,000,000.

This measure is institutional in character. No individual can be a stockholder or borrow from the banks. It is designed to help the mortgage institutions of the country rather than individuals.

The needy home owner will receive no aid. It is intended primarily to help investors and stockholders.

The real estate laws of the various States are so different and the laws governing the loan institutions are so conflicting and confusing that a national system is not feasible. Under such conditions mortgage securities can not be brought together to furnish the basis for a sound legal bond issue.

The bonds of the banks can not be sold at such a price as to furnish cheap money to the member institutions. The spread between the interest paid by the banks on their bonds and the interest charged their borrowers must pay the running expenses of the banks and of making the various loans, and must provide for the reserves and dividends. If any of it should be passed on to the home owner, it would be at an exorbitant rate of interest.

This measure will turn loose another flood of tax-exempt securities to further demoralize the much-depressed bond market.

The institutions of only a few States can become members of the system and enjoy its full benefits without a complete rewriting of the various State laws. [Applause.]

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Luce].

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, if there remains in the Chamber any aroma of partisanship, I shall hope that with the aid of the excellent ventilating system of the House we may dispel every particle of it. During all the months of hard, grinding effort put into the perfecting of this bill, in its consideration there never has been a shadow of partisan opinion or judgment. This I would corroborate by taking the opportunity to make record of my admiration of the work done by the chairman of the subcommittee, Mr. Reilly, of Wisconsin, my appreciation of his mastery of the bill, and my gratitude for his warm support of the proposal. [Applause.]

The bill now bears his name, under the practice that attaches the responsibility for the big measures to the party in control of the House. I do not begrudge him such credit as goes with this; and if more credit could be attached to his work, I would gladly give it to him, for I recall a line in the Rubaiyat of Omar Khayyam, "O take the cash and let the credit go." [Laughter.] As long as we can get this bill, it is to me indifferent how it may be named or who may be accredited with responsibility.

I want the bill for many reasons. First, of course, because it is part of a great financial program to relieve the country in distress. This is primarily an emergency measure. It also, however, anticipates a repetition of emergencies, for the record shows that about every 20 years we have a major depression, with in between a minor depression, and there should always be at hand an opportunity for the home credit of the country to be protected and aided by such an institution as this. The third purpose is that of furnishing a permanent enlargement of the funds available for the building of small homes.

The chairman of the subcommittee has already gone through the detail of the bill, and, as we read it for amendment, there will be further consideration of its technical phases. So in the time I may at the moment give to the bill I would lay the most emphasis on the matter of amendment; and to add to such emphasis, I would tell you something about the history of this measure.

After its preparation in the Department of Commerce. when it was handed to me to introduce, soon it became evident that the bill should be rewritten. To that end a considerable number of men have contributed the most earnest and assiduous labor of which they have been capable. First, I would mention the aid of the legislative drafting service, invaluable in perfecting the technique of the bill. Then, too, we had help from men in the Federal reserve system and the Federal farm-loan system who have been acquainted with the operations of the laws affecting those organizations. We had also the cooperation of men experienced in building and loan matters, officers of the United States Building and Loan League, and for a while those of the National Real Estate Association. The members of the subcommittee put in hours, days, weeks of labor in trying to get the best bill we could. After it went before the full committee, that committee gave from 10 days to two weeks of solid, hard work in ironing out differences and making this bill, as we hoped, bullet proof. Never in a somewhat long legislative experience have I known of a measure that has been more carefully studied in every page, every paragraph, every sentence, every word.

Of course, men who have served long in the House are aware that the amendment stage is the dangerous stage for a bill in the position in which this bill now finds itself. Gentlemen rise on the floor and sometimes without deliberation, often without full information, present attractive amendments that if adopted do great mischief. You can not disturb an adjusted, consistent, coherent measure like this without grave danger. So I would ask the committee to bear in mind that these things have all been studied, and that as the bill now presents itself, it conforms at any rate in matter of administrative detail to the united judgment of nearly all the 21 members of the Committee on Banking and Currency, with surviving differences of opinion in but a few particulars.

When the rewritten bill went to the full committee, it had the approval, both in principle and detail, of four of the five members of the subcommittee. I have already spoken of the efficient contribution by its chairman [Mr. Reilly]. Let me also speak warmly of the labors and helpfulness of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Campbell] and the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. Hancock]. The fifth member [Mr. Williams of Missouri] did not agree with us, but I do not hesitate to attest his sincerity, honesty, and earnestness. He has told you he does not believe in anything in this bill. Such unqualified rejection of the judgment of his associates may determine whether you think his views ought to outweigh theirs.

There are one or two particulars where I am afraid he gave the House a wrong impression. He gave you to understand that we intended to appropriate $125,000,000 to this institution, and also that we recently appropriated $125,000,000 to the Federal Farm Loan Board. We did not give the Farm Loan Board that money. We are not going to give the Federal Home Loan Board that money. We are in each case lending money to be repaid. This bill proposes to lend to the home-loan banks such part of $125,000,000 as the member institutions themselves do not contribute. It is expected that, by the purchase of stock, they will contribute sixty or seventy million dollars. It may be that some or all of the difference between what they contribute and $125,000,000 will be called for as a loan from the Federal Treasury. But it is all to be repaid.

That answers the charge that we are putting the Government in business. We do not put the Government into business any more than we put it into business with the Federal farm-loan system or the Federal reserve system. We furnish the machinery by which the most important institution of our social structure, the home, can be better financed through its own instrumentalities.

We do not own the Federal reserve system; the banks own it. We have oversight, but the ownership is in the banks. And so it is with the farm-loan system.

Now, how will this system help the little fellow? This is the way it works: At the present time there are three-quarters of the 12,000 building and loan associations in this country that are on notice, as it is called—they have no money to pay withdrawals, and they demand a notice of 60 or 90 days. They can not lend anything. They are tied up.

I have a letter from Indianapolis, for example, telling me that the building and loan associations in that city, with $150,000,000 of assets, are closed up tight, so that the stockholders can not get out a dollar.

Mr. PARSONS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCE. I shall be glad to.

Mr. PARSONS. Can not they borrow from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation?

Mr. LUCE. I hope the gentleman will not let me forget to answer him after I have finished this thought. The associations by this bill are allowed to raise cash by rediscount of their best mortgages. That cash will help them meet the request for withdrawals by those who have put money in the association against a rainy day. Also, it will help them to finance a borrowing member, or any man who is willing to join the association and become a borrower.

Now, the question was asked by the gentleman from Illinois whether the associations could not borrow from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

We had General Dawes before the committee. He was asked his judgment in this matter, and he said positively and explicitly that he favored the passage of this bill, and hoped it would become a law.

Why did he say that? Because the Reconstruction Finance Corporation feels that it is able to help the building and loan associations only to enable them to repay what they have borrowed from banks. It does not feel that it is within its province to put additional money into these institutions to be lent or distributed to their stockholders. It will try to save an association from bankruptcy but not to help it to function. That task would be beyond both its purposes and its resources.

The second difficulty is that the obligations of building and loan associations are long-time mortgages, eight years or more, for the most part, and the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is a temporary affair, making short loans, six months, I think it is, which can not fit in with the scheme of the building-and-loan amortization or installment idea. So the men who are conducting the Reconstruction Finance Corporation advise us not to rely upon that body for continuing needs, but wish us to make it possible for the associations to help themselves. I believe therefore we have ample warrant for creating this long-time institution, to meet the particular needs of the class of organizations involved.

Mr. SCHNEIDER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCE. Yes.

Mr. SCHNEIDER. That being the case, just why did they put all of the banks in under this act?

Mr. LUCE. The gentleman makes another inquiry for which I am grateful. When this idea was conceived, it was recognized that through large areas of the country the little local bank is the only financing institution. I agree with the gentleman from South Carolina that we ought not to encourage banks to go into the real-estate business. For a long time I have thought it a weakness in our banking system.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. I yield one minute more to the gentleman.

Mr. LUCE. I wish it were possible to separate completely the short-time commercial paper and long-time mortgage business. When, in reading for amendment, we get to the section concerned, I shall further explain the reasons that actuated the committee.

Mr. KETCHAM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. LUCE. Yes.

Mr. KETCHAM. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Reilly] stated, in connection with the amount that might be borrowed, that that amount was to be judged by the land value of the particular project covered by the mortgage. I notice the language says "real estate." If the land value be only $2,000 and an $8,000 house be built upon that land, the amount that could be borrowed on that by the institution giving the mortgage would be 40 per cent of the total, would it not, and not of the land value?

Mr. LUCE. Oh, it is the real estate, land and buildings combined.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has again expired.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. Twenty-five minutes.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Chairman, at the present session of Congress we have been dealing with emergency situations. We have been dealing with the effect of things rather than with the cause of things. In this particular discussion I shall deal with some of the causes that lead up to these proposals. There are underlying principles which are responsible for conditions such as we have at the present time and I shall deal with one of these in particular which is tremendously important in the consideration that you are now giving to this bill.

Mr. Chairman, we have in this country one of the most corrupt institutions the world has ever known. I refer to the Federal Reserve Board and the Federal reserve banks. The Federal Reserve Board, a Government board, has cheated the Government of the United States and the people of the United States out of enough money to pay the national debt. The depredations and the iniquities of the Federal Reserve Board and the Federal reserve banks acting together have cost this country enough money to pay the national debt several times over. This evil institution has impoverished and ruined the people of the United States; has bankrupted itself, and has practically bankrupted our Government. It has done this through the defects of the law under which it operates, through the maladministration of that law by the Federal Reserve Board, and through the corrupt practices of the moneyed vultures who control it.

Some people think the Federal reserve banks are United States Government institutions. They are not Government institutions. They are private credit monopolies which prey upon the people of the United States for the benefit of themselves and their foreign customers; foreign and domestic speculators and swindlers; and rich and predatory money lenders. In that dark crew of financial pirates there are those who would cut a man's throat to get a dollar out of his pocket; there are those who send money into States to buy votes to control our legislation; and there are those who maintain an international propaganda for the purpose of deceiving us and of wheedling us into the granting of new concessions which will permit them to cover up their past misdeeds and set again in motion their gigantic train of crime.

Those 12 private credit monopolies were deceitfully and. disloyally foisted upon this country by bankers who came here from Europe and who repaid us for our hospitality by undermining our American institutions. Those bankers took money out of this country to finance Japan in a war against Russia. They created a reign of terror in Russia with our money in order to help that war along. They instigated the separate peace between Germany and Russia and thus drove a wedge between the allies in the World War. They financed Trotsky's mass meetings of discontent and rebellion in New York. They paid Trotsky's passage from New York to Russia so that he might assist in the destruction of the Russian Empire. They fomented and instigated the Russian revolution and they placed a large fund of American dollars at Trotsky's disposal in one of their branch banks in Sweden so that through him Russian homes might be thoroughly broken up and Russian children flung far and wide from their natural protectors. They have since begun the breaking up of American homes and the dispersal of American children.

It has been said that President Wilson was deceived by the attentions of these bankers and by the philanthropic poses they assumed. It has been said that when he discovered the manner in which he had been misled by Colonel House, he turned against that busybody, that "holy monk" of the financial empire, and showed him the door. He had the grace to do that, and in my opinion he deserves great credit for it.

President Wilson died a victim of deception. When he came to the Presidency, he had certain qualities of mind and heart which entitled him to a high place in the councils of this Nation; but there was one thing he was not and which he never aspired to be; he was not a banker. He said that he knew very little about banking. It was, therefore, on the advice of others that the iniquitous Federal reserve act, the death warrant of American liberty, became law in his administration.

Mr. Chairman, there should be no partisanship in matters concerning the banking and currency affairs of this country. and I do not speak with any.

In 1912 the National Monetary Association, under the chairmanship of the late Senator Nelson W. Aldrich, made a report and presented a vicious bill called the National Reserve Association bill. This bill is usually spoken of as the Aldrich bill. Senator Aldrich did not write the Aldrich bill. He was the tool, but not the accomplice, of the Europeanborn bankers who for nearly 20 years had been scheming to set up a central bank in this country and who in 1912 had spent and were continuing to spend vast sums of money to accomplish their purpose.

The Aldrich bill was condemned in the platform upon which Theodore Roosevelt was nominated in the year 1912. and in that same year, when Woodrow Wilson was nominated, the Democratic platform, as adopted at the Baltimore convention, expressly stated: "We are opposed to the Aldrich plan or a central bank." This was plain language. The men who ruled the Democratic Party then promised the people that if they were returned to power there would be no central bank established here while they held the reins of government. Thirteen months later that promise was broken, and the Wilson administration, under the tutelage of those sinister Wall Street figures who stood behind Colonel House, established here in our free country the wormeaten monarchical institution of the "king's bank" to control us from the top downward, and to shackle us from the cradle to the grave. The Federal reserve act destroyed our old and characteristic way of doing business; it discriminated against our 1-name commercial paper, the finest in the world; it set up the antiquated 2-name paper, which is the present curse of this country, and which has wrecked every country which has ever given it scope; it fastened down upon this country the very tyranny from which the framers of the Constitution sought to save us.

One of the greatest battles for the preservation of this Republic was fought out here in Jackson's day, when the Second Bank of the United States, which was founded upon the same false principles as those which are exemplified in the Federal reserve act, was hurled out of existence. After the downfall of the Second Bank of the United States in 1837, the country was warned against the dangers that might ensue if the predatory interests, after being cast out. should come back in disguise and unite themselves to the Executive, and through him acquire control of the Government. That is what the predatory interests did when they came back in the livery of hypocrisy and under false pretenses obtained the passage of the Federal reserve act.

The danger that the country was warned against came upon us and is shown in the long train of horrors attendant upon the affairs of the traitorous and dishonest Federal Reserve Board and the Federal reserve banks. around you when you leave this chamber and you will see evidences of it on all sides. This is an era of economic misery and for the conditions that caused that misery, the Federal Reserve Board and the Federal reserve banks are fully liable. This is an era of financed crime and in the financing of crime, the Federal Reserve Board does not play the part of a disinterested spectator.

It has been said that the draughtsman who was employed write the text of the Federal reserve bill used the text of the Aldrich bill for his purpose. It has been said that the language of the Aldrich bill was used because the Aldrich bill had been drawn up by expert lawyers and seemed to be appropriate. It was indeed drawn up by lawyers. The Aldrich bill was created by acceptance bankers of European origin in New York City. It was a copy and in general a translation of the statutes of the Reichsbank and other European central banks.

Half a million dollars was spent on one part of the propaganda organized by those same European bankers for the purpose of misleading public opinion in regard to it, and for the purpose of giving Congress the impression that there was an overwhelming popular demand for that kind of banking legislation and the kind of currency that goes with it, namely, an asset currency based on human debts and obligations instead of an honest currency based on gold and silver values. Dr. H. Parker Willis had been employed by the Wall Street bankers and propagandists and when the Aldrich measure came to naught and he obtained employment from Carter Glass to assist in drawing a banking bill for the Wilson administration, he appropriated the text of the Aldrich bill for his purpose. There is no secret about it. The text of the Federal reserve act was tainted from the beginning.

Not all of the Democratic Members of the Sixty-third Congress voted for this great deception. Some of them remembered the teachings of Jefferson; and, through the years, there have been no criticisms of the Federal Reserve Board and the Federal reserve banks so honest, so outspoken, and so unsparing as those which have been voiced here by Democrats. Again, although a number of Republicans voted for the Federal reserve act, the wisest and most conservative members of the Republican Party would have nothing to do with it and voted against it. A few days before the bill came to a vote, Senator Henry Cabot Lodge, of Massachusetts, wrote to Senator John W. Weeks as follows:

NEW YORK CITY, December 17, 1913.

My Dear Senator Weeks: * * * Throughout my public life I have supported all measures designed to take the Government out of the banking business * * *. This bill puts the Government into the banking business as never before in our history and makes, as I understand it, all notes Government notes when they should be bank notes.

The powers vested in the Federal Reserve Board seem to me highly dangerous, especially where there is political control of the board. I should be sorry to hold stock in a bank subject to such domination. The bill as it stands seems to me to open the way to a vast inflation of the currency. There is no necessity of dwelling upon this point after the remarkable and most powerful argument of the senior Senator from New York. I can be content here to follow the example of the English candidate for Parliament who thought it enough "to say ditto to Mr. Burke." I will merely add that I do not like to think that any law can be passed which will make it possible to submerge the gold standard in a flood of irredeemable paper currency.

I had hoped to support this bill, but I can not vote for it as it stands, because it seems to me to contain features and to rest

I had hoped to support this bill, but I can not vote for it as it stands, because it seems to me to contain features and to rest upon principles in the highest degree menacing to our prosperity, to stability in business, and to the general welfare of the people of the United States.

Very sincerely yours,

HENRY CABOT LODGE.

In the 18 years which have passed since Senator Lodge wrote that letter of warning all of his predictions have come true. The Government is in the banking business as never before. Against its will it has been made the backer of horsethieves and card sharps, bootleggers, smugglers, speculators, and swindlers in all parts of the world. Through the Federal Reserve Board and the Federal reserve banks the riffraff of every country is operating on the public credit of the United States Government. Meanwhile, and on account of it, we ourselves are in the midst of the greatest depression we have ever known. Thus the menace to our prosperity, so feared by Senator Lodge, has indeed struck home. From the Atlantic to the Pacific our country has been ravaged and laid waste by the evil practices of the Federal Reserve Board and the Federal reserve banks and the interests which control them. At no time in our history has the general welfare of the people of the United States been at a lower level or the mind of the people so filled with despair.

Recently in one of our States 60,000 dwelling houses and farms were brought under the hammer in a single day. According to the Rev. Father Charles E. Coughlin, who has lately testified before a committee of this House, 71,000 houses and farms in Oakland County, Mich., have been sold and their erstwhile owners dispossessed. Similar occurrences have probably taken place in every county in the United States. The people who have thus been driven out are the wastage of the Federal reserve act. They are the victims of the dishonest and unscrupulous Federal Reserve Board and the Federal reserve banks. Their children are the new slaves of the auction block in the revival here of the institution of human slavery.

In 1913, before the Senate Banking and Currency Committee, Mr. Alexander Lassen made the following statement:

But the whole scheme of a Federal reserve bank with its commercial-paper basis is an impractical, cumbersome machinery, is simply a cover, to find a way to secure the privilege of issuing money and to evade payment of as much tax upon circulation as possible, and then control the issue and maintain, instead of reduce, interest rates. It is a system that, if inaugurated, will prove to the advantage of the few and the detriment of the people of the United States. It will mean continued shortage of actual money and further extension of credits; for when there is a lack of real money people have to borrow credit to their cost.

A few days before the Federal reserve act was passed Senator Elihu Root denounced the Federal reserve bill as an outrage on our liberties and made the following prediction:

Long before we wake up from our dreams of prosperity through an inflated currency, our gold, which alone could have kept us from catastrophe, will have vanished and no rate of interest will tempt it to return.

If ever a prophecy came true, that one did. It was impossible, however, for those luminous and instructed thinkers to control the course of events. On December 23, 1913, the Federal reserve bill became law, and that night Colonel House wrote to his hidden master in Wall Street as follows:

I want to say a word of appreciation to you for the silent but no doubt effective work you have done in the interest of currency legislation and to congratulate you that the measure has finally been enacted into law. We all know that an entirely perfect bill, satisfactory to everybody, would have been an impossibility, and I feel quite certain fair men will admit that unless the President had stood as firm as he did we should likely have had no legislation at all. The bill is a good one in many respects; anyhow good enough to start with and to let experience teach us in what direction it needs perfection, which in due time we shall then get. In any event you have personally good reason to feel gratified with what has been accomplished.

The words "unless the President had stood as firm as he did we should likely have had no legislation at all," were a gentle reminder that it was Colonel House himself, the "holy monk," who had kept the President firm.

The foregoing letter affords striking evidence of the manner in which the predatory interests then sought to control the Government of the United States by surrounding the Executive with the personality and the influence of a financial Judas. Left to itself and to the conduct of its own legislative functions without pressure from the Executive, the Congress would not have passed the Federal reserve act. According to Colonel House, and since this was his report to his master, we may believe it to be true, the Federal reserve act was passed because Wilson stood firm; in other words because Wilson was under the guidance and control of the most ferocious usurers in New York through their hireling, House. The Federal reserve act became law the day before Christmas Eve in the year 1913, and shortly afterwards the German international bankers, Kuhn, Loeb & Co., sent one of their partners here to run it.

In 1913, when the Federal reserve bill was submitted to the Democratic caucus, there was a discussion in regard to the form the proposed paper currency should take.

The proponents of the Federal reserve act, in their determination to create a new kind of paper money, had not needed to go outside of the Aldrich bill for a model. By the terms of the Aldrich bill, bank notes were to be issued by the National Reserve Association and were to be secured partly by gold or lawful money and partly by circulating evidences of debt. The first draft of the Federal reserve bill presented the same general plan, that is, for bank notes as opposed to Government notes, but with certain differences of regulation.

When the provision for the issuance of Federal reserve notes was placed before President Wilson he approved of it, but other Democrats were more mindful of Democratic principles and a great protest greeted the plan. Foremost amongst those who denounced it was William Jennings Bryan, the Secretary of State. Bryan wished to have the Federal reserve notes issued as Government obligations. President Wilson had an interview with him and found him adamant. At the conclusion of the interview Bryan left with the understanding that he would resign if the notes were made bank notes. The President then sent for his Secretary and explained the matter to him. Mr. Tumulty went to see Bryan and Bryan took from his library shelves a book containing all the Democratic platforms and read extracts from them bearing on the matter of the public currency. Returning to the President, Mr. Tumulty told him what had happened and ventured the opinion that Mr. Bryan was right and that Mr. Wilson was wrong. The President then asked Mr. Tumulty to show him where the Democratic Party in its national platforms had ever taken the view indicated by Bryan. Mr. Tumulty gave him the book, which he had brought from Bryan's house, and the President read very carefully plank after plank on the currency. He then said, "I am convinced there is a great deal in what Mr. Bryan says," and thereupon it was arranged that Mr. Tumulty should see the proponents of the Federal reserve bill in an effort to bring about an adjustment of the matter.

The remainder of this story may be told in the words of Senator Glass. Concerning Bryan's opposition to the plan of allowing the proposed Federal reserve notes to take the form of bank notes and the manner in which President Wilson and the proponents of the Federal reserve bill yielded to Bryan in return for his support of the measure, Senator Glass makes the following statement:

The only other feature of the currency bill around which a conflict raged at this time was the note-issue provision. Long before I knew it, the President was desperately worried over it. His economic good sonse told him the notes should be issued by the banks and not by the Government; but some of his advisers told him Mr. Bryan could not be induced to give his support to any bill that did not provide for a "Government note." There was in the Senate and House a large Bryan following which, united with a naturally adversary party vote, could prevent legislation. Certain overconfident gentlemen proffered their services in the task of "managing Bryan." They did not budge him. * * * When a decision could no longer be postponed the President summoned me to the White House to say he wanted Federal reserve notes to "be obligations of the United States." I was for an instant speechless. With all the earnestness of my being I remonstrated, pointing out the unscientific nature of such a thing, as well as the evident inconsistency of it.

"There is not, in truth, any Government obligation here, Mr. President," I exclaimed. "It would be a pretense on its face. Was there ever a Government note based primarily on the property of banking institutions? Was there ever a Government issue not one dollar of which could be put out except by demand of a bank? The suggested Government obligation is so remote it could never be discerned," I concluded, out of breath.

never be discerned," I concluded, out of breath.

"Exactly so, Glass," earnestly said the President. "Every word you say is true; the Government liability is a mere thought. And so, if we can hold to the substance of the thing and give the other fellow the shadow, why not do it, if thereby we may save our bill?

Shadow and substance! One can see from this how little President Wilson knew about banking. Unknowingly, he gave the substance to the international banker and the shadow to the common man. Thus was Bryan circumvented in his efforts to uphold the Democratic doctrine of the rights of the people. Thus the "unscientific blur" upon the bill was perpetrated. The "unscientific blur," how-ever, was not the fact that the United States Government, by the terms of Bryan's edict, was obliged to assume as an obligation whatever currency was issued. Mr. Bryan was right when he insisted that the United States should preserve its sovereignty over the public currency. The "unscientific blur" was the nature of the currency itself, a nature which makes it unfit to be assumed as an obligation of the United States Government. It is the worst currency and the most dangerous this country has ever known. When the proponents of the act saw that Democratic doctrine would not permit them to let the proposed banks issue the new currency as bank notes, they should have stopped at that. They should not have foisted that kind of currency, namely, an asset currency, on the United States Government. They should not have made the Government liable on the private debts of individuals and corporations and, least of all, on the private debts of foreigners.

The Federal reserve note is essentially unsound. As Kemmerer says:

The Federal reserve notes, therefore, in form have some of the qualities of Government paper money, but, in substance, are almost a pure asset currency possessing a Government guaranty against which contingency the Government has made no provision

Hon, E. J. Hill, a former Member of the House, said, and truly:

They are obligations of the Government for which the United States has received nothing and for the payment of which at any time it assumes the responsibility looking to the Federal reserve bank to recoup itself.

If the United States Government is to redeem the Federal reserve notes when the general public finds out what it costs to deliver this flood of paper money to the 12 Federal reserve banks, and if the Government has made no provision for redeeming them, the first element of their unsoundness is not far to seek.

Before the Senate Banking and Currency Committee, while the Federal reserve bill was under discussion. Mr. Crozier, of Cincinnati, said:

In other words, the imperial power of elasticity of the public currency is wielded exclusively by these central corporations owned by the banks. This is a life and death power over all local banks and all business. It can be used to create or destroy prosperity, to ward off or cause stringencies and panics. By making money artificially scarce interest rates throughout the country can be arbitrarily raised and the bank tax on all business and cost of living increased for the profit of the banks owning these regional central banks, and without the slightest benefit to the people. These 12 corporations together cover the whole country and mo-These 12 corporations together cover the whole country and monopolize and use for private gain every dollar of the public currency and all public revenues of the United States. Not a dollar can be put into circulation among the people by their Government without the consent of and on terms fixed by these 12 private money trusts.

In defiance of this and all other warnings, the proponents of the Federal reserve act created the 12 private credit corporations and gave them an absolute monopoly of the currency of the United States, not of Federal reserve notes alone, but of all the currency, the Federal reserve act providing ways by means of which the gold and general currency in the hands of the American people could be obtained by the Federal reserve banks in exchange for Federal reserve notes, which are not money but merely promises to pay money. Since the evil day when this was done the initial monopoly has been extended by vicious amendments to the Federal reserve act and by the unlawful and treasonable practices of the Federal Reserve Board and the Federal reserve banks.

Mr. Chairman, when a Chinese merchant sells human hair to a Paris wigmaker and bills him in dollars, the Federal reserve banks can buy his bill against the wigmaker and then use that bill as collateral for Federal reserve notes. The United States Government thus pays the Chinese merchant the debt of the wigmaker and gets nothing in return except a shady title to the Chinese hair.

Mr. Chairman, if a Scotch distiller wishes to send a cargo of Scotch whisky to the United States, he can draw his bill against the purchasing bootlegger in dollars; and after the bootlegger has accepted it by writing his name across the face of it, the Scotch distiller can send that bill to the nefarious open discount market in New York City, where the Federal Reserve Board and the Federal reserve banks will buy it and use it as collateral for a new issue of Federal reserve notes. Thus the Government of the United States pays the Scotch distiller for the whisky before it is shipped; and if it is lost on the way, or if the Coast Guard seizes it and destroys it, the Federal reserve banks simply write off the loss and the Government never recovers the money that was paid to the Scotch distiller. While we are attempting to enforce prohibition here, the Federal Reserve Board and the Federal reserve banks are financing the distillery business in Europe and are paying bootleggers' bills with the public credit of the United States Government.

Mr. Chairman, if a German brewer ships beer to this country or anywhere else in the world and draws his bill for it in dollars, the Federal reserve banks will buy that bill and use it as collateral for Federal reserve notes. Thus, they compel our Government to pay the German brewer for his beer. Why should the Federal Reserve Board and the Federal reserve banks be permitted to finance the brewing industry of Germany, either in this way or as they do by compelling small and fearful United States banks to take stock in the Isenbeck brewery and in the German bank for brewing industries?

Mr. Chairman, if Dynamit Nobel of Germany wishes to sell dynamite to Japan to use in Manchuria or elsewhere, it can draw its bill against its Japanese customers in dollars and send that bill to the nefarious open discount market in New York City, where the Federal Reserve Board and the Federal reserve banks will buy it and use it as collateral for a new issue of Federal reserve notes, while at the same time the Federal Reserve Board will be helping Dynamit Nobel by stuffing its stock into the United States banking system. Why should we send our representatives to the disarmament conference at Geneva while the Federal Reserve Board and the Federal reserve banks are making our Government pay japanese debts to German munition

Mr. Chairman, if a bean grower of Chile wishes to raise a crop of beans and sell them to a Japanese customer, he can draw a bill against his prospective Japanese customer in dollars and have it purchased by the Federal Reserve Board and the Federal reserve banks and get the money out of this country at the expense of the American public before he has even planted the beans in the ground.

Mr. Chairman, if a German in Germany wishes to export goods to South America or anywhere else, he can draw his bill against his customer and send it to the United States and get the money out of this country before he ships or even manufactures the goods.

Mr. Chairman, why should the currency of the United States be issued on the strength of Chinese human hair? Why should it be issued on the trade whims of a wigmaker? Why should it be issued on the strength of German beer? Why should it be issued on a crop of unplanted beans to be grown in Chile for Japanese consumption? Why should the Government of the United States be compelled to issue many billions of dollars every year to pay the debts of one foreigner to another foreigner? Was it for this that our national-bank depositors had their money taken out of our banks and shipped abroad? Was it for this they had to lose it? Why should the public credit of the United States Government and likewise money belonging to our nationalbank depositors be used to support foreign brewers, narcotic drug vendors, whiskey distillers, wigmakers, human-hair merchants, Chilean bean growers, and the like? Why should our national-bank depositors and our Government be forced to finance the munition factories of Germany and Soviet

Mr. Chairman, if a German, in Germany, wishes to sell wheelbarrows to another German, he can draw a bill in dollars and get the money out of the Federal reserve banks before an American farmer could explain his request for a loan to move his crop to market. In Germany, when credit instruments are being given, the creditors say, "See you, it must be of a kind that I can cash at the reserve." Other foreigners feel the same way. The reserve to which these gentry refer is our reserve, which, as you know, is entirely made up of money belonging to American bank depositors. I think foreigners should cash their own trade paper and not send it over here to bankers who use it to fish cash out of the pockets of the American people.

Mr. Chairman, there is nothing like the Federal reserve pool of confiscated bank deposits in the world. It is a public trough of American wealth in which foreigners claim rights equal to or greater than those of Americans. The Federal reserve banks are the agents of the foreign central banks. They use our bank depositors' money for the benefit of their foreign principals. They barter the public credit of the United States Government and hire it out to foreigners at a profit to themselves.

All this is done at the expense of the United States Government, and at a sickening loss to the American people. Only our great wealth enabled us to stand the drain of it as long as we did.

I believe that the nations of the world would have settled down after the World War more peacefully if we had not had this standing temptation here—this pool of our bank depositors' money given to private interests and used by them in connection with illimitable drafts upon the public credit of the United States Government. The Federal Reserve Board invited the world to come in and to carry away cash, credit, goods, and everything else of value that was movable. Values amounting to many billions of dollars have been taken out of this country by the Federal Reserve Board and the Federal reserve banks for the benefit of their foreign principals. The United States has been ransacked and pillaged. Our structures have been gutted and only the walls are left standing. While this crime was being perpetrated everything the world could rake up to sell us was brought in here at our own expense by the Federal Reserve Board and the Federal reserve banks until our markets were swamped with unneeded and unwanted imported goods priced far above their value and thus made to equal the dollar volume of our honest exports and to kill or reduce our favorable balance of trade. As agents of the foreign central banks, the Federal Reserve Board and the Federal reserve banks try by every means within their power to reduce our favorable balance of trade. They act for their foreign principals and they accept fees from foreigners for acting against the best interests of the United States. Naturally there has been great competition among foreigners for the favors of the Federal Reserve Board.

What we need to do is to send the reserves of our national banks home to the people who earned and produced them and who still own them and to the banks which were compelled to surrender them to predatory interests. We need to destroy the Federal reserve pool, wherein our national-bank reserves are impounded for the benefit of foreigners. We need to make it very difficult for outlanders to draw money away from us. We need to save America for Americans.

Mr. Chairman, when you hold a $10 Federal reserve note in your hand you are holding a piece of paper which sooner or later is going to cost the United States Government $10 in gold, unless the Government is obliged to give up the gold standard. It is protected by a reserve of 40 per cent, or $4 in gold. It is based on Limburger cheese, reputed to be in a foreign warehouse; or on cans purporting to contain peas but which may contain no peas but salt water instead; or on horse meat; illicit drugs; bootleggers' fancies; rags and bones from Soviet Russia of which the United States imported over a million dollars' worth last year; on wine, whisky, natural gas, on goat or dog fur, garlic on the string, or Bombay ducks. If you like to have paper money which is secured by such commodities, you have it in the Federal reserve note. If you desire to obtain the thing of value upon which this paper currency is based—that is, the Limburger cheese, the whisky, the illicit drugs, or any of the other staples-you will have a very hard time finding them. Many of these worshipful commodities are in foreign countries. Are you going to Germany to inspect her warehouses to see if the specified things of value are there? I think not. And what is more, I do not think you would find them if you did go.

Immense sums belonging to our national-bank depositors have been given to Germany on no collateral security whatever. The Federal Reserve Board and the Federal reserve banks have issued United States currency on mere finance drafts drawn by Germans. Billions upon billions of our money has been pumped into Germany and money is still being pumped into Germany by the Federal Reserve Board and the Federal reserve banks. Her worthless paper is still being negotiated here and renewed here on the public credit of the United States Government and at the expense of the American people. On April 27, 1932, the Federal reserve outfit sent $750,000, belonging to American bank depositors, in gold to Germany. A week later, another $300,000 in gold was shipped to Germany in the same way. About the middle of May $12,000,000 in gold was shipped to Germany by the Federal Reserve Board and the Federal reserve banks. Almost every week there is a shipment of gold to Germany. These shipments are not made for profit on exchange since German marks are below parity against the dollar.

Mr. Chairman, I believe that the national-bank depositors of the United States are entitled to know what the Federal Reserve Board and the Federal reserve banks are doing with their money. There are millions of national-bank depositors in this country who do not know that a percentage of every dollar they deposit in a member bank of the Federal reserve system goes automatically to the American agents of foreign banks and that all of their deposits can be paid away to foreigners without their knowledge or consent by the crooked machinery of the Federal reserve act and the questionable practices of the Federal Reserve Board and the Federal reserve banks. Mr. Chairman, the American people should be told the truth by their servants in office.

In 1930 we had over half a billion dollars outstanding daily to finance foreign goods stored in or shipped between foreign countries. In its yearly total, this item amounts to several billion dollars. What goods are those upon which the Federal reserve banks yearly pledge several billion dollars of the public credit of the United States? What goods are those which are hidden in European and Asiatic storehouses and which have never been seen by any officer of this Government, but which are being financed on the public credit of the United States Government? What goods are those upon which the United States Government is being obliged by the Federal reserve banks to issue Federal reserve notes to the extent of several billion dollars a year?

The Federal Reserve Board and the Federal reserve banks have been international bankers from the beginning, with the United States Government as their enforced banker and supplier of currency. But it is none the less extraordinary to see those 12 private credit monopolies buying the debts of foreigners against foreigners in all parts of the world and asking the Government of the United States for new issues of Federal reserve notes in exchange for them.

I see no reason why the American taxpayers should be hewers of wood and drawers of water for the European and Asiatic customers of the Federal reserve banks. I see no reason why a worthless acceptance drawn by a foreign swindler as a means of getting gold out of this country should receive the lowest and choicest rate from the Federal Reserve Board and be treated as better security than the note of an American farmer living on American land.

The magnitude of the acceptance racket, as it has been developed by the Federal reserve banks, their foreign correspondents, and the predatory European-born bankers who set up the Federal reserve institution here and taught our own brand of pirates how to loot the people—I say the magnitude of this racket is estimated to be in the neighborhood of $9,000,000,000 a year. In the past 10 years it is said to have amounted to $90,000,000,000. In my opinion, it has amounted to several times as much. Coupled with this you have, to the extent of billions of dollars, the gambling in United States securities, which takes place in the same open discount market—a gamble upon which the Federal Reserve Board is now spending $100,000,000 a week.

Federal reserve notes are taken from the United States Government in unlimited quantities. Is it strange that the burden of supplying these immense sums of money to the gambling fraternity has at last proved too heavy for the American people to endure? Would it not be a national calamity if the Federal Reserve Board and the Federal reserve banks should again bind this burden down on the backs of the American people and, by means of the long rawhide whips of the credit masters, compel them to enter upon another 17 years of slavery? They are trying to do that now. They are taking $100,000,000 of the public credit of the United States Government every week in addition to all their other seizures, and they are spending that money in the nefarious open market in New York City in a desperate gamble to reestablish their graft as a going concern.

They are putting the United States Government in debt to the extent of $100,000,000 a week, and with this money they are buying up our Government securities for themselves and their foreign principals. Our people are disgusted with the experiments of the Federal Reserve Board. The Federal Reserve Board is not producing a loaf of bread, a yard of cloth, a bushel of corn, or a pile of cordwood by its check-kiting operations in the money market.

A fortnight or so ago great aid and comfort was given to Japan by the firm of A. Gerli & Sons, of New York, an importing firm, which bought $16,000,000 worth of raw silk from the Japanese Government. Federal reserve notes will be issued to pay that amount to the Japanese Government, and these notes will be secured by money belonging to our national-bank depositors.

Why should United States currency be issued on this debt? Why should United States currency be issued to pay the debt of Gerli & Sons to the Japanese Government? The Federal Reserve Board and the Federal reserve banks think more of the silkworms of Japan than they do of American citizens. We do not need $16,000,000 worth of silk in this country at the present time, not even to furnish work to dyers and finishers. We need to wear home-grown and American-made clothes and to use our own money for our own goods and staples. We could spend $16,000,000 in the United States of America on American children and that would be a better investment for us than Japanese silk purchased on the public credit of the United States Government.

Mr. Speaker, on the 13th of January of this year I addressed the House on the subject of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. In the course of my remarks I made the following statement:

In 1928 the member banks of the Federal reserve system borrowed $60,598,690,000 from the Federal reserve banks on their 15-day promissory notes. Think of it! Sixty billion dollars payable upon demand in gold in the course of one single year. The actual payment of such obligations calls for six times as much monetary gold as there is in the entire world. Such transactions represent a grant in the course of one single year of about $7,000,000 to every member bank of the Federal reserve system. Is it any wonder that there is a depression in this country? Is it any wonder that American labor, which ultimately pays the cost of all the banking operations of this country, has at last proved unequal to the task of supplying this huge total of cash and credit for the benefit of stock-market manipulators and foreign swindlers?

Mr. Chairman, some of my colleagues have asked for more specific information concerning this stupendous graft, this frightful burden which has been placed on the wage earners and taxpayers of the United States for the benefit of the Federal Reserve Board and the Federal reserve banks. were surprised to learn that member banks of the Federal reserve system had received the enormous sum of $60.598 .-690,000 from the Federal Reserve Board and the Federal reserve banks on their promissory notes in the course of one single year, namely, 1928. Another Member of this House, Mr. Beedy, the honorable gentleman from Maine, has questioned the accuracy of my statement and has informed me that the Federal Reserve Board denies absolutely that these figures are correct. This Member has said to me that the thing is unthinkable, that it can not be, that it is beyond all reason to think that the Federal Reserve Board and the Federal reserve banks should have so subsidized and endowed their favorite banks of the Federal reserve system. This Member is horrified at the thought of a graft so great, a bounty so detrimental to the public welfare as sixty and a half billion dollars a year and more shoveled out to favored banks of the Federal reserve system.

I sympathize with Mr. Beedy. I would spare him pain if I could, but the facts remain as I have stated them. In 1928, the Federal Reserve Board and the Federal reserve banks presented the staggering amount of $60,598,690,000 to their member banks at the expense of the wage earners and taxpayers of the United States. In 1929, the year of the stock-market crash, the Federal Reserve Board and the Federal reserve banks advanced fifty-eight billions to member banks.

In 1930, while the speculating banks were getting out of the stock market at the expense of the general public, the Federal Reserve Board and the Federal reserve banks advanced them $13,022,782,000. This shows that when the banks were gambling on the public credit of the United States Government as represented by Federal reserve currency, they were subsidized to any amount they required by the Federal Reserve Board and the Federal reserve banks. When the swindle began to fail, the banks knew it in advance and withdrew from the market. They got out with whole skins and left the people of the United States to pay the piper.

On November 2, 1931, I addressed a letter to the Federal Reserve Board asking for the aggregate total of member bank borrowings in the years 1928, 1929, 1930. In due course, I received a reply from the Federal Reserve Board, dated November 9, 1931, the pertinent part of which reads as follows:

My Dear Congressman: In reply to your letter of November 2, you are advised that the aggregate amount of 15-day promissory notes of member banks during each of the past three calendar years has been as follows:

Very truly yours,

CHESTER MORRILL, Secretary.

This will show the gentleman from Maine the accuracy of my statement. As for the denial of these facts made to him by the Federal Reserve Board, I can only say that it must have been prompted by fright, since hanging is too good for a Government board which permitted such a misuse of Government funds and credit.

My friend from Kansas, Mr. McGugin, has stated that he thought the Federal Reserve Board and the Federal reserve banks lent money by rediscounting. So they do, but they lend comparatively little that way. The real rediscounting that they do has been called a mere penny in the slot business. It is too slow for genuine high flyers. They discourage it. They prefer to subsidize their favorite banks by · making these $60,000,000,000 advances, and they prefer to acquire acceptances in the notorious open discount market in New York, where they can use them to control the prices of stocks and bonds on the exchanges. For every dollar they advanced on rediscounts in 1928 they lent $33 to their favorite banks for gambling purposes. In other words, their rediscounts in 1928 amounted to $1,814,271,000, while their loans to member banks amounted to $60,598,690,000. As for their open-market operations, these are on a stupendous scale, and no tax is paid on the acceptances they handle; and their foreign principals, for whom they do a business of several billion dollars every year, pay no income tax on their profits to the United States Government.

This is the John Law swindle over again. The theft of Teapot Dome was trifling compared to it. What king ever robbed his subjects to such an extent as the Federal Reserve Board and the Federal reserve banks have robbed us? Is it any wonder that there have lately been 90 cases of starvation in one of the New York hospitals? Is it any wonder that the children of this country are being dispersed and abandoned?

The Government and the people of the United States have been swindled by swindlers de luxe to whom the acquisition of American gold or a parcel of Federal reserve notes presented no more difficulty than the drawing up of a worthless acceptance in a country not subject to the laws of the United States, by sharpers not subject to the jurisdiction of the United States courts, sharpers with a strong banking "fence" on this side of the water—a "fence" acting as a receiver of the worthless paper coming from abroad, indorsing it and getting the currency out of the Federal reserve banks for it as quickly as possible, exchanging that currency for gold, and in turn transmitting the gold to its foreign confederates.

Such were the exploits of Ivar Kreuger, Mr. Hoover's friend, and his hidden Wall Street backers. Every dollar of the billions Kreuger and his gang drew out of this country on acceptances was drawn from the Government and the people of the United States through the Federal Reserve Board and the Federal reserve banks. The credit of the United States Government was peddled to him by the Federal Reserve Board and the Federal reserve banks for their own private gain. That is what the Federal Reserve Board and the Federal reserve banks have been doing for many years. They have been peddling the credit of this Government and the signature of this Government to the swindlers and speculators of all nations. That is what happens when a country forsakes its Constitution and gives its sovereignty over the public currency to private interests. Give them the flag and they will sell it.

The nature of Kreuger's organized swindle and the bankrupt condition of Kreuger's combine was known here last June when Hoover sought to exempt Kreuger's loan to Germany of one hundred twenty-five millions from the operation of the Hoover moratorium. The bankrupt condition of Kreuger's swindle was known here last summer when $30,000,000 was taken from American taxpayers by certain bankers in New York for the ostensible purpose of permitting Kreuger to make a loan to Colombia. Colombia never saw that money. The nature of Kreuger's swindle and the bankrupt condition of Kreuger was known here in January when he visited his friend, Mr. Hoover, at the White House. It was known here in March before he went to Paris and committed suicide there.

Mr. Chairman, I think the people of the United States are entitled to know how many billions of dollars were placed at the disposal of Kreuger and his gigantic combine by the Federal Reserve Board and the Federal reserve banks and to know how much of our Government currency was issued and lost in the financing of that great swindle in the years during which the Federal Reserve Board and the Federal reserve banks took care of Kreuger's requirements.

Mr. Chairman, I believe there should be a congressional investigation of the operations of Kreuger and Toll in the United States and that Swedish Match, International Match, the Swedish-American Investment Corporation, and all related enterprises, including the subsidiary companies of Kreuger and Toll, should be investigated and that the issuance of United States currency in connection with those enterprises and the use of our national-bank depositors' money for Kreuger's benefit should be made known to the general public. I am referring, not only to the securities which were floated and sold in this country, but also to the commercial loans to Kreuger's enterprises and the mass financing of Kreuger's companies by the Federal Reserve Board and the Federal reserve banks and the predatory institutions which the Federal Reserve Board and the Federal reserve banks shield and harbor.

A few days ago the President of the United States, with a white face and shaking hands, went before the Senate on behalf of the moneyed interests and asked the Senate to levy a tax on the people so that foreigners might know that the United States would pay its debts to them. Most Americans thought that it was the other way around. What does the United States owe to foreigners? When and by whom was the debt incurred? It was incurred by the Federal Reserve Board and the Federal reserve banks when they peddled the signature of this Government to foreigners for a price. It is what the United States Government has to pay to redeem the obligations of the Federal Reserve Board and the Federal reserve banks. Are you going to let those thieves get off scot free? Is there one law for the looter who drives up to the door of the United States Treasury in his limousine and another for the United States veterans who are sleeping on the floor of a dilapidated house on the outskirts of Washington?

The Baltimore & Ohio Railroad is here asking for a large loan from the people and the wage earners and the tax-payers of the United States. It is begging for a hand-out from the Government. It is standing, cap in hand, at the door of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, where all the other jackals have gathered to the feast. It is asking for money that was raised from the people by taxation, and it wants this money of the poor for the benefit of Kuhn, Loeb & Co., the German international bankers. Is there one law for the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad and another for the needy yeterans it threw off its freight cars the other day? Is there one law for sleek and prosperous swindlers who defended the United States flag?

Mr. Chairman, some people are horrified because the collateral behind Kreuger and Toll debentures was removed and worthless collateral substituted for it. What is this but what is being done daily by the Federal reserve banks? When the Federal reserve act was passed, the Federal reserve banks were allowed to substitute "other like collateral" for collateral behind Federal reserve notes but by an amendment obtained at the request of the corrupt and dishonest Federal Reserve Board, the act was changed so that the word "like" was stricken out. All that immense trouble was taken here in Congress so that the law would permit the Federal reserve banks to switch collateral. At the present time behind the scenes in the Federal reserve banks there is a night-and-day movement of collateral. A visiting Englishman, leaving the United States a few weeks ago, said that things would look better here after "they cleaned up the mess at Washington." Cleaning up the mess consists in fooling the people and making them pay a second time for the bad foreign investments of the Federal Reserve Board and the Federal reserve banks. It consists in moving that heavy load of dubious and worthless foreign paper—the bills of wigmakers, brewers, distillers, nar-cotic-drug vendors, munition makers, illegal finance drafts, and worthless foreign securities, out of the banks and putting it on the back of American labor. That is what the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is doing now. They talk about loans to banks and railroads but they say very little about that other business of theirs which consists in relieving the swindlers who promoted investment trusts in this country and dumped worthless foreign securities into them and then resold that mess of pottage to American investors under cover of their own corporate titles. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation is taking over those worthless securities from those investment trusts with United States Treasury money at the expense of the American taxpayer and wage earner.

It will take us 20 years to redeem our Government, 20 years of penal servitude to pay off the gambling debts of the traitorous Federal Reserve Board and the Federal reserve banks and to earn again that vast flood of American wages and savings, bank deposits, and United States Government credit which the Federal Reserve Board and the Federal reserve banks exported out of this country to their foreign principals.

The Federal Reserve Board and the Federal reserve banks lately conducted an anti-hoarding campaign here. Then they took that extra money which they had persuaded the trusting American people to put into the banks and they sent it to Europe along with the rest. In the last several months, they have sent $1,300,000,000 in gold to their foreign employers, their foreign masters, and every dollar of that gold belonged to the people of the United States and was unlawfully taken from them.

Is not it high time that we had an audit of the Federal Reserve Board and the Federal reserve banks and an examination of all our Government bonds and securities and public moneys instead of allowing the corrupt and dishonest Federal Reserve Board and the Federal reserve banks to speculate with those securities and this cash in the notorious open discount market of New York City?

Mr. Chairman, within the limits of the time allowed me, I can not enter into a particularized discussion of the Federal Reserve Board and the Federal reserve banks. I have singled out the Federal reserve currency for a few remarks because there has lately been some talk here of "flat money." What kind of money is being pumped into the open discount market and through it into foreign channels and stock exchanges? Mr. Mills of the Treasury has spoken here of his horror of the printing presses and his horror of dishonest money. He has no horror of dishonest money. If he had, he would be no party to the present gambling of the Federal Reserve Board and the Federal reserve banks in the nefarious open discount market of New York, a market in which the sellers are represented by 10 great discount dealer corporations owned and organized by the very banks which own and control the Federal Reserve Board and the Federal reserve banks. Fiat money, indeed!

After the several raids on the Treasury Mr. Mills borrows the speech of those who protested against those raids and speaks now with pretended horror of a raid on the Treasury. Where was Mr. Mills last October when the United States Treasury needed $598,000,000 of the taxpayers' money which was supposed to be in the safe-keeping of Andrew W. Mellon in the designated depositories of Treasury funds, and which was not in those depositories when the Treasury needed it? Mr. Mills was the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury then, and he was at Washington throughout October, with the exception of a very significant week he spent at White Sulphur Springs closeted with international bankers, while the Italian minister, Signor Grandi, was being entertained-and bargained with-at Washington.

What Mr. Mills is fighting for is the preservation whole and entire of the bankers' monopoly of all the currency of the United States Government. What Mr. Patman proposes is that the Government shall exercise its sovereignty to the extent of issuing some currency for itself. This conflict of opinion between Mr. Mills as the spokesman of the bankers and Mr. PATMAN as the spokesman of the people brings the currency situation here into the open. Mr. Patman and the veterans are confronted by a stone wall—the wall that fences in the bankers with their special privilege. Thus the issue is joined between the hosts of democracy, of which the veterans are a part, and the men of the king's bank, the would-be aristocrats, who deflated American agriculture and robbed this country for the benefit of their foreign prin-

Mr. Chairman, last December I introduced a resolution here asking for an examination and an audit of the Federal Reserve Board and the Federal reserve banks and all related matters. If the House sees fit to make such an investigation, the people of the United States will obtain information of great value. This is a Government of the people, by the people, for the people, consequently nothing should be concealed from the people. The man who deceives the people is a traitor to the United States. The man who knows or suspects that a crime has been committed and who conceals or covers up that crime is an accessory to it. Mr. Speaker, it is a monstrous thing for this great Nation of people to have its destinies presided over by a traitorous Government board acting in secret concert with international usurers. Every effort has been made by the Federal Reserve Board to conceal its power but the truth is the Federal Reserve Board has usurped the Government of the United States. It controls everything here and it controls all our foreign relations. It makes and breaks governments at will. No man and no body of men is more entrenched in power than the arrogant credit monopoly which operates the Federal Reserve Board and the Federal reserve banks. These evil-doers have robbed this country of more than enough money to pay the national debt. What the National Government has permitted the Federal Reserve Board to steal from the people should now be restored to the people. The people have a valid claim against the Federal Reserve Board and the Federal reserve banks. If that claim is enforced, Americans will not need to stand in breadlines or to suffer and die of starvation in the streets. Homes will be saved, families will be kept together, and American children will not be dispersed and abandoned. The Federal Reserve Board and the Federal reserve banks owe the United States Government an immense sum of money. We ought to find out the exact amount of the people's claim. We should know the amount of the indebtedness of the Federal Reserve Board and the Federal reserve banks to the people and we should collect that amount immediately. We certainly should investigate this treacherous and disloyal conduct of the Federal Reserve Board and the Federal reserve banks.

Here is a Federal reserve note. Immense numbers of these notes are now held abroad. I am told they amount to upward of a billion dollars. They constitute a claim against our Government and likewise a claim against the money our people have deposited in the member banks of the Federal reserve system. Our people's money to the extent of $1,300,000,000 has within the last few months been shipped abroad to redeem Federal reserve notes and to pay other gambling debts of the traitorous Federal Reserve Board and the Federal reserve banks. The greater part of our monetary stock has been shipped to foreigners. Why should we promise to pay the debts of foreigners to foreigners? Why should our Government be put into the position of supplying money to foreigners? Why should American farmers and wage earners add millions of foreigners to the number of their dependents? Why should the Federal Reserve Board and the Federal reserve banks be permitted to finance our competitors in all parts of the world? Do you know why the tariff was raised? It was raised to shut out the flood of Federal reserve goods pouring in here from every quarter of the globe-cheap goods produced by cheaply paid foreign labor on unlimited supplies of money and credit sent out of this country by the dishonest and unscrupulous Federal Reserve Board and the Federal reserve banks. Go out in Washington to buy an electric light bulb and you will probably be offered one that was made in Japan on American money. Go out to buy a pair of fabric gloves and inbe offered to you will be found the words "made in Germany" and that means "made on the public credit of the United States Government paid to German firms in American gold taken from the confiscated bank deposits of the American people.'

The Federal Reserve Board and the Federal reserve banks are spending $100,000,000 a week buying Government securities in the open market and are thus making a great bid for foreign business. They are trying to make rates so attractive that the human-hair merchants and distillers and other business entities in foreign lands will come here and hire more of the public credit of the United States Government and pay the Federal reserve outfit for getting it for them.

Mr. Chairman, when the Federal reserve act was passed the people of the United States did not perceive that a world system was being set up here which would make the savings of an American school-teacher available to a narcotic-drug vendor in Macao. They did not perceive that the United States was to be lowered to the position of a coolie country which has nothing but raw materials and heavy goods for export; that Russia was destined to supply man power and that this country was to supply financial power to an international superstate—a superstate controlled by international bankers and international industrialists acting together to enslave the world for their own pleasure.

The people of the United States are being greatly wronged. If they are not, then I do not know what "wronging the " means. They have been driven from their employments. They have been dispossessed of their homes. They have been evicted from their rented quarters. They have lost their children. They have been left to suffer and to die for the lack of shelter, food, clothing, and medicine.

The wealth of the United States and the working capital of the United States has been taken away from them and has either been locked in the vaults of certain banks and great corporations or exported to foreign countries for the benefit of the foreign customers of those banks and corporations. So far as the people of the United States are concerned, the cupboard is bare. It is true that the warehouses and coal yards and grain elevators are full, but the warehouses and coal yards and grain elevators are padlocked and the great banks and corporations hold the keys. The sack of the United States by the Federal Reserve Board and the Federal reserve banks and their confederates is the greatest crime in history.

Mr. Chairman, a serious situation confronts the House of Representatives to-day. We are the trustees of the people and the rights of the people are being taken away from them. Through the Federal Reserve Board and the Federal reserve banks, the people are losing the rights guaranteed to them by the Constitution. Their property has been taken from them without due process of law. Mr. Chairman, common decency requires us to examine the public accounts of the Government to see what crimes against the public welfare have been or are being committed.

What is needed here is a return to the Constitution of the United States. We need to have a complete divorce of Bank and State. The old struggle that was fought out here in Jackson's day must be fought over again. The Independent United States Treasury should be reestablished and the Government should keep its own money under lock and key in the building the people provided for that purpose. Asset currency, the device of the swindler, should be done away with. The Government should buy gold and issue United States currency on it. The business of the independent bankers should be restored to them. The State banking systems should be freed from coercion. The Federal reserve districts should be abolished and State boundaries should be respected. Bank reserves should be kept within the borders of the States whose people own them, and this reserve money of the people should be protected so that international bankers and acceptance bankers and discount dealers can not draw it away from them. The exchanges should be closed while we are putting our financial affairs in order. The conspicuously written on the inside of the gloves that will | Federal reserve act should be repealed and the Federal reserve banks, having violated their charters, should be liquidated immediately. Faithless Government officers who have violated their oaths of office should be impeached and brought to trial. Unless this is done by us, I predict that the American people, outraged, robbed, pillaged, insulted, and betrayed as they are in their own land, will rise in their wrath and send a President here who will sweep the money changers out of the temple. [Applause.]

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I shall use the remaining four minutes that I have at my disposal. There is a disease that afflicts mankind which is very vicious. It warps the judgment, it narrows the vision, it even causes men to see red, to make mountains out of mole hills. This disease has sometimes been referred to as B. A. Ladies may refer to it as "tummy" ache, but out in the wide-open spaces men call it the "belly" ache, and I know of no man of my acquaintance that has this disease in so violent a form as the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McFadden]. I have not the time to refer to the many charges he makes against the Federal reserve system, but I call attention to the fact that for 12 years he has been the chairman of the Banking and Currency Committee of this House and did not see fit during that time to try to remedy any of the evils of which he now complains. It seems to me entirely out of place to wait until he is retired as chairman of that great committee and then assault all of the institutions of which it has control.

I think this is a good bill. It is a bill that has been proposed by the President and has been approved by the Democratic chairman of the Banking and Currency Committee, on which there is a majority of Democrats, and brought before this House with the approval of that committee. It seeks to make possible protection to the small home owner. It seeks to make it possible for him to save his home by the renewal of his loan, or to build a small home and secure a loan upon it.

If there ever was legislation that is justified it is this bill, to establish these home-loan banks. This bill has been very, very carefully considered. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Relly] has been the very able chairman of the subcommittee, and he and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Luce] who introduced the bill in this House have spent weeks with the subcommittee in holding hearings on this bill. They have brought it here with their entire approval. I ask my friends on both sides of this House to accept the judgment of those gentlemen and to pass this bill with a splendid majority. We need it in this country. All over this broad land the little home owner is being threatened with foreclosure on the home he loves and lives for. This bill will give him relief, and I ask you to vote for the bill. Be not led astray by those who have a violent disease, to attack everything of a financial nature in the country. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. REILLY. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. Overton].

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. Chairman, the Federal home loan bank bill is twofold in its purpose and effect. It is intended both as a present emergency relief of, and as a permanent aid to, a class of institutions and a character of people which and who constitute the most stabilizing influence in our national life.

What are these institutions? They are the home-building, home-improving, and home-financing organizations of our country. They are scattered throughout the Nation. They are located in every State of the Union. The homestead associations alone, without taking into consideration the State banks, insurance companies, and other proposed beneficiaries of this bill, financed over four and a half million homes during the decade of 1920 to 1930. These associations have so grown in popular favor and confidence that they enjoy a membership of over 12,000,000 of our people and assets of over $8,000,000,000.

Who, Mr. Chairman, are the people to be aided by the creation of Federal home-loan banks? They are chiefly the wage earners and small-salaried people who, under the building and loan plan of small weekly and monthly payments, are putting their hard-earned savings into the acquisition of homes for themselves, their wives, and their children, who are investing their meager savings in the greatest incentive to good, sturdy citizenship and love of country to be found beneath our flag, and that is the American home.

This bill, when enacted into law, will, as an emergency relief measure, aid the homestead associations in extending leniency to borrowers and in refinancing short-term mortgage loans held by other institutions which, under the pressure of this disastrous period, are demanding and enforcing by foreclosure the settlement of their mortgages and are driving from their homes thousands upon thousands of American citizens to walk the streets with the savings of years of toil and self-sacrifice literally wiped out. As a means of permanent aid, the proposed Federal home-loan banks will stabilize the great work and business of our building and loan associations and serve as a bulwark against the sacrifice of American homes in periods of future depression.

Who else, Mr. Chairman, are to be benefited if the pending bill be enacted into law? It will be for the most part wage earners and salaried people, who, encouraged to thrift and moved by the praiseworthy desire to accumulate something to be used as a protection against illness, hard times, unemployment, and other disasters, have invested the dimes and dollars of their savings in what has been, almost without exception, an absolutely safe and sound investment until the unfortunate advent of the present general financial collapse.

In what plight do they find themselves, these small investors, hundreds of thousands of whom are without employment and without funds? They find themselves, in many instances, unable to cash in their savings, unable to realize upon their shares of installment stock. The situation arises through no mismanagement or fault of the homestead associations, but has been superinduced largely by the fact that in this trying period the demands for withdrawals, prompted by the stern necessities of the hour, have been more than many of the building and loan associations have been able to meet.

Our National Government, ladies and gentlemen of the committee, has gone to the aid of commercial banking by the establishment of the Federal reserve system. It has gone to the aid of our farmers by the establishment of the Federal farm-loan banks, and through crop-production advances. It has gone to the aid of bondholders and stockholders and creditors of our railroads and insurance companies, and the depositors and creditors of our commercial banks through the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. Why, then, should we hesitate to declare that the United States shall, through a perfectly sound investment of only $125,000,000, shortly to be refunded, go to the temporary rescue and permanent aid of home-building institutions, and of the home owners and small and humble investors of this Nation, who to-day constitute our surest pledge against the perils that threaten the safety of our

The enactment, Mr. Chairman, of this bill into law will place upon our statute books one of the most constructive measures that in recent times have engaged the brain and purpose of our National Congress. [Applause.]

Mr. REILLY. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. Hill].

Mr. HILL of Washington. Mr. Chairman, the time and thought of this Congress have been principally occupied in the effort to find the means of thawing out frozen assets and restoring confidence and credit necessary for the orderly business of commerce. Credit is based on confidence and confidence is based on security values. Security values in this crisis are almost wholly dependent upon the fact of whether they are readily negotiable and whether they can be promptly converted into liquid form. Fundamentally the safest and soundest securities are those issued upon real estate on a conservative basis of value. There are about twenty billions of dollars of investments in home-loan mortgages in this country. These are for the most part longterm loans, and while they are basically safe, they have little liquidity and are therefore not readily negotiable. They constitute a $20,000,000,000 block of frozen assets, since the banks refuse to advance loans on securities not capable of being readily converted into cash. Everyone recognizes the fact that the banks are under such fear of withdrawals that they are liquefying as fast as possible their securities and holding their cash for emergencies that may arise. A national credit system has heretofore been set up for operation in certain limited fields. The Federal reserve system was enacted to provide a large reservoir of credit for commercial and industrial interests. The Federal farm loan act provides national credit for farm loans; the intermediatecredit system, which is subsidiary to the latter, is designed to supplement the credits for agriculture in providing shortterm loans for crop-production purposes and other activities incidental to agriculture. The home-financing field has been left out of this national credit program. The present bill proposes to include it in the national credit scheme.

The committee report on the bill contains this descriptive statement of the proposed home-loan bank system:

The home-loan bank system created by this bill will consist of from 8 to 12 Federal home-loan banks in districts to be determined by a Federal home-loan board, consisting of five members appointed by the President. Building and loan associations, cooperative banks, homestead associations, savings banks, trust companies, and other banks with time deposits (except national banks), and insurance companies, if subject to inspection and regulation under the banking laws or under similar laws of the State or the United States, are eligible for membership. The members will supply the permanent capital and upon joining a bank will be required to subscribe for stock amounting to 1 per cent of the home mortgages held by each such member, with a minimum amount of $1,500,

Eligible institutions in States whose present laws do not permit stock purchase are admitted to borrowing privileges by deposit with the bank of cash or Federal Government securities equal to the amount of the required stock subscription. This will be permissive pending the enactment of State legislation authorizing full compliance by subscribing institutions with the provisions of the act. * * * Each of the banks is to have 11 directors, 2 appointed by the Federal board, 3 elected by the small-sized members, 3 by the medium-sized members, and 3 by the large-sized members. * * * All members may borrow from a Federal home loan bank by placing mortgages with the bank to secure loans.

This bill is designed particularly to aid the small home owner in financing the building and buying of homes not exceeding $20,000 in value. For such financing the owners of such homes must look to investors in home-loan mortgages, and to succeed in repaying the money thus borrowed it is necessary that long-term loans be secured. The average home owner must pay for his home in small payments at stated intervals or else accumulate his savings in a fund to make such payment in a lump sum at the end of the loan term. The great majority of those who are seeking to acquire homes are wage earners who are investing their savings in their homes. All of their reserve funds have been so invested. Many of these wage earners have been thrown out of employment and are no longer able to keep up the payments.

The loans are becoming due and the mortgage companies and banks are unable to grant renewals because of the necessity to meet their own obligations in cash and, further, because there is no credit reserve to which they can resort to rediscount the loans which they are now compelled either to carry or to collect.

The home loan bank bill provides a set-up to take care of this situation. The bill provides for the establishment of from 8 to 12 home-loan banks, to be distributed throughout the country, and provides a capital stock of not less than $5,000,000 for each of such banks, to be supplied in the first instance through subscriptions to the capital stock by eligible member institutions and by a fund of not exceeding $125,000,000 out of the Federal Treasury.

The home-loan banks, when in operation, are authorized to loan to a member not to exceed twelve times the capital stock subscribed by such member. These loans are to be made upon the security of home-loan mortgages held by such member, but not in excess of 40 per cent of the appraised value of the mortgaged property at the time the loan is made to such member. This scheme provides a sure and ready resource for any savings or building and loan association or other institution engaged in making home loans, other than national banks, which are eligible to become members of the home-loan bank through subscription to the capital stock thereof. By means of the moneys thus received a member is enabled to meet the legitimate withdrawals of investment accounts, to renew maturing mortgages on easy payments over a long term of years and thus avoid the necessity of foreclosures and the wiping out of the savings of the home owner invested in his property. This source of credit will place it in the power of the borrowing member to finance the home owner in paying his taxes and in repairing and modernizing his home. It will also enable the member, where the security is ample, to advance some additional money to the home owner to tide him over the period of unemployment and thus enable him to live in times of stress on the reserves which he has accumulated under normal conditions. It is universally conceded that the small home owner who is dependent upon mortgaging his home to finance his home ownership is now compelled in many instances to accept short-term loans at a high rate of interest, which it is impossible for him to meet at maturity. Also, he is frequently compelled to place a second mortgage on his home to secure necessary additional money to meet the payments on the first mortgage and other necessary expenditures, and to secure such second mortgage he must pay a still higher rate of interest and frequently a bonus or commission to a mortgage agency.

The home loan bank bill discourages short-term loans by providing for a larger loan on long-term mortgages than on short-term mortgages. It also encourages the amortization of loans over a long period of time in preference to straight mortgages for the payment of the total loan at the end of the maturity period. The home-loan agencies having this source of credit can avoid the necessity of loading themselves down with real estate taken in under foreclosures. It is, of course, recognized that foreclosures depress realestate values and tend to impair mortgage securities. The effect of this bill will be to render liquid long-term amortized home loans. The set-up of the home-loan banks in each section of the country will constitute a clearing house between the areas in which there are available surpluses of money for home-loan purposes and those areas in which the demand for such loans exceeds the supply of money therefor. This set-up will constitute an agency for marshalling the available assets of the entire country for homeloan purposes and for use in every town and city of the Nation. As has been aptly said, "The system would pool the entire home-financing credit of the country for the benefit of every part."

The bonds of any one of the home loan banks will have back of them not only 190 per cent of unpaid mortgages for every dollar of bonds but the combined resources of all of the other home loan banks. Such bonds will have tax-exemption privilege except for gift, estate, and inheritance taxes and surtaxes, and will be second only to the United States Treasury securities in point of attractiveness to investors. There can be no question of the salability of the bonds and that sufficient moneys will be made available at all times to supply the credit necessary to carry out the purposes of this bill. At the present time, it is easier and less expensive to finance any business or industry or any commodity than it is to finance the building or purchasing of a home. This is due to the fact that the long-term home loan securities are not now liquid.

This bill seeks to make liquid such securities by placing back of them the great credit reservoir provided through the home loan bank system. Adequate relief for home loan mortgage securities can not be had through the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. That corporation can only make short-term loans, and by its very constitution is only a temporary emergency agency and not a permanent factor in maintaining credits after the period of emergency has passed. The home loan bank system will meet the demands of emergency now existing and will continue as a permanent institution to stabilize home-loan securities on a basis of continuing confidence therein.

It will also stabilize the values of residential property and prevent disastrous fluctuations in such values through undue expansion or destructive deflation. It will restore and maintain confidence in residential property values through the stabilization of the loan values thereof. It will establish a sense of permanent security in home property investments. It will not only make available mortgage credits for such investments but will also provide a permanent source of such credits on a stabilized interest basis.

Under these conditions of security to the home owner in his holdings he will not hesitate to make the necessary repairs and improvements from time to time on his home property, thereby furnishing employment to labor and creating an increased demand for all building materials. will be a great boon to the lumber industry and to other dealers in construction materials who also employ large forces of labor. In short, the ramifications of the benefits through new home-building construction and the repair and modernization of existing buildings will reach into every industrial activity of the country. Not only will the laborers on the building itself be benefited through the earning of wages but the lumber man, the brick man, the roofing man, the hardware dealer, and all other dealers in building materials along with the great number of laborers which they employ will be directly benefited.

The stabilization of such residential property values would in a large measure prevent tax delinquencies which are now embarrassing practically every municipality in the country. It is unquestionably true that many bank failures within the past two years were caused from being overloaded with non-liquid home-loan mortgages. Had this system been in operation in 1929 and this reservoir of credit available, many of such banks would still be operating, and thousands of homes would have been saved to their owners. Because of the non-liquid character of home-loan mortgages the home owner is the first person to feel the crushing effect of a financial depression.

The loaning institutions must of necessity begin their hedging operations at the earliest signs of such coming depression, and the first form of security that is placed under the ban is the home-loan mortgage because of its rigidity. This bill is designed to remedy that situation, and in my judgment it will do so. It is obvious that confidence in a security can not be maintained during times of financial stress unless that security is reasonably liquid in character. Any measure which will give to $20,000,000,000 of security investments a readily marketable status whether in good or bad financial weather will go a long way toward keeping the economic ship on an even keel. It is equally true that a dead weight of $20,000,000,000 of security values will unbalance the whole economic poise if it can not be liquefied. It is my opinion that the legislation here proposed is absolutely essential to the success of the program to rehabilitate credit conditions in this country. This legislation is not only necessary in the present emergency but it is equally necessary to prevent a recurrence of similar credit emergencies. Fear is the greatest foe to economic recovery or to the maintenance of normal economic conditions. Fear in its most exaggerated form is paralyzing the home-loan credit system of the country to-day. That fear and paralysis can only be relieved through setting up a great source of available credit such as this bill provides. When it is definitely known that this great block of $20,000,000,000 of frozen securities can be made readily negotiable through tapping the reservoir of ample credit provided in this home loan bank bill. the fear of the home-loaning institutions will vanish overnight and a great step will be taken on the upgrade toward economic recovery. If the home-loaning institutions have assurance that in emergencies they have an unfailing source of credit at hand such emergencies will either subside or will not carry with them a dread sense of paralyzing fear. If these institutions are in position at all times to meet emergencies they will not be disturbed when an emergency arises. In fact, the capacity to cope with a business emergency will in most cases prevent the occurrence of it. The relief program of this Congress can not be complete without the enactment of this legislation.

It must be borne in mind at all times that the ultimate purpose of this legislation is to help the small home owner. It is not within the province of this bill to furnish credit facilities for the construction or improvement of large industrial or business buildings, apartment houses or hotels, nor even of the high-priced homes. Under the provision of the bill no mortgage will be accepted on a home of greater value than $20,000. The main purpose therefore is to bring relief to that great army of small home owners who constitute the mass and the rank and file of our people. If this great body of our citizenship is placed on a basis of security in their homes and are made self-sustaining in the maintenance of them and are imbued with the feeling of security in their holdings, their morale and courage will be strengthened and they will have a happier and more hopeful outlook on life. It is impossible to segregate the economic from the social conditions of a people. They are interrelated and interdependent. Easy economic conditions are the foundation upon which a proper social structure is built. A people can not be contented or patriotic when under a constant strain of fear that destitution and want may come upon them. The beneficial effects of this legislation will be farreaching in bettering both the economic and social conditions of the people. This Government will fall far short of its duty if it neglects this opportunity to confer those benefits. I am absolutely certain in my own mind that this proposed legislation will effectuate in substantial measure the purposes for which it is designed. In the interest of the small home owner, which means in its broader sense the interest of the entire Nation, I am heartily supporting this measure. [Applause.]

Mr. REILLY. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SWEENEY].

Mr. SWEENEY. Mr. Chairman, the opposition to this bill comes chiefly from the insurance companies and certain selfish bankers, groups which are now the beneficiaries of the legislation passed, known as the Reconstruction Finance

I think the committee has epitomized the argument in favor of this bill on page 9 of the committee report, and it ought to insure the passage of this bill. It points out to the House that over 8,000,000 homes have been built through the operation of building and loan companies during the past

Those of us who know something about the plight of the building and loan companies know they are in distress today. Some of the people who have their life savings in these institutions are living on a dole, so to speak, where boards of directors are able, without jeopardizing the financial structure of the institution, to give them thirty or forty dollars a month to live on.

This bill, if passed, will do more than the Reconstruction Finance Corporation attempts to do in the nature of trying to stimulate employment. I voted for the Reconstruction Finance Corporation legislation, hoping that the beneficial results would trickle down and stimulate employment, but we find that instead of stimulating employment, money to the extent of $17,100,000 is loaned to the Missouri Pacific Railroad to pay off their current obligations to the house of

This bill will do something for the little fellow, the fellow who has a family; the fellow who wants to paint his house or who wants to refinance his mortgage to keep a shelter over his family. It will bring work to many who are engaged in the various building trades, to carpenters, mechanics, and laborers who are now out of employment.

I dare say that the State of Ohio, in proportion to its population, has more building and loan associations than have a strict supervision over the operation of these associations. Every necessary protection surrounds the investments of the members of these organizations. Millions of our people have their life savings tied up in building and loan associations and savings banks throughout the country. Unfortunately, millions of our people have lost their equities and their little homes because of the cruel process of foreclosure, undoubtedly necessitated by the economic upheaval and financial disaster experienced by the banks and savings institutions during the past two years. The opportunity to refinance their investment and to prevent foreclosure of home has been denied these unfortunate people. This measure, by stipulating that not more than 40 per cent of the value of the real estate can be advanced as a mortgage loan, and not more than $20,000 can be advanced as a loan on home property regardless of its value, inures to the benefit of the little fellow. It is about time consideration be given to that class of our people who are the backbone of the Nation, the home owners of America.

If there be one measure before this Congress for consideration that will, in my opinion, stimulate employment, add to the sale of building material products, and restore public confidence throughout the land, it is this proposed Federal home loan bank bill before the House to-day.

Mortgage credit has not been available to the class who will benefit by this legislation. Vast amounts of frozen funds or assets invested by building and loan associations and savings banks in mortgages can be released when this measure becomes a law. Under its provisions long-term methods of home financing can be instituted, thereby eliminating the short-term loan, always expensive and dangerous to the average home buyer. The investors in these institutions who will benefit by the enactment of this bill need a stimulation of confidence which is lacking at the present time. I consider it a duty and a privilege, Mr. Speaker, to lend my support to this legislation which is equal, if not more important, to any measure enacted to date by the Seventy-second Congress.

Mr. REILLY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 14 minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. HANCOCK].

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, it has been my privilege for the past two months to give a considerable part of my time to the study of this legislation, and I am frank to admit that to begin with I held considerable doubt as to its need and governmental soundness. However, the further I went into a study of the bill and the more thought and consideration I gave to its purpose the stronger my belief grew in its worthiness. I therefore find myself now strongly in favor of the bill. It is the last item in the President's program for economic relief and is, in my judgment, the best proposal which has been suggested by him so far as the average citizen is concerned. With certain amendments to be offered by the committee I can recommend it to you as socially and economically sound and desirable and legislatively wise. It gives us the opportunity to practice what we have been preaching with respect to our faith in home ownership and its wholesome effect upon American life. Protection to the home means protection to the Nation. Wreck it and you wreck the structure which has been erected through years of effort, planning, sacrifice, and determination. Remember, without the home there is nothing left worth while. Its perpetuity with security, safety, and happiness is the hope of the hour and the greater

The Federal home loan bank bill is designed primarily to foster the development of the American home. No explanation is needed to show the importance of the home in our social, political, and economic life. It is universally recognized that one of the fundamental steps to be taken in promoting progress in this country is to foster home ownership in every possible practical and sound way.

The ambition of every worthy American citizen is to be a home owner. It is our duty, as representatives of the Nation's citizenry, to provide the means whereby this ambition may be realized. It is an idle waste of words and any State in the Union. Our State laws insure, and we do time for us to stress the desirability of home ownership in one breath and in the next leave the home owner to wrestle, unaided, against the threat of dispossession and foreclosure in times of business depression, like that which the Nation is now experiencing. We can not, in common fairness to the citizen, urge him to become a home owner without attempting to protect and safeguard him in that ownership so far as possible

Home ownership can not be encouraged, fostered, or promoted on a short-term or demand-payment credit basis. The cry of commercial bankers to-day that their realestate loans are frozen only echoes the utter inadequacy of existing credit facilities and reveals the consequences of our neglect to safeguard adequately one of the most vital economic and social phases of our civilization.

Short-time credit not only is inadequate and uneconomical but it simply means a constant renewing of an advance previously made or periodic searching for another source of credit to pay off a loan falling due. It is obvious that if credit is to be most economically advanced to the home owner, it must not be for 60 or 90 days, or for 1 year or 3 years or 5 years, because the average purchaser of a home can not expect to be able to accumulate sufficient over and above living expenses to be able to completely pay off the loan in such a period of time. A type of credit which will meet his needs is one which will not mature until his savings over many years will be sufficient to repay it entirely. He must have credit which does not need to be repaid in its entirety in periods less than 8, 9, 10, or more years.

Because practically all purchases of homes are made with the use of credit, the market and therefore values of homes are peculiarly dependent on there being at all times sufficient credit facilities for new purchases. Whenever the supply of this credit dries up because of general business conditions, the values of homes are certain to fall. This has been one of the great deterrents to home ownership in the past.

The repayment of borrowed money for the purchase of a home means that a substantial portion, if not all, of the savings of the owner are tied up in his home. If home ownership is to be promoted, some method whereby these savings can be realized upon in case of an emergency for living expenses must be developed. The periods when it is most likely that such savings will be needed, that is, periods of economic distress as under present conditions, are precisely those times when it is difficult, if not impossible, to secure the loan which would make available the savings in the home. This is not as it should be; and if we are to promote increased home ownership, we must make some provision to care for these needs.

Because of their permanence and the length of time which they are used, homes from time to time require modernization and repairs, and normally such expenditures provide a considerable amount of employment and are the source of employment for important business interests. However, the time when such repairs can be most economically made, that is, during periods of low price levels, is also the time when it is most difficult to secure credit for them, even on the security of the home as a whole. If, during periods of economic distress, funds for such repairs and modernization could be made available, it would constitute an important source for relief to unemployment and falling business activity.

For large numbers of people the building of a home according to their own plans is an important motive for saving and thrift. During periods of business activity and high prices they are advised to postpone this building until a little later, when it can be done at lower prices, only to find that if they delay until the lowered prices are actually reached, they are unable to receive the additional financing which is necessary.

These facts all bring out the point that if home ownership in America is to be fostered, if this very foundation of our vaunted American civilization is to be maintained, we must make provision for a continuous and adequate stream of credit in the home-financing field and make certain that such credit will be available in periods of business depression even more than in periods of prosperity.

This is precisely the purpose of the Federal home loan bank bill. It is designed not only to assist home-financing institutions in supplying the much-needed credit during periods of economic emergency but also by setting up a permanent system, to make available the type of credit which is so essential, namely, long-term, monthly-installment credit. Thus, in cases of future emergencies—and history gives us no reason to believe that such emergencies will not occur again and again—the reserves of the home-financing institutions can be pooled and the necessary relief agencies will be ready and available to prevent conditions becoming acute, as at present.

The purpose of the home loan bank bill therefore is to foster home ownership by insuring that there will be available adequate, long-term mortgage credit. It will be conservatively and economically used, because any violation of sound mortgage practice will primarily and immediately react to the financial detriment of the home-financing institutions to whom this credit is made available.

There are four major sources of first-mortgage loans on small homes in this country. The largest single source is the building and loan association; then are the insurance companies, banks, and private investors. To-day these homefinancing institutions are in a critical condition. The funds of building and loan associations come primarily from the savings of the wage earner or the small investor, and today unemployment and decreased incomes require that in many cases the small saver use part or all of his savings for living expenses. When such savings are withdrawn, it means, of course, that the building and loan association can not make any home-mortgage loans. The fact that their money is in long-term mortgages, which can not be turned into cash, means that when many of their savers are, as now, asking for and in urgent need for their funds, they are not able to pay them.

Similar stringency of mortgage funds has developed in the case of insurance companies. The same type of saver and investor who is withdrawing from the building and loan association is attempting to secure some of his savings from the policy loan or cash surrender value of his insurance. In one case the policy loans of an insurance company have increased 500 per cent within a period of two years. Some insurance companies are unable to renew their three to five year mortgages, which are now coming due and are asking for payment, in whole or in part, precisely at a time when the home owner is unable to secure his renewal funds from any other source. The policy of life insurance companies in their home-mortgage operations has always restricted them from serving a great class of legitimate home owners. Most of them lay down a flat rule that they will not make mortgages in cities of less than a certain population, frequently 50,000, and they will not make loans on homes more than a certain number of years old, preferring, in fact, the new homes. Frequently they will not make loans for less than $4,000 or $5,000, which cuts off entirely a large proportion of the families in the United States. On the whole, insurance loans have been very conservative, 40 per cent or 50 per cent, or, at the most, 60 per cent of the value of the property, which means that, in order to secure the financing necessary for a home purchase, the borrower must take a second mortgage with its ruinous high rate of interest and discount. Such rules are required by the fact that the insurance companies loan through agents and not directly and, therefore, do not have the personal, local contact. They must, therefore, lay down regulations which will bring only the most conservative loans to them.

These points are raised only to show that, from the very nature of things, under normal conditions and even more so in the present emergency, life insurance companies can not be depended upon to take care of the home-credit needs. In many localities they are not in a position to renew all of their mortgages which are now falling due, thus forcing foreclosures which could be avoided if these loans could be taken up by building and loan associations. The large insurance companies have been the principal opponents of the home loan bank bill.

The situation with regard to inability to renew loans and the very general drying up of credit for home mortgages is even more pronounced in the case of banks. Where a bank has failed, one of the things which must be done is to liquidate its assets, and this means that mortgages held by the bank can not be renewed, but must be collected in full. Foreclosure must take place, even though the borrower has kept up his interest and principal repayments right to the minute. Through no fault of his own he loses his home because he has no other source of credit to which to turn. The property must be sold at whatever it will bring through foreclosure in the process of converting the assets of the banks into cash to pay off depositors and other creditors.

Private investors can not possibly furnish all the funds which are needed.

It is time that steps were taken to definitely foster and develop the long-time amortized, or installment, loan, which is the only type which really meets the requirements of the home owner. In the case of short-term loans, the borrower is at all times at the mercy of the lender with regard to renewals. He must definitely contract to repay the principal amount at the end of a certain period and must do so either by securing another loan from the same source or go somewhere else. In times such as the present the home owner is unable to secure those renewals or those new loans. The lender may foreclose, and in hundreds of thousands of cases at the present time is doing just that. The result is that in practically every community homes taken by foreclosure are being thrown on the market at forced sale, with the inevitable result of falling values further impairing the security of other home owners. Even when renewals are made the old renewal system, as it is frequently practiced by lenders on short-term mortgages, results in annual or biannual commissions and thus increases the financing charges to the struggling home owner.

A prime purpose of the home loan bank bill is to promote the development of the long-term amortized mortgages which are so essential for further home ownership. Because there is no reserve system, no system specifically designed to purchase this type of long-term mortgage, the home-mortgage situation to-day is in a deplorable condition, and home ownership in the United States seems doomed to receive a setback from which it may not recover for a generation or more. If funds are to be attracted into this field, even in the future, there must be some system set up to counteract the lack of availability which makes investments in this field unattractive. It is one of the most vital problems that have confronted Congress for a long time.

There have been some objections raised to the Federal home loan bank bill. These have emanated, as it seemed to me, entirely from the motive of protecting the interests of persons who feel that their present business may be affected by a system which will improve the position of the home owner. They do not, I am convinced, come from the home-mortgage borrower, or the home owner himself.

It has been stated that the result of this bill would be a wave of speculative and inflationary home building, which would impair the value of the property now in existence. One of the premises on which this argument is based is that, in general, we already have too many homes. When we consider the deplorable housing conditions of a large part of our populace and when we consider the impossibility, under present home-financing conditions, of the lower income groups ever hoping to own their own homes, it seems to me that this argument falls of its own weight. As a matter of fact, the bill has been specifically designed to anticipate any possible danger of the financing of building booms. The Federal Home Loan Board, with more authority than either the Federal Reserve Board or the Federal Farm Loan Board, has the power to absolutely prevent the resources of the system from being used in such a manner as to result in inflationary and speculative building, which no one desires.

That the decrease in the value of homes has not been proportionate to the general fall in prices has been due, not to the fact that we have more homes than we can use but to the fact that there is not enough credit to assist the purchaser who is waiting for just such a time as this to buy his home but who is kept from doing so because he can not secure a proper and legitimate loan. In practically every community there will be found a legitimate demand for additional homes, built according to the plans and desires of people who have been saving for this purpose for years. Even this limited amount of building, with its employment of skilled labor in the construction industries and with its demand for lumber, bricks, cement, and so forth, would be an important factor in bringing about improvement in business conditions.

Under the Federal home-loan bank system loans will be made under the supervision of institutions who have their own funds invested in the home-financing business. If they make poor loans or if they make loans in such amounts as to bring about speculation and inflation, it will impair the value of their own investments in this field, because they will be the first ones to be hurt by it. We can depend on the good business sense of these institutions not to bring about speculative overbuilding, particularly when this judgment will, in turn, be backed up by that of the members of the Federal home-loan board. Any loans for building purposes which would be made in the near future would be made only to persons who want to build homes for themselves rather than to speculators.

It has been claimed that there is no need for this reserve system because there is plenty of money available for home mortgages. This is not borne out by the facts, however, as, with the exception of a few communities, there are no first mortgage funds available. A survey of several hundred building and loan associations, for example, in many communities throughout the country, indicates that they have applications for first mortgages from persons who have tried and who can not secure funds from other sources, in amounts greater than they can take care of for months, or even years, to come. There is genuine and overwhelming distress on the part of home owners who are dependent on mortgage-financing institutions, and there is no question of the need for additional funds in this field.

In some sections of the country there has always been a dearth of home-mortgage funds, and it was shown on good authority that building and loan associations, for example, in those sections are habitually six or eight months or sometimes a year and a half behind their applications in making loans. In other words, the home-financing institutions have not been able to meet the need even in normal times and can not begin to even approach it at present and possibly not for some years to come. This is a situation which should not exist in a country where it is desired to foster home ownership.

It has been objected that the Federal home loan bank bill would create a new banking system. If the objection is based on the idea that it would create a system rivaling in scope of operation that of the Federal reserve bank system, the objection is entirely unwarranted. Although the bill provides that the 12 home-loan banks may accept deposits, these deposits can only be from the Government or from their member institutions and will not be subject to check and will not be used in financing commercial operations, but are retained in the home-loan business. The Federal home-loan banks will have no conflict with the Federal reserve banks because they cover fields which complement and supplement rather than compete with each other. The Federal reserve bank system is designed primarily to care for the short-time commercial-credit needs of the country. The Federal home-loan bank system will care only for the long-time credit needs of the home financing business.

The bill will create a banking system in that it will provide for mobilizing the reserves for long-time home-mort-gage financing institutions. It will make those reserves more effective by pooling them and will permit the transfer of this type of funds from places where it is not needed at a particular time to other places where there may be a genuine need for it. So that while in this sense a new banking system is created, I am convinced that it is one which is sorely needed to complete the financial structure of the Nation and one which will not in any way conflict with the other systems which Congress has seen fit to set up.

One of the purposes of the home loan bank bill is to remedy the present dire conditions in the home-financing field, but this is by no means its only purpose and possibly not its most important one. It is fundamentally a means of long-range economic planning to secure for the home owners and prospective home owners of the country an adequate supply at all times of the necessary long-term credit, credit that is related to the amount paid in the purchase of a home, the amount which the purchaser can pay down in cash, and the amounts which he can set aside year by year to pay off his mortgage. The control features in the bill, granting considerable power to the governing board, will permit the real economic planning for the general well-being of the Nation by restricting advances during times when funds are abundant, with a view to making them more available when other credit sources begin to dry up in periods of decreasing business activity, and can thus be of major assistance in alleviating the harmful effects of the business cycle.

The home loan bank bill is composed of 27 sections. So far as its details are concerned, the bill was very largely drawn from the Federal reserve act and the farm loan act and, therefore, much if not all of the machinery has been thoroughly tested through the years these systems have been in operation. However, the present bill is, in my judgment, better drafted than either the Federal reserve act or the farm loan act or some of the previous banking legislation which has been passed by Congress.

The first two sections of the bill deal with the name Federal loan bank act and definitions important to a later understanding of the measure. For example, "home-mort-gage loan" is defined to be a first mortgage on residential real estate, housing one or two families. Other definitions clarify and make certain the meaning of terms which are frequently used in the bill.

Section 3 provides that continental United States and the Territories of Alaska and Hawaii shall be divided into 12 districts by the Federal Home Loan Bank Board. The Federal home-loan bank shall be established in each district in a city designated by the board. The apportionment of the districts is to be done with due regard to the convenience and customary course of business of the institutions eligible for membership, but no district shall contain a fractional part of a State. Twelve banks will be set up, providing a decentralized home-mortgage bank system. These 12 banks, located in different parts of the country, will be able to quickly and economically serve their members. The number of banks may later be decreased by the board if the volume of business does not justify the original 12.

Section 4 provides that only institutions organized under the laws of any State or of the United States and subject to inspection and regulation under the laws of the State or of the United States, which, in the judgment of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board, make long-term mortgage loans and whose financial condition is satisfactory to the board, shall be eligible for membership. The eligible institutions are specifically set forth as building and loan associations, cooperative banks, homestead associations, savings and loan associations, savings banks, trust companies, other banks except national banks and insurance companies. The primary purpose behind this section is to set up a system which will be sound and permanent and which will foster the objectives of the bill-that is, adequate long-term credit facilities for home owners. For this reason, since the system is built up on member institutions, it is important that only regulated and sound institutions be admitted.

It is intended in this bill to definitely divorce the two inconsistent types of credit advances, that is, the short-term commercial lending and the long-term home mortgage financing. Experience has amply shown what has long 9 are divided into three classes, and for the first year all been known to students of banking, that it is dangerous for institutions to use short-term demand deposits to make long-term loans. For the safety of the system, it is important that only those institutions who can economically and safely make long-term loans be admitted.

Section 5 provides that the board shall determine a capital of each of the banks with a minimum of $5,000,000 each. The board shall open books in each district for subscription to the capital stock of the bank in that district. This stock will be divided into shares, with a par value of $100 each, and each member institution must originally subscribe for stock to a minimum amount of $1,500, or 1 per cent of the aggregate of the unpaid principal of the subscriber's home mortgages. The amount of stock held by each member will be adjusted from time to time so that the member will at all times have invested in this stock an amount at least equal to that calculated in the same manner as the original subscription. The stock subscriptions may be paid for in cash or in installments, with a minimum of one-fourth payable at the time of the filing of application and the balance payable at least one-fourth at the end of each succeeding period of four months.

In case the State laws governing an institution otherwise eligible for membership do not permit subscription for stock it may, in lieu thereof, deposit with the bank an amount of cash, short-term debenture bonds issued by the bank, or Federal Government securities equal to the amount of the required stock subscription. This is designed as a temporary provision to bridge over the time until the State laws can be changed to permit participation of building and loan associations and banks by stock subscription. If State laws are not changed to so permit stock ownership by the end of 42 months after the enactment of the home loan bank bill, institutions that have secured their membership by such deposits shall cease to be members.

The Secretary of the Treasury, on behalf of the United States, is to subscribe for that part of the minimum capital of each Federal home-loan bank as is not subscribed for by the members within 30 days after books have been opened. with a maximum of $125,000,000. After the amount of capital of a Federal home-loan bank paid in by members equals the amount paid in by the Secretary of the Treasury, onehalf of the sums thereafter paid in as capital shall be applied to the payment and retirement of the stock held by the United States.

Provision is made for the withdrawal of any member from membership in a bank six months after the filing of written notice, and the board may, after hearing, remove any member from membership if it has failed to comply with the provisions of the home loan bank act or the regulations of the board.

Dividends up to 2 per cent are to be paid on stock subscribed for by the United States.

This section 5 thus insures that the home-loan bank system will have resources to take care of present emergency needs, and that as many institutions as possible may receive the benefit of it. It is proposed that the United States shall not make a permanent investment but shall purchase stock only in order to permit immediate operation; and therefore this section provides for the retirement of that stock from later capital-stock subscriptions of member institutions. The required stock purchase by member institutions has not been made so high as to be burdensome or to keep out any worth-while institutions. At the same time, since it is the intention to permit the retirement of the Government funds placed in the system as soon as possible by securing additional capital stock through new member institutions, the amount of such stock participation by these member institutions must be sufficiently large as to rapidly supplant the Government's investment. One per cent of the unpaid principal of the home mortgages of the member institutions has seemed to fit both of these objectives.

Section 6 vests the management of each Federal homeloan bank in a board of 11 directors, 2 of whom shall be appointed by the Federal Home Loan Bank Board. The other will be appointed by the board. The board is to divide the members of each bank into three groups, designated as A, B, and C, respectively, and representing as fairly as possible large, medium, and small members, according to the net value of their holdings of home mortgages. In the election of directors, 3 class-A directors shall be officers or directors of a member in Group A, 3 class-B directors shall be officers or directors of a member in Group B, and 3 class-C directors shall be directors or officers of a member in Group C. Each member may nominate suitably qualified persons for election as directors of the class corresponding to the group to which such member belongs, and each member will have one vote for each director in its class. All directors are to serve for three years. The board is to designate one of the directors of each bank to be chairman and one to be vice chairman of the board of directors of each bank.

Section 7 provides for the examination by the board of the laws of the various States from time to time, in order to determine whether there will be adequate protection to a Federal home-loan bank in making or collecting advances under this act.

Section 8 provides that any member shall be eligible to apply for advances upon the granting of an application or permission to apply, which application shall be in a form as required by the bank of which it is a member, with the approval of the board. This provision gives the home-loan banks the power to set up conditions of application which will insure the proper working of the system.

Section 9 gives each of the Federal home-loan banks authority to make advances to members who have become eligible to apply for them upon security of home mortgages, subject to regulations, restrictions, and limitations prescribed by the board. Such advances are subject to the following limitations: If they are secured by a home mortgage in connection with an amortized home-mortgage loan with an original term of eight years or more, the money advanced to the member may not be in excess of 60 per cent of the unpaid principal of the home-mortgage loan; if the advance is secured by home mortgage given in respect to any other home-mortgage loan, it shall not be in excess of 50 per cent of the unpaid principal of the loan. In no case shall the amount advanced exceed 40 per cent of the appraised valuation of the real estate securing the homemortgage loan. No home mortgage can be accepted as collateral for an advance if the home-mortgage loan has more than 15 years to run to maturity. The appraised valuation is to be established by certification by the borrowing member or other evidence as the board may require it. Each bank has the power to make or to require to be made such appraisals and evidences. No mortgages on homes valued at more than $20,000 are eligible for rediscount.

The provision that any mortgage eligible for collateral for an advance from a home-loan bank shall not exceed 40 per cent as to unpaid principal of the appraised value of the property, seems to be entirely reasonable, in view of the desire to set up a thoroughly sound and conservative system. Members, of course, can lend 60 per cent or 80 per cent entirely as they see fit and can raise money on such mortgages up to 40 per cent of the property value. The home-loan bank system is not to be used to furnish a major or large part of the assets of any of the member institutions. It is to supplement those assets with the idea that they will still continue to receive their funds from their customary sources.

The advances, in addition to the security mentioned, shall be made on the note or obligation of the member bearing such rate of interest as the board may determine. At no time shall the aggregate outstanding advances to any member exceed twelve times the amount paid in by such member for capital stock subscribed for by it.

These provisions are inserted to provide unquestioned safety for the home-loan banks and for the bonds which are to be issued against the home mortgages. In issuing bonds, each bank must place in the hands of the registrar home-loan mortgages whose unpaid balance is twice the amount of bonds issued. This means that each $100 of bond will have practically $200 of unpaid mortgage behind it and a minimum of $250 of real-estate value. This insures a safe and conservative type of institution and the bonds should be readily salable.

Section 10 gives the general powers and duties of the banks. Subject to the approval of the board each bank may borrow money and give security and issue bonds or debentures secured by home mortgages.

The rates of interest upon the notes, debentures, and bonds of the banks shall be approved or determined by the board except that no bond or debenture within seven years after the enactment of the act shall bear interest in excess of 5½ per cent, and no bond or debenture issued thereafter shall bear a rate in excess of 5 per cent.

The banks will be jointly and severally liable on obligations issued by any bank. Each bank may have power to accept deposits, but only such as are made by its members or by other Federal home-loan banks. These deposits will not be subject to check, and interest in excess of 2 per cent can not be paid on them. No bank may transact any banking or other business unless expressly authorized by the act.

The funds which may be deposited by member institutions with the Federal home-loan banks are those which have been placed in these institutions to be used in the home-financing field. If they can not be used at the moment by one member institution, it is altogether fitting that they be placed with the home-loan bank by that member so that they can be made available to other members. Since these funds have been definitely ear-marked for home-financing purposes, their deposit with the Federal home-loan banks will in no way be detrimental to the commercial or agricultural interests of the country. These deposits will assist in the free flow of mortgage funds throughout the country, tending to equalize interest rates and to make home ownership equally available to citizens in all localities.

The board is authorized to permit and, in case of an emergency, to require Federal home-loan banks to rediscount the discounted notes of members held by other banks, or purchase the bonds by another bank, or to make deposits with other Federal home-loan banks. The rates on which these discounts or purchases and interest payments are made shall be fixed by the board.

Each bank shall at all times have an amount equal to the sums paid in on outstanding capital subscriptions of its members plus an amount equal to current deposits received from its members invested in United States securities, cash in banks, or advances to members with maturities not greater than one year.

The above requirement keeps each of the 12 banks sufficiently liquid to meet emergencies which may arise or to make short-term advances while long-time funds are being raised through bond issue. It is felt that keeping a proper portion of each bank's resources in Government securities and deposits in commercial banks will add to the strength of the banks and the popularity of their securities.

Section 11 provides that the directors of each bank shall make and file with the board an organization certificate when the bank shall become a body corporate and shall have the usual corporate powers such as that to adopt, alter, or use a corporate seal; to make contracts, to purchase, lease, to hold, or dispose of real estate as may be necessary or convenient to the transaction of its business; to sue and be sued; to employ and fix the compensation of its officers, subject to the approval of the board; define their duties and powers.

Section 12 provides that every Federal home-loan bank, including the capital and reserve or surplus and income derived therefrom shall be exempt from State, municipal, and local taxation except taxes upon real estate held by the bank. The bonds and debentures to be issued by the bank, and the income derived from them, will be exempt from Federal, State, municipal, and local taxation.

This section insures that through tax exemption the bonds issued by the Federal home-loan banks will have a ready market at interest rates sufficiently low that they can be of real assistance to the home owner. Tax-exempt bonds have been issued for other financial institutions designed primarily to assist the farming interests of the country; and certainly the home owners, making up the backbone of the Nation's citizenship, are entitled to the same consideration. By adding to the taxable real estate in the form of homes for the local units, this tax-exemption feature in the act will increase the taxing powers of the local units and will more than make up for the loss of income to the Federal Government resulting from exemption of the bonds.

Section 13 provides that each Federal home loan bank may be designated by the Secretary of the Treasury as a depository of public money except receipts from customs, and it may also be defined as a financial agent of the Government. This provision is primarily to insure the constitutionality of the measure.

Section 14 provides that obligations of the Federal homeloan banks shall be lawful investments and may be accepted as security for any fiduciary, trust, and public funds under the control of the United States or any officer or officers thereof. Federal reserve banks are authorized to act as depositories, custodians, or fiscal agents of the Federal home-loan banks.

Section 15 provides that the Federal home-loan bank shall carry to a reserve account semiannually 20 per cent of its net earnings until the reserve account is equal to 100 per cent of the paid-in capital of the bank, and thereafter 5 per cent of the net earnings shall be added semiannually to the reserve account. Dividends can not be paid if the reserve shall at any time have been impaired below 100 per cent of the paid-in capital. The board may require from time to time that the Federal home-loan banks established additional reserves or make charge-offs on account of depreciation or impairment of its assets. No dividends shall be paid except out of net earnings remaining after all reserves and charge-offs have been provided for, and then only with the approval of the board.

Section 16 provides for the appointment by the President of the United States by and with the consent of the Senate of a Federal Home Loan Bank Board, composed of five members. One member is to serve for 2 years, one for 3 years, one for 4 years, one for 5 years, and one for 6 years. Thereafter the term of members shall be six years. Each of the members of the board is to receive a salary of $10,000 per annum. The President of the United States shall designate one of the members as chairman of the board, who will be the chief executive officer.

This board has supervisory powers over the Federal homeloan banks and shall perform the other duties specifically prescribed and shall have power to adopt, amend, and require the observances of such rules, regulations, and orders as shall be necessary to carry out the purposes of the act. It will have the power to suspend or remove any director, officer, or employee of any home-loan bank.

It is essential in such a bank system that there be a central board with broad powers to act and to regulate the functioning of the system. In some respects, the powers of this board are broader than those of the Federal Reserve Board or the Federal Farm Loan Board. This is partly because the Federal home-loan banks will be dealing with diverse types of institutions, operating under different State laws and, therefore, considerable discretionary powers must be laid somewhere. The Federal Home Loan Board is the logical body to exercise such power. The compensation provided is adequate to secure men of real ability and it will require considerable ability to adequately administer the affairs of the system.

Section 17 appropriates $500,000 to cover the expenses of organization and establishment of the banks until the end of the fiscal year, 1933. It also gives the board the power to levy semiannually upon the banks, assessments to be paid on on equitable basis sufficient to be derived for the estimated expenses of the board for the half year succeeding such levy, beginning with the first half of the calendar year market at interest rates sufficiently low that they can be 1933. If there is a deficiency the board has the power to of real assistance to the home owner. Tax-exempt bonds make an immediate assessment against the banks.

This provision is necessary in order to permit the immediate and efficient functioning of the board in setting up the home-loan bank system and in making it operative under the present emergency needs with as little delay as possible.

Inasmuch as subsequent expenses will be paid by assessments against the banks, the system will be entirely self-supporting and there is no other more equitable way in which to secure the necessary funds to meet administrative expenses. After the system has been organized, however, there will be no further expenses to the Government and the whole administration will be self-supporting.

Section 18 gives the board power to select, employ, and fix the compensation of such officers, employees, attorneys, and agents as are necessary for the performance of its duties.

Under section 19 the board must at least semiannually, and may oftener, require examinations and reports of conditions of all Federal home-loan banks. The board shall also annually make a full report of its operations to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, who shall cause same to be printed for Members of Congress. Again, this provision assists in making certain that the Federal home-loan banks will be soundly and conservatively operated in accordance with this act and with the rules and regulations to be laid down by the Federal Home Loan Bank Board.

Section 20 provides penalties for false statement, overvaluation of security, forgery, embezzlement, and all the possible acts of dishonesty or irresponsibility that might be committed by anyone connected with the home-loan bank system or dealing with it.

Individuals, partnerships, and associations or corporations are not permitted to use the name "Federal home-loan bank" nor parts thereof in a way that would infer membership when such is not the fact.

Section 21 authorizes other departments of the Federal Government to make available to the board such information and reports in confidence as would assist them in carrying out the purposes of the act. This section also provides that every institution which applies for advances must consent to such examination as the bank or board may require.

Section 21, being a miscellaneous section, also includes two amendments to the national bank act, one amending it to insure the participation of national banks and another amendment treating of the taxation privileges of the States with regard to national banks and the other institutions included in the bill.

This section also directs the allocation of funds by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to the Secretary of the Treasury, who in turn is to use the funds in making capital-stock subscriptions on behalf of the Government, which are to be made at the time the banks are established.

Section 22 provides for the preparation and custodianship of plates, dies, and forms for such stock debentures and bonds as may be necessary.

Section 23 permits the affiliation of a State home-loan bank or similar organization, which includes the majority of home-financing institutions of any one class in any one State. Such banks are now in existence in Massachusetts and New York.

Section 24 provides that every Federal home-loan bank shall have succession until dissolved by the board under this act or by further act of Congress. This is the usual provision with regard to such legislation.

Section 25 permits a Federal home-loan bank to establish a branch or branches within its district to facilitate its business. It also provides for liquidation, reorganization, and consolidation of Federal home-loan banks.

Section 26 specifically authorizes building and loan associations and other financial institutions organized under the laws relating to the District of Columbia or any other law of the United States to become members of the home-loan bank system.

Under section 27, if any provision of the act is held to be invalid, the remainder shall not be affected. This is a customary provision to support the validity of any part of such an act, even though certain minor portions may not be held to be valid.

Section 28 expressly reserves the right to alter, amend, or repeal the act.

To summarize, the Federal home-loan bank bill will fill a vital place in the financial system of the country. We have created reserve credit systems for commercial banks and for the agricultural interests and the providing of the same type of credit systems for the home owners should be of at least equal importance.

Home ownership occupies an important place, not only in the social but also in the economic life of the country. The construction of the single-family home is one of the important industries, employing millions of skilled laborers directly and indirectly through the furnishing of materials. It is well known that the home owner constitutes the best type of market for home furnishings, electrical appliances, and similar matters. When we promote home ownership we not only promote stable citizenship but we also develop a market for other industries. Normal mortgage credit to-day would eliminate half of our salable vacant homes because to-day, where buyers are willing, mortgage loans are not available to assist them in making purchases.

Home values and the financial security of the owner are dependent on credit. Mortgage money has disappeared when most urgently needed because those financing agencies secured their funds in large part from the same class of people as the home owner; that is, the small saver and investor. To-day this small saver has required his savings at the very time when the owner of the home was compelled to realize something on the savings which he had invested in that home. Thus institutions normally in the home-financing field have been compelled to withdraw from it in order to meet the withdrawal demands imposed upon them by their investors.

The result has been that the home owner's investment has been, from time to time, jeopardized by conditions beyond his control, and home ownership is falling into disrepute. The high mortgage rates, which are a direct result of inadequate funds, have also deterred prospective home owners. In some sections of the country, particularly those newly developed and therefore particularly needing funds to permit the development of the home-owning citizenry, those funds have not been available in anything like sufficient quantities and some interest rates have invariably been higher than necessary had there been such a system as in here contemplated in order to provide for a freer flow from one locality to another.

Insurance companies and banks have consistently and properly made only low percentage loans. So low, in fact, that a prospective purchaser of a home could not get enough funds for his purchase from them unless he had saved for many years. His alternative has been a second mortgage. The costs of second mortgages are known to us all. Financing through first and through second mortgages together has been too burdensome for any except those who were absolutely determined upon home ownership at any price. Second mortgages have discouraged millions of families from home ownership who would otherwise have owned their own homes.

Experience has proved that ample first-mortgage money in the hands of local lending institutions, such as building and loan associations, absolutely eliminates the necessity of a second mortgage if the home buyer can pay down 15 per cent or 20 per cent. This bill will help increase the amount of this kind of first-mortgage money and in its long-time effect will eliminate the burdensome and costly second mortgage.

The bill, through its sale of bonds, will also make available to the home owners sources of funds which have previously not been tapped. The usual bond buyers are not now in the home-financing field. Money gained through the bonds will be invested in American homes and will benefit American industry, rather than going into the foreign countries.

Not only will this act be of immeasurable benefit to the home owner, but it will also be of real assistance to the small saver whose funds now, when he needs them most, are tied up in home-financing institutions, which have no place to turn to for credit in order to turn over to him the savings so sorely needed to pay for the necessities of life. By meeting the withdrawal situation of building and loan associations and the similar demands in other institutions, this bill will release purchasing power which is so essential to general business recovery. There is probably no action which Congress would take which would so beneficially affect so many classes and businesses in this country.

The home-loan bank system is designed to divorce two incompatible fields of finance—short-term commercial lending and long-term home financing. Present conditions have shown that it is dangerous, one might say suicidal, for long-term financing agencies to depend on short-term advances for their emergency needs. If we are to have the necessary flow of funds in the home-financing institutions, we must set up for them a nation-wide reserve system suited to their requirements, such as provided in this bill.

The most constant factor in the whole financial scheme of things is the value of the home. The raids of the bears, the advances of the bulls, the ups and downs of the stock market, to-day's or to-morrow's price of real estate, lumber, cement, or labor can neither appreciate nor depreciate the tradition, the sentiment, and the pride of ownership, which have been builded into the four walls of every home. Our economic structure has no underlying basic value more constant than the American home. Wreck it and you wreck the Nation.

This legislation is intended to stimulate home ownership in normal times and to protect and safeguard that ownership in times of business depression and financial stress by providing a reservoir of credit for those institutions, the business of which is home financing. Not only is it constructive, forward-looking legislation but emergency legislation. If enacted, it will bring relief to thousands of deserving and distressed home owners who are to-day threatened with dispossession because of the lack of a dependable, scientifically designed central agency of credit.

If you believe in maintaining and encouraging home ownership in America, here is your best opportunity to show it. The future welfare of our great Nation depends upon the successful carrying out of the purpose of this bill. No sound or effective argument can, in my opinion, be advanced against the desirability of its objective. Remember, the world must move forward on the feet of little children, whose usefulness in life and patriotic citizenship in adult years is but a reflection of proper home influences and training. A vote for this bill is, therefore, a vote for the millions of children abroad in our land, whose voice is silent to-day but upon whom we must turn to-morrow for counsel and constructive leadership. A home for every worthy citizen's family is the safest insurance for the perpetuity of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. [Applause.]

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. I yield.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. I would like to ask where in this bill there is any help for the home owner who is now in trouble on his mortgage and who can not pay on his present mortgage? The people in trouble are those who own their homes and can not pay. Where will this bill help them?

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. This bill is both an emergency measure and a permanent credit system designed to encourage and aid home ownership. As an emergency measure it will unquestionably afford relief under proper administration to those who are now struggling, against insurmountable obstacles, to retain possession of their homes, which, in many cases, they have been paying on for years. That relief and aid can be extended in several ways. Through discount privileges with the home-loan bank, financial opportunity is afforded to members of the associareduced incomes, to take up their mortgages from the insurance companies and mortgage companies, which are usually made for a stated period of time, and refinance their debts over an extended period through the genuine homefinancing institutions, such as building and loan associations and cooperative associations. To illustrate: Suppose a man has borrowed from a building and loan association $4,000. His regular monthly payments, with interest, would amount to $60. Assuming that he has been in the association and has met his regular monthly payments over a period of about three years, his stock which is pledge with the loan would have a value of around $1,800 to $2,000, which would, in effect, amount to a reduction in the amount of his debt of that amount. As a result of this depression, his income by salary or wages has been so reduced that he now finds that the $60 monthly payment is impossible. Under ordinary conditions the association could permit him to cancel out his old stock, file application for new loan of the balance which he owes, and thereby extend the maturity of his obligation for another full term, which would in effect reduce the amount of his monthly payment from $60 to $30 or $35. With the establishment of the credit system proposed in this bill the building and loan associations, notwithstanding heavy withdrawals and loans on stock of shareholders who are not mortgage borrowers, could secure sufficient funds by discounting other paper to aid the overburdened member borrowers by refinancing, as above illustrated. Through this one means alone this legislation would afford relief to thousands and thousands of individuals, and thereby insure final victory in the payment of their homes which they have been struggling for years to own free of debt.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. The gentleman means by that to make a moratorium for the past debt that is not paid?

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. No; not a moratorium, but a sound, lenient, refinancing which is more desirable from every standpoint and which is in many cases all that is necessary.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Then it is intended to extend the term for the payment of the whole loan to some longer distance into the future?

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. Yes. Under this plan the effect would be to double the term for which the loan is to run. The great number of homes which would be saved, in addition to other natural benefits accruing to the individual borrower who is overburdened, can not be overstated. There is perhaps not a man in this Congress who does not know that foreclosures of homes have been and are being carried on in every town and city in the United States. It is hard to conceive how any situation could be more demoralizing and discouraging and calculated to have a more harmful effect upon the spirit and patriotism of a large number of our most patriotic citizenship. Many of us are wont to utter platitudes about the home being the backbone of the Nation and the supporting structure of its credit. This bill gives each of us the opportunity to legislate in the interest of the average citizen or little man, as some are given to describe him. As a matter of fact the little home owner should rightfully be termed the big man in our measurement of the real strength of the Nation's resources. Why, under this bill did you know that a mortgage on a piece of real estate for $20,000 is only discountable for $8,000? No mortgage covering real estate in excess of $20,000 is subject to discount. Few of our good wealthy citizens own homes that cost less than $20,000, whereas a very large majority of the poorer classes own homes which cost decidedly less than that figure. By careful perusal of the bill, together with the illuminatingly intelligent report prepared by Mr. Reilly, chairman of the subcommittee, it must be apparent to all those who care to know, that this legislation is truly and genuinely designed to aid people of small means. That fact alone makes it worthy, desirable, and exceptionally attractive to me as a matter of policy and legislation. In a sense it is somewhat of a new policy on the part of the Government, and similar efforts should be tions which will permit them, because of unemployment and | encouraged by all of us in our earnest desire to insure equal reduced incomes, to take up their mortgages from the in-

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. I yield.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. The trouble we are having in the big cities, and of course every one knows that there are a lot of little homes in the suburbs of big cities, is that when mortgages become due they refuse to renew them, refuse to extend the time, whereupon the little individual is forced to go somewhere else to make a loan, and he is charged a 25 per cent bonus in order to take care of the first mortgage.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. The gentleman from New York makes a splendid point and one which the subcommittee has had in mind during its entire consideration of the bill.

Mr. Laguardia. How will the individual in such a case be protected?

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. His protection can be accomplished in a very simple way. The individual will go to the building and loan association, make his application, and the association will in turn approve his loan. Immediate financial assistance can be secured for him by the association's discounting his paper with the home-loan bank. He gets his money from the association, and in turn takes up his mortgage from the mortgage company or insurance company which because of circumstances perhaps over their control they are forced to call in or refuse to renew.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. It is also provided that the building and loan association, this company, whoever makes the loan, a member of the home-loan bank, or whoever he is, will not be permitted to charge a bonus?

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. The charging of a bonus or brokerage commission could not be done under the terms of this bill as it is proposed to be amended. It is my idea to offer an amendment which will limit the interest to be charged the member or nonmember borrower by a margin not to exceed 1½ per cent between the amount the bank pays on its debentures and the amount charged the borrower as interest for the loan. The charging of a brokerage commission or bonus would, of course, be inconsistent, foreign, and repulsive to the plan involved in this bill.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. How will it be prevented?

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. This bill is designed to eliminate the possibility of the practice of the nefarious scheme which some companies have engaged in throughout the country for years, which make loans for a short fixed period of time, knowing at the time that the borrower will be unable to meet the payment of the principal at its maturity, with the result that the borrower has to request and sometimes beg for a renewal or extension. This, of course, places him at the mercy of the lender and forces him to accept helplessly the lender's terms, which in many instances requires the payment of another brokerage commission. This bill is designed to cure that evil in this country.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. How will the bill cure it?

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. The bill cures it by providing a reservoir of credit to the true home-loan financing institutions so that they may secure low-cost and lowterm credit, which in turn is extended by the association borrowers to its members. This is especially true with respect to the mutual building and loan associations which are usually operated with a small overhead and for the equal good and profit of all shareholders. This bill has been carefully and studiously prepared. A large part of the credit for the present finished product is due to the untiring labor, intelligence, and judgment of Mr. Reilly and Mr. Luce. I feel that the membership of the House owe both of these gentlemen a debt of gratitude for their work in connection with this legislation. Since the administration of the bill involves members in all the States, with variable laws, it is, of course, highly technical. And, like every measure of this character involving banking laws, it has its imperfections. Time and practice will reveal these more vividly, and curative statutes or amendments will no doubt be needed as they come to our attention.

friend the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. WILLIAMS], who is to-day and has been opposed to this bill from the first word to the last word in it. It would be futile for me to undertake further to give you my personal reasons for this legislation. The 15 reasons for the bill set out in the report can not be added to or elaborated upon. They should satisfy every fair-minded man in this House of the need for and desirability of this legislation. These reasons absolutely and completely refute the argument of Mr. WILLIAMS that there is no need for the legislation. In addition to that, reference to the report will show that a majority of the representative financial institutions in the country, and the building and loan leagues in 40 States, believe in and favor this bill. The chief objections which have been raised toward and leveled against this legislation emanate from the mortgage bankers, mortgage brokers, and big eastern insurance companies. In referring to them I do not intend to impugn the motives of their representatives, but I can not but believe that their chief opposition has been sounded, because under this plan they will have a real competitor and much of their business will come to the real home-financing institutions, where it properly belongs. Of course, it must be recognized that some of these institutions which are opposing the passage of this legislation have in former years extended needed and desirable financial assistance in the matter of home and other building institutions.

I also desire to answer another objection which Mr. WIL-LIAMS has set out in his minority report and which he has stated to the membership to-day. It is true that under the different laws in the various States some of the homefinancing institutions can not avail themselves directly of the benefits of this law; but I call to your attention the fact that by left-handed methods practically every State in the Union can take advantage of this bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS says that only seven States in the Union can borrow from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for the reason that the others can not pledge as collateral their mortgage loans. The records do not bear out this statement, and I am in position to advise you that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation has to date made loans on mortgage collateral to building and loan associations in 18 States, and I am reliably informed that 12 additional States have applications for loans pending which it is reasonably probable will be favorably acted upon shortly. Part of this information is available in the report of the hearings, to which I most earnestly invite your attention and careful

Mr. MOUSER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. I yield.

Mr. MOUSER. Does the gentleman know that in certain instances subsidiary corporations have been organized, the officers and stockholders of which are identical with those of the bank, whereby they buy these homes at foreclosure sales, and that many foreclosures are had because of the opportunity to acquire homes at the two-thirds appraised value by really the same corporation?

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. Of course, I recognize that in some instances those things happen.

Mr. MOUSER. So they are entirely selfish. That is one reason they do not want this bill to pass.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. I am not disposed to sit in judgment upon the practices of any institutions about which I do not have personal knowledge. It would, of course, be reasonable to conclude that some institutions do engage in such practices, and that those practices are actuated by selfish motives.

May I undertake now to answer briefly the objections raised by my good friend Mr. Stevenson, a member of our committee? His objection to the bill because it would permit the banks to issue tax-exempt securities is beyond my grasp at this time. I feel that he knows more about the wisdom of the further issuance of such securities than I do. I do not think, however, that the banks could sell their bonds at such a rate of interest as would enable cheap money for the member borrowers unless some special tax privileges are Now may I understake to answer the argument of my good | granted. Practically all the other agencies have been accorded the tax-exemption feature proposed in this bill, and I hardly see how we could consistently deny that same privilege in connection with this legislation. It is my understanding that Mr. Stevenson's main objection is that the benefits of this legislation are to be extended to State banks, trust companies, and insurance companies, and that all of these should be stricken out of the bill. Though I do not believe in discrimination, I am inclined to feel that this objection is well founded, especially when we consider the relief which has been afforded these institutions and keep in mind the true purpose of this bill. I want to see the relief afforded in this bill go to institutions which are primarily and secondarily, if you please, interested in promoting and encouraging home ownership rather than in making a profitable investment. This, in my opinion, to use somewhat of a vulgar expression but one which is very expressive, is the real guts of the purpose of the bill.

Mr. KETCHAM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. I yield.

Mr. KETCHAM. Do I understand the gentleman from North Carolina to say that a man who is not a member of a building and loan association but who has a mortgage on his home may become affiliated with a building and loan association and thereby come under the provisions of this bill?

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. That is true. Of course, the proper time is usually when a new series is opened, but I do not believe that there is any restriction which would prevent his coming in at any time by catching up with past-due payments which have been assessed since the beginning of the series. Of course, it must be remembered that the home-loan bank system is a central discount banking system to aid the associations and institutions and that no direct loans are made to the individual. The system contemplates the preservation of the local financing units, and this is unquestionably a most desirable feature.

Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. I yield.

Mr. MAY. Does the gentleman mean to say that an individual may become a member of the association, so that he may borrow individually except through these associa-

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. This bill is intended or designed to aid associations which are engaged in home financing on amortized or installment plan. As stated before, no loans can be made by the banks comprising the home-loan bank system to the individual borrower. The individual borrower makes application through the member association or institution, and that institution takes his mortgage loan and discounts it with the bank. This system affords to the present and would-be home owner a flexible system of low cost and long-term credit. Properly administered and as a permanent plan it should be a bulwark of financial strength and security to home owners.

Mr. MAY. I do not want the gentleman to misunderstand me. I am inclined to favor the bill, but I want to be sure it is going to reach the man who has a mortgage on his home.

Mr. SABATH. A man can join a building association and become a member, and that is the way he derives the benefits provided in the bill.

Mr. McCORMACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. I yield.

Mr. McCORMACK. I notice on page 2 that it is limited to dwellings of two families. Why is that limitation placed

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. Because the bill is designed to aid the man who owns and lives in his own home rather than the occupant of or investor in an apartment house or other similar structure. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Hooper]. [Applause.]

Mr. HOOPER. Mr. Chairman, it is a matter of supreme indifference to me who has the credit for the passage of this bill so long as it is passed by this House and eventually becomes law. If there is any recent credit I am very glad to give it to the gentleman from Wisconsin, whose name the bill bears, and the gentleman from Massachusetts, both of whom have been working earnestly and, of course, very intelligently for months past in order to bring this bill to the point where it is to-day.

All of us here know that there is not so very much which can be accomplished by legislation to drag the United States and the world out of the depression which holds them in its grip to-day, but if it is possible that this bill can send down through the arteries of business and of commerce some of the credit which is so necessary to a revival of business, then the bill will justify itself.

My contribution to this discussion this afternoon-and I will not take all of the five minutes which have been allotted to me, because I feel the House is ready now to vote for this bill-will be in this way: This morning there came to my desk an editorial from an independent newspaper in my home town, Battle Creek, Mich. To me this editorial crystallized the arguments in favor of this bill in as concise a manner as anything which I have seen since the bill commenced to be seriously discussed. If there is no objection, I would like to read it to the committee at this time, and I shall read only a portion of the editorial:

The home-loan-bank system would encourage the building of homes by making it financially easier to build and keep homes. It would provide protection for the home owners who are now in danger of losing their homes through foreclosures, which in many instances would mean the loss of the fruits of years of

The system would provide a way to tide over home owners who are in difficulty now, and a way for prospective home builders to realize their dream of a haven of their own.

Besides this, the system would give great stimulation to the building industry on which millions of citizens are dependent for their living.

for their living.

Here is a plan which would encourage home ownership, stabilizer of citizenship, and a corner stone in the Nation, while giving immediate, direct relief to many ordinary citizens.

But this plan is not a panacea. It is not sensational. It does not offer much chance for anyone to wave his arms and fight imaginary enemies.

It is a good, common-sense bill, says the editor of this paper, which will at least try to bring to the small manabout whom we have heard so much lately-all we can bring to him in a legislative way at this time and under these circumstances.

I do not believe this bill is a panacea, as this editor suggests, but I do believe it is a step in the right direction, and that as far as legislation of this character can do ittogether with the other things, which this House in a nonpartisan way has accomplished this year, sometimes at the instance of the President and sometimes not at his instance—it will bring about that recovery to which all of us, Republicans and Democrats alike, are looking forward so anxiously to-day. [Applause.]

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. Bowman].

Mr. BOWMAN. Mr. Chairman, the failure of the legislative program of the first session of the Seventy-second Congress to revive trade and commerce has brought forth a number of suggestions and propositions to remedy our present economic conditions. Without exceptions, the basic foundation of these proposals rests upon the ability of the Federal Government to obligate itself for constructive programs of internal developments and improvements. These proposals provide for the expenditure of large sums of money, but make no provision for raising the money except by huge bond issues of the Federal Government. These methods place an additional tax burden upon the tax-paying public at a time when the Congress of the United States is wrestling with the difficult problem of securing sufficient revenue to balance the Budget of the Federal Government.

In the attempt to solve our economic problems, I am convinced, we have reached our conclusions by the application of false premises. We have approached these problems by futile attempts to find employment for the many unemployed. I agree that the depths of the present depression are measured and determined largely by the number of unemployed, but any program to employ the unemployed temporarily will not solve our problems. The unemployed must have reasonable assurances of permanent employment, and that condition can not be stimulated by artificial means. The roots of all evil in this depression find their nourishment in the heart of the individual citizen of this country. Plant in his heart a new hope, revive his soul with a new faith, and inspire him with a new ambition and a new courage, and he will turn his back on the misery and misfortune of the past, and will go forth in the dawn of a new day with renewed courage and ambition to reconstruct a great nation from the ruins of the old. Confidence is the magic word that will restore this Nation to its permanent economic stability.

During this period of world-wide depression, the Congress of the United States has become an experimental laboratory for economic research. It has developed into a testing station or workshop of applied political science in an effort to discover a panacea for all our national difficulties and to find some method of restoring the social and economic life of the individual citizen. In it we have endeavored to develop new legislative formulas to produce and generate new forces for economic stability; and we have attempted to discover a new political solvent which will dispel doubt and despair, and dissolve the elements of fear; and we have sought feverishly for a new elixir of our national life which will restore confidence in the minds of the people, revive business, and cleanse the clogged channels of commerce and trade.

If we have failed in our legislative tests and experiments, the cause must necessarily be attributed to the methods by which we have attempted to solve our economic problems. We have treated these problems synthetically rather than analytically. We have failed to analyze and dissolve our national problems into the basic elements or constituent parts. We have generalized when we should have specialized. We have thought in terms of masses instead of individuals. We have treated the individual citizen from the standpoint of his relationship to some artificial element in our national life rather than his relationship to his own Government. We have attempted to revive the hopes of the individual by applying restoratives to some one else. The individual has not been the beneficiary of our legislative enactments. Fear still rules his life because confidence in his Government has been destroyed.

The practical operation of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, which occupies a prominent part in the legislative achievements of this session of Congress, is a concrete illustration of my contention. In the recent report of Gen. Charles G. Dawes, president of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, issued on April 19, 1932, it is disclosed that $243,248,769 have been loaned to 1.520 banks and trust companies, of which amount $5,994,300 was loaned for the purpose of reorganizing closed banks; 20 railroads received $77,515,549; 98 building and loan associations received $17,326,748; 28 insurance companies received $11,950,000; and 1,757 business institutions received $370,437,802. Much of this money has found its way into the vaults of our large financial institutions and has been used primarily to strengthen the financial position of borrowing companies or their banking institutions. The object of the bill creating the Reconstruction Finance Corporation was to make available emergency financing facilities for financial and business institutions. In turn it was the hope of Congress that these institutions would aid in refinancing agriculture, industry, and commerce. The law contained the necessary and essential elements for restoring hope and confidence; but the individual citizen has not been touched by the provisions of this reconstruction act.

The Glass-Steagall bill is another point in illustration. This law amended and modified the provisions of the Federal reserve bank. Its purpose was to afford means of financial relief to banks. It was confidently expected that the operation of this law would result in easier credit and would meet the urgent demands of commerce and trade. In so far as inspiring confidence in the individual citizen, the enactment of this law has been a failure.

These laws are not without their most disappointing effects. They were enacted primarily for the expansion of credit. Credit has not expanded; but we discover that the | cash reserve in the banks of the country has increased enormously. The recent report of the Treasury Department showed a constant, steady increase of cash reserve. Only a few weeks ago the report disclosed the information that the cash reserve of the banks of the country had increased $145,-000,000 in one week. This situation is susceptible of only one interpretation and that is that the banks of the country are using constructive legislation as convenient vehicles to strengthen their own financial position and standing. In other words, the large financial institutions of the country are hoarding the money and are not using it judiciously for the expansion of credit in the channels of trade and commerce. The vicious method of hoarding money by individuals a few months ago has been transferred to a more deliberate and systematic method of hoarding money by the banks of the country under the protective provisions of the laws of the United States.

In this connection I do not want to be misunderstood. I am convinced that the law creating the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and the Glass-Steagall bill amending the Federal reserve act are necessary and essential elements in the economic recovery of this Nation. I have no apologies for my affirmative vote on these measures. They strengthened the banking system of this country and were instrumental in checking and stopping the destructive epidemic of bank failures. Great good has resulted from these two laws, and they stand ready to render greater aid and assistance in the days to come.

These observations have prompted me to suggest and advocate a threefold plan or proposal which involves (1) the adoption of a more sympathetic policy of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation in liquefying and releasing immediately the frozen assets or deposits of closed banks; (2) the creation and establishment of a Federal system of homeloan banks; and (3) the reorganization of our banking system so as to afford greater security and protection to depositors.

Without cost to the United States Government the first two proposals would release billions of dollars for distribution into every section of the United States. In fact, they would release a greater sum into the sluggish channels of commerce and trade than any other proposal that contemplates the issuance of Government bonds. The third plan would strengthen and broaden the confidence of the ordinary citizens in the banking system of the country, and would act as an absolute prohibition against further hoarding of money by individuals and business interests.

There is much justification for the lack of confidence and faith in our banking system. During the years 1930-31 the confidence of the American people fell to its lowest level when a destructive hysteria of withdrawing and hoarding bank deposits swept relentlessly through the Nation and closed the doors of solvent building and loan associations. trust companies, and banks. No section of the United States was spared from the destructive fury of this hysteria. During this period and the months of January and February, 1932, 4,300 banks closed their doors. From January 1, 1921. to March 1, 1932, 9,842 banks have been closed, which total includes 1,431 national banks, members of the Federal reserve banks by law; 383 State banks, members of the Federal reserve system; and 8,028 State banks, nonmembers of the Federal reserve system. The combined deposits of these banks and financial institutions amount to $4,563,372,000.

Out of the staggering total of 9,842 closed banks, only 1,133 banks, with deposits totaling $484,280,000, have been reopened or reorganized, leaving 8,079 in the process of possible liquidation, with frozen deposits and assets of $4,079,092,000. It has been carefully estimated that the deposits of suspended private banks and building and loan associations would swell the grand total of frozen deposits to more than $5,000,000,000, vitally affecting the financial status of 10,000,000 depositors. The situation becomes more deplorable when we understand that the average length of time for liquidating a closed bank is eight years, and that the average dividend rate of liquidation, according to the report of the United States Comptroller of Currency for the year 1928, is approximately 80 per cent. Of course, the average dividend rate of liquidation during this period of depression would not be as high as in the year 1928. However, it is estimated that 60 per cent dividend rate of liquidation at the present time would be conservative. Applying the law of averages to the present situation, it is observed that $3,000,000,000 will be paid eventually to more than 10,000,000 depositors over a period of eight years, and the remainder, amounting to $2,000,000,000, must be eliminated from consideration as an absolute loss.

For the present, let us forget the loss of $2,000,000,000 to the depositors of our closed financial institutions, and deal with the $3,000,000,000 of frozen deposits, which we have a right to believe will be eventually paid to depositors over a period of eight or more years. From a mathematical standpoint this sum of $3,000,000,000 represents the approximated average 60 per cent dividend to be paid out to depositors of closed banks in the process of liquidation. The proposal suggested herein would place an additional responsibility upon the shoulders of the Congress of the United States to liquefy the frozen deposits in the closed banks of the Nation, and turn them into the channels of trade and commerce. The legislative process would be a simple matter of amending the law creating the Reconstruction Finance Corporation by increasing its capital, if necessary, and by permitting it to advance in cash a large percentage of the estimated liquidation dividend of each State and Federal bank immediately.

For example, suppose a closed bank in a city of 20,000 has a million dollars on deposit, and a careful examination of the resources and liabilities of this bank justifies the probable payment of an 80 per cent dividend. In accordance with the suggestions made herein, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation could advance 60 or 70 per cent of the total amount of deposits for immediate liquidation. This method would immediately distribute between $500,000 and $600,000 to this community formerly served by the closed bank

In this operation the Reconstruction Finance Corporation would be amply protected by the deposits of the bank and forced liquidation could be delayed and postponed indefinitely without sacrificing collateral security and farms and homes. This plan would not contemplate any drastic or harsh means of forced liquidation. The creditors and stockholders of the bank would not be financially embarrassed. The Government could cooperate in a systematic and a sympathetic manner both with the depositors and creditors of the closed bank, and thereby create a spirit of cooperation and optimism and confidence, which are necessary elements in our economic recovery.

Much publicity has been given to the number of State and Federal banks reopened; but very little is said about the plans adopted for reopening them. Recently, the State banking commissioner of Michigan announced the probable reopening of 41 closed banks in that State, with total deposits amounting to $20,000,000, and that these reopenings had been made possible by the depositors of the banks signing "moratorium" agreements pledging to leave their deposits with the bank, in most cases, for five years. This method is the universal method approved and recommended by the Treasury Department and State banking commissioners throughout the country.

It is estimated that more than $500,000,000 of savings and capital are "frozen" in this manner. In other words, this large amount is denied participation in the active channels of trade and commerce, and then we wonder why local communities throughout the Nation do not respond to our legislative efforts. It should be the duty of the Congress of the United States to release the money already frozen in reopened and liquidated banks instead of considering huge bond issues for public improvements.

No bond issues can reclaim for the individual citizens what is actually theirs in the closed banks of the country. No bond issue can replace their "frozen" deposits. Our problem is not a problem of creating new money, nor creating cheaper money; but a problem of releasing and liquefying the money we already have. There is still sufficient money in the United States to restore prosperous conditions, but we still wander in the wilderness of doubt because we have denied to the individual citizens in every section of the United States the privilege even of quenching their economic thirst until the financial reservoirs are restored and running full.

The President's recommendation for the establishment of a home-loan bank is a constructive effort to relieve the conditions of home owners throughout the United States. Legislation of this character would affect more than 10,-000,000 investing members who are attempting to pay for their homes through building-and-loan plans. The enactment of this legislation would stabilize home financing and home ownership, and would eventually stimulate home building. In fact, no comprehensive plan for home building and home construction could be contemplated until home financing is assured and home owning is stabilized.

The building and loan associations of the United States meet the needs of industrial communities and they are organized as a part of the financial structure of the United States. Their resources reach a total of more than $8,000,-000,000, of which 80 per cent is invested in mortgages and deeds of trust on homes. The failure of banks has involved the resources and assets of a great number of building-andloan associations, and the unemployment situation has impaired the financial ability of investors to save and preserve their homes. The Federal Government should come to the rescue and enact such legislation that would permit the refinancing of homes by long-time loans. At present the home owner has no opportunity to refinance. The man with a farm, however, has several agencies established by the Federal Government for refinancing, and the United States Government should make every effort to provide facilities for the individual citizen to own and maintain a home.

I favor the Federal home loan bill now under consideration in the House of Representatives because it will save and preserve the homes throughout the country, bring additional money into depressed communities, assist in the liquidation of closed banks, and provide money for commercial and industrial activities without the cost of a single penny to the Federal Government. It is estimated that the enactment of this bill would release and make available more than $1,000,000,000 to stricken communities, which would tend immeasurably to restore economic conditions in the United States. The individual citizens would be the direct beneficiaries of the Federal Government, and their confidence in government would be awakened and inspired.

In the consideration of this bill for the relief of the individual home owner, I feel that we should not estimate in any degree the probable losses, if any, to the Government of the United States. This argument has no place in the enactment of such legislation. Suppose the Federal Government lost every penny advanced to its own citizens through its banking facilities, the loss would be about one-twentieth of our recent losses in loans to foreign enterprises and foreign governments. Now is an opportune time for the Federal Government to assist the individual citizen. He is in need. For my part, I would rather trust the home owner and home builder in America without a single penny of security than to trust foreign interests and foreign governments for loans amply secured. I believe that the American citizen is entitled to first consideration from the American Government.

The third plan of my proposed program for reviving the confidence of the people of this country involves some method of giving greater security and more protection to bank depositors. The recent wholesale failure of banks throughout the United States because of lack of confidence has brought our unit system of banking into disrepute. In fact, the word "national" in the corporate name of a Federal bank should mean safety and security; but in view of our recent experience the use of that word is a deception and fraud.

The urgent demands of 10,000,000 depositors of closed banks for some protective policy should not go unheeded by Congress. Already the House of Representatives has passed the Steagall bill providing for a method of guaranteeing deposits in national banks. This bill was strenuously opposed by those advocating the maintenance and perpetuation of State banks. The depositors, however, are not interested in any controversy between Federal and State law. They have a right to demand some measure of protection and security for their confidence and faith in our financial institutions, and to meet these demands a complete reorganization or rehabilitation of our banking system is absolutely necessary. In no other way can we strengthen and revive the confidence of the people in our financial institutions.

A system of branch banking has been eminently successful in the Dominion of Canada, and the outstanding feature of this banking system is found in the absence of a central banking institution comparable to the Bank of England or to our Federal reserve system. Chartered banks are permitted to establish branches and agencies in any part of Canada and elsewhere. At present there are 11 chartered banks with 4,040 branches, or 1 bank for every 2,450 inhabitants, while in the United States there was 1 bank for every 3,900 inhabitants. The employees and agents of the Canadian banks are experienced and trained men. Banking is a profession. Since 1900, Canada has had only nine bank failures, and none since 1923. In other words, during the last 32 years Canada has had nine bank failures, while the United States has had 9,842 bank failures during the past 11 years. We can now understand the direct cause of the general and universal unrest and dissatisfaction with our present unit system of banking.

High liquidity of cash and credit is the outstanding feature of branch banking. The cash reserve of one or many branches may be transferred to another branch in actual need. As an illustration, a few years ago a branch bank was opened with $150,000 on deposit, but that branch was able to loan $600,000 to meet the demands and needs of its particular community. Later this same branch had $600,000 on deposit with loans of $150,000 in its community. Funds can be shifted to points of greatest need and the banking risks are distributed over the entire system, and no one branch is subjected to the strain imposed upon individual banks in the United States.

In submitting these facts, concerning the Canadian banking system, it must be understood that I am not advocating at this time a system of branch banking in the United States, but, in a comparative sense, I am pointing out the failure of our own system. In other words, I am not emphasizing the success of the Canadian system, except to draw attention by way of comparison to our own unsuccessful system of unit banking. This comparison places upon the Congress of the United States a responsibility to eliminate, if possible, the conditions which, in no slight measure, were responsible for the bank failures in the United States.

As Congress now faces a heavy agenda of economic problems, it must realize definitely that this Nation can not squander itself into prosperity. The Nation will not recover itself accidentally, neither will prosperity return incidentally. Congress must blaze the pathway; and, in doing so, it can not ignore the fundamental principles of sound national economics. It can not reverse the verdict of history by authorizing the issuance of millions of bonds for public works to relieve unemployment. This verdict is summarized in a report of the National Bureau of Economics, issued June 5, 1930, as follows:

The increase in the volume of public works as a direct solution of the unemployment problem has historically proved a failure, This method has failed to absorb a substantial proportion of the unemployed; it has led to the undertaking of works not really required by the Government and to great waste in the administration of the job.

The President of the United States recently issued a public statement in which he declared his opposition to any public-works program which would necessitate the issuance of Federal bonds. This opposition was based on the contention that a bond issue of this character to support public improvements and development would not be self-liquidating. In other words, a bond issue of this nature would not be in economic accord with the verdict of history and the tradition of nations. His statement was not the declaration of a new economic polity, but it was simply the prenouncement and reiteration of a traditionally sound, age-old economic doctrine.

The program I have suggested comes easily within the range and purview of the President's recent statement, and the well-defined economic experiences of distribution of financial assistance to every section of the United States. however remote, in amounts exceeding by far the amounts contemplated or proposed for distribution by any publicworks program. The distribution of funds would be equitable and not confined to the limited and restricted areas of public improvements and developments, and Congress would not have to attempt the impossible by repealing and reversing the natural law of economics. The beneficent results of the enactment of the proposed legislation would be found in the liquidity of frozen assets and deposits of closed banks; in the prevention of the unnecessary sacrifices of property and other securities by forced liquidation; in the stabilization of home financing and home owning; in the stimulation of home building; and in the complete restoration of public confidence, which is essential to the economic recovery of this great Nation. [Applause.]

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Campbell].

Mr. CAMPBELL of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I just wish to call the attention of the committee to a few reasons why there is a demand for this bill. The Department of Commerce sent out inquiries to 5,898 financial institutions, propounding the following question:

Would the facilities provided by the proposed home-loan discount banks for borrowing on home mortgages add desirable flexibility and security to the conduct of your institution?

Seventy-six per cent of the replies answered "yes." They included national banks, building and loan associations, mutual savings banks, stock savings banks, State banks, loan and trust companies, and mortgage bankers. That covered the entire country.

The system provides that all members may borrow from a Federal home-loan bank by placing mortgages with the bank for security. To make sure that this would be for the benefit of the small home owner we placed a restriction in the bill limiting the rediscount privileges to mortgages on property where the value did not exceed $20,000.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Are the credit facilities of the homeloan banks available to building and loan associations that do not hold stock in the home-loan banks, or do they have to hold stock in the banks before credit facilities will be available to them?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Pennsylvania. They must hold stock.
Mr. WILLIAMSON. And until they do own stock in a home-loan bank they can not loan money or rediscount paper with the bank?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Pennsylvania. Indirectly, but not directly. There is a proposal, made by the distinguished Senator from Michigan, to allocate $250,000,000 from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to take care of the building and loan associations. General Dawes, when he was before our subcommittee, was asked whether or not the Reconstruction Finance Corporation could take care of the situation. He said decidedly not; that all the loans they had made so far to building and loan associations had been paid to the banks on account of the building and loan associations, and that, therefore, up to the present time the building and loan associations were not receiving any benefits from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc. That this act may be cited as the "Federal home loan bank act."

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, if I may have the attention of the committee, I want to refer to the mechanics of the bill, and I hope in the course of the debate under the 5-minute rule statements will be made by members of the committee so as to make absolutely clear the intent of Congress.

I can speak, of course, only as to conditions in and around New York City. In the nature of things, we have not many small homes in the heart of Manhattan, but in the Boroughs of Bronx and Queens and Kings and Richmond and on Long Island we have thousands and thousands of little homes. They are all encountering difficulties at this time and many of their owners are losing their homes through foreclosures.

As the mortgage becomes due or as a payment becomes due, they are unable to get any extensions of time. They are usually unable, to-day, to obtain a renewal of a mortgage, whether the mortgage is held by a savings bank, by a title company, or by a loan company. So the relief which we need at this time is not so much a new mortgage on a new home, because people are not working really and have not the means to put up a new home, but what we do need is ample provisions for refinancing, or, in other words, facilities to renew existing mortgages.

Where the security is good the loan sharks now are doing this: They refuse to renew, especially when a good part of the mortgage has been paid off and the amount reduced, so that the little home owner is compelled to go to another loan shark, get the money there, pay a bonus of from 20 to 25 per cent, in order to pay off the existing mortgage, and take a new mortgage with the additional amount put on it by reason of this bonus. So that instead of paying the 6 per cent legal rate in my State, the home owner is paying 10 per cent, and sometimes 11 per cent, with, of course, the danger of eventually losing his home.

What I want to bring out is this: If the Federal home-loan bank, when a member comes to it for funds or to rediscount mortgages, will provide the machinery whereby, first, all bonuses will be eliminated, so that we are sure we can protect these people against exorbitant, unfair, illegal bonuses, whether you call them bonuses or commissions or appraisal fees; and, second, that we know who are the members of the home-loan banks, so that when any home owner is put in this position, he may go to one of the members of the home-loan bank and have his mortgage refinanced.

Do you not see that our problems and our difficulties are just a little different from what they would be in a rural district or in a small community? Extortion and exorbitant bonuses are what we are up against.

May I make this suggestion? It was suggested by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. Hancock] that $8,000 on a $20,000 home was the limit. It does not necessarily follow that a man who may own a $30,000 home in or around a large city is a millionaire, on account of the higher land value. If that amount could be brought up to $30,000 instead of $20,000, and reasonable assurance given that there will be this opportunity of refinancing these mortgages on these small homes, which are the best securities in the land, and avoid exorbitant bonuses or commissions or other charges, I think the bill would be very much improved.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes.

Mr. MAY. I would like to ask the gentleman from New York if it is not the fact that some of these loan sharks, whom he has mentioned, sometimes wait until a mortgage debtor has paid on his home until it is a fine bargain, and then get hold of it and resell the home and keep the profits on the sale.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. If the mortgage is down to the point | described by the gentleman, then they force a foreclosure, and the family lose their home. If it is not, then they refuse to renew the loan and force him into the hands of another loan shark, who will refinance it and who, in turn, will get one of the other shark's victims.

With the permission of the committee, Mr. Chairman, I want to put in the RECORD at this point a typical letter received from the owner of a little home in my city where the mortgage was held by the Prudence Loan Co. or the Prudence Bond Co., which, I am informed, has received loans from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and the same official of the Prudence Bond Co. is the man who was in the bear pool which was exposed by the Senate committee. I submit when we are pouring money into an organization of that kind we are not doing any good, and it is just these abuses which I am seeking to avoid, and I hope before we go much farther the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Reilly] will point out the mechanics whereby these home owners may be protected.

Mr. GREEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes.

Mr. GREEN. I am wondering if the gentleman from New York believes the ones he has mentioned will really be permitted to borrow under the terms of this bill.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. No; but I am hopeful that there will be others who may qualify, so that these people may escape being victimized by the people who own their mortgages.

Mr. GREEN. I was just afraid that it would be a matter of the loan associations themselves soaking their securities and the individual never getting any benefit from the measure.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. That is what we want to avoid.

Mr. REILLY. Mr. Chairman, in answer to the gentleman from New York, I may say that the home-loan board under this bill has authority to decide what institutions shall be eligible for membership.

Let me read:

No institution shall be eligible to become a member of, or a nonmember borrower of, a Federal home-loan bank if, in the judgment of the board, its financial condition is such that advances may not safely be made to such institution or the character of its management or its home-financing policy is inconsistent with sound and economical home financing, or with the purposes of

This bill deals with existing institutions. If the resident in the district the gentleman speaks of happens to be a member of an organization eligible for membership in the mortgage bank, it is possible for the bank to get the money from this bank to enable them to extend the mortgage or rewrite it or extend the time of payment, and to forbear the collection.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. In other words, it will not be possible for them to promulgate regulations preventing a bonus being exacted and provide the means for a complaint to be filed with the home-loan bank.

Mr. REILLY. If there was any bonus exacted in such organization, they would not be permitted to become

Mr. LaGUARDIA. But suppose it was exacted after they became a member?

Mr. REILLY. Then they would refuse to extend any other

Mr. GREEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes.

Mr. GREEN. Would it not be well to put an amendment in the bill forbidding that practice?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise my remarks and insert a letter therein.

There was no objection.

The letter referred to is as follows:

NEW YORK, April 5, 1932.

Hon. Fiorello LaGuardia,

The Potomac Park, Washington, D. C.

Dear Congressman: The New York Tribune this morning on the front page indicates a loan has been made by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to Prudence Co. (Inc.) of New York. I know there is no limit to the gall of men like Frank Bailey, Bill Greve, and Arthur Waterman, but isn't there some way you and your fearless coterie in the House can stop the raids of these crooks on Government money? I had a mortgage from one of this crowd's affiliated companies on a little house in Brooklyn. My equity represented the savings of eight years. When I lost my job two years ago as an accountant, they foreclosed, sold me out—and the loan had cost me 27 per cent when I had finished with bonuses, title fees, and attorneys' fees, and I was forced in 1929 to buy 10 shares of New York Investors, the parent company of them all. I paid $46 a share. They took it as collateral for my bond and I can't find out from them whether I own it or not, although the house brought more than the face value of the mortgage. It's only worth 1½ now, anyway.

My wife, two children, and I are living in a cold-water flat in Brooklyn. I have worked for the past 15 months as an elevator operator in a 30-year-old building, downtown New York. I started at $27 per week, and they have reduced us to $21.60. My wife and I are glad I've got the job, although it's tough sledding when the children's teeth need fixing or a doctor's bill comes around.

I think I have never envied anyone anything they owned. I have worked harder and longer hours than many. In eight years vo years ago as an accountant, they foreclosed, sold me

I think I have never envied anyone anything they owned. I have worked harder and longer hours than many. In eight years I saved a little less than $6,000 by stinting on many things, in order to have a nice small home for my boy and young daughter. To protect that money and to hold to that idea, I had to get $3,500 in a renewal loan; about two years ago I went with a letter of introduction to Mr. Frank Fox, president of the Realty Associates, and he refused to renew. I needed $3,500 and could get it nowhere, from no bank, from no mortgage company, and, of course, from no Government agency. But some time before last Saturday, April 2, 1932, Mr. Fox and Mr. Bailey and Mr. Greve needed $1,500,000, not to protect their equity but "to increase its facilities for supplying funds to its clients in need of refinancing conservative mortgages, as well as to preserve the high public regard for the safety of guaranteed first-mortgage investments."

I couldn't get $3,500 to save my house, but Bailey and Greve and Fox and Waterman can get four hundred and twenty-eight times that much to hold their high-paying jobs and swing along until after the depression is over and then wade in for the kill.

Bailey and Greve and Fox in the rôle of protectors of investors!

Balley and Greve and Fox in the role of protectors of investors!

The only mortgages they haven't foreclosed in the past few years have been ones which they would take a tremendous loss on because of their forced overappraisals in good times.

Did Congress pass this Reconstruction Finance legislation to help these notoriously unfair mortgage outfits? Can't something be done to prevent these men from making a laughingstock of the American people collectively as they have individually? must we be saps always—saps or helpless.

Working for a realty corporation, it wouldn't be safe for me if you disclose my name.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. This letter is typical of many I and other Members have received. In many cases, I fear, loan sharks are benefiting from Government loans while the people Congress sought to help are being exploited. I may say that the Greve mentioned in the letter is William M. Greve, who, it was revealed, is a notorious stock gambler exposed by the Senate committee to have been part of a vicious bear pool. The same company I have absolute proof are bonus hogs-exacting exorbitant bonuses on mortgages. Imagine this type of men getting loans from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

Mr. REILLY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. I will say to the gentleman from Florida that there are two bills pending in the House to accomplish the purpose that he has spoken of—that is, for the Government to loan directly to the home owners. We considered those bills, and did not believe they came within the recommendations of the President or the bill we had under consideration. It is absolutely impossible for the Government of the United States to go out and negotiate mortgages in the manner the gentleman mentions. The bill does provide that existing home-mortgage institutions may become members and thereby be made able to function more efficiently.

Mr. Green. Does the gentleman think that these homeloan banks will aid in placing money in circulation, or will they save their own scalps rather than to put the money into circulation?

Mr. REILLY. I am of the opinion that the Federal home banks will inquire thoroughly as to how the members are going to use the money after they get it.

Mr. ESLICK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REILLY. Yes.

Mr. ESLICK. Who fixes the rate of interest to the bor-

Mr. REILLY. The banks. They are authorized to charge the members for advances, a marginal interest increase, over the rate paid on their bonds as will enable the banks to function.

Mr. ESLICK. Is there any limitation on fixing what the margin shall be?

Mr. REILLY. It is a reasonable margin, permitting the banks to function.

Mr. ESLICK. The reason I ask is because the Federal land banks and joint-stock land banks are charging 8 per cent on deferred payments, and I think there should be a limitation in this bill.

Mr. REILLY. I take it that when a member comes to a Federal bank to make a loan, all these things will be inquired into; and if they are exercising an unjust demand for money on their local people, they will not get any money.

Mr. SABATH. Is it not a fact that the individual can be aided and assisted in this way? He can join or become a member of a building and loan association, and through that building and loan association he can secure the assistance and the loan that he needs.

Mr. REILLY. Yes. Mr. GREEN. For instance, take this Wardman Park Association. I understand the Shoreham Hotel is going into the hands of receivers, from newspaper talk, or already has, because the mortgages have not been paid. What is to hinder this kind of association from obtaining this money and saving their own scalps and your people who want to get loans not being able to get them? I am wondering if the small people can get loans. If so, I want to support the bill. Or is this merely another scheme to save the hides of such people as I have referred to?

Mr. SABATH. The men the gentleman speaks of can not be helped under this bill. This applies to home owners, and no building that has more than two flats can be a beneficiary or secure any assistance.

Mr. STEVENSON. No property worth $20,000 or more is eligible to have a loan placed upon it.

Mr. GREEN. I believe that answers the question.

Mr. STEVENSON. A hotel could not quite come in. The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Wisconsin be extended for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GILBERT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REILLY. Yes.

Mr. GILBERT. I merely want to say to the committee about the Federal land banks charging 8 per cent on unpaid installments that the responsibility for that ought to be put where it belongs. It is not in the administration, but it is in the law. The Federal farm land bank act requires 8 per cent interest to be charged on unpaid installments. The trouble is right here in this House. Everybody can come here and get more interest on extended capital except farmers. When farmers borrow money, or are behind in their money, they are charged 8 per cent, and nobody else is confronted with that exorbitant rate, and that is done by act of Congress itself.

Mr. WOLVERTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REILLY. Yes.

Mr. WOLVERTON. I strongly favor the adoption of legislation of the character sought by this bill, the purpose of which is to provide a means of giving financial assistance to the home owner who is in distress through inability to refinance his mortgage loans in times such as these and who by reason thereof faces foreclosure and eviction. Will the gentleman, however, inform me why national banks have been precluded from becoming members of the home-loan banks as appears to be the case by the provisions of section 4 of the bill?

Mr. REILLY. We will come to that question farther on in the bill.

Mr. ARNOLD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. REILLY. Yes.

Mr. ARNOLD. Are there any safeguards in the bill as to expenditures in the way of buildings and salaries paid to employees?

Mr. REILLY. We prohibit any building.

Mr. ARNOLD. Is there any prohibition as to excessive salaries paid to employees of the home-loan banks?

Mr. REILLY. We provide that the salaries of members of the board shall be $10,000, and that no other officer shall draw any salary in excess of that, and further, that the local land banks shall pay a reasonable compensation to their officials for the amount of time they devote to the services of the bank. The idea is that the officers of a Federal home-loan bank will not be expected to devote all of their time to the business of the bank, except probably one man. I might say that the New York land bank built on the lines of this bill for the State of New York, handling something like $20,000,000 a year costs only about $20,000 per year for operating expenses.

Mr. GREEN. Did the gentleman's committee consider the advisability of using the existing machinery of the Federal land bank and enlarging the law to where they could use these additional funds and lend them directly to a man who needs money to redeem a mortgage against his home that he is living in?

Mr. REILLY. That plan is not in line with the theory and principles of this bill.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REILLY. Yes.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Where is there in the bill anything that supports the statement that there may be no bonuses or commissions charged on these renewal loans?

Mr. REILLY. I made that statement upon the fact that the board will investigate as to the method and practice of the institution that wants to become a member bank.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Where is there anything that says the board shall refuse to discount paper of a bank that charges a membership fee or whatever it may be called?

Mr. REILLY. Under the provisions of this bill the board has the right to examine all applicants for membership and decide finally whether they will be admitted. The fact that we name certain institutions to-day as eligible, does not necessarily obligate the board to admit them if their practices are not consistent with the principles of the bill.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Then there is no requirement in the bill that no institution which charges a bonus or anything that is like a bonus, direct or indirect, shall be benefited by the bill.

Mr. REILLY. There is nothing except the board has the power to pass on the fitness of an applicant to become a member of one of these banks.

Mr. HARLAN. Mr. Chairman, I was very much interested in the statement made by the gentleman from Missouri, who opposes this relief, that this is not of national interest. I am just wondering how much of the legislation of this nature that we have passed, is really of national interest. Is flood relief of national interest? Is farm relief of national interest? Is almost anything that we have passed here of national interest, except in so far as the prosperity and solvency of any section of our country is of very vital interest to the prosperity and solvency of the rest of our country?

There are 40 States in which building associations exist. Practically half of the building associations exist in three of those 40 States. In those three States the building association is the vital financial institution, in many respects more important than the banks. In some of those cities the entire savings, the reserve purchasing power of the people, is deposited in building associations. To enable the Federal Government by this bill to step in and allow those associations to pay off some of their deposits, certainly can not help but bring relief to that community and start a little wave of normal living, if not prosperity, which will work to the prosperity and betterment of this entire country.

Next Monday we will have before us the question of paying the balance of the bonus to the soldiers. It happens that the last payment that was made came just before the debacle, just before the time that many building associations closed. Many of those veterans took the payments they received from the Government, for which they were paying comparatively small interest, and deposited them in building associations throughout the country. In many cases the very next day after the deposit was made the associations went on notice, and hundreds and thousands of those veterans have received no benefit at all from the help that the Federal Government attempted to give them.

Now, there is just one feature of this bill that has been questionable to me. That is the provision on page 4 allowing banks, trust companies, State banks, or other banking institutions to have access to this fund. I am just wondering what definition would be applied to "other banking institutions." Many of the brokerage houses do a banking business and are not under much supervision. I am wondering if the institution referred to by the gentleman from New York [Mr. LaGuardia] could be referred to as "a banking institution."

At this time I can not see the advisability of allowing State banks, which have relief in other channels, to come to this fund. I am fearful that if they have access to this fund they will use the fund to the exclusion of many associations. I should very much dislike to see that, and I trust that matter is cleared up before the discussion is over.

Mr. LUCE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARLAN. I yield.

Mr. LUCE. To buttress what the gentleman said about this being a matter of national concern. I would like to inform the committee that there are 12,351,000 members of building and loan associations in this country; that there are 17,638,000 who have deposited in other banking institutions, as evidenced by past loans, making a total of almost 30,000,000. Furthermore, that this bill includes life insurance companies who have outstanding almost exactly one policy for every inhabitant of the country, 120,000,000 in

With reference to the other matter to which the gentleman referred, we will take that up when we reach the sec-

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, this is only the preliminary section. If we expect to get through with this, we will have to get on. There will be plenty of time to speak on other sections. Therefore I move that all debate on this section do now close.

The motion was agreed to. The Clerk read as follows:

DEFINITIONS

SEC. 2. As used in this act—
(1) The term "board" means the Federal Home Loan Bank Board.

(2) The term "Federal home-loan bank lished by the board under authority of this act.
(3) The term "State" includes the District of Columbia and Alaska and Hawali.

(4) The term "hember" (except when used in reference to a member of the board) means any institution which has subscribed for the stock of a Federal home-loan bank.

(5) The term "home mortgage loan" means a loan made by member or a nonmember borrower upon the security of a home mortgage.

(6) The term "home mortgage" means a first mortgage upon real estate, in fee simple, or leasehold under a renewable lease for not less than 99 years, upon which there is located a dwelling for not more than two families, and shall include, in addition to first mortgages, such classes of first liens as are commonly given to secure advances on real estate by institutions authorized under this act to become members, under the laws of the State in which the real estate is located, together with the credit instruments, if any, secured thereby.

(7) The term "unpaid principal," when used in respect of a loan secured by a home mortgage means the principal thereof less the reduction of the debt or upon stock or shares pledged as collateral

(9) The term "nonmember borrower" includes an institution authorized to secure advances from a Federal home-loan bank under the provisions of section 5 (e).

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment which is at the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. Stevenson: Page 2, section 2, line 2, strike out the words "and the Territories of Alaska and Hawaii."

Mr. CLANCY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I dislike very much to take any of the time of the committee, and I certainly do not desire to be dilatory. but this is one bill in which my community has been very much interested, and I strongly urge its passage.

We have sent down here some of our most prominent Detroiters to House and Senate committees to push this bill. Our public-spirited Detroiter, Robert Oakman, has paid for full-page ads in newspapers advocating this kind of relief. Mr. Oakman has made many trips to Washington to urge this legislation and has appeared before committees.

My community is one which has been hit harder by crushing taxes in recent legislation, such as the billion dollar tax bill and the $2,000,000,000 Garner relief bill, than any other community in the United States. We asked for bread and you gave us stones by singling out our industries for sales taxes. I received a few days ago a letter not from one of my great manufacturers who lead the world in their line, such as autos, drugs, rubber, and so forth, but from a small manufacturer, and he said the tax on cosmetics had sent him to the wall; that he would have to lay off his employees; he was losing his factory and was losing his home. He could not pass on the sales tax, and it was the final straw which broke the camel's back.

Now, we look to this bill for relief in two particulars, as well as in others. We hope that the bill really does give relief, and members of the committee assure me that it does, with regard to delinquent taxes. I speak for the fourth largest city in the United States, a city which but a few years ago was the richest city in the world, per capita; which had the highest standard of wages in the world and the highest standard of living. Now it is a city through which gaunt famine travels, and we have more rioting, more bloodshed, more reds working actively than any other city in the United States, and we fear the next few months and possibly the coming winter.

Panic, famine, and unemployment have been as cruel to my city as the raiding Indians and British during the early American wars.

Now, if this bill will aid our delinquent taxpayers to borrow through banks, loan, and building groups for the purpose of paying back taxes, we can distribute welfare to the hungry, and we can relieve the pinch which is upon the city. Also, we can put back to work our city firemen and policemen and thousands of city employees who have been laid off and who are necessary for the security of life and property, and we can pay our school-teachers and other city servants.

Moreover, we relieve the home owner from the menace of losing his home. Our city is overbuilt just now. We do not particularly want to build any new homes out of this bill. although some few builders do. In Detroit we have now 6,000 empty homes and about 24,000 empty units in apartments, or about 30,000 living units that are vacant. However, we have many more homes which are old and which do need repair and reconstruction, and I am assured by the committee that the owners of these homes can borrow money through this bill. They can thus employ bricklayers, (7) The term "unpaid principal," when used in respect of a loan secured by a home mortgage means the principal thereof less the sum of (1) payments made on such principal, and (2) in cases where shares or stock are pledged as security for the loan, the payments made on such shares or stock plus earnings or dividends apportioned or credited thereon.

(8) An "amortized" or "installment" home mortgage loan shall, for the purposes of this act, be a home mortgage loan to be repaid or liquidated in not less than eight years by means of regular weekly, monthly, or quarterly payments made directly in

Robert Oakman, hoped for a more generous bill; but if we can not get a whole loaf we must take half a loaf because our need presses sorely upon us.

President Hoover gave great encouragement to city people when he made a speech some time ago that the Federal Government should do something to help the city working man to build a home or to save the home which he owns or which he is buying on installments. For a number of years we have been passing through Congress important bills laying aside tremendous amounts of money for loans to save the farmer from losing his farm or his home, but the city man has been the forgotten man.

One will note editorials in city papers complaining bitterly of the fact that Congress is so often deaf to the pleadings of city people in distress.

The latest census, that of 1930, shows that more than half the population of the United States is in the cities and this goes for cities over 2,500 in population. Everybody knows there has been a steady drift from the farms and mines and forests and mountains to the cities. The farm population of the country to-day is probably in the neighborhood of 30 per cent of the total population, yet the farmers, because of our peculiar Constitution, which gives overrepresentation in the Senate to vast areas which are thinly populated but which are yet known as States, are entitled as such to two Senate votes or two Senators.

I pointed out in the recent reapportionment struggle in the House Census Committee, of which I was a member, and also on the floor of the House that there are 17 States which have not the population of New York State and yet they have 34 votes in the United States Senate of 96, whereas the people living in New York State only have 2 votes in the United States Senate.

I have also pointed out in many statements and speeches that in the next Congress the city dweller will have increased representation in the House. The city dwellers gain about 30 Congressmen and the rural districts, which have been losing population, give up about 30 Members.

For instance, in my city of Detroit it means practically a gain of four Congressmen, which are yielded up by rural districts. This makes a difference of eight votes alone on legislation in the House. Detroit was cheated out of its reapportionment for about 11 years because the rural groups in the House and Senate refused to obey the mandate in the Constitution, as set forth in the first article and in the fourteenth amendment, to have a congressional reapportionment every 10 years, according to the shifting of population in the country.

My colleague from Detroit [Mr. McLeod] and myself both gained seats on the strategic House Census Committee and fought out this battle for several years. Finally our efforts were crowned with victory.

Every member on that committee knows that it was Detroit which forced through the recent reapportionment bill which means great changes, not only in the political setup of the House but also in its attitude toward social, economic, and industrial bills and problems.

The effect on prohibition laws and appropriations also will be powerful.

Congress has passed, largely at the insistence of President Hoover and the administration, a number of reconstruction bills which should aid materially in working out the salvation of the country in the near future. They aim to save our banks from collapse and many of our great industrial corporations, especially the railroads, from going into bankruptcy. In this respect they are tremendously beneficial to all classes, including the workingman.

Many measures are designed primarily to help the farmer.

There is no intention to minimize these other relief and reconstruction measures, but in Detroit we are very sweet on this home loan bank bill. We are strong for it, and we think it would be a calamity if the bill should be killed either in the House or the Senate.

I am confident we are going to pass this bill through the House by a good majority, and we hope the Senate will then do its part and pass the bill before Congress adjourns. Mr. HOUSTON of Hawaii. I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I want to take this opportunity of opposing the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. Stevenson] and to invite the attention of the committee to the fact that only the other day we passed a revenue bill carrying tax burdens as heavy as we have ever imposed in this country. On the last page, page 132, amongst definitions is to be found this paragraph:

The term "United States" when used in a geographical sense includes the States, the Territories of Alaska and Hawaii, and the District of Columbia.

In other words, you have put a burden upon the Territories equal to that which is to be carried by any of the States. Why then should we not share in the benefits? Otherwise you would be proposing taxation without representation and without participating in benefits.

Now, then, if there is any merit in this matter of home ownership, if there is any Americanization carried by this advocacy of home ownership instead of leasing, if, as was said by the principal proponent of this measure, that it is one of the most important institutions that have been proposed by this Government for the encouragement of its citizenry, then this bill should, as was provided by the committee, be applied to the Territories wherein the funds from which the moneys that are to be used in establishing this bank are in part obtained.

The vast majority of the committee, after having heard me in advocacy of the application of this measure to Hawaii, wrote the bill so as to take care of Alaska and Hawaii. I would ask, therefore, that the Committee of the Whole consider that this should be ample guaranty that the bill as reported is the well-reasoned expression of the committee's opinion.

The gentleman from South Carolina, I think, made a mistake when he said that there were only two savings and loan institutions in Hawaii. As a matter of fact there are 10 such distinct institutions with about 14,000 shareholders. In proportion to the population there are about two times as many institutions of that character in the Territory as there are in the balance of the United States. In proportion to the land area there are many times the number of such institutions in Hawaii as there are in the balance of the United States, and in proportion to the loans that have been issued there are fewer such institutions. So, it may be seen they will be more economically administered.

For these reasons, Mr. Chairman, I would ask that the proposed amendment be disregarded and that the committee action be sustained. [Applause.]

Mr. GIBSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOUSTON of Hawaii. I yield.

Mr. GIBSON. The gentleman has referred to taxes imposed upon the Territory of Hawaii by the revenue tax bill. Can the gentleman tell us with regard to income taxes what the people of Hawaii pay as compared with the people of the States?

Mr. HOUSTON of Hawaii. As to the last year the best information I have is that Hawaii paid into the Federal Treasury more than each of 13 individual States.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman-

Mr. GREEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEVENSON. I yield.

Mr. GREEN. I notice under the provisions of this bill a number of States can not get any of its benefits. Among them is my State. Why should the committee bring in a bill that shows partiality, which gives advantages to people of a few States of the Union when my people, who can not receive its advantages, help to pay the taxes that create the fund from which this $125,000,000 is taken?

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, I did not yield for the gentleman to make a speech or for a statement of a misconception of the terms of the bill. His State can come in under section 5, subsection (e), of the bill.

We are now dealing with the question of whether we are going to stay at home with this institution or go abroad with it, and considering the fact that we are proposing to establish a new venture, it strikes me it is very unwise to go beyond continental United States.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Hawaii has made a very clear statement of his position. However, the gentleman simply makes one mistake. He said this provision was overwhelmingly adopted by the committee. It was by no means overwhelmingly adopted. There was a very close vote in the committee as to whether Hawaii would stay in or go out. But that does not concern us. The question is whether it would be judicious to include in this bill Hawaii and Alaska. If that should be done, the next move will be a clamor to include Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands. They kept up that clamor on the eastern coast. Remember that when the Federal land banks were established we did not put Hawaii in, but they got after us in Puerto Rico and we finally yielded. The result has been that we have lost everything we have loaned down there.

We are providing for a home-loan establishment here which will deal with our people who are accessible to the investigating officers, who are within call of the different banks, who are homogeneous, and whose business habits and whose title conditions we understand. Until we establish this and see how it works, it strikes me we ought to exclude all the excrescences. If we find we have made a mistake, there will be no trouble in afterwards restoring them.

Mr. MOUSER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes.

Mr. MOUSER. Is there not a difference between Puerto Rico and Hawaii in that tax measures apply to Hawaii and they do not apply to Puerto Rico? If we are going to tax Hawaii, why should they not get the benefits of this bill?

Mr. STEVENSON. We are not taxing Hawaii for this We are getting the money otherwise. It is not a question of taxation, but it is a question of the conditions under which we are going to do business. The island of Puerto Rico is much nearer to us than the islands of Hawail; and if we do not put in one, I do not think there is any reason why we should put in the other. But our experience in Puerto Rico has been such that I do not think it is judicious for us to include Hawaii.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. I regret exceedingly to find myself in disagreement with some members of the Banking and Currency Committee who are opposed to this bill, as I know that for months they have been studying this legislation night and day, and they are as anxious as I am to help the home owner; but their study forced them to reach a different conclusion. I respect their opinion, but on this occasion we disagree.

The situation in Missouri, as I understand it, is that some question the right of building-and-loan associations of the State to participate. I know nothing whatsoever in reference to the laws of the State of Missouri in so far as what the building-and-loan assosiations or other corporations can do in the way of borrowing; but I was in communication with a large number of associations in my State, and those people have assured me that if this bill becomes a law. Missouri can participate. For that reason I propose to vote for this bill.

Now, gentlemen, I received many pathetic communications from St. Louis right after the President called upon the people of this country to stop hoarding money. The communications which I received indicated that the banks of my city had absolutely refused to accept as collateral first-class deeds of trust upon residence property in my city. They did not want to handle assets. The result has been foreclosure. It showed the banks were not very liberal.

We have over 100,000 people out of employment in St. Louis, and they have been losing their homes because they could not renew first deeds of trust upon their property. I am told that if this bill is passed there will be an opportunity for those people to have their loans renewed and their property saved, through building-and-loan associations banks, or insurance companies who may enjoy the benefits of this law, and who then can serve the home owners.

It seems to me that when the Congress of the United States has provided for the great corporations, through the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, that the Congress of the United States should provide some relief for the smallhome owners. The Congress of the United States has attempted to provide relief for the farmer; and if the farmer has not secured relief, I think the representatives of the farmer who have failed to bring in proper legislation should advance it now. I want to say that the only class of people who have not been recognized by this Government in any manner, shape, or form is the home owner, and I want to see this Congress enact some kind of legislation that will save the homes of the people of my city. The appeals I receive from people losing their homes are pathetic.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. With pleasure.
Mr. WILLIAMS of Missouri. The gentleman knows, does he not, that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act provides for loans to building-and-loan associations just as this bill does?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I know that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act so provides, but I know that the people of St. Louis have lost their property through foreclosure because they could not renew their loans.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Missouri. Why can they not apply to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation as well as to this institution to get loans?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation is being run, I understand, in such a way that the home owner has not been able to be taken care of. I do not know why, but nevertheless that is the fact. Probably those who can borrow do not care to apply. I can offer no other explanation.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for three additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. MOUSER. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I think the gentleman ought to confine himself to the amendment in order that the membership may not lose track of what is before us. This is an important question. The gentleman from South Carolina moves that we amend this act by striking out Hawaii and Alaska, and the membership may forget what is under consideration.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I do not want to be lectured. Does the gentleman want me to speak or not?

Mr. MOUSER. I hope the gentleman will discuss the amendment.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. If the gentleman wants to object, let him object.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. The people of Hawaii are entitled to the same consideration as anyone else, but what I am talking about now is my own city. I do know that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act has not helped home owners in my city, who are losing their homes. I want to save them. I am in hopes this bill will save their

Mr. MOUSER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman is not confining his remarks to the amendment now pending.

Mr. HOPKINS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I yield.

Mr. HOPKINS. The gentleman has been making a very interesting statement and I am pleased that he is in favor of the bill. The gentleman mentioned the fact that the people of Missouri and the building-and-loan associations of that State want this bill and need the benefits of the bill. I have here a letter from the president of the league which states that the attorney general of the State of Missouri has ruled that Missouri can participate under the terms of this bill.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. That is one thing that I thought warranted me in reaching my decision. I received the same letter about two weeks ago, but I must say the I think it would be a particular hardship on Puerto Rico, opinion of those engaged in the business is not unanimous. Some think they can participate, while others insist they can not.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Yes. Mr. WILLIAMS of Missouri. Is not the gentleman aware of the fact that the opinion of the attorney general of Missouri is in direct conflict with decisions of the courts of our

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I respect my colleague's opinion and accept the information as being correct, but I do not know anything about such decisions of the supreme court. I know that the Legislature of Missouri meets in January, and if this bill is passed and we can not participate under such a law, we will participate after January, because the present law of Missouri will be changed. I know the Legislature of Missouri will not dare deny the people of that State the right to participate in the benefits

Mr. McCORMACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I yield.

Mr. McCORMACK. Assuming the law of Missouri will not permit its associations to participate, my friend, I am sure, has no objection to the rest of the country benefiting from this law.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Absolutely not. I want the home owners all over the country to benefit, and also in Hawaii, I will say to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Mouser], and I guarantee we will participate in Missouri after the legislature meets in January, if we can not participate at the time the bill becomes a law. [Applause.]

Mr. REILLY. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this amendment close in five minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HOOPER and Mr. WICKERSHAM rose.

Mr. HOOPER. Mr. Chairman, I shall not take any time from the gentleman from Alaska, except to say that I am one of those who believed that the Island of Hawaii should be included in this bill.

Mr. LUCE. Will the gentleman yield to me long enough to say that I also thought so.

Mr. HOOPER. It is an integral part of the United States. It is a loyal and a patriotic part of the United States. I do not believe it would be a good thing for us at this time to shut off the Territory of Hawaii from the provisions of this bill. [Applause.]

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Mr. Chairman, Alaska is the one commonwealth under the American flag that has no debt. We have had no failures of banks in Alaska. We are in the best financial condition of any part of the United States. We want, however, to continue to develop and build up that Territory.

I have listened to the speeches in favor of this bill to-day in the hope it would pass and that we in Alaska could get the benefit of it. I hope you will not strike out these Territories, but will let us have an opportunity to build them up and make them what they are now-great assets of the United States.

I hope the amendment will not prevail. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. STEVENSON].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. McFadden: On page 2, line 2, after the word "Columbia," add a comma and the words "Puerto Rico."

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I see no reason why Puerto Rico should be kept from the benefits of this bill, if there are any. There are institutions in Puerto Rico that can come in under the terms of this bill, and Puerto Rico is as much troubled over the problem intended to be solved by this bill as any State in the United States.

Furthermore, Puerto Rico is one of the best sources of trade with the United States that there is in the Atlantic. | FADDEN 1.

and would be a discrimination against it, to keep it from receiving the benefits of this particular legislation, if it is enacted into law. Therefore I hope the amendment will be favorably considered by the committee.

Mr. STAFFORD. I believe the gentleman is against the bill and wants to burden it down as much as possible.

Mr. McFADDEN. Yes; I am against this kind of legislation, but I am not attempting to burden it. I am proposing to take out of it this discrimination against Puerto Rico.

Mr. PESQUERA. Mr. Chairman, the organic act of Puerto Rico, in section 9, says:

The statutory laws of the United States not locally inapplicable, except as hereinbefore or hereinafter otherwise provided, shall have the same force and effect in Puerto Rico as in the United States.

The organic act of Puerto Rico was approved by the Congress of the United States in 1917, and by it American citizenship was granted to the 1,500,000 inhabitants of the island. The people of Puerto Rico have interpreted section 9 of the organic act in the only way in which they should have interpreted it, namely, as the intention of this Congress to make Puerto Rico participate, as a community of American citizens, in all legislation that is contemplated to be of benefit to the rest of the American citizens.

Mr. HARE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PESQUERA. Yes.

Mr. HARE. Do you have building-and-loan associations in Puerto Rico, or other associations that could qualify under this bill?

Mr. PESQUERA. Yes; we have one and we have a very good law which provides for the granting of power to building-and-loan associations to make such loans. We have plenty of mortgages as security in the banks of the island on homes, and we have some millions of dollars in home mortgages on the island. We are perfectly qualified to make good use of the benefits that are afforded by this legislation.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PESQUERA. I yield.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. What is the financial condition of the gentleman's building-and-loan associations out there? Are they in fairly good shape, most of them?

Mr. PESQUERA. They are not in very good shape. There is no association of that kind which is in very good shape, either there or here.

We are not asking alms. We are just pleading for proper recognition of the spirit and purposes of our organic

We pay no taxes, it is true, to the United States; but let me tell the gentlemen of this House that we are the best customer of the United States in Latin America.

We are your sixth best customer in the whole world. If it is true that the taxpayers of this country may have to make a little sacrifice in order to give us the benefits of this law, it is also true that they, being the business men of this country, are going to continue to get a benefit in their business with the island of Puerto Rico.

Now, gentlemen, we were dealt with as American citizens when the United States of America went into the World War. When the lives of American boys were necessary in order to maintain the principles of liberty and of democracy in the world, the American boys of Puerto Rico had their lives ready to give, together with the American citizens of the mainland.

We are now in a tremendous economic world war against depression, and we do not think we should be left alone, we do not think we should be excluded from any legislation in this emergency. [Applause.]

Mr. HARE. Would the gentleman favor the inclusion of the Virgin Islands?

Mr. PESQUERA. I would not object to it.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McThe question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. McFadden) there were—55 ayes and 26 noes.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Line 13, page 2, strike out the word "two" and insert the word "three."

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of the amendment is to increase the dwellings from two families to three families.

Mr. REILLY. I do not want to interrupt the gentleman's speech, but the committee will accept that amendment.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the gentleman will yield, I was seriously thinking of offering an amendment to make it four families. I can conceive of a double house of two stories, where the lower floor is occupied by two families and two families in the upper floor, making four families in all. I would like to have the gentleman's view upon that and why he should make it three families.

Mr. McCORMACK. Might I say that in my district at least 75 per cent of the dwellings are 3-family dwelling houses. The owner generally lives in one of the suites and lets the other two. Seventy-five per cent of the dwelling houses in my district—and undoubtedly that is true in many other districts—are 3-family or 3-tenement dwelling houses. My amendment is offered as that of a sincere supporter of the bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. There is no doubt about that; but I am seeking to include a double-tenement house of two stories, where the lower floor is occupied by two families and the upper floor by two families.

Mr. McCORMACK. But there are not a great many of Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, there may not be in the gentleman's district, but there are in mine.

Mr. McCORMACK. In any event, the 3-family dwelling is not of the apartment type; it is simply a dwelling. It is a very common dwelling in the Northeast, and I assume in other sections of the country. So far as this bill is concerned it would have no injurious effects to the general purposes of the legislation. I hope the gentleman will interpose no objection.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am not interposing an objection to three; I am trying to make it four, to make it broader.

Mr. McCORMACK. I ask the gentleman not to compel me to go into that field.

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, I shall relieve the gentleman of any embarrassment in that direction by offering the amendment myself.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. Yes.

Mr. GOSS. I favor the gentleman's amendment, but I am wondering if one could get loans on those 3-family houses inasmuch as the limit is $20,000.

Mr. McCORMACK. The average assessed value is $14,000 to $15,000.

Mr. GOSS. Does not the gentleman think that we should increase the limit above $20,000?

Mr. McCORMACK. I have offered an amendment increasing the number of families from two to three. The committee is agreeable to that amendment. It is absolutely a proper, reasonable, and practical amendment. It will affect tens of thousands of dwellings throughout the country, and it will be of great benefit to the owners of those dwellings.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, the original bill that came before our committee, the Luce bill, contained the word "three" instead of the word "two." After considering this feature or limitation with respect to families we decided, in order to make it conform more to the detached Anglo-Saxon conception of a real, true home, to make it two. However, it is my understanding that the President's conference, called here last year on home planning and home building, contributed much information toward the preparation of this bill; and in collaboration with the Department of Commerce, after a very careful and exhaustive study of conditions in all of the States, it was determined, or it was the best thought of that conference and composite wisdom of those who attended it, that three families were the proper unit. This is, perhaps, unquestionably the reason why a house for three families was originally in the bill.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, in conclusion I want to urge the passage of the bill. In my opinion, the committee has done a wonderful piece of work. The passage of this legislation will have a stimulating and strengthening effect upon the stability, independence, protection, and safety of our home life in America. It is a bill aimed in the direction of the preservation of the family life, which is centered around the home. It is also consistent with our ideals of government. I congratulate the committee, and congratulate those Members who so actively interested themselves in the preparation and drafting of this bill. I hope the bill will pass, and with as few amendments as possible that are not recommended by the committee.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment to the amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Stafford to the amendment offered by Mr. McCormack: Strike out the word "three" and insert in lieu thereof the word "four."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCormack] has given the committee the structural condition of the dwellings in his district and environs about Boston. I wish to give the committee the conditions existing in my home city. On many of the individual lots owned by a man he erects first a little 2story building. He lives in part of that building and rents the upper part. He then moves that dwelling later to the rear of the lot and erects a duplex apartment building in front and moves into that. A mortgage is placed on the property, which is a 4-family unit, and you would bar that man holding that small lot of 30 by 120 feet or more from the benefits of this law even though the property would be worth $20,000 or under. There are instances where you may have a double building on a lot of 50 feet or so divided by a party wall, where the lower floor on each side of the party wall is occupied by one family and the upper floor by a tenant above. Each side of the party wall houses two families. The only question before the committee is as to the amount of the mortgage and the value of the land. We are not seeking to change that, but you should not prevent the benefits of this law going to those so situated in my home city. There would be many instances where a man wanted to borrow money from a building-and-loan association who will be barred if a two or three family limitation is placed in the bill.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. MAY. Is it not a fact that there are block after block in cities in this country where there are four families living in one building?

Mr. STAFFORD. Certainly. Each building has its own type. For instance, in Phladelphia they have the double building, one habitation each side of a party wall. In my city they have two duplex buildings on different parts of the lot. We are not seeking to enlarge the mortgage value of the property. We are seeking only to make available this law under existing living conditions as they are found in the respective parts of the country. I want this law to extend to my home district. I have no objection to it extending to the district of the gentleman from Massachusetts because he has acquainted me with a condition not known in my district.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Pennsylvania. This does not preclude the building-and-loan association from making loans to those people on mortgages, but such mortgages would not be eligible for rediscount.

Mr. STAFFORD. That is the point. The mortgage would not be eligible for rediscount, and I want the mortgage obtained from the building and loan association on such property to be rediscountable and to come within the purview of this act. If you accept it for a 3-family dwelling, you should accept it for a 4-family dwelling.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Pennsylvania. But they are habitations, not homes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, they are homes, with the owner occupying one of the parts.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, there is only about one farmer in a hundred thousand who can come within the provisions of this bill. There are very few of them who have their homes in building and loan associations. A very few of them, a mere handful, may get a little benefit from it.

Congress has been passing bill after bill, involving huge sums of money, concerning which we have been promised that the farm mortgages would be cared for, and not one single one has been relieved yet. How much longer is Congress going to camouflage the farmers?

I was amused this morning at the camouflage that came from our military friend, the gentleman from New York, Mr. Andrews, splendid fellow that he is, with a splendid military record, Major Andrews, when he rose in his place and made a declaration. Back in the memorable days of 1928 the gentleman was manager for the President in Erie County, N. Y., and because of that fact I take it the gentleman must have been speaking for the President this morning when he rose here, with the galleries full of ex-service men, and said, "Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the soldiers' bonus bill may be taken up for immediate consideration," leading those splendid fellows in the gallery to believe that he was for it, and that his President was for it.

Mr. MILLARD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman is not speaking on the bill.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, I am coming to the question of camouflaging the people. The gentleman from New York was camouflaging the ex-service men. The gentleman is not even for that bill. The gentleman told me in the presence of Mr. LaGuardia two minutes after he made that request that he intended to vote against that bill. The gentleman [Mr. Andrews of New York] did not even sign the petition to discharge the committee, and he got up here and camouflaged, making it appear he was for it.

We ought to stop such practice here. When are we going to quit camouflaging the farmer? There are 20,000,000 people in the United States, who constitute the families of the farmers, immediately dependent upon the farmers. They are being thrown out of their farm homes every day. The United States marshal is coming up and putting them out of their homes because they can not pay the interest on mortgages at $7 an acre, when they paid as high as $50 an acre for their farms. They are having those $50-per-acre farms taken away from them, and they are being turned out of doors because they can not pay interest on a little $7-per-acre mortgage.

Mr. COLLINS. They are not organized.
Mr. BLANTON. They are not organized. That is the trouble. They do not have any organization to sit here in the gallery to watch us and call us to taws.

I was surprised that my friend, the gentleman from New York [Mr. Black], would propose such a bill as he did the other day, a bill to use these farms that the Government has taken over. And the Government has taken them over. These Federal land banks are quasi-Government institutions. You know they have been subsidized in a thousand ways by the Government. These farmers know that their farms have been taken away from them by United States marshals on judgments entered in Federal courts. if you please, in many instances.

There is a farmer in my district who paid $35 an acre for his farm. He has grubbed it out himself with his own hard work. It would have cost him $15 an acre to grub it. He has fenced it. He has improved it. He has a little $11 mortgage on it and he can not pay the interest, and they sued him, 400 miles away from his home.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered. There was no objection.

Mr. HART. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. BLANTON. In just a moment. I only have two more minutes.

This farmer has to go 400 miles from home to defend this action in a Federal court. These farmers are too poor to employ a lawyer to go into court to defend them. I am wondering how long we will sit here and let that condition exist without putting into one of these bills a direction that will force the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to lend them enough money to take up these interest payments at maturity. It is a good investment for the Government, because the farms in ordinary times will sell for four times as much as the Federal land-bank mortgage. We must help the farmers to redeem their farms which have been sold under foreclosures.

I am in favor of a bill to grant relief to the urban home owners. I am in favor of this bill. I intend to vote for it: but why is it, I ask my colleagues, that we sit here, friends of the farmers as we profess to be, and we have not done a thing to redeem their farms that have been sold under mortgage? And I want to say that before the Seventy-second Congress adjourns, if I can do it by hard work, I am going to help you friends of the farmers to stay here until doomsday, before we let Congress adjourn, to see that the farmers are granted relief, and to see that they are loaned enough money to redeem their farms which have been sold under foreclosure.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has again expired.

Mr. REILLY. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on the amendment and all amendments thereto do now close. The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAF-FORD] to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCormack].

The question was taken: and on a division (demanded by Mr. Stafford) there were ayes 37 and noes 54.

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCormack].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Eaton of Colorado: Page 2, line 4, after the word "institution" insert the words "or person."

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Will the gentlemen of the committee look at line 4, page 2, where you are attempting to define the word "member," and where you define "member" by stating that it means an institution?

You will not find in any of the statutes of the United States in the definitive part any definition of the word "institution." I only suggest to you the word "person" and trust that to-night you will find language that will fit in this place that will actually define who you mean shall be a member, whether it shall be an association of persons not called a partnership, or a trust, or a corporation, or an individual, or a partnership. The word "institution" is not the word that ought to be used here.

May I say further in regard to this bill, in our city we have some of the strongest building-and-loan and home-loan institutions of the entire United States? The first draft of this bill started a controversy between them. One side thinks you have something that is of benefit; the other side is sure that you have not; and some of the subjects in controversy have been the burden of my questions to you.

You have not provided in this bill any way whereby the present past-due mortgages can be taken care of. I have read the bill; I have read its predecessors. You have provided money to the people who are in the business of lending money on home loans just as in the farm loan bill you President, and is the only one which I will have the opporprovided money to the cooperative associations.

Here you furnish money to the building and loan associations and other lending institutions, but they are the ones that have the past-due paper, and this bill will not create any more value in the mortgagor's mortgage or security than he had before, and he is in debt and behind, and his taxes are not paid, his insurance premium is past due, and the value of his property has depreciated. The officials of institutions holding the paper say: "Values have gone down, we have got to foreclose and take over your home.

You have not provided anything here either to amortize the past-due amount into the future or to give a mortgagor a moratorium on any part of it. That is not in this bill. The part that you do put in is to finance the banks and let them renew or take more mortgages; that is, you let the central bank furnish the money to the lending banks, which is in furtherance of the policy of financing institutions during this depression so that foreclosures may be avoided. But in this bill foreclosure is not postponed or in any manner interfered with. The borrower continues in his plight.

Gentlemen, you are not giving a direct benefit at all to the people who are in trouble on mortgages. It is not here. You have not put it in this bill; but, as I understand the situation, it is your intention to leave that question up to the lenders who may receive benefits under this bill and trust to their good business judgment and sense of equity and fair dealing that this money will not be used for oppression, but to benefit the borrower.

I appreciate that it is the intention of the committee that this bill shall serve small savers and home owners by serving home-financing institutions throughout the United States, and that many of these are building and loan associations and small State banks. It includes almost every type of lending organization except national banks. Under no interpretation of the language of the bill, as I read it, can loans or extensions be made directly to home owners or home buyers. Certainly there can be found no language which would extend its terms to builders, speculative or otherwise, or to private mortgage companies or individuals who are not under governmental supervision. The benefit which the home owner may receive will occur when the institution from which he has borrowed or arranges to borrow his money has taken eligible loans to and rediscounted them with the newly created Federal home-loan bank. That institution, thus discounting, will then receive ready money whereby its money on hand may be deemed sufficient to carry for a longer time some of its past due paper or rewrite the mortgages upon longer time or with amortized payments to care for the amounts in default.

Commissions, bonuses, membership fees, withdrawal fees. and other devices to increase the cost of making and carrying a loan were discussed this afternoon. Not one word may be found in the bill which will discontinue or prohibit such practices. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Reilly], I think it was, explained that these could be covered by rules and regulations authorized to-be made by the board. Very well. Whatever is done in regard to such items ought to be fair and equitable and not amount to extortion.

As I read the present bill, many of the objections to the two prior bills have been met in the one before us. It is based upon the principle of creating a central bank during the present emergency where capital may be found to care for the most valuable of "frozen" or long-time loans and release ready money for further use during the de-pression. Not only has it the support of a majority of the Banking and Currency Committee, but it also has the recommendation of the President, as I understand the statements made by various Representatives both on and off the floor of the House. Therefore, notwithstanding I am of the opinion that the matter which I have mentioned and others might have been covered specifically or in a different manner. I realize that this is the final and conscientious work of the members of the committee charged with the duty of drafting a suitable bill to meet the recommendation of the it as quickly as possible.

tunity to vote for to comply therewith.

Mr. STEVENSON. The gentleman desires to strike out the word "institution" and insert the word "person"?

Mr. EATON of Colorado. No, add the words "or person." Mr. BLANTON. Not to strike out, but to add.

Mr. STEVENSON. Does the gentleman suppose any person is going to be ready to pay $1,500 to secure the right to get in on this thing?

Mr. EATON of Colorado. If he is in the business of lending money on home mortgages.

Mr. STEVENSON. He is not eligible under the terms of this bill. It would have to be amended all the way through to extend eligibility to persons. Eligibility here is to insti-

Mr. EATON of Colorado. What is an institution?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Is not the real purpose of the bill to get away from the personal-loan shark?

Mr. STEVENSON. We are trying to get away from the loan shark and the mortgage broker. We are not letting them in. I understand that is the purport of the bill, and I get that information from the subcommittee who worked up this bill.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. STEVENSON. I yield.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. I am not trying to open the bill to loan sharks. I am just drawing your attention to the fact that "institution" is a word that is not found in any definition in the United States statutes that would fit in here, and I presented this amendment for the purpose of directing your attention to it so the correction might be

Mr. STEVENSON. The word "institution" was written in here by the subcommittee, of which the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Luce] is a member, and the gentleman from Massachusetts is our authority in the Banking and Currency Committee on language and its usage, and a very capable one.

Institutions are certainly dealt with and that word is absolutely defined when you come to section 4 which declares who shall be eligible.

The institution eligible is defined over there and there can be no confusion about it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. EATON].

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. As soon as practicable the board shall divide the continental United States and the Territories of Alaska and Hawaii into not less than 8 nor more than 12 districts. Such districts shall be apportioned with due regard to the convenience and customary be apportioned with due regard to the convenience and customary course of business of the institutions eligible to and likely to subscribe for stock of a Federal home-loan bank to be formed under this act, but no such district shall contain a fractional part of any State. The districts thus created may be readjusted and new districts may from time to time be created by the board, not to exceed 12 in all. Such districts shall be known as Federal home-loan bank districts and may be designated by number. As soon as practicable the board shall establish, in each district, a Federal home-loan bank at such city as may be designated by the board. Its title shall include the name of the city at which it is established.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment. On page 3, line 15, after the words "United States," insert a comma and the words "Puerto Rico."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. McFadden: On page 3, in line 15, after the words "United States," insert a comma and the words Puerto Rico."

Mr. REILLY. Mr. Chairman, that amendment is acceptable to the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. It seems to me this bill is very valuable legislation. I certainly hope the committee will perfect it and pass There has grown up in this country, due to this depression, a very serious condition affecting the home owners of our country. Of course, I do not expect, and I suppose none of us expect, that this bill is going to stop all foreclosures on homes by people who hold mortgages on them. I wish it were possible to stop them by some legislative action of this House, but I do not think that is possible. However, I think this bill as permanent legislation is going to be very valuable to the country.

I am from a State that has borrowed large sums of money throughout the past generations from other parts of the United States. I think the building and loan associations which have sprung up recently in my State are among the most valuable financial institutions I have ever known. They encourage people toward thrift. They keep the interest paid on mortgages in the home community, and the most valuable thing I see in this bill is that it furnishes for the building and loan associations a system similar to the Federal reserve banks, whereby they can increase their loaning power. It gives them the prestige of Federal Government supervision and examination, and it will bring to them increased funds for loaning purposes.

I do not think it is going to have any great effect on the foreclosure of mortgages held by insurance companies because they have to have their funds to meet loans on policies, but I do think it will enable the building and loan associations in my State and in other sections to greatly expand their activities and to take over a great many of these mortgages that are being foreclosed or called by insurance companies and other mortgage-lending agencies that now hold them.

It is a deplorable situation where a man has saved for 4, 5, or 6 years and paid his savings out to buy a home and then in a time like this, when money is hard to secure, when his income has been reduced, to have the company that loaned him that money say to him, "We can not renew your loan unless you make a substantial reduction in it," and he has not the funds whereby he can make any reduction. As a result his mortgage is foreclosed and he loses all he has paid in, is thrown out into the street, and must rent a home. That is a very deplorable situation, and while this bill will not cure all this trouble it certainly will have a tendency to help that situation; it will improve the situation facing the home owners throughout this country, and I hope the bill will be speedily passed.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. I invite the attention of the committee to that part of section 3 which provides that these Federal home-loan banks shall not contain a fractional part of any State. I would like to have the attention of the gentleman from South Carolina because I did not have his support of the good amendment I offered a few minutes ago, though I had the support of a good many other members of the committee. I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that in the Federal reserve act we do not ban portions of States from being made a member of a certain district. I can conceive in my home State where it might be advantageous to have the Upper Peninsula of Michigan and the northwestern part of Wisconsin, which is geographically a part of Minnesota, made a part of that Federal homeloan district. Before I made the motion I was going to suggest whether it would not be possible to strike out the clause in line 21, page 3, which provides that-

No such district shall contain a fractional part of any State.

Mr. STEVENSON. There is a provision that will take care of the gentleman's constituents who do not wish to be included in Minnesota but would rather stay in the State of Wisconsin and that is the provision that a member can be a member of a bank outside of his district, provided it is approved by the board and the conditions are such as render it necessary.

Mr. STAFFORD. Would it not be advisable to have the board divide the States into agricultural territorial units rather than have them follow the demarcations of the States proper?

Mr. STEVENSON. We are not dealing with the agricultural units in this bill. We are dealing with the urban people in this bill, and I do not see why the agricultural divisions of a State should have anything to do with it.

Mr. STAFFORD. Then I will ask whether it would not be better to have the districts formed regardless of State lines, based upon economic, financial, and business relations to the territory in which they are located.

Mr. STEVENSON. I take it the committee gave very careful consideration to that and I followed the subcommittee which prepared this bill absolutely on that matter and I am going to stay with them.

Mr. STAFFORD. Then I will ask my colleague what was the idea of having the State territorial lines govern in this matter

Mr. REILLY. I will say to the gentleman that the bill came to the committee from the administration people who drew it up with that provision in it. My understanding is that the desire is not to separate any part of the State, because it would be more convenient to administer the law in that way. The laws governing building and loan associations and other similar organizations are quite different in various States and it was desired to keep the State lines intact in dealing with all the home-loan institutions in that State.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. May I ask the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Reilly] in the time of my colleague, also from Wisconsin, whether, inasmuch as the largest State in the Union has a population of approximately 10,000,000, which would be about one-twelfth of the entire population of the country, it is the idea of the committee that these 12 districts, if there are that many, shall be of approximately the same population?

Mr. REILLY. Not at all. I stated some States will be made one district.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Of course, the State of New York would have to be made one district.

Mr. REILLY. And the State of New Jersey has one-tenth of the building and loan associations in the country and would probably be another division. It is not a question of population, it is a question of convenience.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I gave some consideration to the thought advanced by my colleague, and, in view of the statement he has made, I shall not press any formal amendment.

Mr. BRIGGS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. I yield.

Mr. BRIGGS. I want to ask the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Reilly], who was a member of the subcommittee, a question.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BRIGGS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Wisconsin may be extended one minute.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BRIGGS. The purpose of this provision, as I understand, is that no Federal district established under this bill shall consist of less than one State. It may consist of more than one State, but not less than one State.

Mr. REILLY. And, furthermore, it can not consist of a number of States and half of a State.

Mr. BRIGGS. Or any subdivision or part of a State; it has to be an entire State or two States or three or more States, as the case may be.

Mr. REILLY. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. And in that regard it is different from the Federal reserve act.

Mr. BRIGGS. That is what I understand.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. STOKES. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to this bill because I think it puts the Government in business. I think we want to keep the Government out of business, and I think, furthermore, it puts the Government into a business about which it knows nothing. We will run a chance of losing a great deal of money. In order to place mortgages, we have to have experienced men who know something about it. I do not think we are going to get any experienced men at the present time unless we take a great deal of time about it.

I want to read a letter which I have received from one of the leading mortgage men in the city of Philadelphia, Mr. Clark, who says:

I feel that the public will not regain confidence in real estate until the law of supply and demand creates a shortage, with a consequent rise in rents and sales prices. In my opinion, any agency that will tend to keep a surplus of houses on the market is dangerous and destined to end in failure. It seems to me the agencies for maintaining prices on wheat, cotton, rubber, etc., interfere with the law of demand and supply and only prolong the period of readjustment.

In a statement recently made the Mortgage Bankers Association of America said that of the replies to the association's inquiry, 95 per cent reported that homes are more plentiful in their communities, and the enactment of the home-loan bank measure would be harmful to present property owners as well as to those who might build during the period of speculative building certain to follow the passage of this bill.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. STOKES. No; I only have five minutes.

This bill provides that debentures can be issued by the home-loan discount bank. We know that the Federal farm bonds and the joint-stock land bank bonds are selling at about 25 cents to 50 cents on the dollar. Who is going to buy these bonds? The investor will not buy them. It means that the Government will have to put up all the money itself.

We want to balance the Budget. We can not balance the Budget if we are going to spend a huge sum of money on this matter of rebuilding houses, because the home owner himself can not borrow. The small man is not permitted to borrow. He has to get this money through an institution.

I therefore hope you will not vote for this bill. I think it is a very uneconomic and unsound policy.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have the attention of the House, I only want to speak for two minutes. I am speaking out of order, with your

May I suggest to the Committee on Banking and Currency and to all other committees, and to the Membership of the House, that while these measures we are considering for relief may each be good for temporary relief, but in my humble opinion-I am not going to say in my humble opinion, I know it-we are not going to reach the spot, we are not going to start rehabilitation until we do economic justice to the people of America who till the farm. That is where the economic paralysis began, and that is where the cure must begin. I want you to think about it.

The Clerk read as follows:

CAPITAL OF FEDERAL HOME-LOAN BANKS AND SUBSCRIPTIONS THERETO

SEC. 4. (a) Any building and loan association, savings and loan association, cooperative bank, homestead association, insurance company, savings bank, trust company, State bank, or other bank-ing organization (except a national bank) shall be eligible to become a member of, or a nonmember borrower of, a Federal homebecome a member of, or a nonmember borrower of, a Federal home-loan bank if such institution (1) is duly organized under the laws of any State or of the United States; (2) is subject to in-spection and regulation under the banking laws, or under similar laws, of the State or of the United States; and (3) makes such home mortgage loans as, in the judgment of the board, are long-term loans (and in the case of a savings bank, trust company, State bank, or other banking organization (except a national bank), if, in the judgment of the board, its time deposits, as defined in section 19 of the Federal reserve act, warrant its making such loans). No institution shall be eligible to become a member of, or a nonmember borrower of, a Federal home loan member of, or a nonmember borrower of, a Federal home loan bank if, in the judgment of the board, its financial condition is such that advances may not safely be made to such institution or the character of its management or its home-financing policy or the character of its management or its home-inancing policy is inconsistent with sound and economical home financing, or with the purposes of this act.

(b) An institution eligible to become a member or a non-member borrower under this section may become a member only of, or secure advances from, the Federal home-loan bank of the district in which is located the institution's principal place of business, or of the bank of a district adjoining such district, if demanded by convenience and then only with the approval of the board.

(c) Notwithstanding the provisions of clause (2) of subsection (a) of this section requiring inspection and regulation under law as a condition with respect to eligibility for membership, any building and loan association which would be eligible to become a member of a Federal home-loan bank except for the fact that it is not subject to inspection and regulation under the banking it is not subject to inspection and regulation under the banking laws or similar laws of the State in which such association is organized shall, for the period of 42 months after the enactment of this act, be eligible to become a member of a Federal home-loan bank. If, at the end of such period, legislation providing for inspection and regulation of building and loan associations has not been enacted by such State, such association shall cease to be a member and the same provisions shall apply with respect to the termination of its relations with the Federal home-loan bank as apply in the case of involuntary withdrawal of members under section 5 (1).

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 5, at the end of line 16, insert "or similar institutions."
Page 5, line 21, strike out all after the word "shall" down to line 5, page 6, and insert: "On subjecting itself to such inspection and regulation as the board shall prescribe be eligible to become a member.'

Mr. REILLY. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly the committee rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CELLER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 12280) to create a Federal home-loan bank, to provide for the superivision thereof, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. HASTINGS, indefinitely, on account of important

TAX ON SULPHATE OF AMMONIA

Mr. FULMER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

There was no objection.

Mr. FULMER. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include a statement made by me before the Under Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Ballentine, against the placing of a duty on the importation of sulphate of ammonia:

Congressman Fulmer. Mr. Secretary, I realize that you have others who wish to appear before you this morning; and I want to ask permission to extend my remarks.

Under Secretary Ballantine. Please do.

Congressman Fulmer. Would I be permitted to ask just one or two questions, either of you or some one who has been engaged in this investigation?

In this investigation?

Under Secretary Ballantine. Certainly.

Congressman Fulmer. I would like to ask, in this investigation, if any investigation has been made as to the financial condition of agriculture, which will have to pay this tax, and what it will mean as an added burden to millions of farmers in comparison with the small benefits to the few manufacturers of this product? Under Secretary Ballantine. I think we might answer you, Mr. Representative, by saying that we have a fairly good knowledge of that subject. The condition of agriculture is the thing that comes home very closely to us; mostly on account of its general of that subject. The condition of agriculture is the thing that comes home very closely to us; mostly on account of its general business importance; and through the operations of the Farm Loan Board, which, as you know, is under this department; and I think you can rely upon our having the knowledge which you

I think you can rely upon our having the knowledge which you refer to.

Congressman Fulmer. I would like to ask this question: I realize that you held a number of conferences during this investigation, which has been going on for several months, and I would like to ask if in these conferences you have had some one representing agriculture present, so that they could get the facts as presented by the manufacturers in requesting this embargo?

Under Secretary Ballantine. In the hearings that we have held we have not had present representatives of agriculture any more than there is present here to-day a representative of these manufacturers who are seeking to have us invoke the antidumping facturers who are seeking to have us invoke the antidumping clause. These hearings are conducted by hearing each side, just as we are hearing you now; but you can rely on the fact that the agricultural interests are not being lost sight of for a moment by the department.

Congressman Fulmer. Mr. Secretary, you realize that in appearing here this morning we would not be in position to go into the facts as presented by the manufacturers, because we have not had the privilege of sitting in on any of the conferences you have had with them; nor have we been able to get any information in connection with what has been presented to you. I would like to state that we all understand that the importation of sulphate of ammonia has increased for the last year or two; but if we will take the figures for 1930 and 1931, we will find that they are as large as the imports of sulphate of ammonia in some past years. We also find in comparison with 1930 and 1931 the past years. We also find in comparison with 1930 and 1931 the production of sulphate of ammonia in the United States has decreased somewhat. We will take the first two months of 1930 in comparison with 1931—the production in the United States perhaps decreased about 30 or 32 per cent.

It may be that the manufacturers of sulphate of ammonia would argue that this has been brought about because of the importation of sulphate of ammonia, and that they were not able to compete; but we have a report from the Department of Commerce; and it is a known fact, and I expect you realize it, that the steel manufacturers have not been very active in the last year or two; I imagine because of the conditions existing at this time. As stated by one of the witnesses, I am sure that the manufacturers of sulphate of ammonia, which is a by-product, manufacturers of suphate of aminonia, which is a by-product, would be well able to increase their production; and inasmuch as it is a by-product, be able to compete with any manufacturer in any country. I want to call your attention, Mr. Secretary, to the fact that practically everything that the farmer is buying at this time, he is paying a price much higher in comparison with the price that he is receiving for his product. Everything on the farm is selling considerably below the cost of production. Everything on the farm is selling considerably below the cost of production. I run a large farm myself, and I have to buy implements and all other things necessary to run that farm; and I know prices have not been materially reduced. I am now going into the market with truck and absolutely unable to get the cost of these products. It is absolutely necessary to either have nitrate of soda or sulphate of ammonia. The agency handling the nitrate of soda has been able to form a combination whereby they have been able to absolutely fix and control prices. Now that we have a certain amount of importation of sulphate of ammonia, on a competitive basis with this product in the Now that we have a certain amount of importation of sulphate of ammonia, on a competitive basis with this product in the United States at a fair price, it is proposed to increase the price with a tax to farmers who are absolutely broke and unable to buy sufficient quantity of fertilizer to produce their crops. It would be very unfair, especially at this time, to place a duty on sulphate of ammonia. As stated a while ago, thousands of farmers this year would be unable to carry on except for a very small loan from the Federal Government. If you, at this time, levy a duty on sulphate of ammonia, $2 or $5, you are simply taking back from the farmer a part of the money that he has borrowed from the Government. These farmers have pledged their whole crop to the Government to pay—and with this tax they would really be unable to carry on.

I would like to state this in closing: That this tax will affect largely the South, because we have to have fertilizer to produce crops. I want to call your attention to the fact that the Farm Board to-day is holding three or four million bales of cotton, and we have a surplus of around 13,000,000 bales, with no prospect we have a surplus of around 13,000,000 bales, with no prospect of a price that will even bring about the cost of production. With the assistance of the board and the extension service farmers are barely trying to produce crops to maintain their families and carry on, and now to place this duty on sulphate of ammonia I can say to you frankly that I do not see any way out for the agricultural interests in that section.

for the agricultural interests in that section.

I am sure that you understand, even recently, that thousands of acres of land in cotton States in the South are being sold for the taxes; and if they are unable to pay State taxes they do not pay Federal taxes, because they are unable to make a profit. I am sure they can not pay a tax on this product. If you tax sulphate of ammonia, I am absolutely unable to see any hope for agriculture. If there is any reason why a tax should be placed on sulphate of ammonia, I would like to state that this is the inopportune time to do it. It appears to me that the Government would be going in a circle, so to speak. We loaned the farmer $75 to produce his crop—buy his fertilizer, based on prices some time ago; and now we put a tax on sulphate of ammonia, taking back part of the funds the Government lent him.

Under Secretary Ballantine. You understand, Mr. Representa-

Under Secretary Ballantine. You understand, Mr. Representative, that the reason that is given for invoking this provision is the contention that foreign manufacturers of sulphate of ammonia are disposing of their product here in our market at prices which are very much less than prices which they charge for that product in the country where produced; and to the damage of our domestic producers of sulphate of ammonia. The manufacturers of sulphate of ammonia in this country are seeking to invoke the antidumping clause, and that is the issue which is prevoke the antidumping clause, and that is the issue which is presented to the department.

Congressman Fulmer. Mr. Secretary, that is the unfair part about it. In agriculture we plant various types of produce. We invariably lose on some of those products, and, perhaps, make a slight profit on others. That is the case in all lines of business; even the merchantile business. Sulphate of ammonia is a by-product, and a very small item in connection with the great steel industry; and, of course, they are the ones who manufacture sulphate of ammonia. That brings up the question as to whether or not, in your investigations, you went into the matter to the extent of ascertaining whether they have made a profit on their business as a whole. Thank you, Mr. Secretary.

Congressman Fulmer. Mr. Secretary, I would like to ask if I can not secure, at this time, a copy of the minutes of the hearing that was held, I believe, last Monday, with sulphate of ammonia Under Secretary Ballantine. I do not think that would be in accordance with the practice. We can not have both sides in cross-examination, like in court procedure; because we would never get through if we undertook that procedure.

Congressman Fulmer. I mean, a copy of the minutes of the hearing as presented.

Under Secretary BALLANTINE. The minutes are not printed. They are only typewritten for our own records; and we could not, there fore, comply with your request. However, I want you to be certain in your mind that you can rely upon our giving your side, and your evidence, thorough consideration. Do not think for a moment that because you are not present that we do not think for a moment that because you are not present that we do not sit down with the most earnest desire of getting the right answer; and that we do not take into consideration your side of the case.

Congressman Fulmer. Then, I understand that those of us opposing this proposition will not have an opportunity to even refute the statements made by the manufacturers or others who are asking that this antidumping clause be invoked.

Under Secretary Ballantine. You are going to be in exactly the same position as they are—they do not have a copy of what you say and you do not have a copy of what they say. You are treated exactly alike, and you are going to be fairly treated, Mr. Representative. This is just the difference between administrative and court procedure, but I do not think you need worry about the matter.

man Fulmer. I think it is unfair that we are not permitted to look over and review the statements made by the other

Secretary Ballantine. We review the statements ourselves, Mr. Representative, and we make independent investigations to find out the truth or untruth of the facts as presented. Do not think we are going to take any bad money.

Congressman Fulmer. I appreciate that.

ECONOMIC CONDITIONS AND DIVIDENDS FOR GOVERNMENT EFFICIENCY

Mr. BUCKBEE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the economic conditions and also on dividends from Government efficiency.

There was no objection.

Mr. BUCKBEE. Mr. Speaker, during the past weeks we have given much time to the question of curtailing expenses of the Federal Government, and it has been a source of surprise and pleasure to me to find so many of the bureaus of the Government to be wholly or partly selfsupporting.

The earnings from individuals and corporations for the fiscal year 1931 of the Department of Justice total $1,784,-806.40, and were collected by United States marshals, clerks of the United States district courts, and clerks of the United States circuit courts of appeal.

The fees turned into the Treasury of the United States for tests for private individuals and concerns by the Bureau of Standards during the calendar year 1931 amounted to $61,180,44.

¹It is estimated that 15,000 tons of sulphate of ammonia are annually used in other industries.

²Includes 460,500 tons reported used in mixed fertilizer in the 1929 United States Census of Manufactures (Apr. 21, 1932).

The Insolvent Division of the Treasury Department, the division which issues and redeems Federal reserve notes, the division which redeems national bank currency, and the activities of that office and the field with respect to examination of national banks are self-supporting. In the fiscal year ending June 30, 1931, out of total expenditures of $3,276,381.96 only $308,662 were expended from appropriated funds and of this amount $51,849 were reimbursed, or, in other words, paid back to the United States by the banks, so that $256,813 was the total cost out of appropriated funds for the fiscal year 1931. If there were taken into consideration the tax of one-half of 1 per cent levied on national bank currency, which brings into the Treasury over $2,000,000 each year, the entire office might be called self-sustaining. In fact, it would show a profit of over $1,500,000 each year to the Government.

Incident to the operation of naval activities, some income is received, the total amount covered into the general fund of the Treasury as "Miscellaneous receipts" during the fiscal year 1931 being $4,470,397.78. The principal sources from which this amount was received covers royalties, naval petroleum reserve, sales of surplus and condemned supplies, sales of hydrographic charts, radio service, and profit on work done for private parties.

The Passport Division of the Department of State and the passport agencies together issued 163,904 passports and renewals and collected $828,789 for the fiscal year 1931, for passport, renewal, and execution fees. This is very profitable to the Government, since the total cost during the year amounted to $73,018.54 for the agencies and $196,141.32 for salaries, contingent, and printing expenses for the Passport Division in the department. In the Foreign Service there was collected a total of $3,146,347.40 for invoice, visa, notarial, and other fees in the Consular Service. The total operating cost of the Foreign Service during the fiscal year 1931 was $10,312,702. The stenographic section of the Department of State is in no sense a self-supporting division, although there was paid to the Government through that division $509.79 for photostat copies of the laws of the United States. The Mixed Claims Commission, United States and Germany, may have been partly self-supporting during the fiscal year 1931, since there was deducted by the Treasury Department from each payment made on account of an award one-half of 1 per cent, totaling $64,440.30, as against a cost of $127,657.43 for the same period. I am advised that although the total deductions to date have not equaled the total cost of the operation of this activity, it is estimated that when all payments of awards have been made, the total deductions to be made by the Treasury Department will exceed the entire cost of this commission. The Division of Communications and Records of the department presents claims to the American-owned telegraph companies for refund on incoming messages of the difference between the full commercial rate paid at the point of origin and the outgoing Government rate on similar messages. During the fiscal year 1931, $18,499.29 was recovered at a cost of $1,800.

In regard to the Department of Commerce, I find that the Coast and Geodetic Survey, through sale of charts and publications for the fiscal year 1931, has collected $74,674.88. The Bureau of Fisheries for sale of sealskins and foxskins has collected $96,103.10. The Patent Office has collected in patent fees $4,473,647.80. The Bureau of Mines has collected during this period for testing fees and sale of gas from helium $23,054.52.

The net revenues from the operation of the Panama Canal total $15,159,991.38. The interest on canal investments at 3 per cent approximates $16,000,000, which is not included in the operating expenses. The gross income for the fiscal year 1931 from the operation of the Panama Canal Railway Co. is $1,259,500.66. The net income from the operation of the Inland Waterways Corporation is $298,756.51. The cost of the operation of Muscle Shoals, Ala., nitrate plants is $83,000 as against $99,233 receipts from leases. Twenty-four thousand four hundred and forty-five dollars and fourteen cents was received from the operation of the hydroelectric power plant at the Rock Island Arsenal, and the amount received

The Insolvent Division of the Treasury Department, the from the operation of the Rock Island Bridge is $8,459.84 vision which issues and redeems Federal reserve notes, for the fiscal year 1931.

Through the office of the Secretary of the Interior a small amount is collected for the sale of official papers and certificates of authentication. A considerable amount of photostat work is also done for the bureaus and other offices of the department, which is subsequently sold and the amounts collected from this work are covered into miscellaneous receipts. The General Land Office is more than self-supporting. The cash receipts from all sources, none of which were collected from other Government agencies, aggregated $4,835,761.85 during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1931, and the total expenditures for the conduct of its business, including its field activities, amounted to $2,158,159.81.

The Bureau of Geological Survey is partially self-supporting. During the fiscal year 1931, $43,430.17 was collected from private individuals, firms, and corporations. The conservation branch of this bureau makes no collections of funds from private individuals, firms, and corporations; but its work-land classification, supervision of power permits, grants and licenses, and supervision of mineral leasing operations—is a part of land administration that is self-supporting, the collections being made by other Government agencies. Funds collected during the fiscal year 1931 for the Indian Service aggregated $986,927.70. In addition, sundry special funds amounting to $70,743.11 were collected and retained for expenditures by disbursing agents. This represents money collected for expenses of special activities, such as dipping sheep, marketing cattle, threshing and grinding grain, and so forth.

With the exception of emergency charge-offs made pursuant to legislation, the Bureau of Reclamation is entirely self-supporting, collecting for the fiscal year 1931, $12,367,-666.56. The National Park Service is partially self-supporting, having collected for the fiscal year 1931 revenues totaling $940,364.49. During the fiscal year 1931 the Alaska Railroad collected $1,209,575, of which $191,973 was due connecting lines. The net amount was $1,017,602. During the year 1931 St. Elizabeths Hospital received from private sources $77,225. Columbia Institution for the Deaf collected from individuals and corporations $15,262, and Freedmen's Hospital collected from pay patients $20,629.75. The Territory of Hawaii was wholly self-supporting during the fiscal year 1931. Howard University collected from students, university activities, endowments, investments, donations, and so forth, $486,318.90. The estimated revenues and private contributions for the Virgin Islands total $200.755.

I do not wish to take up an undue amount of your valuable time on this subject, but I would like to submit further information for your earnest consideration, and therefore request unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

DIVIDENDS FROM GOVERNMENT EFFICIENCY

There are many activities, many types of research, which it is either impossible or impractical for the individual citizen of the United States to undertake for himself. As such activities and research are essential to the welfare of the whole people of the United States, the Federal Government has undertaken them. In many cases the Government renders these services free of charge. In other instances, usually where the benefits of the governmental service are restricted in application, nominal fees are charged. As an example of this, the Bureau of Standards makes nominal charges for testing products where the result of the test is not of general interest. Such fees in the fiscal year 1931 earned the bureau a total of $66,576.15. Where an entire industry or the entire population is benefited services are rendered free. There are thousands of examples of this type of service. This bureau alone is responsible for thousands of scientific discoveries benefitting every citizen of the country. For example, a new method of making paper on which paper money is printed doubles the life of the money and saves the Government $2,000,000 a vear.

In this bureau there is a division concerned with the utilization of waste products from the land. The discovery of a use for corn stalks and corn cobs has resulted in the establishment of a factory which purchases annually more than $200,000 worth of corn waste from the farmers of Iowa and Illinois. This amounts to four times the annual appropriation for the entire division of the Bureau of Standards, which developed the process.

Cottonseed, once a nuisance difficult to dispose of, last year (1931) was worth $265,000,000 to the cotton farmers of the South, because of the research which has made its by-products valuable.

Research now going forward in the development of high grade cellulose from wheat straw, corn stalks, cottonseed hulls, and so forth, all of which are usually waste products, will permit the manufacture of rayon, cellophane, and hundreds of other valuable products from this waste to a greater extent in the future.

Research in the textile division of the Bureau of Standards was estimated by the National Association of Hosiery and Underwear Manufacturers to be worth more than $25,000,000 to the hosiery and underwear industries.

One division of the Bureau of Standards is concerned with standardization of sizes, grades, and so forth, in various industries with the object of eliminating industrial waste. Industries affected by this planning thus far have estimated their savings at over $600,000,000.

The Bureau of Standards has an optical glass plant which manufactures all of the optical glass used by the United States Navy. The operation of this plant is essential to our national defense, as there is no commercial glass plant in the United States capable of doing the same kind of work. Discontinuance of this plant would necessitate importation of optical glass for the Navy.

The Bureau of Standards makes routine tests of articles purchased for Government use to insure the Government's "getting its money's worth." The value of these tests for the last fiscal year was $683,170.67.

The bureau does a large amount of research work for the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics in the development of new aluminum alloys, power plants, dopes, designs of wings, and so forth. This work is indispensable to the progress of aviation and has an obviously important bearing on our national defense.

It is obviously difficult to evaluate the services of another service bureau in the Department of Commerce, the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce.

This bureau maintains 58 foreign offices in the leading trade centers of the world. The activities of these offices are devoted to the promotion of the foreign commerce of this Nation. The aid they render to the American exporters is practical and definite.

Located in the large foreign markets and constantly alert for any trade opening for American goods, they immediately report these opportunities to the bureau in Washington. Here the information is disseminated to every interested manufacturer in the United States.

These foreign representatives secure credit information as to every leading firm in their territory and forward it to Washington. As a consequence the bureau has built up a commercial intelligence file that stands as one of the foremost sources of authentic credit information in the United States to-day. It is impartial, conservative, and reliable.

The men in the foreign offices report at once any changes or suggested revisions of foreign tariffs. As a result of this activity the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce has become the only source to which the harassed American producer can turn to find up-to-the-minute, reliable tariff data that separates rumor from facts. This service alone saves millions of dollars for American exporters each year.

The foreign offices conduct surveys on advertising in their territories. To-day an exporter can come to a district office of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce and get immediately data as to how he should conduct an advertising campaign in any foreign area, what the potential market is, the type of people his literature will reach, the merchandising methods of the country, the best distributing point, and ture, recently described the United States Department of so forth. In short, he can get at once all the information that he needs to plan an efficient and successful entrance into a foreign market.

The foreign office must report on the exchanging commercial and industrial conditions in the territory so that American interests concerned can be protected.

In effect, the foreign office serves as a sales agent for the American shipper. A certain manufacturer will address a foreign office saying that he would like to secure representation for the sale of his product in that area. The foreign office contacts the most suitable representatives in the trade and suggests a local merchant. The office follows up the correspondence of the American merchant until the agency is established and yielding a suitable return.

Through the foreign service of the bureau last year, in spite of the depression, American exporters obtained $57,000,000 in new business, a return to American business of $11 for every dollar expended on the entire bureau. It is estimated that this amount of business netted the Government a return of at least $1,500,000 in income-tax collections.

Because of the aggressive policy of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce in seeking new markets, we have become the largest exporting nation in the world. Exports in 1931, during the depression, were valued at $2,500,000,000. It is estimated that upward of 1,400,000 men were employed in the production of products for export.

The services of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce are primarily for the small diversified manufacturers who can not afford to make their own contacts in foreign countries. The manufacturer is the one who would be most seriously affected if the services of the bureau were curtailed. The large manufacturer can afford to send his own representatives to foreign markets. More than 80 per cent of the services of the bureau are for the little fellow.

Through the bureau's efforts last year, 2,873 new agency connections abroad were established for domestic industries. These may conservatively be valued at $500 to $1,000 each.

In domestic markets the bureau cooperates with trade associations in making surveys, and so forth. Last year the bureau spent $100,000 in this type of work and industries involved contributed $1,200,000. In one survey, of retail drug stores, 31 trade associations cooperated with the bureau and contributed $75,000 as compared to the bureau's expenditure of only $25,000.

The bureau last year furnished 730,000 lists of foreigntrade prospects; 940,000 definite trade opportunities for the sale of American goods abroad; and 190,000 reports on foreign concerns supplementing the reports of credit-rating concerns such as Dun's, Bradstreets, and so forth.

The Department of Commerce turns into the Treasury each year over $7,000,000 received in the form of fees, etc.

The proposed reduction in the appropriations of the Department of Commerce for the next fiscal year will mean the closing of 20 foreign-trade promotion offices, 18 offices in the United States and the dismissal of 473 employees from the bureau. Five divisions of the Washington offices would have to be discontinued: Agricultural implements, boots and shoes, foreign construction, motion pictures, and aeronautics

The actual cash receipts of the Department of Commerce for the fiscal year 1931 were as follows:

Sir Horace Plunkett, Ireland's great authority on agricul-department has won its position as a public-service institution by scientific triumphs and in practical help, benefiting not only agriculture but industry and the general community as well. Much of the work promotes public health and wellbeing. Its research, by helping farmers to grow better crops and livestock, reduce their costs, and market their products more efficiently, benefits the consuming public every bit as much as it benefits the producing farmer. A few examples will show why practically everyone is interested in the department's activities.

The public has a vital interest in the Federal meat-inspection service, which costs more than $5,000,000 annually. This service maintains a high standard of sanitation in packing plants, and aims to insure safe, clean animal products. The research and the veterinary work of the department promote public health by eradicating animal diseases or reducing their prevalence. Through enforcement of the pure food and drugs act, the tea and milk import acts, the caustic poison act, and other similar acts, the public is protected against unwholesome or adulterated foods and drugs, inferior disinfectants, and ineffective insecticides.

The weather service of the Weather Bureau of the Department of Agriculture is indispensable to innumerable commercial and industrial enterprises. Building contractors save on cement jobs by heeding frost forecasts. Shippers of perishable products prevent losses in the same way. Weather reports are indispensable for navigation and aviation, and many more matters.

The administration of our forest resources and their utilization with thought of the need for conservation is of interest to the entire population. The Department of Agriculture administers forests with an area of 160,000,000 acres. and cooperates in fire protection on 240,000,000 acres more. The perpetuation of our forest resources is of immense value to the public as a whole.

Few of us realize that more than half of the total expenditures of this department goes for the improvement of roads. The Federal aid system consists of the most important interstate and intercounty roads, thus benefiting both city dwellers and farmers.

Primarily, the department is a research institution. Research in the department from 1888 to 1893 proved that a microorganism found in the blood of cattle is the cause of splenetic fever, and that the disease is transmitted by the cattle tick. This was the first demonstration that a microbial disease can be transmitted exclusively by an insect host or carrier. The beneficial results were literally stupendous. They were not limited to an improvement in the health of cattle. The discovery ranks among the great achievements of medical science; it led to the knowledge that such diseases as yellow fever, malaria, typhus fever, African sleeping sickness, Rocky Mountain fever, and other maladies are similarly transmitted. It made possible the control of yellow fever in the Canal Zone.

Scientists in the department discovered, in 1903, that hog cholera is caused by a filterable virus, and developed a preventive serum that saved a threatened industry.

Research in the department discovered an effective remedy for hookworm in human beings, vastly extended the shipping range of citrus fruits, rehabilitated the disease-threatened sugarcane industry, protected the potato industry, and found uses for numerous farm by-products. These are merely examples.

The development of new varieties of plants and the introduction of foreign varieties to American soil has made it possible to better utilize our land resources. Pima cotton, for example, was developed by selection from cotton originally brought from Egypt. The new cotton is of great length and strength and is now grown in the Salt River Valley of Arizona. Hardy alfalfas have been brought from Siberia and other parts of Asia; the soybean from the Orient; Sudan grass, Rhodes grass, Napier grass, velvet bean, and purple vetch from Africa and elsewhere. We are indebted to Russia for the original Durum wheat, a crop that is now so improved that it has an annual value in this country of nearly $100,000,000. Sudan grass now has an annual Agriculture as "the most useful institution on earth." This | crop value of over $2,000,000 in this country. The Washington navel orange, introduced from Brazil in 1872, which now makes up the bulk of the California orange industry, is only one example to show how American orchards and groves have been enriched by the introduction of scores of fruits and nuts from abroad. Through numerous investigations the department has improved this orange and perpetuated the best qualities through bud selection. In more recent years there has been added the date, the alligator pear, the mango, Chinese and Japanese persimmons, the papaya, and the pistachio nut, and many more fruits, nuts, and so forth.

Methods of growing cotton have been considerably modified in recent years by the new method of thick spacing of single-stalk plants, based on a technical botanical discovery that the cotton plant has two distinct kinds of branches. The single-stalk cotton is earlier and more productive, especially under boll-weevil conditions or in short seasons. The yields are often increased from 10 to 30 per cent, or even from 50 to 100 per cent under some conditions, by the new

In 1929, when the campaign to eradicate the Mediterranean fruit fly was in full swing, Department of Agriculture scientists developed a way to sterilize citrus fruit by heat. This permitted the orderly marketing of citrus fruit grown in the infected area and saved millions of dollars to

A calcium salt, once so rare that it cost $150 a pound, now may be had for 50 cents a pound because of recent work by the department's chemists. In looking for molds to produce tartaric acid. 149 were examined without results. The one hundred and fiftieth unexpectedly produced gluconic acid. This is now used in making calcium gluconate, the only calcium salt that can be injected between the muscles, without causing abscesses, in treating human diseases.

Strawberry growers in North Carolina last year increased their yields by 400 to 500 quarts per acre, and their average profit by $75 an acre, through the use of fertilizing methods recommended by the department.

The department was the first scientific organization to demonstrate that resistance to disease in plants is of a genetic character, and that resistant qualities can be bred into or out of plants. Intensive research by the department and developments in wilt resistant and disease resistant varieties of cottons, melons, beans, peas, lettuce, cantaloupes, tomatoes, onions, and so forth, have resulted in a saving of many millions of dollars annually.

Research in the Bureau of Animal Industry developed last year a way to control the liver fluke in sheep. This parasite has caused much loss in California and other Western States. Investigators found that the liver fluke spends part of its life cycle in a certain snail that lives in wet pastures and along the banks of water courses and irrigation canals. When such areas are treated with copper sulphate a chemical extremely poisonous even in minute quantities to snails, the life cycle of the parasite is ended. As a result of this discovery sheep raising in the areas affected has been reestablished on a safe basis.

Big savings to the hog industry have come from the bureau's discovery that roundworms in swine can be controlled by preventing newly born pigs from swallowing the microscopic worm eggs commonly found in old hog lots and on the bodies and udders of sows. This innovation reduces mortality among pigs, hastens their maturity, and saves feed.

Not long ago, the Bureau of Dairy Industry discovered how to condense skim milk so as to make the product selfpreserving. As a result, skim milk can now be readily converted into concentrated sour skim milk, in which form it can be preserved and transported. Manufacturers of concentrated sour skim milk provide the butter maker, the city milk dealer, and others with a convenient and practical means of utilizing one of the most important by-products of the dairy industry. About 75,000,000 pounds of skim milk annually are now converted, by the bureau's process, into concentrated sour skim milk.

Though it is impossible to set a money value on animal disease prevention, it can not be doubted that the value is enormous. In the five years 1926 to 1930 the number of | been shaved with a razor. They were first used in making cattle affected with diseases or other abnormal conditions in Federally inspected slaughterhouses decreased from 59 per thousand to 42 per thousand. Affected swine decreased from 142 per thousand in 1926 to 115 per thousand in 1930. Cattle known to be free of tuberculosis are worth fully $10 a head more than nontested cattle. Tuberculin testing in 1931, in which year more than 13,000,000 cattle passed the test, meant on this basis an increase in value of $130,-000,000. Hog cholera losses, which used to exceed 5 per cent of all hogs in former years, now are below 3 per cent. This is a direct result of hog cholera prevention methods developed by the department.

Here is one attempt to place a money value on research. An analysis was recently made of 20 continuing projects in insect pest control; the projects cost $300,000 a year, and they result in saving crops that are worth $69,500,000 a year.

In the foregoing I have mentioned a few achievements of various branches of the department's research. Glance now at a single field—the utilization of by-products—and see this impressive record:

The little tomato seed was a waste of the catsup industry until chemists found a way to extract its oil. To-day this oil is used as food and in making fine soaps. Likewise, the kernel of the seed of the apricot was a waste of the apricot industry until chemists found a way to free it from its bitter principle. To-day the apricot kernel, tasting nearly like the almond, is used in flavoring macaroons. The seeds of the raisin were a waste with the seeded raisin industry until chemists found a way to use them. The oil of the seed is compatible in taste with the raisin, and work is now being done in spraying this oil on the seeded raisins to keep them soft and fresh until consumed.

Our chemical laboratories point out to us an age of cellulose, which challenges our imagination. What is cellulose? It is the substance-consisting of the three chemical elements, carbon, hydrogen, and oxygen-which is the principal part of the solid framework of plants. The wooden floors we walk upon, the newspapers and magazines and books we read, corncobs, cornstalks, wheat straw, and other straws-these and myriad other things are largely cellulose. Chemically, cellulose is very similar in composition to cornstarch and the sugars; it contains the same elements and is convertible into sugars by the action of heat and acid.

Cotton is nearly pure cellulose. The chemist already knows how to make rayon and artificial silks out of cellulose from cotton linters, cornstalks, and so forth, and industries of great size have sprung up to manufacture them. Who can imagine the future in store for the humble and lowly cornstalk? I have seen a beautifully printed and bound book entitled "Farm Products in Industry," the paper of which was made mainly of cornstalks. I have read farm journals printed on paper, the most costly part of which had been replaced by cornstalk pulp. I have handled samples of insulating and building board made of cornstalks, some as porous and light as cork and some almost as hard and dense as iron. Who can say now, in view of the industrial beginnings already made, what part cornstalks will play in the building construction and heat and cold insulation of the future? Some day most of our books and daily news may come to us on cornstalk paper.

For generations the cotton farmer has had as his main business the production of an industrial inedible fiber for the textile mills. At the time of the Civil War the by-product cottonseed, except the small quantity saved for planting, was practically waste; in 1870 it was used for fertilizer; in 1880 for cattle feed; and 1890, thanks to the chemist and his research, a cottonseed-oil industry came into being. Cottonseed oil is used in cooking and for many other purposes.

A by-product may even have by-products of its own. In pressing the cottonseed to extract the oil the cottony fuzz on the seed was a nuisance. This fuzz is called linters. Today we have a great industry which makes a product out of linters that looks and feels like silk. This is an accomplishment of the research chemist, made in the chemical explorations of cellulose. Linters have become so valuable that the seed is sometimes scraped so close that it looks as if it had mattresses, batting, high explosives (nitrocellulose), and so forth. To-day they are used to make the finish and tops for our automobiles, substitutes for leather, brushes, combs. and mirrors, camera films (including our movies), casings for sausages, fine paper, collodion for skinned fingers, and so forth

In 1929 the value of the by-products made from cottonseed reached the staggering total of $298,376,039.

The whole story of the utilization of the by-products of our farms, even only up to now, would fill many books. The chemists and other scientists of the United States Department of Agriculture, the State colleges of agriculture and experiment stations, and other institutions are working with intense interest to develop new products from our agricultural by-products. They have already found many things, but for many of them the economic place has not yet been found.

The department administers approximately 50 regulatory statutes. The most important are the animal quarantine laws, the meat inspection act, the virus serum toxin act, the packers and stockyards act, the 28-hour law, the renovated butter act, the plant quarantine act, the food and drugs act. the tea importation act, the import milk act, the naval stores act, the caustic poison act, the insecticide and fungicide act, the seed importation act, the migratory bird treaty act, the Lacey Act (affecting wild life), the Alaska game law, the cotton standards act, the grain standards act, the Federal warehouse act, the cotton futures act, and the grain futures

Results of the research and other work done in the department must be communicated to the public or their value is largely lost. Research must have a mouthpiece. It can not be done well in closed compartments without facilities for communicating results to scientific workers everywhere and to farmers and the general public. Work done in the dark means duplication of effort and loss of the stimulus that discovery in one field should have on other investigations in other fields. Hence the department maintains various informational services, which include a cooperative extension service, bulletins, motion pictures and exhibits, press and radio services, weather forecasts, crop and market reports and outlook reports, periodicals, soil surveys, and correspondence with individuals.

I insert here a table which shows the total expenditures charged to the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year 1931. The net cash withdrawal from the Treasury was $296.865,945 and the checks outstanding on June 30, 1931, $14,514,248. This made a total of $311,380,193. Did this all go for agriculture?

Here are the true facts of expenditures of Department of Agriculture, fiscal year 1931. On basis of Budget statement

Other departments of the Government are comparable to the Agriculture and Commerce Departments. The services rendered to the American people are of inestimable value. The Employment Service of the Department of Labor, the Children's Bureau of the same department; the Postal Service; antitrust work of the Federal Trade Commission; the Federal Board for Vocational Education; and dozens of others. Many bureaus and divisions of departments are self-supporting or partially self-supporting through fee and other collections. For example:

The Naturalization Service of the Labor Department expended only $1,156,970 in the fiscal year 1931, while its receipts were $3,086,175.

The Immigration Service of the Labor Department, with an appropriation of $9,562,085, received $2,657,391. Due to immigration legislation in recent years, receipts have fallen off very considerably.

In the Treasury Department, the office of the Comptroller of the Currency turns into the Treasury more than $1,500,000 a year over and above its expenses. Of course, those divisions concerned with the collection of the national revenue, the Customs Bureau, and Internal Revenue Bureau may be regarded as much more than self-supporting. The Bureau of the Mint had a profit on coinage in 1931 amounting to $1,550,831, while total expenditures were only $1,491,350.

While I realize that now is the time when Congress must enact such legislation as to curtail all unnecessary Government expenses, I believe that particular care should be taken in order that such divisions of Government that the country is so dependent upon for aid and assistance should not be curtailed to such an extent as would make them valueless to the citizens of the United States.

LEGISLATIVE APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, the committee of conference on the legislative appropriation bill is in session, and they expect to have a report ready, at least in part, to-day, and I ask unanimous consent that they may have until 12 o'clock to-night to file that report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. RAMSEYER. Reserving the right to object, if the report is filed, is it the intention of the gentleman to call it

Mr. BYRNS. I presume that the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. Sandlin] will call it up. The gentleman from Iowa understands that in all likelihood it will have to go back to conference on the economy amendment.

Mr. BRIGGS. Have the conferees agreed? Mr. BYRNS. They have gone into conference.

Mr. BRIGGS. On legislative matters other than the economy program?

Mr. BYRNS. Yes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting therein an article on military appropriations.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, are these the gentleman's own

Mr. COLLINS. No: it is an article which I think is a very valuable document.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I object.

PATRONAGE

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD upon the subject of patronage and other matters.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include an exchange of letters between the senior Senator from Pennsylvania, Hon. David A. REED, and myself, relative to patronage, as follows:

> CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES. House of Representatives, Washington, D. C., June 6, 1932.

Washington, D. C., June 8, 1832.

Hon. David A. Reed,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

My Dear Senator Reed: On December 18, last, you were quoted in the New York Times as having notified Postmaster General Brown that "from now on you and Senator Davis would handle post-office patronage in the fifteenth Pennsylvania district, which Mr. McFadden represents." That paper further quoted you as saying, "Mr. Brown was told by Senator Reed that in the future, so far as Mr. McFadden's recommendations for post-office appointsaying, "Mr. Brown was told by Senator Reed that in the future, so far as Mr. McFadden's recommendations for post-office appointments were concerned the Postmaster General would simply consider that the recalcitrant Representative had died." You are also quoted as announcing that you would do "everything within your power in the next primary election to defeat Mr. McFadden for renomination."

The Philadelphia Public Ledger of the same date quotes you in practically the same language, saying, "McFappen will be treated as if he were dead. Party is expected to drop him in 1932." To quote further from this article, it says, "The decision was made after Senators Reep and Davis conferred with Postmaster General

Because of these articles I addressed a letter under date of December 21, 1931, to Hon. Walter F. Brown, Postmaster General, Post Office Department, Washington, D. C., reading as follows:

DECEMBER 21, 1931.

Hon. Walter F. Brown,
Postmaster General, Post Office Department,

My Dear Ma. Brown: By the press I am informed that the two Senators from Pennsylvania have arranged with you in regard to all matters pertaining to postal affairs from this date on in the fifteenth congressional district of Pennsylvania; that they will in the future be handled with your concurrence by Senators David Aiken Reed and James J. Davis, and that so far as this particular district is concerned in matters pertaining to any description. district is concerned in matters pertaining to your department the Congressman will have no opportunity to confer with you nor to make recommendations for the appointments under civil-service regulations of postmasters or rural carriers.

As I have pending before me now several appointments of postmasters and other postal department matters, I am asking you for definite and immediate advice as to the future conduct of the Post Office Department relative to postal matters in the fifteenth congressional district of which I am the elected Representative in Congress. I am asking you this in order that I may advise my constituents properly. Your immediate reply will be expected. Very truly yours,

L. T. MCFADDEN.

Under date of December 22, the Postmaster General, Walter F. Brown, replied as follows:

DECEMBER 22, 1931.

HOD LOWIS T MCFADDEN

Hon. Louis 1. McFadden,

House of Representatives.

My Dear Mr. Congressman: Acknowledgment is made of the receipt of your letter of the 21st instant inquiring how the Post Office Department will deal with postal matters arising in the fifteenth Pennsylvania district, which you represent in the present Congress

Apparently you are under a misapprehension with respect to the relation of Congressmen to postal administration. Legally, Representatives in Congress have no responsibility or voice in the selection of personnel in the post office or other executive departments. Because most of the Post Office Department's major partments. Because most of the Post Office Department's major activities are in the field, frequently remote from the post of duty of departmental heads, it has been the practice of the department to invite the advice in matters relating to local personnel, and in limited cases relating to local policies, of Congressmen in whose capacity and desire to be of service the department has confidence. Both Republican and Democratic administrations have followed this practice for many decades with undoubted benefits accruing to the service.

As the views which you expressed in the House of Representatives on the 15th instant, as set forth on pages 571 and 572 of the Congressional Record, volume 75, convince me that your advice will not be helpful to the department, the heads of the several post-office bureaus have been directed from and after the date mentioned neither to invite nor to follow suggestions from you.

from you. Very truly yours,

WALTER F. BROWN.

Since then I have had no contact directly with the Post Office Department or any of its divisions on matters in which my constituents of the fifteenth congressional district were interested. Indirectly, without specific notice from you, I was informed that stituents of the fifteenth congressional district were interested. Indirectly, without specific notice from you, I was informed that you and Senator Davis were handling all post-office matters in the fifteenth congressional district.

On February 22 I announced my candidacy for the Republican nomination in the fifteenth congressional district. My chief opponent was Cornelia Bryce Pinchot, wife of the present Governor of Pennsylvania. The basis of her candidacy, as announced by her, was my speech of December 15, 1931, and my record as the Representative of the district for the past 17 years in the House of Representatives. I accepted the challenge, and sent into the district approximately 60,000 copies of my speech delivered in the House of Representatives on December 15, 1931. This speech is apparently the basis which prompted your action in depriving the people of the fifteenth congressional district of their right to do business with the Post Office Department through their legally elected Representative in the House of Representatives. I attribute my nomination to a large extent to the distribution of this speech and of my speech of January 13, 1932, against the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, together with my speeches throughout the district against the international financial group's exploitation of American investors out of several billion dollars, including the sale in this country of $100,000,000 worth of German reparation bonds.

the sale in this country of $100,000,000 worth of German reparation bonds.

At the April 26 primaries, I was not only renominated on the Republican ticket, but on the Democratic and Prohibition tickets as well. This is equivalent to election. I contend that the people of the fifteenth congressional district are entitled to representation before the Post Office Department, of which they are now deprived through their chosen Representative in Congress. In this connection, I would like to call your attention to the resolution that was passed by the Pennsylvania Republican Delegation in Congress at a meeting held on December 9, 1930, and approved by Senator Davis and yourself, when the question of congressional patronage was raised. The resolution is as follows:

"Whereas it has for many years been the custom in our State for Members of Congress to make the selection of postmasters in their respective districts, except in the districts where the United States Senators reside; Therefore be it

"Resolved, That it is the sense of the Pennsylvania delegation in Congress that this time-honored custom should be continued."

Because of the fact that your action of December 17, as reported in the Philadelphia Ledger and the New York Times of the following day, has deprived the fifteenth congressional district of their rights heretofore accorded through their duly elected Representative, that of consulting with the Post Office Department and its various bureaus in regard to matters affecting the district, as well as the right to recommend the appointment of postmasters, and that you and Senator Davis have assumed these full prerogatives various bureaus in regard to matters affecting the district, as well as the right to recommend the appointment of postmasters, and that you and Senator Davis have assumed these full prerogatives yourselves, I am calling your attention to the fact that this action violated the resolution which was to govern patronage matters in each congressional district in Pennsylvania, wherein you and Senator Davis agreed with the Pennsylvania Republican delegation that you would approve as a matter of course their recommendations, and that you would consider the appointment of postmasters as the patronage of the Congressman in each district. Because of this I called the attention of the delegation to these facts at a meeting of the Pennsylvania delegation held recently.

Because of this I called the attention of the delegation to these facts at a meeting of the Pennsylvania delegation held recently, where the matter was thoroughly discussed.

Inasmuch as your action was predicated on my speech of December 15, 1931, which was also used as the basis of the action by the Postmaster General, I desire to point out that in delivering this speech I was entirely within my constitutional rights, and your action is an attempted interference with my rights as a Member of the House of Representatives and quite in contrast with what Voltaire said, "I do not believe in a word that you say, but I will defend with my life, if need be, your right to say it." The subject matter under consideration in the House of Representatives at that time was the Hoover moratorium. One of our fundamental constitutional privileges is that the management of the finances and appropriations of the Government belongs exclusively to Congress, and the constitutional method of getting the expression of Congress is "in Congress assembled," not by the private expression of opinion by the individual Members of Congress instead of collectively. This successful attempt on the part of the Executive to secure an expression of opinion from Members of Congress individually instead of collectively is a constitutional violation, because the Constitution says with reference to the legislative body "in Congress assembled," and there is a long series of decisions of our courts dealing with administrative boards that contracts are only valid when entered into by the boards regularly assembled and actively functioning as such, not simply by personal agreements with majorities of the members of the boards. This is the only way in which intrigue and secret negotiations can be prevented in the administration of public business, and I do not think that anyone will say that a government is not a public business. ment is not a public business.

Furthermore, in asking for action by Congress there ought to have been laid down before Congress as a whole, or, in case the documents were of such a confidential character that it was not advisable to make their contents public in the public interest, there ought to have been laid down before a private committee in there ought to have been laid down before a private committee in confidence all of the documents and communications passing between the respective governments and the confidential reports of the ambassadors, ministers, or consuls upon the economic conditions of their respective countries. None of these things were done in this particular case. A perusal of the debate in the House will show conclusively that Congress was requested to pass the measure upon the mere say so of the executive department with all of the diplomatic evidence withheld from its consideration. The guarantee previously given by the Members of Congress to the Executive at his solicitation without a disclosure of the full facts would tend to indicate a confident determination and assurance on the part of the Executive in further refusing to disclose the diplomatic evidence in his possession in connection with the negotiations leading up to the moratorium.

I desire to call your attention to another fundamental principle the diplomatic evidence in his possession in connection with the negotiations leading up to the moratorium.

I desire to call your attention to another fundamental principle of our constitutional system of government; that is, by having each of the three departments of the Government independent of each other and in a position to fully analyze the policies and principles of the other departments, we would tend to eliminate the essence of tyranny and keep the general functions of our Government in harmony with the Democratic principles upon which it was founded. That being true it was the intention of our constitutional founders—this intention has steadily developed in practice—that the legislative branch of the Government should not only have the right to criticize the Executive, but, in fact, that it was the supreme duty of the legislative representatives so to do, and in order to secure the full exercise of his functions in that respect, the law makes him exempt from being called upon to answer in any court for any statement made in the faithful performance of his legislative functions upon the floor of the House. Not only that, but the House of Representatives through its Members has the right to impeach the Executive and bring him before the bar of its coordinate legislative body are not in harmony with the general interests of the people; while the general phraseology of most impeachment allegations is "high crimes and misdemeanors," yet no legal authority has ever accurately defined what those are, and in fact there is no rule of measurement of the causes for which the legislative branch may see fit to remove the Chief Executive other than the conscience and discretion of the legislative body itself acting through the majority of its Members.

In this connection it is noteworthy that there is no power of

In this connection it is noteworthy that there is no power of impeachment or disciplinary control on the part of the Executive over the Members of the legislative bodies whatsoever. In fact, in the progress and development of the constitutional basis of Democratic government the tendency is to increase the power and authority of the lower House as being directly representative of the will of the people and to decrease the power and authority of the Executive exercised in opposition to the will of the lower parliamentary body. Notwithstanding this constitutional principle, the action which has been taken in this case seems to assume an attitude to the general effect that the Executive has a divine right of arbitrary power and judgment, and that when the Executive determines one idea and policy, no matter how unsound the ideas of the Executive may be, the Executive ipso facto must be right, and if the legislative body or any Member thereof disagrees with him, that the legislator or the legislative body must automatically be wrong. In this connection it is noteworthy that there is no power of Wrong.

Your announcement from the White House that I would be deprived of post-office patronage indicates the approval of the Executive and your unqualified right to speak as the leader of the Republican Party in general and Pennsylvania in particular. In this connection I desire to point out the fallacy of the assumption that the President is the titular party leader of the administration in power and exercises his functions in that respect similar to the Prime Minister in England, and that anyone disagreeing with the ideas and disobeying the wishes of the President must therefore be guilty of party treachery. Such an opinion is neither well founded in fact nor in accordance with the well-defined principles of political polity in this country. The President is neither a member of the national committee nor is he a member of, nor eligible to membership in, the party caucus of the legislative body. He has no legislative function whatsoever except such as may be implied from his power of veto, which is simply an aid to the executive no legislative function whatsoever except such as may be implied from his power of veto, which is simply an aid to the executive function.

Possibly there is no better illustration of the reason why the President should not be a party leader in the strict sense of the term than the present Executive. He never served in the ranks of any political party. He never was elected to office at any time until he was elected to the office of President through the aid and machinery of the Republican Party.

Members of the House of Representatives are elected directly by the voters of their respective districts without any distinction as to party leadership or affiliations except so far as the same may apply in a persuasive manner to the discretion of the individual voter. Consequently a Member of the House of Representatives is directly responsible to his constituents and not to the President or Senator of his State or even to the party, and, therefore, the criterion of his actions is simply whether or not the Member is serving the interests of his constituents rather than the interests of the party and of the President.

As you were not only reported to have announced the assumed prerogatives of the President but to have presumed to speak for the Republican Party as regards my renomination and election, it is worthy of consideration to call your attention to the fact that it is the duty of the party to serve the people and certainly it is the duty of the President to serve the people and certainly it is the duty of the party to serve the people and certainly it is the duty of the party to serve the people and certainly it is the duty of the party to serve the people and certainly it is the duty of the party to serve the people and certainly it is the duty of the party to serve the people and certainly it is the duty of the party to serve the people and certainly it is the duty of the party to serve the people and certainly it is the duty of the party to serve the people and certainly it is the duty of the party to serve

"When conquering Cæsars, flushed with pilfered pelf, Would placate plebes, for love of show and self, They showered gold from gilded equipage, As we do now—but call it patronage.

- "When feudal barons, home from raiding ride, Would scatter largesse thru the countryside, They shared the booty from their brigandage, As we do now—in party patronage.
- "In modern politics or war's turmoils, Still to the victor must belong the spoils; What is the difference, any place or age, If it be plunder—or just patronage?"

In this particular case you started in motion the party machinery to punish and handicap a Representative of the House of Representatives who was acting within his rights as a Member of the House under his oath of office. As that Representative's statement did not agree with your own views you arranged that the full force of party machinery and elements of intimidation were brought into being in an attempt to discipline that Member through the control of the patronage of the Executive. It is time to bring the abuse of this system prominently to the attention of the public so that the public may be induced to abolish this obnoxious practice. noxious practice.

It has become quite the common autocratic practice of late for officials in administrative departments when any criticism is for officials in administrative departments when any criticism is leveled at any, of their acts, instead of attempting to answer the criticism, to immediately make a counterattack upon the integrity of the accuser, be he a legislator or some other person, for the purpose of discrediting his action in the eyes of the legislative bodies or the public, and thus avoid a disclosure of that which had been pointed out as improper, and in the operation of this practice, the Secret Service is always made available to these department heads.

As an instance of this, I point to the action of the former Secretary of the Treasury, A. W. Meilon, when Senator James Couzens, of Michigan, began an investigation of fraudulent tax settlements of the Income Tax Bureau in the United States Treasury. Immediately the Secretary retaliated by bringing an action against Senator Couzens personally on a tax settlement which had been closed several years before. This action served its purpose. Senator Couzens was put to great expense and trouble and finally defeated the action, but it resulted in his stopping the investigation of the tax matter, and it was never completed.

As a further instance of this same practice I would cite the present investigation by the Senate Banking and Currency Committee of the New York Stock Exchange, where the same tactics are being pursued, which is evidenced by their dastardly attack upon the integrity and standing of the chairman of that committee for the sole purpose of intimidating him against any further investigation of the shady dealings of the New York Stock Exchange. In fact, I understand that the stock exchange authorities have investigated practically every member of the committee to see if somewhere in their career a skeleton can not be found so that the members of this committee will be intimidated against further proceedings in this investigation. This is a practice that has been growing in the Government and in circles where influence and nower predominate and is a natural sequence that follows further proceedings in this investigation. This is a practice that has been growing in the Government and in circles where influence and power predominate, and is a natural sequence that follows greed and the fight for power and more power in an individual capacity, in political capacities, in corporate capacities, and can but savor of dictatorship. Such practices as these can not be too strongly condemned as unprincipled, and if persisted in will further weaken and undermine our present form of government by destroying the people's confidence in law and order through constitutional government. In this connection, I would call your attention to a proclamation of the Council and House of Representatives of Massachusetts Bay, issued by John Adams in 1774, and which was sent to all town meetings in the Commonwealth, as follows:

"As the happiness of the people is the sole end of government so the consent of the people is the only foundation for it, in reason, morality, and the natural fitness of things. And, therefore, every act of government, every exercise of sovereignty against or without the consent of the people is injustice, usurpation, and tyranny. * * * The supreme power resides always in the body of the people; and it never was, or can be, delegated to one man or a few; the great Creator has never given to men a right to vest others with authority over them unlimited either in duration or degree." duration or degree."

A former Republican Senator of the United States stated on February 27, 1911:

February 27, 1911:

"The manner in which Federal patronage shall be used is of the greatest concern not to the Members of Congress but to the people of the United States, whose Government this is. I would call your attention to the fact that Senators and Representatives come and go. It is of comparatively little importance whether any one of us shall be here a few years hence. Individuals are of little consequence. But fundamental principles of justice and equality under law are of utmost importance. Disregard and defiance of law is the beginning of anarchy, and the law-respecting, liberty-loving people of this country will not tolerate it.

"Our Government was founded upon the proposition that all men are equal before the law, civil or criminal. I would have as much respect for a common ward heeler who buys votes at the polls as for a President of the United States who uses his appointing power as a means of forcing or persuading Members of Congress to determine or change their course of action. One transaction is as dishonest, as corrupt, and as depraving as the other, but the latter is more dangerous, more insidious, more pernicious than the former, because it strikes at the very foundation of free institutions, sets a precedent for corrupt methods in all official life, and marks the beginning of dictatorship and decadence of the Nation.

"It is interesting to note that the truth of the charge of corruption in high places as wall as low has been extended.

the Nation.

"It is interesting to note that the truth of the charge of corruption in high places as well as low has been established not so much by external proof as by the confessions of parties thereto. The purchase of votes in the Illinois Legislature was not proven by testimony of outside parties, but by confessions of bribe givers and bribe takers. In Ohio, where thousands of voters have been punished for selling their votes and where punishment of vote buyers will doubtless follow in due time, convictions have been based almost entirely upon confessions, and the same is true with regard to the charge of purchase of votes in Congress through distribution of patronage. The charge was practically unproven, whatever the general understanding may have been, until the issuance of the famous Beverly letter, in which, if authentic, it is confessed that the President had given the privilege of controlling patronage to those Members of Congress who voted upon legislation in accordance with his wishes and has withheld it from those who did not.

"Any interference * * with the free expression of the those who did not.

"Any interference * * * with the free expression of the opinions of Members of Congress by their votes upon measures is a direct attack upon the section of the Constitution which declares that 'all legislative powers herein granted shall be vested in the Congress, which shall consist of a Senate and House of Representatives.' This quotation is part of that Constitution which every President of the United States has taken an oath to 'preserve, protect, and defend.' No President can interfere with the exercise of legislative power by Congress without violating his oath of office, a violation as direct and as complete as any other unlawful act by any other officer of the Government.

"To bribe a Member of Congress by means of Federal patronage is not different in principle from bribery by means of cash or other valuable consideration. Intimidation by threats of loss of prestige incident to withdrawal of patronage is not different in principle from intimidation by threats of violence or business injury. But this species of bribery and intimidation is more vicious than any other, because it assumes a character of gentility, due to the patriotic reverence for the office of President not enjoyed by the common ward heeler when he indulges in similar practices. It is too base to be called a crime. It is so far below the conception of law makers that no statute has been enacted directly prohibiting it. Nothing in our Constitution or laws expressly prohibits the President from trading Federal appointments for votes in Coning it. Nothing in our Constitution or laws expressly prohibits the President from trading Federal appointments for votes in Congress. The special-privilege seeker trying to influence legislation by offers of reward to Members of Congress must be fined or imprisoned. The possible corruption of Congress through the misuse of the presidential nominating power was never contemplated by the framers of the Constitution nor national legislators. It would, indeed, be a most humiliating admission of the weakness of representative government if disclosures necessitate legislative would, indeed, be a most humiliating admission of the weakness of representative government if disclosures necessitate legislative action to prevent a repetition of such an evil."

The widespread interest of the public is proving that the people of the entire country are awakening to conditions that exist and are determined to improve their system of government, not necessarily by changing the present form of government but by making their Representatives solely accountable to the people and by giving assurances to public servants in return that demonstration of good service on their part rather than subservience to a political boss, temporary leader, or special interest, insures election or retention. The onward sweep of the movement for the full measure of human liberty can not long be stayed.

measure of human liberty can not long be stayed.

The purpose of this letter is to ask you whether it is your intention to continue to pass upon all postal and departmental matters before the Post Office Department pertaining to the fifteenth congressional district of Pennsylvania, which, of course, includes the recommendation for appointment of postmasters and other routine matters pertaining to post-office business in which my constituents of the fifteenth congressional district are interested. I want to say to you that if it is, you are acting contrary to the wishes of the people of this congressional district, who resent your unjustified interference in this instance, which is contrary to all precedents. all precedents Awaiting your reply, I remain, yours very truly, L. T. McFadden.

UNITED STATES SENATE. COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS, June 7, 1932.

Hon. Louis T. McFadden.

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Dear Mr. McFadden: Replying to your letter of June 6, you are quite correct in saying that you were wholly within your rights in uttering the beliefs that you hold regarding President Hoover, as you did in your speech in the House of Representatives on December 15 last, although I personally can not understand how you or any other sane man could hold such preposterous beliefs.

Under the custom observed for many decades in matters of post-office appointments the President does not follow the recommendations of Democrats or other political adversaries. So long as you choose to put yourself in that class, I can not ask him to respect your requests, and if I were to ask him he would doubtless refuse.

your requests, and if I were to ask him he would doubtless refuse.

Very truly yours,

HOUR OF MEETING TO-MORROW

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, in order that we may get through with this bill to-morrow, and with several rules, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? There was no objection.

DISPENSING WITH CALENDAR WEDNESDAY BUSINESS

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that business in order on Calendar Wednesday, next week, be dispensed with, and that it shall be in order on that day to call bills on the Private Calendar unobjected to, under the old rule, beginning at the last starred bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?
Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. I dislike to object, but I know that when I was here last week, or the week before, we lost our Calendar Wednesday. I do not see the gentleman from New York here; I shall be forced to object.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with business in order on Calendar Wednesday next week.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois to dispense with business in order on Calendar Wednesday next week.

The question was taken; and two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the motion was agreed to.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Wednesday of next week it be in order to consider bills on the Private Calendar unobjected to, under the old rule, commencing where we left off last.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ECONOMIC DISTRESS IN A LAND OF PLENTY

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD upon the economic conditions confronting the country.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, I need not state what every-body knows, that American business is sick. The blood stream is stagnant. The heartbeats are weak and faint. It is no time for ordinary and usual methods. Something heroic and fundamental must be done. We must startle the thinking of the whole people into new directions. We must send out a rallying call of confidence. We must convince the people that America and American institutions are safe and sound. We must prove that our democracy is capable of handling any crisis. We must show that our constitutional system not only permits but authorizes any proper measure for self-preservation. We have the power; and if we only had the combination of knowledge, courage, and bold leadership, within less than 60 days American business would be improving, American factories would be running, American banks would stop failing, American merchants would begin to prosper, American farmers would begin to see how they could pay interest and taxes, and American wage earners could find jobs at fair wages.

But, Mr. Speaker, it takes concerted and united leadership to do this. There is abundant information, here and there, of what ought to be done, but this information has not yet been coordinated, and common counsels taken, and united plans formulated as between executive and legislative branches of the Government. We are not obliged to have a Mussolini in America. It is not necessary that we should set up something like the War Industries Board. We can function under our existing machinery, if we will. But, if we do not, then I say in all seriousness that some individual with larger powers than any person now possesses, other than the President, should be clothed with authority over our transportation system, and thus with indirect authority over our industrial system, to bring about a coordination of activities and thus to overcome the paralysis which is destroying the life of America.

I regret to say that there seems to be a total and woeful lack of adequate leadership in the White House. I speak with great personal respect for the President. I would not unnecessarily add one ounce of additional weight to his great burden. But from the day that he entered the White House and called Congress into extra session, in order to revise upwards a Republican tariff then on the tax books, and permitted his party to raise tariff duties to the point of prohibition, and thus to destroy American foreign trade, and thus to make it impossible for us to sell our surplus cotton and wheat in foreign lands-from that day to this day the President has been blundering and staggering and stumbling from one mistake to another until he has about completed the wrecking of our whole business structure.

Following the insane and suicidal increase of the tariff duties, and on its very heels and as a part of the same general scheme, there developed the great bull market for stocks on the New York Stock Exchange. It soon grew into the greatest delirium of frenzied finance in the history of the whole world. Not hundreds of millions but billions and billions of money were drawn from every quarter of the Nation into that whirlpool of insane speculation. While this orgy of crooked, if not corrupt, speculation was at its height, far-seeing and shrewd and selfish international bankers in New York City unloaded upon a trusting and credulous American public, not hundreds of millions but literally billions and billions of dollars of foreign industrial securities and of foreign government bonds which are to-day practically worthless.

Mr. Speaker, it is no answer for the President and for his administration to say that they are in no way responsible for that wild and wicked period of speculation. Even Mr. Mellon looked down with what the public thought was a smile of benediction upon what he pretended to believe was the evidence of the strength and the permanency of Republican prosperity. Also the President benignantly and cheerfully seemed to regard that era of false values and of foolish gambling as the fulfillment of his campaign prediction that Republican policies would abolish poverty from America and would put a chicken in every pot, an automobile into every garage, and prosperity into every pocket in America.

Then, Mr. Speaker, when the craze and delirium of insane speculation had gone many times beyond the limit of danger, and when finally, on October 29, 1929, the market broke and the panic commenced and the rout started and pandemonium broke forth among the brokers and bankers of New York City, then the President and Mr. Mellon stood speechless and helpless as their frail house of cards fell crashing and crumbling about them. Since then Mr. Mellon, formerly proclaimed by many of his admirers as the greatest Secretary of the Treasury since Alexander Hamilton, has resigned his portfolio and retreated to the calm and peaceful precincts of the American Embassy in London. From that cool retreat he can send out his colorless utterances, formerly regarded as an oracle of wisdom and no longer seriously heeded. Several universities have conferred upon Mr. Mellon the degree of "doctor of laws." Of course, these universities ought to have a degree called "doctor of dollars." The presidents of these universities in conferring these degrees upon Mr. Mellon must have kept their tongues stuck into their cheeks as they passed out a sheepskin proclaiming him so learned and so profound as to be publicly proclaimed a wise man in all fields of learning. The conferring of such degrees under such circumstances actually discredits them. They ought to have another degree called "D. G. M.," signifying "do give money."

But Mr. Hoover could not get away. He is obliged to stick to his job and try to manipulate the postmasters and United States attorneys and United States marshals, appointed by him all over the Nation, so as to insure his renomination. Surely he does not hope for reelection, and he would not feel the hurt of defeat at the election in November. But he would feel disgraced if his party did not renominate him in Chicago. Hence all the little postmasters and other Federal appointees in every section of the country, and especially in the South, have been lined up for the last year in the solid ranks of Hoover delegates, pledged to put him over once more as the leader who can not lead, as the doctor who has no medicine, as the engineer who has no plans, as the financier who wrecks his own bank, as the miracle man who works a magic of destruction in less than one year of administration which is unparalleled for woe and misery and failure in all the history of the Nation.

STOP GAMBLING IN PEOPLE'S PROPERTY

Every fair and thoughtful person must admit that the people of America will never be able to pay their debts, including the Government's debts, aggregating about $150,-000,000,000, unless the prices of commodities, and especially of farm commodities, are increased. This result can be brought about not by waiting for the slow processes of nature and of starvation to exhaust the present stores of cotton and grain and other supplies which labor has built up. Organized society, by the direct and conscious control of money as the medium of exchange, and as the measure of value, can plan and deliberately bring about the rise in such prices. Humanity, if it will think and cooperate, is not damned to endure these successive cycles of suffering, sorrow, and suicide, but they may be averted by thoughtful governmental action. To stabilize prices at the present level would be criminal. Prices must be raised to the average level of 1922 to 1929 and then and there must be stabilized. The statistics show that the price level from 1922 to 1929 registers about 100 on the index table of 550 wholesale commodities.

Stabilization is essential to civilization. These successive and certain fluctuations in prices constitute the gambler's heaven. If prices are stabilized, then the last reasonable pretext for the perpetuation of stock exchanges and produce exchanges will cease. It is claimed that under present conditions manufacturers and dealers must be able to hedge against future fluctuations in prices. After stabilization of prices there will be no such certain fluctuations, and, therefore, the only excuse for the exchanges will be removed. The revelations now being made by operators on the New York Stock Exchange convince even the partisans of short selling that the American public has been terribly imposed upon by the big monopolists in New York. They have brought about corners; they have staged conditions; they have rigged and fixed the market; they have created false demands and false supplies, and have fleeced the credulous public on both sides. When the prices were rising they sold to the public their worthless securities. When the prices were falling they bought from the public the securities they knew to be valuable. They have bled white the public under both states of speculation, and yet some of the public still cling to the idea of preserving these huge gambling institutions.

We abolished the Louisiana lottery because it was a gambling game. All the States have laws against most forms of gambling. But when poor and ignorant people gather around a table and throw their dice or play their cards for stakes, whether large or small, nobody is hurt but the losing gambler. But when the dice and cards are replaced by the cotton produced by the labor of millions of our people, by the corn and wheat and meat and mineral products and lumber products brought into marketable shape by man's labor, then the gamblers are playing with the very lifeblood of the people themselves.

To send an ignorant negro to the chain gang for gambling with dice behind the barn when the stakes are only 10 or 15 cents, and to legalize and to tolerate the gambling of the Wall Street speculators, who are dealing with the labor and the fruits of the labor of the masses of the people of this Nation is unconscionable, unjustifiable; and the American people will not much longer endure the injustice. The thing to do is to put them all in the same class and to measure the professional gambler and racketeer by the same yardstick that we should, and must, and will apply to the speculator in the products of human toil.

These international investment bankers have sold billions of worthless stocks and of worthless foreign bonds to the American public. On these transactions they made their enormous commissions. They sucked into the whirlpool of New York speculation about $7,000,000,000 belonging to the American people. When their own bubble burst through excessive inflation they came running to Congress demanding that Congress set up the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to save them from their own folly. They virtually sandbagged Congress into passing this Reconstruction Finance Corporation law by threatening to commit financial and economic sabotage unless we did pass it. They told us that the insurance companies would collapse, and the railroads would stop running their trains, and the banks would close, and the whole country would be paralyzed unless we did their bidding.

Now that they have got their $2,000,000,000 corporation for their own accommodation they say, "Let the public be damned, and let the people whistle for bread until it suits our good pleasure to put them back to work at our own prices." These same interests and many of these same individuals were not satisfied with the highest Republican tariff ever enacted into law up to 1922, and came before Congress, controlled by the Republican majority, and doped that majority with a double dose of lies and made it believe that American industry could not continue to operate under the rates of the 1922 tariff and that the same must be raised.

My office is just across the hall from the Ways and Means Committee room, and for about six months the room was not large enough to hold the representatives of big business, and it overflowed into the hallway; and as I labored my way through the crowds in the hallway, I caught their arguments in favor of boosting the tariff, in some cases, 500 per cent. That tariff revision helped to bring on the "bull market," which completed the ruin of business.

BIG GAMBLERS ARE PUBLIC ENEMIES

Speculation is the curse of American business. It brings "Black Fridays," panics, depressions, stagnation, bankruptcies, blasted hopes, blighted lives, and suicides. The only hope for steady stabilized prosperity is to stop speculation. Speculators can not live where prices are reasonably uniform. Sudden fluctuation up or down is the speculator's heaven. Speculation adds no value. It creates no cotton, or corn, or wheat, or meat, or steel, or lumber, or anything. It toys and trifles with wealth created by the labor of others. In a certain sense all buying and selling is speculative. But I mean mere marginal, optional purchases, with no intention to take and use the property. Such professional speculator merely intends to reap an unearned profit by the rise or fall in values, and thus he hopes to gain by the misfortunes either of those whose labor produced the commodity speculated in or the misfortunes of the consumers whose labor must buy these things. Thus the professional speculator is the economic enemy of both the producer and consumer.

The marginal optional speculator is a mere gambler. But his gambling is a thousand times worse than the gambling with cards, dice, horse racing, cockfighting, or roulette wheels. A few negroes throwing dice harm no one but themselves. So it is with poker players and those who visit the little Monte Carlos all over the country. There is some mental exhilaration in watching a horse race or chicken fight. Betting on the result is bad, but merely personal. So with betting on football and baseball games. It is personally demoralizing but is not an economic ill. It does not hurt nor destroy business. But professional marginal speculation in the things that men and women and children must have to eat and wear and use in their work and homes and schools hurts and harms the whole social and economic life. Such speculation demoralizes, deranges, and distracts the normal business life of millions of honest, patriotic, Godfearing toilers in field and shop, in factory and store, on trains and trucks, in homes and schools, in lodges and churches.

Why do we tolerate that which creates nothing but calamity, brings nothing but bankruptcies, helps nothing but home wrecking, serves nothing but suicide, deals nothing but death?

MELLON NOT A PROPHET BUT A PROFITEER

I notice that Mr. Mellon, now our ambassador to the British Government, in his introductory speech to the British people, refers to the stagnant condition of business affairs throughout the world and including especially the United States, and says that business activity rises and falls in "cycles"; and from his remarks, as well as from his previous record in office and in private life, one is forced to conclude that he accepts these "cycles" as inevitable. He has never suggested any remedy whereby to prevent the excess of speculation constituting the peak of so-called prosperity, and the very depth of disaster and calamity constituting the trough of depression. Therefore we are bound to conclude that Mr. Mellon thinks and believes that these successive periods of prosperity and of adversity, these cycles in business whereby at one time we are busy and contented and happy and at another time, and very shortly thereafter, we are unemployed and miserable, and ofttimes starving, are something that man can not prevent nor remedy. Evidently Mr. Mellon regards them as a fixed order of nature, as an inexorable and inevitable incident to civilization.

While Mr. Mellon has had a long and prosperous life, is one of the very wealthiest men in the whole world, and has for about 12 years held the position of Secretary of the Treasury, I do not believe that any fair student will assert that Mr. Mellon is great intellectually or spiritually. He has been a great money maker as an individual, and he has administered the affairs of the Treasury with efficiency. But Mr. Mellon is not a great economist, he is not a great student of history, he has never indicated the slightest philosophic turn of mind, he has never shown any breadth of statesmanship, nor any vision of leadership. However, large numbers of our people have been disposed to attribute to Mr. Mellon something like superhuman vision and to feel that his approval is the last word in wisdom.

Mr. Mellon's attitude toward the financial and business world is purely that of a great business man. This means that his view is acutely and definitely individualistic. He studies problems from the point of view of how the individual can make money out of the situation. He has found by observation during his long life that the shrewd business man can make money during a period of prosperity as well as during a period of depression and general public disaster. He finds that the shrewd business man can sell his watered stocks to a credulous public during prosperity and unload a large part of the capital stock of business concerns on the masses of the people and yet retain a control of the corporation in the hands of a few individuals.

THE "CYCLE SYSTEM" IS THE "GAMBLER'S HEAVEN"

In the next place he has observed that, during a period of depression, those individuals and corporations that have the cash can buy property for much less than its actual value and sometimes for 10 or 20 per cent of what the property cost the stockholders during prosperity. This same physical property is held by the shrewd business individual, such as Mr. Mellon, until depression passes and good times return and then is capitalized at many times its cash cost to the new owners, and this same stock again sold to the credulous public.

In other words, according to the "cycle" theory of civilization advocated by Mr. Mellon, you pick the goose bare during hard times and then let some feathers grow, and in good times sell the feathers for more than the goose is worth, and then, when the "cycle" of calamity returns, you buy back goose, feathers and all, for many times less than what the feathers alone were sold for to the public. Naturally Mr. Mellon believes in this order of business, in this successive picking of the goose, and in this successive concentration of the fat of the land in the hands of the shrewd and grasping men for whom he is the spokesman.

With reference to these diseases of society, these afflictions of civilization, these economic disturbances, now called "cycles" by Mr. Mellon, his position is the same as that of many medical doctors hundreds of years ago. When the plagues visited the peoples of the earth and swept away human beings by the millions, most of the medical men said it was a visitation of Providence and could not be averted. So for a long time it was with smallpox, and most of the doctors believed that the successive "cycles" of smallpox infection would continue forever; and so it was with the almost annual and certainly the periodic coming of yellow fever. Most of the doctors did not understand it and therefore said it could not be helped. But a few medical men, with true scientific spirit and enough faith in Providence to believe that God does not intend that His children shall always suffer, tackled the problems of the plagues, assaulted the enemy of smallpox, charged upon the citadel of yellow fever, and to-day these afflictions to human beings have well-nigh disappeared from the face of the earth.

LET US EDUCATE "DOCTOR" MELLON

It would be well for Mr. Mellon to study something of the history of medicine. It would be well for him to study something of the history of civilization. It would be well for him to study something of the history of business, and especially of the history of money. Of course, it may seem presumption on my part to make those suggestions to Mr. Mellon. It may be said that since he is worth his hundreds of millions, and since I am almost a bankrupt—due to this disaster—that I ought to sit in silence and in submission and accept his dictum as to what order should be in the world of finance. But I do not agree.

The great medical discoveries have not been made by those practicing physicians that made fortunes dealing with human diseases. Pasteur, Koch, Ehrlich, Walter Reed, Goldberger, Noguchi, these pioneers in medical science, these victors over disease, these great benefactors of humanity, were not rich men but on the contrary were poor men. They did not parade themselves as money makers in their profession. On the contrary, they pursued the humble, inconspicuous way of tracing down the sources of diseases and thus learning to control diseases.

It does not take a rich man to understand the science of political economy: The very founder of that science, Adam Smith, was a poor student. Every man that has contributed to the advancement of knowledge concerning the study of economics has been a poor man. The men who understand most about the philosophy of finance are poor men. They have not devoted their talents to making fortunes at the expense of their fellow mortals. They have given their time and strength, and life itself, to promoting knowledge that will contribute to the diffusion of wealth and of happiness.

If Mr. Mellon had devoted his mental powers to the mastery of the broad subject of economics, he would not have had time to conserve and to accumulate the mighty fortune which is his. I honor him for his success, but I honor more the men who have been successful in the unselfish enterprises of promoting the well-being of all men.

I am saying these things to call attention to the fact that the advice of Mr. Mellon is not entitled to be accepted as gospel, nor is his opinion the last word of wisdom in the field of economics.

I believe if some members of the Federal Reserve Board could and would tell us all they know about that "big bull market" of 1929, Mr. Mellon would not appear the wise and unselfish patriot some sincere but misguided people think him to be.

Stop, look, and listen! Danger signal ahead!

I respectfully call to the attention of the Congress and the country the following language from a letter recently sent out under date of April 26 by Prof. Irving Fisher, head of the department of economics of Yale University, which is located at New Haven, Conn., in the very center of the most conservative influences in the Nation.

As I see it, the country is now hovering "on the brink." It can be saved by any measures which will bring reflation and stabilization, but care should be taken to select the best measures. The Goldsborough bill, now unanimously recommended by the Committee on Banking and Currency, represents an essential step. The Steagall bill for guaranteeing bank deposits, likewise recommended, is, I believe, another important emergency measure.

When a man like Doctor Fisher takes responsibility for the statement that this Nation is hovering "on the brink" but can be saved by measures bringing inflation of currency and credit, and subsequent stabilization, then it is for thoughtful men everywhere to give serious consideration to the enactment of the legislation favored by him.

WHY IS THE PARASITIC SPECULATOR RICHEST MAN OF ALL?

A thoughtful and observant friend of mine wrote me on November 2, 1931, commenting upon news items as to estates left by deceased business men reported in the New York Times of October 31, 1931, and I take this extract from his

In reading the New York Times last night I was struck by the comparisons of the values of the estates shown by the inclosed clipping. The vocations and values of the estates (omitting the hundreds) are as follows:

Coconut manufacturer	$1,370,000
Real estate	1,083,000
Stock broker	2, 794, 000
Lawyer	278,000
United States marshal	95,000
Cotton broker	4, 782, 000
Doctor	236,000
	CH 43 0 2 4 1 4

Ine above are rich men, of course, but neither the manufacturer who built up a great business nor the veteran real-estate dealer combined had as much as the stock broker. The lawyer, the United States marshal, and the doctor had small estates, while the cotton broker left as much as all the others put together, omitting the stock broker.

A CONSERVATIVE SEES THE LIGHT

Dr. Albert Shaw, editor of that old New York journal, the Review of Reviews, in the May issue says:

A sound and coordinated national credit system would have supported these local banks in extending farm loans at greatly reduced rates of interest. But while many billions of bank reduced rates of interest. But while many billions of bank credit were being used to stimulate frenzied speculation on the stock exchanges and in the commodity markets the farm situation was going from bad to worse, and local banks were beginning to fall by the thousands. What financier, arriving from Mars and scanning conditions with an impartial eye from Japan to Turkey and from Rumania and Patagonia to Saskatchewan, could have failed to say that our American system of credit, banking, and currency was in fact the very worst on this so-called planet?

ONLY CHEAP MONEY CAN BRING ABOUT HIGH PRICES

But all the "farm relief" that we are reading about does not emancipate the farmer from any part of his burden of indebtedness. It does not reduce his obligations in proportion to his ability to pay. Nothing can relieve him except higher prices for what he has to sell. Many western farmers incurred their present mortgage debts at a time when they were getting $2 a bushel for wheat and excellent prices for cattle and hogs.

MODERATE INFLATION BETTER THAN OUR PRESENT DESTRUCTIVE DEFLA-TION-SACRIFICE OF PROPERTY FOR DEBTS

Even more serious than the cheapening of food and clothing has been the total failure of our credit system to support property values in the frantic competition of property of all kinds as it is now thrown upon the market. We have been engaged in a suicidal scramble for the acquisition of dollars.

Doctor Shaw continues:

"BONUS MONEY" WOULD BRING "MODERATE INFLATION" AND PROVE A BLESSING—DEFLATION WORSE THAN INFLATION

But our conservative financiers should not be unduly indignant But our conservative financiers should not be unduly indignant at the followers of Mr. Patman. They, themselves, have utterly failed to make the dollar behave in a reasonable and consistent way. Prof. Irving Fisher's remedies may not be wholly acceptable, but his diagnosis is not to be rejected. A unified banking system and a more far-seeing policy on the part of the Federal reserve authorities could have saved us from the evils of extreme inflation and could also have saved us from the worse horrors of a shamefully unchecked deflation. Banks are chartered by the Federal Government and by the States. Official bank inspection gives to the ordinary depositor a moral guaranty of solvency and safety. Bank failures such as we have witnessed can but imply a rotten system that is a disgrace alike to the Nation and to the States. We ought to have a banking system that would justify the full guaranty of all deposits. guaranty of all deposits guaranty of all deposits.

Money placed in banks that are chartered and inspected by Government authority should be as safe as money deposited in the Postal Savings Bank System. Mr. Patman might truthfully argue that the volume of his proposed inflation would not equal in amount the volume of currency and liquid assets hidden by frightened citizens under mattresses or in safe-deposit boxes, and hoarded by banks that are afraid to exercise their normal functions. Until our finenciers whether holding national and State. tions. Until our financiers, whether holding national and State offices or engaged in banking and similar pursuits, will concentrate on this one problem and solve it, they may expect increasing support for palliatives such as are proposed by Congressmen from the Southwest. There is much more excuse for green-back inflation. to-day than there was for the free-silver delusion that took possession of the Democratic Party in 1896, and threatened to sweep the country in the Bryan-McKinley campaign.

Here is the root of our trouble. We must uproot our dishonest money system:

(By Clarence Poe, president the Progressive Farmer-Ruralist Co.)

Business men suffer equally with farmers: And not only is it impossible for agriculture to recover without either increased com-possible for agriculture to recover without either increased commodity prices or deflated debts, but the same thing is true of all business. From no farm leader, from no spokesman of agrarian opinion, has Congress had any warning more emphatic or clear-cut than this voiced by the ablest organ of American business the Business Week, of New York City:

"The only remaining road to recovery for ourselves and the world is by concerted and courageous action, through governments and central banks, to raise the commodity price level and reduce the value of gold to the level at which it was when the bulk of the world's public and private debt burdens were contracted. Otherwise universal bankruptcy, default, and repudiations are unavoidable."

otherwise universal bankruptcy, default, and repudiations are unavoidable."

The fundamental dishonesty and immorality of our present money system: If "universal bankruptcy, default, and repudiation" were necessary as a result of following rigid rules of honesty and fair dealing, that would be one thing. But when all this disaster is the result rather of a fundamentally immoral and dishonest standard of values (or absence of standards), the situation becomes entirely different. When we reflect that all debts must really be paid in commodities, and when we find the financial committee of the League of Nations reporting that whereas in 1928 it took 100 units of commodities to pay a debt of 100 gold units, to-day it requires 170 units of commodities, we must agree that this is not only "the crux of the crisis," but presents a ghastly and flagrant perversion of essential morality. As C. V. Gregory says: "If Congress had passed a law in 1926 requiring every debtor to pay back $1.50 for every $1 he had borrowed, besides interest, we would have had a revolution. Yet that is what deflation has done."

What can Congress do about the situation? If the commodity price level of 1920–1930 can be restored and thereafter steadily maintained wholly by Federal reserve action, good and well. But millions believe that it is going to be necessary to provide that hereafter the quantity of gold in our standard dollar shall be increased or decreased so as to equal the average 1920-1930 purchasing power of a dollar. This could be done by storing gold bullion in the United States Treasury and issuing not coin but certificates against it, just as is now done with our silver certificates.

After the tragic experiences America has just been through, all enterprises will lag, all business will halt, all enterprise will be frightened, all development will be checked if every man on the farms and in business must make future plans with no assurance as to whether the dollar at pay time will be worth 50 cents, $1, $1.50, or $2 in commodity values. On the contrary, if as a result of this depression Congress will for all future time provide two such measures as are now under consideration: (1) Government guaranty of bank deposits, and (2) a stable currency system based on average 1920-1930 commodity prices—then both American agriculture and American business can at once go forward to an assured and permanent prosperity. an assured and permanent prosperity.

WHAT SHALL WE DO WITH THE "ROBBER DOLLAR"?

Dr. Clarence Poe, editor of Progressive Farmer, of North Carolina, a paper I have read for over 20 years, in his editorial of October 1, 1931, says:

VALUE OF A DOLLAR IN PURCHASING POWER (IN CENTS) AS COMPARED WITH PRE-WAR (1909-1914) PURCHASING POWER OF A DOLLAR

From these indisputable figures surely anyone can see the truth of a statement we have often repeated in recent months, as follows:

During every day from January, 1910, to this good hour in 1931 there has been no change in our standards of height or weight or quantity. A yard has always been 36 inches, no more and no less. A pound has always been 16 ounces, no more and no less. A gallon has always been 8 pluts, no more and no less. But in this brief period our measurement of value in buying and selling has varied 10, 25, 50 per cent, and even more than 100 per cent when we compare 1920 money values with present money values. Such a condition is as demoralizing as if a yardstick might be anywhere from 18 to 36 inches in length, varying by days, months, and years—fully as demoralizing and a thousandfold more disastrous.

WHAT ARE THE REMEDIES?

And now what shall we do about it all?

And now what shall we do about it all?

According to the judgment of many of our best informed authorities two things are necessary. First, drastic action should be taken at once by the great nations and banking powers that will drive prices as early as possible to the average level of 1920-1930. Second, the value of a dollar should be stabilized at that level. And perhaps the best general plan for stabilizing the dollar is that of Tinnes and Irving Fisher, which could be worked out substantially as follows:

1. Let the standard American dollar at any time contain just enough gold to represent the average purchasing power of $1 in the years 1920-1930.

2. These dollars containing these varying quantities of gold in the years 1920-1930.

2. These dollars containing these varying quantities of gold need not be actually distributed by the Government (there is in fact little actual gold coin in circulation now; most people hardly see gold money once a year) but the Government would at all times hold enough gold bullion in the Treasury to redeem its outstanding "Treasury certificate" dollars based on these 1920-1930 values—precisely as our $1, $5, $10, and $20 "silver certificates" or so-called "paper money" is now issued.

By this method we should have indeed a stable money system—
"a perfect and a just measure" in values; a standard fair alike to debtors and creditors, and seeking to do equal and exact justice between them. It is high time that our agricultural, political, and moral leaders in America unite in a demand for such a policy both as a moral and economic necessity.

both as a moral and economic necessity.

SPECULATION RUINED THE BANKS—BANK FAILURES RUINED THE COUNTRY—MONEY INFLATION WILL RESTORE THE COUNTRY

I quote from Weekly Business Review of Alexander Ham-

The length and the severity of the depression have been due in no small measure to the ill-functioning of the banking system. Last year no less than $1.691,510,000 of depositors' funds were withdrawn from circulation by bank suspensions.

First half 1931. 2 Latest monthly report. The magnitude of this collapse may be seen by a comparison with former years. From 1921 to 1929, inclusive, the deposits of closed banks amounted to $1,721,673,000. The failures of the single year 1931 were within $30,000,000 of the total failures of this 9-year period. In 1930 the deposits of suspended banks amounted to $864,715,000, so that the failures of 1930 and 1931 combined, totaling $2,556,225,000, were 48.4 per cent greater than the failures of the preceding nine years. the preceding nine years.

If the Reconstruction Finance Corporation should accomplish nothing else, its contribution to halting the trend of suspensions would be ample justification for its existence. Given a continuation of the trend in evidence since the corporation commenced functioning and the Glass-Steagall Act became operative, the ground is being prepared for solid improvement in the future.

ground is being prepared for solid improvement in the future. But these are emergency measures devised to remedy a serious condition. To prevent a recurrence of the condition is a problem which demands the utmost effort of banking and legislative leadership. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation is a two and one-half billion dollar organization, with $500,000,000 of Government subscribed capital and authority to issue $2,000,000,000 of bonds. Its total authorized stock, capital and bonds, barely exceed the net total of bank depositors' funds which have been made unavailable during the last two years. In the meanwhile Great Britain and Canada have been coping with a depression, prolonged and severe, but not made worse by the freezing of depositors' current balances but not made worse by the freezing of depositors' current balances and savings.

A READING, THINKING FARMER WRITES

AROLIAN HILL FARM, St. Matthews, S. C., April 15, 1932.

Hon. JOHN J. McSWAIN,

AROLIAN HILL FARM,

St. Matthews, S. C., April 15, 1932.

Hon. John J. McSwain,

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Dear Mr. McSwain: I greatly enjoyed reading your speech made April 11, 1932, on Money Is the Blood Stream of Business. Many causes contribute to bringing about the terrible crisis in which we find ourselves, but I believe the "robber tariff" and our "robber dollar" are the main foundation stones upon which it rests. Our money system is wrong. The gold standard is crushing the life out of the people. There is not enough money in circulation. It can be cornered too easily. Our dollar buys too much of the products of agriculture. Land has practically lost its value. The great mass of the people are in debt. Many are hopelessly in debt. The country is bankrupt. If one buys "our money" with corn or cotton or oats or wheat or land with which to pay a debt of several years' standing, he pays the debt, not once nor twice, but three times or four times or five times. It can not be done. And yet the law says you must pay. Is it right? Is it just? Money should be the efficient, faithful, honest "servant" of the people—not a cruel, dishonest, tyrannical "master." Do you note how the "big boys," the big bankers, the capitalists, guard the gold standard? How they watch the doings of Congress? Our economic and financial system has enslaved a free people.

I was glad to read the paragraphs you quoted from an editorial in the Washington Post. "The dollar increases in value every day while everything else loses some of its relative worth," says the editor of the Post. He seems to be seeing the light. "Congress has the power to coin money and regulate the value thereof." is capitalism blind and deaf? Mr. McSwain, I believe Senator Wheeler's bill to remonetize silver would raise commodity prices, put value into land, put buying power into China and into India, revive international trade, and bring prosperity once more to the world. "Iron debts" can not be paid with "robber dollars." Mark this! Prosperity wi

FARM-MARKETING PROGRAM

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend in the RECORD my own remarks which I made before the Committee on Agriculture of the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? There was no objection.

STATEMENT OF HON, HATTON W. SUMNERS BEFORE THE HOUSE COM-MITTEE ON AGRICULTURE MAY 11, 1932

Mr. SUMNESS. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee we require, in our committee, that those who come before us shall identify themselves with the subject under consideration.

Identify themselves with the subject under consideration.

I grew up way back in the hills of Tennessee. In the early nineties when I was a boy my family and my neighbors lost in in that panic all they had. I had read in one of my father's books there is no result without a corresponding antecedent adequate cause. My investigation had convinced me that is true. I wanted to know the cause and thus I became interested in the economic problems of agriculture. I soon discovered there is no real conflict between agriculture, its interest, and any other legitimate business. mate business.

PRESENT CONDITION RESULT OF VIOLATED NATURAL LAW

This condition that we are in now has not just happened. There has been somewhere a very serious violation of the natural laws which govern economic and political government. There can not be any question about it. It is remarkable that as a people we do not recognize that fact and seek the basic cause for our condition. If any of you gentlemen before an audience of your constituents were to discuss the laws of God that govern governments, political and economic, any doctor present would probably think you were trying to preach a sermon; a farmer would wonder where you got that out of the Bible. And yet that doctor would know if he would stop to think that he had gone to school for years and years to learn the laws of nature, the laws of God, that govern in the field of his activity, and so on, with the rest of us.

learn the laws of nature, the laws of God, that govern in the neid of his activity, and so on, with the rest of us.

I might have broken away from my interest in agriculture when I came to be a lawyer—at least I thought I was a lawyer, but shortly after I began the practice I was retained by Farm and Ranch, a great agricultural paper of the Southwest, owned then by one of the greatest men the country ever has known, Col. Frank P. Holland. I became, by reason of that connection, the lawyer for the agricultural interests in our section. That was when I was a very young man. when I was a very young man.

AGRICULTURE THE BASIC BUSINESS

Col. R. J. Kleberg, by the way, another one of the great men Texas has produced, the father of a member of your committee, was chosen about that time as the head of an organization having to do with the general interests of Texas. Through Colonel Holland, Mr. Kleberg consulted me and I persuaded him to have his organization, made up of all the country and city interests in Texas, recognize that agriculture is the basic business in our State.

I worked with that organization in an advisory capacity. In 1913 I was elected to Congress. In 1914 I discussed in the House the City Man's Interest in the Economic Problems of Agriculture. From that angle I have examined these problems in America and in Europe; my interest has never waned. From that angle, as agriculture is related to our economic organization and our present difficulties, I want to discuss some of the problems of agriculture, or rather I want to discuss our economic difficulties and the fundamental relationship of agriculture's difficulties to them.

NECESSARY TO RECUR TO FUNDAMENTAL PRINCIPLES

The wisest thing that has come to us from the period of con-

The wisest thing that has come to us from the period of constitutional construction in America came from the deliberations of the Virginia convention. It was about to this effect, that there can be no liberty—and also enumerating a number of other things—except by frequent recurrence to fundamental principles. There is no greater truth than that.

The thing that stands out clearest in that period, in my judgment, is their recognition of that basic fact. When we come to look at the problems that you and I have to deal with now, and examine them fundamentally, we find, as compared with other times, that the first important change which we must take into consideration came with the application of steam and electricity to human activities. This application wrought a complete economic revolution and gave to us many governmental problems which we must deal with largely upon the responsibility of our own judgment.

By reason of the cheapness and rapidity of transportation resulting from this application and the devolpment of power factories, the manufacturing interests, theretofore distributed through the country as a part of the rural life, were concentrated in great industrial centers. The shoe cobbler and the old family loom moved out of the country and moved into the great cities, and the selling end as well as the producing end of business there became organized.

They were able to write into their selling price the cost of production plus a profit, whatever the cost of production might be.

AGRICULTURE SELLS TO HIGHEST BIDDER

Agriculture was not able, for reasons which you gentlemen well understand, to make that progress. It was left behind. It remained in its relationship to other businesses as a sort of inexhaustible commissary to feed business, and was not recognized, either economically or under the laws, as a business out of which either economically of under the laws, as a business out of which people have a right to make money for themselves.

One of the most interesting facts I have run across in the study of the economic difficulties of agriculture is that the farmers themselves, at a time when they were in great majority, permitted that sort of a situation to develop and accepted for themselves that station among the businesses of the country. By consent, apparently, agriculture became the nurse cow to industry.

A thing equally as remarkable is that industry seems to consider itself not concerned as to how much milk it takes or how little feed its nurse cow gets. It never seems to have entered the mind of us city people that it is possible to feed the old cow too little or to milk her too much, and thereby bring hurt to ourselves. We are soon to learn that fact. Some of the smartest of city people have learned it. The dumbest of our captains of industry apparently never will. Some of the biggest of them, outside of their own business, are the dumbest.

PROTECTIVE TARIFF A BOUNTY-AGRICULTURE NO PARTICIPATION OTHER THAN IN PAYING THE BURDENS

Among the important things that happened as a part of this revolution was the fact that industry was able to overbid agriculture for many of the brightest boys and girls of the country, those best endowed for leadership among those people, because industry was able to write the amount of its bid into its commodity selling price. Agriculture, selling to the highest bidder, could not do that. I wish you would make a mental note of this as major proposition

Added to this disadvantage, which is more or less a fundamental disadvantage and tremendously difficult to deal with, is the fact that we early began to operate under a protective-tariff system, from the benefits of which surplus producing crops are excluded. That system provides for a bounty to be paid to the beneficiarles of the system. That is what it is for, to raise their beneficiarles of the system. That is what it is for, to raise their prices arbitrarily.

The purpose of it is to enable a part of the people, of whom generally speaking farmers are not a part, to have more than they otherwise would get. The place which these farmers hold in that scheme is to make the tariff system work by paying the tariff-boosted price out of their sales at nontariff-boosted prices. That is major proposition No. 2.

Under that general arrangement you see agriculture not only excluded from tariff benefits and paying tariff burdens, but generally at the end of the passing line, not only in regard to the tariff but in regard to freight rates, for instance, and other similar charges.

tariff but in regard to freight rates, for instance, and other similar charges.

When there is any increase in transportation rates, for instance, or any other charge, business people add those increases into their selling costs or production costs, and pass them on.

Whoever can make out a bill and say to you, "This is what I charge you for my services or my wares," is able to pass on these various costs. From one to the other they are passed until they get to such persons as those who produce wheat, corn, and cotton. There these passed-on charges are absorbed. They are passed no further, because these farmers sell to the highest bidder and in competition with the cheapest labor on earth. These farmers are at the end of the passing line.

AGRICULTURE AT END OF PASSING LINE

Now, gentlemen, may I ask this committee, in dealing with this question, to visualize the actual relationship of these producers of exportable surpluses, and observe that they do stand at the end of the passing line. Merchants, doctors, preachers, teachers, all of them, whoever they may be, who have had their living costs or their operation costs increased by any of the things that have happened in America, have undertaken to pass them on. They or their operation costs increased by any of the things that have happened in America, have undertaken to pass them on. They are not able to do it now.

The thing that has happened in this country, that is making those of us who are in the big cities go broke, is the fact that these farmers who have heretofore absorbed these costs, or increased prices, are not able to absorb them any more. That is what is the matter with us in the cities. We have paralyzed them. We will not pay them enough for what they raise to enable them to buy from us or pay their debts. Those business communities directly dependent upon these farmers can not pay their debts or buy. There is nobody to employ the skilled laborers. So we can not sell or work. Our factories and our people are idle. We are becoming paralyzed also. Larger cities directly dependent upon these cities in agricultural States can not sell. They are becoming paralyzed also. There is nothing remarkable about it; it is inevitable.

There is another thing or two that I want to bring to your attention. I am just sketching these things, because I want to submit myself to interrogation as quickly as I can.

I have never been able myself to understand a thing unless I could get it where I could look at it and see it as though I were looking at it with my eyes.

The only way I have ever been able at all to understand the economic organization of this country is to look at it as a living, functioning thing, operating under natural laws. If we can visualize the situation and get it clearly before our eyes so we can look at it functioning, we can have a fair notion of what this economic organization of ours is and what is the matter with it.

In the old days, when nearly everybody lived in the country and farmed primarily to feed and clothe their families from the products of their respective farms, each little community was an industrial organization.

But when the farmers began to produce to sell, after this change industrial organization.

But when the farmers began to produce to sell, after this change from the application of steam and electricity of which I have spoken, all businesses in a new sense became interdependent. The farmers' business became a part of every other business in a new sense. As that readjustment shaped up agriculture came to hold the position of the tap root to other businesses. I will not say the whole root structure, though in a sense shared by no other business that is true.

An examination will show clearly that it is the economic tap-root for all business and all vocations in this country, the source from whence most of the sap comes from. This is not a new relationship, but it has a new importance.

AGRICULTURE ROOT OF THE TREE

Those of us who are merchants or lawyers, and so forth, do not produce; we render an economic service and we are entitled to live; but we do not produce. That is an important fact to keep

A thing that those of us living in cities do not seem even now to comprehend—I mean we are not conscious of it—is the fact that farming is to our business, whatever we are or do, exactly as the root of a tree is a part of the tree to its topmost branch and as important to us as is the taproot of the tree to those branches of the tree out there which we can see. The recognition of that fact must find place, first place, in any effective scheme to revive ract must find place, first place, in any effective scheme to revive prosperity in this country.

We are not reviving prosperity by loaning money to those who can not pay their debts. We have got to get up circulation. We have plenty of everything, including money. It is the lack of circulation, and only that. The treatment should begin where the paralysis began. That is medical science. That is common sense. This trouble, this paralysis, began with these farmers. We have overbled them. They are prostrate. They can not buy. The paralysis has reached us. We can not buy. How can the idle get a job? idle get a job?

tidle get a job?

This paralysis would have happened sooner but for one fact. When we started on our migration from the Atlantic Ocean to the Pacific Ocean, we had before us not only a soil of great fertility but we had invented farm machinery which enabled us quickly to plunder the soil of its fertility.

We had railroads that carried great numbers of people quickly from exhausted to virgin soil. While we have been bleeding agriculture to support industry, it has been bleeding the soil. We are at the end of the bleeding process. We are at the end of the road now; we have reached the Pacific Ocean.

It is a new day in a sense. It is a new problem in a sense. Recurring to the figure of the tree, we have not realized that to stimulate the tree above the ground, we have been destroying the root structure necessary to sustain the tree.

There is another picture that helps me to visualize this thing. So far as I can see, the laws of nature are the same everywhere.

This economic organization of ours, made up of our interrelated industries, in the operation of its circulatory system is almost identical with the human body.

NOT A PANIC BUT PARALYSIS OF CIRCULATION

NOT A PANIC BUT PARALYSIS OF CIRCULATION

NOT A PANIC BUT PARALYSIS OF CIRCULATION

This thing that is the matter with us, gentlemen, is not a panic, it is not a depression; it is not something that nature is going to cure, because it is not a thing that has happened as a result of natural action. That is the most important single fact guiding us to the determination of a wise policy. It has happened as a result of an arbitrary thing. It has resulted in paralysis of the economic circulatory system of this country. If you just look about, you can see that there is plenty of everything. It is not circulating. The importance of that problem, the nature of that problem, presents itself to you who sit around this table exactly as though you were physicians—that is what you are—you are doctors called in to examine and treat this patient. It is perfectly absurd for us who have responsibility, who get together in this sick room where the patient is paralyzed, to talk about the laws of nature taking care of the patient and getting him well.

If this condition had happened from natural causes, you might depend upon natural law; but it has happened as a result of something arbitrarily done, and which is still being done. You would not bind around the taproot of that tree beyond the window something that would cut off circulation and when the leaves were withering go on your optimistic way saying the tree is going to be all right just around the corner. There is a difference between an optimist and an ordinary fool. When such conditions exist, it is perfectly ridiculous for us to say the thing is going to get well itself.

Mr. Fulmer. I regret very much, Mr. Sumners, I am not going to be able to listen to the remainder of your speech, because it is very interesting. But I have to leave at this time. I agree with you in your statement.

you in your statement.

NOT GOING TO CURE ITSELF

Mr. Sumners. I want to get this over, gentlemen, and I am not going to be partisan. It does not make any difference what we have believed or what we preach; it does not make any difference what notions we have had about it. We have the responsibility. We have to do something intelligent and remedial about it. This condition is not going to cure itself. It does not have a chance. We are going to have a terrible time in this country this winter if the right thing is not done.

Go out there and look at the country people. How are they going to buy the products of the factory from the proceeds of the sale of their wheat and their corn and cotton? It can not be done. They are the root of the tree of which the business of your people is a part. As certain as we live there is where our paralysis began. That is where the remedy must be applied.

We men who come from the cities can not imagine those who paralysis began. That is where the remedy must be applied.

We men who come from the cities can not imagine those who cultivate eighty-odd per cent of the cultivated acres of this country, those who produce exportable surpluses, being prosperous, selling at a fair price, and our people breaking in the cities, our people idle. We can not imagine it. It could not happen. Does that mean anything to us? It does if we have any practical

On the other hand, we can not imagine our people being prosperous in the cities and these farmers getting 15 cents for their cats, 40 cents for their wheat, and 5 cents a pound for their cotton. It can not be done. Does that mean anything? Does that not suggest the place to work, and the thing to do?

I do not care how much you loan the railroads or the banks, it will run off like water on a tin roof as long as the buying power of these farmers is paralyzed. It can not be done that way. God Almighty has fixed it, and that is the end of it.

You take the human bedy. You have got one part of the circulatory system that takes blood out and another that sends it back. The venous system takes it out and the arterial system puts it back.

back.

The prices of agricultural commodities is the arterial system, the only avenue through which you can put back the money paid for the wares of the cities so that these farmers may buy again. You can not get it back with 15-cent oats, 30-cent corn, 40-cent wheat, or 5-cent cotton. If you do not get it back they can not buy, and we can not sell to them. There is no other way to get already at the control of the control buy, and we can not sell to them. There is no other way to get circulation started.

I am talking to you as doctors, called in here in solemn council at the bedside of a prostrate patient.

Take a country like this with the bounty of God upon it; think of it, gentlemen. We have been pretty stuck on ourselves. Just because we can fly through the air faster than other generations have been able to travel, because we can press a button and get a light instead of having to skin a yearling and get the tallow for candles, we hold ourselves superior. We have been on a grand jazz. We have jazzed off into the jungles. We have made an awful mess of our opportunities. We have gone fast, but in the wrong direction. We are at the end of the road. With the bounty of God unprecedented, with a country smothered in an abundance of things for feeding people, yet people are starving.

That ought to take the conceit out of us and send us in penitent humility to our knees.

NOT A PARTISAN MATTER

I shall try to be as free from partisanship as I possibly can in discussing this matter. You may say the protective-tariff system is justified. I will not argue that before this committee. That is the Agricultural Committee, not the Ways and Means Committee. But nobody can controvert this fact, that when our people cross the ocean with their cotton or grain and sell it in competition with the cheapest labor on earth, they are compelled by the might of government, out of what they sell for, to pay a bounty to those gentlemen in our cities, wards of the Government, who operate under tariff protection. That is what the protective tariff system is for.

We proclaim in the White House and in the Halls of Congress that it is our purpose to give to American producers a boost, a bounty equal to the difference between the cost of production here and abroad. But what about these farmers? There is no corresponding benefit for them. The tariff can not work for them. Their movement is out from this country. Why not give to them a corresponding boost? Why not give back to them that which is taken from them arbitrarily by the might of government through the tariff so that they may cease to be paralyzed and may begin to buy again? Justice and common sense can have but one answer. I do not care if we have no interest whatever in these farmers, they are the root of the tree of which our people's business is a part. It is a matter of self-interest and of self-preservation for those of us who live in the cities to do plain, ordinary justice to these farmers. justice to these farmers.

What are we going to do about it? What would you do if you were a doctor, called in to see a patient who was lying prostrate and bled white, and the blood still being taken from him? What would you do—shoot him? That seems to be the notion of many people. Are we going to drive them in desperation from sound notions of government and make them red?

AGRICULTURE BLED WHITE CAN NOT BUY

Mr. Andresen. Give him a shot in the arm.

Mr. Sumners. If you were a physician and had any sense, you would reduce the outflow of blood and give him a blood transfusion, would you not? Is not that what anybody who has a bit of sense would do? First you would reduce the blood taking as much as you could. But we do not want to get into a tariff debate

Then you would give him a blood transfusion. That is what you would have to do. That is what we are going to have to do to agriculture, bled white. There is no use of anybody shying around it. You have got to do it, if these farmers are made able to buy the products of our factories and the doctors, merchants, bankers, and everybody up the line, are made able to buy. Suppose the arrangement were reversed and industry had to sell in competition with the cheapest labor in the world and was forced by an arbitrary arrangement of government to pay these farmers a bounty out of the proceeds of such sales; how long could industry stand up? Are not farmers made of the same flesh and blood and their business subject to the same natural economic laws as those which govern industry?

We have been hearing a lot of perfectly absurd talk about prosperity being "just around the corner." I will teil you what is just around the corner unless we remove the economic and governmental injustice which is imposed on these farmers, and give their buying power a chance to revive and thereby give our factories a chance to open up. It is the dole, and maybe worse. That is what is just around the corner.

FARMER SELLS IN COMPETITION WITH CHEAPEST LABOR ON EARTH AND PAYS BOUNTY

We will have to give back to these farmers arbitrarily that which we are taking from them arbitrarily. There is no use shying around that, either.

when you make a man by the might of Government give up a part of the 40 cents he has got for his wheat, selling it in competition with the cheapest labor on earth, and turn it over to a manufacturer so as to boost his price, that is an arbitrary thing. You must give it back to that man and do it arbitrarily. It is a matter of justice and of necessity. How can these farmers buy products of the factory unless you give back to them what is taken? If agriculture is prosperous it makes certain the prosperity of others. It is the root of the tree.

Our whole policy by which we drifted into a condition making necessary a reconstruction program demonstrates the poverty of our statesmanship. With assurance that we were moving in the right direction, that all would be well around the corner, we have jazzed off into the jungles. We are not yet headed in the right direction.

I appreciate your attention very much, Mr. Chairman and gen-the right direction.

I appreciate your attention very much, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen. Only the certainty of conviction that this is the only door through which we can with any reason hope to escape the grand smash is my reason for taking so much of your time and mine. Our apparent inability to comprehend our situation and its causes is my apology for repeating. I hope others than members of this committee may read what I am saying.

Mr. ADKINS. You have made a very interesting statement. I have dealt with this problem all my life. I started in as a cattle feeder at a dollar a day on a farm and made my living there all my life.

If have heard the very interesting statement here that agriculture has very largely arrived at its present condition because of the evolution of power. We have gone from a complete unit in manufacturing and producing all we needed for our individual farm uses to an industrial order when we sold our stuff and took in exchange what the other fellow processed, and then we have come along down, and that is largely responsible for the condition we find currelines in new. find ourselves in now.

Mr. SUMNERS. It is one of the causes.

Mr. ADKINS, I think every man on this committee—I know it is true with myself—as a matter of self-protection, when I was trying to make a living on the farm, looked into these other ques-

In the twenties we passed through just such a situation as this, when the condition you first explained, where the farm was a complete unit, was in full operation at that time.

complete unit, was in full operation at that time.

We passed through a condition where, for instance, corn was selling at 6½ cents a bushel and hogs at a dollar a hundred.

Mr. Nelson, Will you quote the years on that?

Mr. Adkins, That was in '23, '24, and '25. In 1824 cattle 4 or 5 years of age—I can give you the name of one man who fed the first cattle out there, D. Biltmore; I want to state this general proposition to you to see whether or not we are not up against the same game. From that time down to the present we have been up against the same game at intervals ever since our Republic started.

I want to point out the fact that a situation similar to the present situation existed at that time. Cattle 4 or 5 years old could be bought for $8 a head. One man out in our country bought 1,200 feeding cattle at that time for that price.

You can go over here to the library and get Henry Clay's speech and see where he made very largely the same kind of a speech that you have made this morning, in which he outlined the desperate situation that existed, where land went down from 40 and 50 to 7.8 and 10. 7. 8. and 10.

He said at that time, on March 4, 1824, before the House, that He said at that time, on March 4, 1824, before the House, that our people were not less industrious than they had always been, our land was no less fertile, we were producing bounteous crops, the sun was shining, and there was plenty of rain, and yet we were languishing in the direst poverty.

That was at a time when the very same sort of condition existed which you outlined, and it existed at the beginning of our country, when it was in full operation.

From 1837 on down, at various intervals down to the present time, this same sort of a situation has prevalled. We find that the people in the cities, the people you represent here, were in the same bad condition.

the people in the cities, the people you represent here, were in the same bad condition.

In 1892, 1893, 1894, 1895, and 1896 we passed through the very same sort of a condition, carrying a big debt, and we could get no relief. We could not pay our debts; we got no relief; we could not pay expenses. Whenever men got to work they were sleeping in barns. But our problem was solved and we went along for a considerable time again.

Now, we are up against the same kind of a proposition we have been up against at intervals ever since the Republic started, and the same situation prevails.

Maybe you have lived long enough to have lived through three of these situations, like I have.

I remember the old clothes we wore in the seventies, and then again in the nineties, and then in this situation.

A very serious question is presented to this committee now. I do not care whether a man is a Democrat or a Republican. I do not believe there is any man on this committee but who would like if he could, to suggest some way out of it. But we run up against the same proposition that these other fellows did in times gone by.

That is the picture I have, and I expect some of the rest of us are thinking of conditions just like this that we passed through

NOT NECESSARY DISASTER BE REPEATED

Mr. Sumners. I would like, if possible, to help save my country from the wreck and ruin of such periods.

Mr. Adkins. We are all of the same opinion. Let me ask you a practical question,

Mr. SUMNERS. Make it a question, please.

Mr. ADKINS. Here is this bill we have before us now, with a great demand for a reduced cost of government, and to reduce taxes, and so forth.

taxes, and so forth.

Do you believe, as a practical proposition, Mr. Sumners—and that is what we have got to get down to—that it will be possible to get such a law on the statute books and get it operating? Is that your honest opinion, that you could do that?

Mr. SUMNERS. It depends on whether the Members of Congress have the notion that because bad conditions have obtained in the past and obtain now they are inevitable, and we have to sit still and see them through.

Mr. ANNING Do way believe any considerable amount of this

Mr. ADKINS. Do you believe any considerable amount of this money would come back to the farmer?

Mr. Sumners. I do not know what bill you have your hand on

Mr. ADKINS. I refer to the debenture idea.

Mr. SUMNERS. Why, sure. I not only think it is feasible under the circumstances, but I am certain we have the choice between something of that sort and the big crash. That is my judgment.

Mr. ADKINS. We are in the big crash. That is my judgment.
Mr. ADKINS. We are in the big crash now.
Mr. SUMNERS. When we trace radical policies of government back to their sources we discover that almost without exception such policies come from the failure of government to do what it ought to have done when it ought to have done it. We ought to be warned by that fact. I hope I may be pardoned for expecting it.

ought to be warned by that fact. I hope I may be pardoned for repeating it.

We are at war with an economic condition. My judgment is, and I have tried to make it as clear as I can, that we have got to give back to agriculture at least as much vitality, or sap, or blood, or whatever figure helps you most, as is being taken from these farmers by the might of government, and do it arbitrarily, because we are taking from them arbitrarily. Does that make it clear? They would still be at a disadvantage as compared with tariff-protected industries. That would merely be putting them back on a free-trade basis. Suppose industry was forced to sell in competition with the cheapest labor in the world and had to pay to the wheat farmers from 25 to 100 per cent above the world market, how long could industry stand up? Is it to be marveled at that at last agriculture has crashed?

How are you going to revive the buying power of farmers otherwise? We are going at the task wrong. There is a vast difference between what I propose and the plan embodied in the Reconstruction Finance Corporation loan.

PLACE TO BEGIN RELIEVING PARALYSIS IS WHERE IT BEGAN

Basically what the railroads of this country need is freight, not credit. Debts can not be paid by borrowing more money. We do not need anything in this country except circulation of what we have. The place to begin to relieve our paralysis is where it began. The remedy is not credit but restoration of that which is arbitrarily taken so farmers can buy. We have grossly exaggerated the efficacy of credit, gentlemen. Because credit has worked under some conditions, we think it has efficacy for every ill that the country and the world are heir to ill that the country and the world are heir to.

NO BOULEVARD LEADING OUT

We have the challenge of a great difficulty. There is no boule-vard to lead out from where we have foolishly wandered. Do not make any mistake about that. We are in the jungles. We are going to have to cut down the trees and go out over the stumps. It is foolish to reject a road because it is difficult and not free from danger. There are three questions. Do we have to move from where we are? The answer is yes. What roads most certainly lead in the right direction? And when will we be on our way?

be on our way?

Anything that you can do to revive agriculture, to help the buying power of farmers, would be like rain falling on the watersheds, making green those hillsides, starting the little springs, starting the little creeks, starting the little rivers, starting the big rivers, starting the farmers to buying, starting the retail merchant to buying, starting freight to moving, starting factories to going, starting the idle to work, in a word, curing the paralysis of our economic circulatory system, the only thing the matter with us. There would be as much difference between that and what we are doing to revive conditions as there would be between what we are doing to revive conditions as there would be between rain on the fields and pouring the same amount of water out in the rivers hoping it would run upstream and finally reach the hillsides and the high table-lands.

Mr. Glover. You referred to this committee as a bunch of doctors dealing with a sick patient. As one of those doctors I think you are one of the most wonderful diagnosticians I have listened to. Usually a good diagnostician is one who knows how to prescribe a remedy.

What would be your remedy, based on your study, for the cure of this condition?

Mr. Sumners. Agriculture has two major problems. One is merchandising, the other is freedom from its present position of resources? We are in the last trench.

I remember in 1919 I was in Belgium. We were up near the the sea. A man who had been in the army was showing us around. He told us the King of Belgium came up there and said to the army, "There is no retreat from this trench. It is the last trench. You have got to hold this trench or die here, because the sea is behind you."

That is exactly where we are this minute. The sea is behind us. There is no retreat from this trench. We have to throw every resource we have got into reestablishing and holding this far-flung economic battle line. The line was broken at the point held by agriculture, which we have drawn upon merclessly to strengthen the position of industry. What would a good general do? What would sensible people do, living behind a common levee in the event of a break at any point? We have been digging from the levee in front of agriculture, weakening it and adding what we dug away to the bank further up. That is exadding what we dug away to the bank further up. That is exactly where we have been going to get the material for building up much of the rest of our levee, and we seem to be surprised that at last this part of our levee has broken and the water coming through that crevasse has swept around, putting out the fires of our factories in the cities.

fires of our factories in the cities.

Does this not suggest to sensible people where we ought to get to work? Does that not suggest where we ought to throw in our resources? We do not have many more of these $2,000,000,000 units to throw in either.

If the farmers hold, we hold; if they break, we break. Is there anybody who does not realize that now?

Mr. Clarke. May I ask you this question right there? There are two schools of thought in reference to the question as to how to help agriculture, as I view the question. At least, there are two schools of thought that prevail up in my country.

One is that the farmers themselves are not willing to come into the cooperative movement upon the commodity they produce and help to battle for themselves, federated nationally upon the commodity they produce. What more can Congress do than the commodity they produce. What more can Congress do than it has done?

Mr. Summers. That is a fair question. Let me touch on that.

As I stated, agriculture has two problems; one of them is that to which you refer, marketing. I have much respect for your judgment and for your patriotism.

SPOT PRODUCE EXCHANGE

There ought to be established in this country something very akin to a produce exchange where actual spot commodities would be sold by their descriptive trade terms while still at the point be sold by their descriptive trade terms while still at the point of first or secondary concentration. In the merchandising of agricultural commodities we find that production and consumption have moved so far apart that trade contact has been broken. When the farmer used to sell a few surplus hams to the people who lived in the little village, using on his farm practically everything he produced, selling was relatively unimportant. Besides, he could drive his wagon into the village and the consumers could examine his products. There was trade contact.

Now if there is a man in the Rio Grande Valley who raises examine his products. There was trade contact.

Now, if there is a man in the Rio Grande Valley who raises spinach or oranges, or some other produce, he does not know where the people are who want those things, and the people who want them do not know where the supply is or how to establish trade contact. There has been improvement in that regard since I came to Congress. I have done my best to help, but there is yet much to do.

From the days of the manorial markets in England and on the Continent it was regarded as the duty of government with regard to commerce to establish public markets and thereby the possibilities of trade contact. That is a very interesting fact. It is only within the last 100 or 150 years that it has ceased to be recognized as the duty of government to establish and maintain such possibilities of trade contacts. Or rather there has been a failure to recognize the changes which improved transportation has wrought and adjust governmental policy to meet those changes.

those changes.

In order to establish the possibilities of general trade contact now, three or four definite things must be done. You gentlemen have done much in that direction, but there is one new thing needed, and then a general hook-up.

First, you have to standardize agricultural commodities so they may be dealt in by their respective trade terms. I do not think we have approached that job exactly from the right angle. I am not very familiar with what has been done during the last three economic slavery to the businesses of our cities. I do not appeal to prejudice; I appeal to justice and to common sense.

This Agricultural Committee is the key committee of this Congress now. I know it is the key committee dealing with the whole economic situation.

Of course, we depend to a degree upon the Banking and Currency Committee and on the Ways and Means Committee, but I say here is the key committee, and upon your wisdom, your courage, and your determination is going to depend whether or not we are going to escape that which now impends. Nobody knows exactly what it is. It may imperil our form of government. It may imperil our form of government. It may involve the socialization of industry. But this we know, there is not a single private holding or public institution in America that is free from danger.

Do you suppose that a good general at a crisis in a major battle, realizing he is in the last trench, would withhold his resources? We are in the last trench, would withhold his resources? We are in the last trench, would withhold his around. He told us the King of Belgium came up there and said to the army, "There is no retreat from this trench or die here, because the sea is behind you."

That is exactly where we are this minute. The sea is behind us. There is no retreat from this trench. We have to throw every resource we have got into reestablishing and holding this reading and form and the point of prejudicing the proposed and the point of four years. We have standardized sufficiently remets of merchants who split again.

I would make this the goal—for each considerable quantity of an agricultural commodity having observable to which it is best adapted, a separate of the use to which will five the possibilities of physical protection and intermediary supervision and inspection, and generally guarantee integrity of transaction possible under the warehouse and then a place where these commodities, thus standardization, intermediary supervision, physical protection and intermediary supervision and available trade route around the privately owned and controlled routes of distribution.

When you shall have done those three things you will have created the possibilities of building cooperation from the ground up, the only way it can be done. The failure thus to build and to have something permanent after the building has been responsible in large degree for the failure of cooperative effort in America. You would make it possible for communities to learn to cooperate, because you would give to small communities access to a general market. Afterwards they could confederate.

You also would make it possible to develop in centers of consumption small cooperative purchasing groups. There would be a place to which they could resort by wire, phone, or in person. As a practical proposition in the event distributors attempted the exercise of toll-taking power, if there be assurance of physical protection and integrity of transaction—in other words, delivery according to tender, and purchase and payment according to offer—you would have the possibilities of these people buying and selling with each other that which the purchaser had never seen. Our modern so-called cooperative marketing associations as a rule are not true cooperatives; they are too much, as is the organization of the army in some countries, largely generals. They are not true cooperative marketing associations where the officials carry out the cooperative marketing associations where the officials carry out the cooperative marketing associations where the officials carry out the cooperative marketing associations where the officials carry out the cooperative marketing associations where the officials carry out the cooperative marketing associations where the officials carry out the cooperative marketing associations where the officials carry out the cooperative marketing associations where the officials carry out the cooperative marketing associations where the officials carry out the cooperative marketing associations where the officials carry out t some benefit.

Cooperating is a mental attitude you have to acquire. It is acquired by doing things cooperatively.

THE DEBENTURE

This other problem of agriculture is related to marketing, but for the purpose of this consideration it may be examined apart from marketing. It is doing for agriculture the thing required of any government claiming to be just and impartial among its citizens. It is required of any government pretending to afford to its citizens equality before the law. It is now required of this Government by the most imperative necessity in behalf of the common good, the public necessity. I refer to what is known as the export debenture. I do not limit to specific details. I do limit to the general plan of an export debenture. The philosophy of the debenture is found in basic economic necessity and duty resting upon government to preserve equality of advantage, equality of benefits, and general equality among its citizens before the law in order not only to do justice but also to preserve good government and a normal development of the economic body functioning normally in obedience to natural law. Its plan of operation would be to a normal development of the economic body functioning normally in obedience to natural law. Its plan of operation would be to give back to the farmers who have no benefit from the protective tariff that which through the tariff is taken from them by the might of government and given to the beneficiaries of the tariff.

I do not know of anything in the history of governments pretending to be just which is more partial and under present conditions more brutal and less wise than the treatment of these producers who raise grain, cotton, and tobacco.

I do not mean this Government purposes to be brutal, but it is a brutal thing done by the might of government, and the disastrous effect has now reached to the most far away and the greatest of the units which make up our interdependent economic body.

nomic body

nomic body.

Let us look at this a minute. Here is a Government which says: "I am going to protect you, my producers, from the cheap labor of others. My purpose is to have you get prices as much higher than other peoples get as will make up for the difference in the cost of production under American standards of living and the lower standards abroad." After having thus declared the purpose and the policy it is made to apply only to a part of its producers. These farmers to whom I have referred are left out. That is done by a government which boasts of equality before the law. But it does not end there. In addition it denies to these farmers the right to buy where they must sell. Why? In order that they may be compelled to buy from those who are to have the benefits of the tariff system. So it is that to the fault of partiality the crime of economic slavery is added. of partiality the crime of economic slavery is added.

THE PENALTY OF INJUSTICE

Suppose a father should say to his two boys: "I am going to protect you against the cheaper living conditions of your neighbors. I want my family to live better and get more for their products than our neighbors get," and then would say, "Now, John, this does not apply to you. You must still sell in competition with your neighbors, but you may not buy from them. You must bring your money back home, and with that which you get in that cheaper market buy from your brother, Tom. Of course, you pay him more than you would have paid where you had to sell, and you must pay your brother more than he otherwise could get." Suppose John should say, "You see to it that Tom is given a boost in his prices, but you do not get any boost for me—you even make me pay Tom's boost. Am I not a part of this family?" What could the father say and tell the truth that would place him in any decent attitude as between his boys? It could not be done. That attitude is not decent. It is an attitude that violates every obligation of equality, of justice, and, looking to the far reaches of time, of sound public policy. We can not fall to see that. Somewhere down the line that sort of thing, that partiality, that injustice has to be paid for. This is that time. We of the cities are paying now. That is bad enough, but it is only a part of the picture.

THE ADDED DISADVANTAGE

Before the war we were able to dispose of a large part of our agricultural surplus, paying the interest we owed to other peoples. After the war we ceased to be a debtor nation and became the world's great creditor nation. We brought back a large part of the world's gold to this country and also brought back billions of dollars of bills receivable. It requires the gold which the rest of the world can get to pay the interest they owe to us. That left these farmers with a greater necessity to barter. That is a natural right. What did we do about that situation? We ran up the tariff wall still higher, cutting them off more completely from their accustomed markets.

their accustomed markets.

I want to touch on just one other thing. You take the bill you gentlemen reported for farm relief. It was drawn upon the theory that these surpluses are bad things and are to be got rid of.

Every one of the propositions being considered by you now except the debenture is based upon the assumption that our surpluses are things to be got rid of. What does that mean?

SURPLUS EAD ONLY TO PEOPLE DEVOID OF STATESMANSHIP

What are you going to do with these people who are now producing a surplus? Where are you going to drive them? What is going to happen to them? What right have you to drive them conditions?

In the first place, is it a good thing to have a surplus of agricultural commodities? Is it a good thing for a nation to be protected by a safe margin against all the hazards of current production, against the uncertainties of the ravages of insects and of climatic conditions?

We face the fact, gentlemen, that there is not a statesman in central Europe perhaps who would not exchange half the natural resources of his country in order to have for his people the security—I mean every sort of security, including military security—guaranteed by an abundance of food and clothing material at home each year which would be afforded by such a surplus as we have. Yet we despise it. We despise God's earth and its bounty and are trying to get rid of this bounty of God, more important to the safety of any people of ability properly to order their economic and political government than a surplus of gold in their treasury, and more vital to their national security than a great navy upon the seas.

Are we utterly devoid of statesmanship and of common sense?

navy upon the seas.

Are we utterly devoid of statesmanship and of common sense? What are we going to do with these people, these grain and cotton farmers? Are we going to drive them into the cities, to add to the millions of unemployed people? They have to be somewhere; they have to go somewhere, they have to do something. What? In my country we are producing at least 50 per cent of our cotton for export. Is that an illegitimate thing? Is it a bad thing for people to be engaged in the production of commodities for the world market? When did it get to be a bad thing? What is the use of these millions expended to support the Bureau of Foreign Commerce? What is the justification for this $17,000,000 building which the President and the last Congress approved for the Department of Commerce if we are going out of world commerce?

Take your corn and wheat growers. What are your people going to do? Ought they not to be given a fair chance, a fighting chance before we issue against them the decree of economic death?

The fault with us and our policies is that we see difficulties in our road, and somebody says, "Look out; there is a broken culvert," and we whirl off into the jungle without any consideration as to the difficulties in that direction. Where will these people go? I do not know where they will go. Why not at least give them a chance to hold their accustomed world market?

Mr. Nelson. Speaking of a surplus, three years ago last April, when this committee met on the 15th of April, or before that, we had witness after witness before us, and I asked them the question, "Is the surplus a good thing?" And without exception the answer was that a surplus is a good thing; it is the only thing that will make for the safety of the country as a whole.

I have been greatly interested in what we have heard this morning. I think it has been one of the most constructive and fundamental talks that we have had. As I understand it, your thought is that regardless of whether or not the tariff is good or bad, so long as we have a tariff, it should be made effective, as effective for agriculture as for industry?

HAVE GOT TO GIVE BACK TO AGRICULTURE WHAT IS ARBITRARILY TAKEN

Mr. Sumners. We have reached the point, gentlemen, where we have got to do that. I say that without the slightest uncertainty as to the soundness of my conclusion.

Mr. Nelson. I might say that was the view of some of us when the so-called farm relief bill, which has just about "relieved" the farmer of everything he has, was passed. At that time the present chairman of the committee, Mr. Jones, of Texas, offered an amendment to that bill to incorporate the debenture plan. It failed, as did the amendment I offered to incorporate the equalization-fee feature. The farm marketing act at that time was said to be written in a very definite way, and it was written in just that way. The farm marketing act, judged by its results, has been a failure, as I knew it must be. I was one of 35 Members to vote against it. Now, what can we do for agriculture? One thing we ought to do is to repeal the farm marketing act, to set a time when that act will be repealed, or at least when the stabilization feature of it will be taken out; or if this is impossible, then amend the present act. It can not do the job as it is.

We can no more make this scheme work, we can no more sus-

We can no more make this scheme work, we can no more suspend the law of supply and demand, than we can suspend the law of gravity. And if this committee does not do something along that line before this Congress adjourns, we will have failed to do of gravity. And if this committee does not do something along that line before this Congress adjourns, we will have failed to do our duty.

That is one thing we can do. We can look forward to the time when we no longer have the Farm Board operating as it has been. We have spent $500,000,000, or appropriated that much, for that enterprise, and the spread between the peak price and the present price of farm products in America has been larger than in any other country in the world. We have proved that stabilization, as it has been tried, will not work.

Now, if we can make the tariff effective, as it is proposed in this bill to do, I think perhaps we have taken a forward step.

You have referred to us as a committee of doctors to remedy this condition. The patient is dying and is almost dead. In my opinion we have got to do something else. The witness spoke a while ago of a time when the farmer was self-sufficient. I happen to have on my desk this morning a statement from one who is supposed to be an eminent authority on agriculture, suggesting that the farmer should go back to the old days, that he should buy little, that he should make on his farm the things that he used to make. He said he could do that very well except for two things, taxes and interest. That statement was rather amusing. Incidentally, if carried to its conclusion, if the farmer began to become all sufficient, it would destroy the city.

You have asked what would the railroads do if the farmer became all sufficient? We have got to pursue these things along the modern line.

Mr. Summers. That is perfectly ridiculous; that is just as ab-along the modern line.

Mr. Sumners. That is perfectly ridiculous; that is just as absurd a proposition to submit to serious practical men as one can think of. To say that the thing to do is to revert to the old conditions of the oxcart and the tallow candle. I would not take up your time, gentlemen, to discuss such a proposition even in criticism.

Mr. Nelson. Yet we are hearing that to-day from many people.
Mr. Sumners. I know; there are a great many fools in the world and they have large audiences now.
Mr. Nelson. Nobody should take it seriously.

Mr. Nelson. Nobody should take it seriously.

Mr. Sumners. No.

Mr. Nelson. Yet it is being proposed and from some so-called eminent authorities.

The Chairman. I think we have had a very fine diagnosis of the situation and a profitable discussion. I think any further discussion should be along the line of the remedy we have to suggest.

sion should be along the line of the remedy we have to suggest.

Mr. Larsen. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Texas and the gentleman from Illinois had quite an interesting discussion. The question propounded by the gentleman from Illinois was an important question and I wanted to see if he could answer it, so I asked him this question:

"What was found to be the remedy for the conditions which you say existed in 1824?"

He has not approximated.

He has not answered it, and I want to know if this gentleman will answer it.

Mr. ADKINS. That question was answered; he answered it.

Mr. LARSEN. No; he did not. I am going to read your answer:

"Mr. Clay said we must have a protective tariff."

Mr. ADKINS. Read the question.

Mr. Larsen (reading):
"What was found to be the remedy?"

"What was found to be the remedy?"

I did not ask you what Mr. Clay said. I asked you, "What was found to be the remedy for conditions at that time, in 1824?"

Now, if the patient was sick in 1824, and he must have been, if corn was then selling for 6½ cents per bushel, the patient recovered. What I desire to know and am asking is, What was found to be the remedy for the patient in 1824? Not what Mr. Clay said you ought to do for him. Can you answer that question? What was found to be the remedy? Let me ask this question: We had a panic of 1837, as the histories put it, I think. It started about 1824. We had one in 1873 and we have had some others.

Mr. ADKINS. We had one in 1857.

Mr. Larsen. Yes. We had one in 1857 and in 1893. I guess those were the major panics. At that time agriculture was in a very serious condition. But it recovered each time. Old Man Agriculture is not quite dead yet.

Now, what I want to know is, What were the remedies that we applied in those years? Perhaps we ought to have the same remedies to apply now; I do not know. Can you give me those

Mr. Sumners. Let me see if I can not at least get the difficulty out of the way.

Mr. Larsen. With relation to the three theories that have been suggested to the committee.

THE TARIFF IS A BOUNTY

Mr. SUMNERS. Reference has been made to Mr. Clay. Mr. Clay, Mr. Webster, and Mr. Hamilton each recognized the protective tariff as a bounty, and Mr. Hamilton seems to have favored a plan under which a part of the import duties resulting from the operation of the protective tariff system should be paid to those producers not the direct beneficiaries of the system.

Gentlemen, the time has come when we must decide basic policies guided by fundamental principles. We have had enough haphazard, hit or miss policies.

haphazard, hit or miss policies.

haphazard, hit or miss policies.

In so far as I know we of the Government are the only people engaged in serious effort in the world, I mean we, the legislators and Presidents, who fail to recognize that there are natural laws which suggest what ought to be done. That is an interesting fact, is it not? We are the only ones. We do not even recognize that there are natural laws that govern governments and govern the economic life of the people. We just sort of splatter around and go about.

Now, when Washington was sick—and that was a good while ago—they sent for one doctor and he came and bled him. Then they sent for another doctor and he bled him some more I believe, and ultimately they killed him. Our statesmanship is in about the stage of development of the practice of physicians in Washington. ington's time.

Ington's time.

When we come to deal with our economic disorders we are dealing with a sick patient. We are dealing with a sick economic body made up of many interrelated interdependent units, of which agriculture is an important part, the part where the present disorder originated, and the one from which this economic paralysis has spread to the other parts of the economic body as of necessity by the laws of nature, its penalties not accidentally, it had to happen if the policy be pursued which has been our policy. If not arrested it was bound to spread. I speak of paralysis of buying power, a paralysis of the circulatory system of this economic body. That is all there is the matter with us. I do not want to get into any partisan controversy about this matter, because I do not intend to discuss it that way.

THE REMEDY PRESCRIBED FOR A PATIENT BLED WHITE WAS MORE BLEEDING

At the beginning of this administration, in extraordinary session, we were summoned to come to this patient who had already been bled white, was prostrate, and still being bled to support the tariff system when we got here. What did we do? Did we reduce the blood being taken and give the patient a blood transfusion as any intelligent physician would have done under similar circumstances? Not a bit of it. We increased the quantity of blood being taken. We raised the tariff and refused the debenture, refused a blood transfusion. We bled agriculture more, raised the tariff, and have been sitting around expecting recovery. That was the program of the administration. Think of that.

raised the tariff, and have been sitting around expecting recovery. That was the program of the administration. Think of that. Saying everything would be all right "just around the corner."

I know the President is opposed to what I suggest, but the President is wrong. This is one thing I know more about than he and his advisers know. And I know I know it. Not about many things would I speak with such assurance. I do not want to interfere with the President's program. Politically the present situation is a bad one. I know all we Democrats can do is to try to help tide over until one or the other party can be placed in complete control. I would not press this matter now if I did not know the dangers immediately in front of us toward which we are headed as straight as a crow can fly. I have studied this matter for many years. The record will show that I have pointed out many times the destination to which our policies have led us, and have entered my protest and have offered what subsequent developments have demonstrated were constructive suggestions. suggestions.

I will tell you, and may I tell the President with all respect, what is "around the corner" if we do not revive the buying power of the farmers, it is the dole. As I said, the radical things which governments find themselves compelled to do have things which governments find themselves compelled to do have their origin in the fallure of government, to do what ought to be done when it ought to be done. I do not want to appear presumptuous or be egotistical. If I do so it is because I have given during many years study to this matter. I know what is the matter here. I know its importance and I see the danger. It is no time to permit modesty to interfere with the warning which it is my duty to give.

Now, may I make this observation, gentlemen? The debenture is in effect a tariff on agricultural commodities arranged to give

Now, may I make this observation, gentlemen? The dependure is in effect a tariff on agricultural commodities arranged to give back to agriculture what is taken, and which, in order to be made effective, must be made to operate in a reverse direction. It would return to farmers what the tariff takes from them, and give them a chance to pay their debts, and to buy, and give others and others on up to the greatest corporation the ability to do the same thing, and to put idle people to work.

Academically, I am a free-trader. But we are called here to responsibility after others have established an operating protective system. It is facts and not theories with which we must deal now. This I lay down as a sound public policy: Where you have a tariff system, and as long as you have it, the only way you can prevent injustice, or a lopsided industrial development, is to distribute the burdens and the benefits not merely of the system itself but of the policy sought to be made effective through the system. That is the only way you can prevent a part of your industry serving as a nurse cow for the rest of it. Agriculture has been serving for a long time as the nurse cow for a mighty big yearling. We have got to feed the old cow or wean the yearling. She is not giving enough milk for this yearling, and the yearling does not want to graze. As a matter of fact, it is not a yearling, it is a full-sized steer. What I say is, as long as the steer sucks you must feed the cow; otherwise both the cow and the steer will perish.

I am taking up too much of your time, gentlemen. I submit myself to the committee for questions.

Mr. MITCHELL. I would just like to ask you how you think the people in the respective States and communities would react to the idea of Government supervision and control in their respective localities and sections? Just what procedure would you indicate the strong arm of the Government might follow in our respective jurisdictions? Will you be good enough to give the committee the benefit of your opinion of the practical workings of the bill that you have in mind?

you have in mind?

ARBITRARY CONTROL SHOULD BE AVOIDED

Mr. Sumners. When you come to deal with these farmers—and I know them—you have got to consider the element of human nature that is involved and the attitude of that particular part of our people.

I believe the farmers would not submit to arbitrary control, going into the details of their production, telling them what they can do with their farms and that little tract up on the hill. They can do with their farms and that little tract up on the hill. They would submit with as much resentment, and more, than any other class of people in the United States. I think you would find a great deal of resentment.

The Charman. May I suggest right there that this debenture plan does not have any suggestion of that kind in it. That would simply be handled at the port.

Mr. Sumners. One great advantage of the debenture plan is that it is freer from the element of arbitrary control than any other plan I have seen suggested and would require smaller, Federal machinery and less expense to administer it, and would, therefore, have a tendency to give to the producer a larger share of that which the people are compelled to contribute. It would add least to our great army of Federal employees.

The Charman. If there are no further questions of Mr. Sumners, I desire to thank you for your presentation.

ners, I desire to thank you for your presentation.

Mr. Sumners. If anyone finds anything in my remarks that seems partisan, I shall be glad to eliminate it from the record.

This is not the place for such things.

Mr. Haugen, I would like to ask a question of the gentleman before he leaves. Your suggestion is for the establishment of a produce exchange?

Mr. Sumners. Yes. You know, you have tried to regulate these

Mr. Sumners. Yes. You know, you have tried to regulate these privately owned and merchant-controlled institutions called produce exchanges and to compel them to perform a public function. I doubt that you will ever be able to do it.

Mr. Haugen. You suggested the debenture plan in connection with that.

Mr. Sumners. Yes.

Mr. Haugen. Would it be wise to spend a large amount of money now to do what could be done otherwise without such a great expense?

Mr. Sumners. With regard to any other proposition, I would say that if our assumption is correct it is not wise.

I think we all understand the situation. I do not

Mr. Haugen, I think we all understand the situation. I do not think there is any question about that. We have understood it for all these years and we have been trying to get some remedy.

Mr. Sumners. Yes.

Mr. Haugen. We brought in a compromise measure. Everybody knew in advance in the absence of a prescribed plan and authority to carry it into effect that it would not produce the desired results, but still much of the time it benefited the wheat producers to the extent of 20 cents a bushel on their wheat. There has been a good deal of talk about the Farm Board. The trouble was with Congress not giving it a definite workship plan. there has been a good deal of talk about the raim board. The trouble was with Congress not giving it a definite, workable plan. The board did the best it could. Many had the idea that 100 per cent cooperation could be effected voluntarily. Others advocated trying it out. We knew that it would not work. They tried it out at an expense of several hundred million dollars, so it dropped the stabilization plan. I hope now that all are willing to try out something else. At least the board is not to be certificated.

criticized.

Criticized.

Mr. Sumners. I do not purpose to criticize the board. I do not want to get into any controversy. I want results.

Mr. Haugen. We want to clear that point up. I think we should protect the board and protect everybody else.

Mr. Sumners. I do not purpose to criticize anybody or any board in what I have said. I have a constructive purpose.

Mr. Haugen. I, of course, know that you don't. What have you to say about the plan suggested by these three farm groups?

Mr. Sumners. Unfortunately, I am not familiar with their suggestions. gestions

Mr. Haugen. One is the cost-of-production plans, one the de-benture plan, and one the equalization-fee plan. I think we all agree that in some instances the equalization fee would work to the advantage of the farmer over the other plans, and in a number of instances, where there is a small surplus, the debenture plan or the cost-of-production plan might be applied. The suggestion submitted by the three farm groups is that the three plans be embodied in one bill, and the board directed to apply whichever plan or plans would serve the purpose best. What have you to say about that?

The Chairman. Mr. Sumners, the farm groups have suggested that we give the Farm Board the privilege or the option of using any one or all three remedies—the equalization fee, the debenture, and the so-called allotment plan.

any one or all three remedies—the equalization fee, the debenture, and the so-called allotment plan.

Mr. Sumners. Personally, with all due respect to the Farm Board, I do not yield as a Member of Congress to the Farm Board the right to determine whether or not in its judgment the equalization fee or the debenture plan should be put into effect. I would assume that responsibility as a legislator definitely for the very specific purpose of making the tariff—operate to the advantage—that is, the philosophy of the tariff—operate equally to the advantage of the farmer as well as to industry as long as that system operates.

Mr. Haugen. We have the tariff and the purpose is to make it effective. There is only one way of making it effective and that is one by debentures, at the expense of the Federal Treasury, or to do, as organized industry has been doing for the last 50 years, equalize the price. Every producer under that plan pays his proportionate share of the cost and receives his ratable share of the profit.

profit.
Mr. Sumners, Mr. Chairman, before I leave, I want to direct the attention of the committee and ask its consideration, if it sees fit, to H. R. 8896, a bill which I introduced. It is very brief, and with your permission I will read it.

The CHAIRMAN, Please do. (Mr. Sumners read H. R. 8896, which is as follows:)

"[H. R. 8896, Seventy-second Congress, first session]

"A bill authorizing compacts among States for agricultural and conservation purposes

"A bill authorizing compacts among States for agricultural and conservation purposes

"Be it enacted, etc., That two or more States are hereby authorized to enter into agreements and compacts, not in conflict with the laws of the United States, concerning the exercise of their governmental powers with reference to production, processing, and sale of agricultural products, development, and preservation of their natural resources, including soil fertility, and to create such agencies, joint or otherwise, as may be deemed necessary to make effective such agreements and compacts."

Mr. Sumners. This is merely permissive and is offered solely for the purpose of freeing the States from the restraint in the Federal Constitution against States entering into compacts. I had in mind that you gentlemen, if you will be good enough, some time, will consider the advisability of giving to these States engaged in the production of a given commodity congressional authority to enter into compacts and agreements with regard to those things concerning which they have a common interest.

I am very much obliged to you, gentlemen. Unfortunately I was not prepared properly to present this matter. You know the pressure we have all worked under. Nobody has had time really to prepare anything properly.

Mr. Andresen. Mr. Sumners, before you leave, may I ask this question? During the war an emergency existed, as far as agriculture was concerned. There was an effort to beat down the price on certain agricultural products and Congress took recognition of that and established a minimum price on wheat, to assure the farmer cost of production and a fair return, or a profit. We are in an emergency now possibly greater than we were during the war, as far as the country is concerned.

What would your idea be on a similar proposition now, to set up a governmental agency, to establish a minimum price on cer-

What would your idea be on a similar proposition now, to set up a governmental agency, to establish a minimum price on cer-up a governmental agency, to establish a minimum price on certain basic agricultural commodities?

Mr. Sumners. Would you be carrying out the idea that the surplus is to be bought by some governmental agency and retained?

Mr. Andresen. During the war, of course, the Government—

Mr. Sumners. There we had no difficulty, because we knew there was not going to be enough produced to feed us and our allies, didn't we?

Andresen. An arrangement might be made whereby they

Mr. Andresen. An arrangement might be made whereby they would only purchase a certain amount of a man's crop.

Mr. Sumners. I do not want to give an opinion about it further than to say that any plan which holds in this country what we produce above domestic requirement is a threat to future prices and its retention here instead of letting it go into the world market is calculated to develop in other parts of the world large areas of competitive production, which in turn might cut us out permanently from the world market. We ought to try to hold that market against the day of better world conditions rather than keep the surplus here at the expense of storage and deteroriation and the danger of its being turned loose at any time in competition with any years' crops. I wish I could emphasize the importance of that suggestion during the world adjustment that we ought to make every reasonable effort to hold for agricultural producers the world market that is required to absorb their surpluses.

Mr. Andresen, But, Judge, they are producing more in all the other countries of the world, and soon the export market will disappear.

Mr. Sumners. I do not know whether we can hold it or not.
But take cotton, for instance, and take your wheat, where you have 200,000,000 bushels of surplus; nobody knows exactly what is going to happen, of course, but we are confronted with the very definite proposition, What are we going to do with our producers if they do lose their share of the world market?

Mr. Andressen. It is a real problem.

Mr. Sumners. Gentlemen, to my mind, this is the situation: Here are these people fighting for a share of the world's market and being bled to support industries in this country. Are we to refuse in this situation to give back to them that which we are taking from them and which we know is necessary to help them to make this fight against world competition, and give back to them enough to enable them to buy the products that we produce in the cities? Gentlemen, I just can not see the horse sense in not doing it. not doing it.

Mr. Andresen. But if they lose the world market, then your debenture will not be worth anything.

Mr. Sumners. It would help to hold the world market. I do not mean to say that it would insure them to hold the world market, but it would assist them in that direction. Can't you see it?

Mr. Andresen. I can not see it, because our wheat farmers can not compete with the wheat farmers of France.

Mr. Sumners. Take your wheat farmer. You export in round figures 200,000,000 bushels of wheat out of a total of some 800,000,000 bushels—something like that?

The Chareman. Those are the approximate figures.

Mr. Sumners. Suppose you have the debenture. That stimulates your wheat price in America. How much do you propose to stimulate it?

Mr. Andresen. Twenty-one cents.
Mr. Sumners. Let us say 20 cents a bushel. You stimulate your wheat price 20 cents a bushel on your American consumption. That gives you a 20-cent increase on 600,000,000 bushels of wheat, does it not?

Mr. Andresen. If it works out.
Mr. Sumners. Well, if it does give you 20 cents on 600,000,000 bushels of wheat, that is something that you have that comes to you as wheat producers. Then you can afford to sell 25 per cent of your product cheaper than you could otherwise if you had not received that assistance, could you not?
Mr. Andresen. Yes. But we will run up against the same thing when we go to do that, that we impose upon other countries when they put a bounty upon products that they ship into this country.

country.

Mr. Sumners. You are referring to the practice of dumping?

Mr. Andresen. Yes. That will be automatically taken care of in that way.

Mr. Ketcham. The answer to that point, which is always raised, is that these nations will not invoke antidumping laws if they need or they want the crop. That is the answer to that objection. Mr. SUMNERS. That is correct

Mr. Sumners. That is correct.

The Charrman. A country that is short in any commodity certainly will not take those steps to keep it out of the country.

Mr. Sumners. I would be willing to see what they would do about it. I would not want to be too apprehensive about it. We had best cross that bridge when we get to it. Let us do our best. If we fail, we will not be at fault. That is the maximum of what can be required of anybody and it is also the minimum that is required. If we fail after I have done my best, I will not bother about it one split second. Difficulties are nature's gymnastic paraphernalia provided for the development of people.

I do not know how long this difficulty in the big economy is

I do not know how long this difficulty in the big economy is to challenge human thought and effort and result in human development, but I know it is here now to challenge us and we had better not lay down on the job if we would escape other punishment.

LOOKING AGAIN AT THE WHOLE MATTER

Now, in conclusion, let us look again at this matter. We have a principle that taxation shall be uniform. Taxation is not uniform as to these agricultural producers of exportable surpluses. They are taxed through the tariff to provide a bounty for others. There is no tax upon those others for the agriculpluses. They are taxed through the tariff to provide a bounty for others. There is no tax upon those others for the agricultural producers.

We have a basic principle that there shall be equality before the law. There is no equality before the law as between the two great classes of producers. One gets a bounty. The other is excluded. To this is added a second inequality, which makes a double inequality. The excluded class is forced by the Government which excludes them from a bounty to contribute to the bounty of others from their world competitive prices received for what they sell. In addition to the tax directly levied upon them by the tariff in the form of enhanced prices for what they buy above world prices, they pay a much greater tax indirectly in the shape of the increased overhead of others, increased cost of living of others, increased price of commodities used in manufacturing, and so forth, increased wage scales, and so forth, which are passed on from one to another until they reach these farmers who sell to the highest bidder in competition with the cheapest labor in the world. There it remains. That is a fact. These farmers can not pass these increases, not a cent of them, because they can not say when they come to sell a bushel of grain or a bale of cotton: "I have figured this all out. My capital investment is so much, my cost of production is so much, so much for a reasonable profit, therefore my price is so much." They say to the rest of the producers: "What will you give us?" and sell to the highest bidder. They absorb whatever of these increases reaches them through the general passing process from one to another in our business transactions.

The basic principles of our Government and of ordinary justice support the proposition of giving back to these farmers that which is being taken from them by the aid of the power and policy of this Government this Government.

There is another consideration of public policy involved. If you go out in the country, you will find the farm plant; his manufacturing plant is not being kept up. The farms of this country are the most important factories we have. There elements of the soil, of the air, and of the sunshine and the rain are manufactured into food and clothing material, from which most of the things seen in the shop windows come, the things which make the banquet possible, which make up the adornment of dress, which even if substantially reduced make sound thinking and sane acting impossible, the things without which life is impossible. No public policy could be more devoid of true statesmanship than the policy which would permit that factory to deteriorate.

policy could be more devoid of true statesmanship than the policy which would permit that factory to deteriorate.

You say reduce the wage scale and reduce commodity values so the farmer can trade. Of course, if farm values remain as they are, everything must come down; but this is what you run into if you move in that direction, an insurmountable wall of existing indebtedness. You can not pay these debts with a low wage scale and low commodity values. That route leads toward universal bankruptcy or repudiation.

What are we going to do about it? What are we going to do about our general situation? Balance the Budget. That is fine. But that will not pay these billions of debts. But how about the farmer's budget this fall? How about his interest and tax bills being balanced with present prices and other budgets up the line? If they can be balanced, we can balance the Federal Budget without difficulty. If they can not be balanced, the Federal Budget out difficulty. If they can not be balanced, the Federal Budget can not stay balanced.

can not stay balanced.

Why do not the factories open up? Why do not the wholesale merchants pay their debts and buy new wares? Why do not these idle people go to work?

Get a map of the United States. Look it over from east to west and from north to south. Of all the land which your eyes survey, eighty-odd per cent of what is cultivated is cultivated by these same farmers who are producing surpluses and selling to the highest bidder. As they are driven away from the staple crops which produce exportable surpluses they move into other fields of production—dairying, poultry, etc., and pull them down to the level of the staple crops.

What are we going to do about it? Are we going to continue the mental suggestion remedy, the foolish remedy, "Everything is going to be all right around the corner." We have wasted some precious years trifling with that remedy, much to the discredit of our statesmanship and to the common sense of the people.

This trouble is not mental. It never was mental. It is sub-

This trouble is not mental. It hever was mental. It is substantial. It is basic.

Are we to find the remedy in loaning money from the Federal Treasury to those who can not pay their present indebtedness?

Railroads are in bad condition, not for equipment, not for men to operate them. They do not need to buy things. They need revenue. Can this condition be remedled by a loan from the Federal Government? It may keep them out of the hands of a receiver for a while and leave the Federal Government with some had debts which the texpayers will have to take care of. What receiver for a while and leave the Federal Government with some bad debts which the taxpayers will have to take care of. What they need is commodities and people moving on the trains. They have got to have some revenue and nobody ever derived any revenue from what he owes. The same thing is true of banks. The thawing out has got to begin at the far end, at the bottom, with these farmers. It is proposed to advance $2,000,000,000 for public works to build roads, etc. It looks as if we are going to be compelled to do it. But what roads? Who is going to use them? Who is going to pay for them? The people, of course. But are these troubles of ours due to lack of roads? Are they revenue producers in the primary sense? Who is going to pay for them and who is going to keep them up? The people. How? By taxation. Where will it get us? Maybe past the dole this winter, and save people from starving. But where will this road program lead us to? I mean, will it lead us away from where we are now or will it lead us in a circle? will it lead us in a circle?

We will come back to where we are, and we will be $2,000,000,000 nearer exhaustion than we were before if we do not get things nearer exhaustion than we were before it we do not get things circulating, from these farmers up.

I do not want to be misunderstood. As we are going now, millions of destitute people will have to be fed this winter, and anything is better than a dole. The point I make is that it is a makeshift. It does not touch the basic trouble.

But there is a limit to the ability of the Federal Treasury to respond with hundreds of millions and billions of dollars. Most of the other reservoirs of credit are already dried up and the water level of the Federal reservoir is going down mighty fast. Its sources of supply are drying up. If these sources of Federal financial resources dry up, become paralyzed, that paralysis must financial resources dry up, become paralyzed, that paralysis must soon reach back to the Federal Government. In fact it is reaching to it now. The fact remains that we are getting nowhere with this program except postpoining the inevitable consequences under that program, and adding with each passing day to the probable consequences when the limit shall have been reached.

All right; what ought to be done? In what direction should

All right; what ought to be done? In what direction should we move? What would you do if you were a tree doctor called to treat a tree in bad condition, and should find that an artificial arrangement had been installed by which the sap which nature allocates to the development of its root structure was being pumped away from the root into the trunk of the tree, and that now the root could not support the tree? What would you do? You would do two things. You would slow down the pump, not too fast perhaps. That might not be safe for the tree. And then you would go to work in earnest to give back to the root, to the soil, that which would be most calculated to stimulate its recovery so that it could do its natural function in sustaining the tree.

You would not increase the pressure of the pump as we did when we raised the tariff, and try to keep the tree alive by taking still more sap from the roots, and refuse to give it water and fertilization as we did when we refused the debenture. You would not do the perfectly asinine things which have made up the reconstruction program of this Government trying to meet the present of the research of the res ent crisis.

Suppose you were a physician called to see a patient whose hands were becoming paralyzed and you should find that the venous circulatory system, artificially stimulated, was taking more blood from the hands than the arterial system was pumping back. Would you increase the artificial stimulus of the venous system, and go away and leave the patient, saying it "would be all right just around the corner" or would you reduce the artificial stimulus operating on the venous system and give the patient a blood transfusion at least equal to what is being pumped out?

PROTESTING INDORSEMENT OF ENTRANCE INTO WORLD COURT

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a letter that I have written to the chairman of the committee on resolutions of the Republican National Convention in relation to the membership of the United States in the League Court.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object, though I shall not object. That is a matter strictly concerning Republican politics, is it not?

Mr. TINKHAM. I think it is Republican and Democratic politics.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman does not contend that anything that happens in the Republican convention at Chicago will have effect upon the people of the Nation as a whole, does he?

Mr. TINKHAM. I think so.
Mr. BLANTON. Other than adversely?
The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. GREENE. Reserving the right to object, does it have anything in it about the race question?

Mr. TINKHAM. Not a thing.

Mr. BLANTON. Is there anything about prohibition in it?

Mr. TINKHAM. Not a thing.
Mr. BLANTON. That is strange.
Mr. SCHAFER. Is there anything in it about birth control?

Mr. TINKHAM. There is not.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

LETTER FROM HON. GEORGE HOLDEN TINKHAM, OF MASSACHUSETTS, TO HON. JAMES R. GARFIELD, CHARRMAN COMMITTEE ON RESOLUTIONS, NATIONAL REPUBLICAN CONVENTION, AGAINST INDORSEMENT OF MEMBERSHIP OF THE UNITED STATES IN THE LEAGUE COURT

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following letter:

JUNE 9, 1932.

The Hon. James R. Garffeld,
Chairman Committee on Resolutions,
National Republican Convention,
Congress Hotel, Cl

Congress Hotel, Chicago, III.

My Dear Mr. Garfield: I have been informed that it is proposed that the Republican platform recommend entry of the United States into the Permanent Court of International Justice of the League of Nations.

If this recommendation be adopted, the Republican Party would advocate violation of the American traditional policy of no foreign political entanglements. It would surrender to the internationalists and alien propagandists who seek to have us enter the European political field and the League of Nations. It would also stultify the repeated declarations of the Republican Party that it is opposed to the entry of the United States into the League of Nations. The Republican Party would be guilty of dishonesty Nations. The Republican Party would be guilty of dishonesty and duplicity.

This court is a creation of the covenant of the League of Nations, which is a part of the Versailles treaty. The United States emphatically rejected the Versailles treaty. The covenant of the League of Nations is the constitution of the court, which the court must support and enforce. The court is part of the machinery of the League of Nations. It is a bureau of the League of Nations. It is called an "organ" of the League of Nations in its literature, and its official journal declares it "a most essential part of the organization of the League of Nations." The League of Nations uses the authority of the court for the purpose of enforcing the Versailles treaty. It is the political instrumentality, agent, and servant of the League of Nations.

No reservations adopted to prevent the provisions of the covenant of the League of Nations applying to the United States could possibly preclude the moral liability of the United States for the decisions and acts of this court and her acceptance of them in good faith if the United States should become a member of the ourt.

The recent "advisory opinion" of the court in relation to the proposed customs union between Germany and Austria is the most convincing evidence of the political character of the court. The unhappy state of the affairs of the American Republic, both domestic and foreign, is largely the result of our dangerous European war adventure of 1917. It bears witness to the dire consequences of departing from the American salutary policy of avoiding entangling alliances and of refraining from any interference or participation in the political affairs of Europe. It also makes manifest the utter folly of the further participation of the United States in the political affairs of Europe and the submission of its interests to European decisions.

The ruin about us must convince the American people that the United States should remain the unfettered agent of international peace and justice, with friendship for all nations and partnership with none.

Very truly yours,

George Holden Tinkham.

GEORGE HOLDEN TINKHAM.

AGRICULTURAL RELIEF

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. President, here is a typical letter from a typical farmer of McLeod County, in my State. It speaks volumes. I ask to have it printed in the RECORD and that it may lie on the table.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

HUTCHINSON, MINN., June 7, 1932.

Hon. Tom D. SCHALL,

Washington, D. C.

Dear Sir: In replying to the letter on the reverse side, will say that the raw deal that farmers get from Washington is enough to make any one skeptical of any of the representatives in Congress. It is just talk and no action and little help that affords gress. It is just talk and no action and little help that affords one in distress. What we need now is united action on the Frazier bill before we lose everything by foreclosure.

Never mind past records of this or that, Senator, if you can line them up and get action on this bill before it is too late. Another year and we'll all be renting farms, or else be in the bread lines in the cities.

Personally, we are trying to meet, at $150 per month, overhead expense with $75 income from one of the best 100-acre farms in McLeod County. If we can not get cheaper money on our loans we are licked.

We think that Congress should remain in session until Government expenses are brought down, so that not more than 10 cents of our dollar is used for taxes, instead of the 30 cents that now goes into tax to run the Government. Cut out the crazy bureaus. We are farmers, and we hear one bureau say, "Raise less," another says," "Raise more," and all such crazy contradictions, and duplications. Keep the Government out of business. A little sound horse sense would go a long way toward straightening things out, and those fellows who are up for reelection who can not make definite promises of government of and by and for the people will never get my vote. Big business takes the lion's share of everything, puts its money into tax-exempt securities, and the little fellow who makes up the rank and file of this Nation is reduced to poverty, the farmers to peasants—no better off than those of the Russia of old. Who feeds the world—who sends the boys to defend the Nation in time of war? Is it big business? A Government "of, by, and for "should be the by-word of those who are in Washington. A nation of bankrupt farmers will not exist long.

When the common people of the farm have extra work, we put in extra hours to take care of it, let Congress stay on the job till it is finished.

A. B. BISHMAN.

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD a letter from the vice president of the Minnesota Farm Bureau Federation, Maple Plain, Minn., which I ask may lie on the table.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MINNESOTA FARM BUREAU FEDERATION, Maple Plain, Minn., June 5, 1932.

Hon. THOMAS SCHALL,

Washington, D. C.

Dear Senator: The farmers in Minnesota are in desperate condition. Commodity prices are so low that few of us can pay our interest and taxes and other current bills. Every week registers a new low for commodities.

If Congress adjourns without passing favorable legislation for the farmers, it will be a crime. I believe the Goldsborough bill, the bill to amend the agricultural marketing act to include the equalization fee, the debenture, and the domestic allotment plan should be passed. Certainly the bills should be voted on before adjournment.

Will you do all in your power to see that these bills are favorably acted upon at once?

Yours very truly,

D. W MENDENWALL

P. S.—The loans to the banks have not helped the farmers one bit. I have no mortgage on my personal property, but I can not borrow one cent at any of the local banks. Merchants are drawing in on credit extensions, and the handwriting of continued defiation is plain to be seen if Congress does not take action at once.

ADMIRALTY NATIONAL PARK-SANCTUARY FOR BEARS IN ALASKA

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a letter from E. T. Foley, St. Paul, Minn., which I ask may be appropriately referred.

There being no objection, the letter was referred to the Special Committee on Conservation of Wild Life Resources and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ST. PAUL, MINN., June 3, 1932.

St. Paul, Minn., June 3, 1932.

Hon. Thomas D. Schall,

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

My Dear Senator: Last year I had occasion to make a hunting trip to Alaska, and I was equally impressed with the great scenic beauty and with the splendid game opportunities. Rightly conserved, the Alaskan big game will offer excellent sport for many years to come. Nonresidents of Alaska are rightly required to be accompanied on their hunting trips by licensed guides, who are also game wardens, and the bag of the nonresident hunter is strictly limited. Unfortunately, I am given to understand that a year or so ago the limit on brown and grizzly bears was taken off as far as residents of Alaska are concerned. The result in slaughter is something similar to that of the buffalo. In the few districts where this limit has not been taken off, a resident may kill a bear at any time when, in his judgment, it is dangerous to life or property. My own experience, and that of all the Alaskan guides with whom I talked, including the chief game wardens, is that unless attacked, the Alaskan bears are quite harmless. To give a man permission to kill one of them whenever in his judgment it is dangerous is simply to remove all restrictions and permit him to kill as many as his whim dictates. I have always felt that the wanton slaughter of our wild life is a thing that should be resisted to the utmost, and I would urge on you putting the same restrictions as to the killing of big bears on the residents of Alaska as are put on nonresident sportsmen.

I would also urge your support for the Admiralty National Park as to the killing of big bears on the residents of Alaska as are put on nonresident sportsmen.

I would also urge your support for the Admiralty National Park bill. This bill, as I understand it, provides a sanctuary for the big bears on Admiralty and Baranof Islands. While grizzly bears are protected in McKinley Park in central Alaska, the big brownies inhabit only the southern mainland and islands. These are the largest and finest of the wild life found on the American Continent, and if their extinction is to be prevented, they must have a sanctuary such as is proposed in this bill.

May I ask if you will be kind enough to advise me whether or not you will support this bill?

Yours very truly,

E. T. Foley.

REMEDIAL LEGISLATION URGED

Mr. CONNALLY presented a letter addressed to Hon. Marvin Jones, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C., from C. T. Schlagal, mayor, and sundry other citizens of Crowell, Tex., which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD without the signatures, as follows:

CROWELL, Tex., June 2, 1932.

Hon. Marvin Jones,

Washington, D. C.

Dear Sir: We, the undersigned citizens of Foard County, are of the opinion that the present Congress is, in large measure, ignorant of the stupendous changes which have swept the country at large since the convening of this session. We wish, therefore, to take this means of calling to your attention some of the very serious unrest which is pervading the country and to take the liberty of suggesting to you our ideas as to some measures which might be of benefit in the present crisis.

It is our studied opinion that the chief cause of the present national calamity is a shortage of actual currency, which has rendered potent the panic, and lack of cooperation (to put it mildly) which has motivated the big bankers in restricting credit and thus depriving business of its lifeblood. Our business has doubled a number of times since our volume of currency has been increased. This expansion of business without currency was made possible through a widely extended and liberal credit policy. With the coming of the Wall Street crash in 1929 the men who controlled this enormous amount of credit were plunged into a state of mind which caused them, either through panic or design, to refuse further credit to carry on business operations, with the consequent cessation of such business activities as were dependent on credit—that is to say, the greater proportion of national industry.

The amount of money current at the beginning of the century was ample to care for all the needs of industry. However, with mass production of automobiles, radio, electric refrigerators, and the hundred and one other new inventions which acted as stimulants to industry this volume of currency was insufficient within itself to care for the commercial needs of the Nation, a deficiency which was palliated in the intervening years by an enormous expansion of credit. With the closing of these avenues of credit it now becomes imperative that they be reopened or that sufficient currency be issued by the Government to ca amount of industry

Since the convening of this session of the Congress it has become increasingly evident to the people of this country that no inflation of the currency may be expected unless drastic steps are taken to bring to the attention of our legislators the fact that a desperate constituency is demanding the wherewithal to carry on its business. The state of the Nation is such that a very dangerous situation will be presented unless measures are taken to relieve the situation.

Time after time efforts have been made to reopen the sources credit. These efforts have failed signally and without exception. Time after time efforts have been made to reopen the sources of credit. These efforts have failed signally and without exception. We therefore call upon the men at the helm of the Nation to accept the other alternative. If expansion of our currency can be had by retaining the gold standard, retain it by all means. But if the expansion of our currency is dependent upon the shelving of the gold standard or the adoption of a bimetallic standard, then no hesitation should be felt at taking the necessary steps. The test of the sovereignty of a nation is its power to issue money. If in a crisis of this sort the United States can not meet this test, then it has failed of sovereignty and is no longer worthy of respect as a Government.

Ninety per cent of our people are at the mercy of that 10 per cent known as capitalists. We request that you use your vote and your influence to release us from this unwholesome domination.

Stated briefly, we wish to request that you use every possible means to bring about the passage of an act providing for the reasonable inflation of our currency. We request that, if you have not already done so, you sign the petition to bring the Patman bonus bill to the floor of the House and use every effort to bring about its passage. Failing its enactment, we request that you attempt to bring about the passage of other laws authorizing the issuance and immediate distribution to the masses of more currency in the quickest possible time.

We are sending copies of this letter to the two Texas Senators with the request that they cooperate in securing a currency expansion law of some sort.

May we ask that you communicate to the Foard County News any reply you wish to make to this letter? Thank you.

AGRICULTURAL SITUATION

there appeared from the Department of Commerce, Herbert Hoover, Secretary, a publication of "statistics" by the United States Census of Agriculture, 1925, with the aid of which I pre-pared and as a delegate to the national Democratic convention of 1928 attempted to disseminate the information shown. While it then appeared that the shrinkage of the values of farm lands and buildings, from 1920 to 1925, had been more than $16,000,000,000; yet in 21 of the States of the Union there seemed to have been quite an increase in the numbers of owners operating 000,000; yet in 21 of the States of the Union there seemed to have been quite an increase in the numbers of owners operating farms.

In 14 of the 15 States from Maine to Minnesota, inclusive, marked by me on a plan submitted as division 1, botunded on the north by Canada, on the east by the Atlantic Ocean, and south by Mason and Dixon line and the Ohio River, the number of owners operating farms had increased and in only one had there been a decrease. With the exception of the State of Vermont, where there had been a decrease of ownership, the States of the division were shaded red on the plan.

With regard to the five States—Washington, Oregon, California, Arizona, and New Mexico—bordering on the Pacific Ocean and Mexico, ownership of farms having increased in all of them as well as in Utah and Nevada, these seven States were also shaded red on the plan. But as ownership had decreased in all of them as left white. Divisions 1 and 2 shaded red; 3 and 4 white.

But with the publication of the United States census of 1930 it became apparent that in the full decade from 1920 to 1930 in place of owners operating farms in 14 of the 15 States constituting division 1 having increased and only in one State, to wit, Vermont, had there been a decrease of owners operating farms, as the United States census of agriculture, 1925, had indicated, the United States census for 1930 disclosed a decrease in 14 of the 15 States of this division 1 and an increase in only 1 State, Delaware, where there were 250 additional owners operating farms, but in the entire division of 15 States there had been a decrease of 120,876 from the 26,535 managers in 1920, and a decrease of 58,636 from the 35,1127 tenants operating farms in 1920. This seems to indicate 188,488 employers of farm labor forced out of the vocation of agriculture in this section in the 10 years which followed the Wilsonian era of Democratic administration. It is true that in 5 of the 15 States constituting this division 1 there had been an increase in the values of farm la

But when we consider the condition of the farmers in the other 10 States of this division we find the decrease in values of farms and farm buildings from 1920 to 1930 in Maine amounted to a loss of $9,712,377; in New Hampshire, $12,440,983; in Vermont, $13,153,026; in New York, $107,074,443; in Pennsylvania, $121,395,381; in Michigan, $268,353,110; in Wisconsin, $455,295,326; in Ohio, $966,957,306; in Minnesota, $1,170,857,352; and in Indiana, $1,236,606,203. A total loss in these 10 States of $4,361,795,506, as against the gain in the other five of $112,521,490; or a net loss of $4,249,-224,016; or 68,585 owners gaining $112,521,490 and 1,050,769 losing $4,361,795,506; and 12,787,070 acres less under cultivation. Without any insinuation with regard to the small gain of the few and the great loss of the many, it is apparent that something is wrong in this division No. 1.

In division No. 2, in spite of the shrinkage in values of farms But when we consider the condition of the farmers in the other wrong in this division No. 1.

In division No. 2, in spite of the shrinkage in values of farms and farm buildings in the five States of Washington, Oregon, Nevada, Utah, and New Mexico, amounting to $225,148,951, the increase was so great in California, $355,942,458, and in Arizona, $11,960,935, as to make the net gain of the division $142,755,246, with an increase of farms, 35,102, and acreage, 18,398,677. In six of the seven States there was gain in ownership; in one, loss.

Passing from these two divisions, 1 and 2, and considering No. 3 on the plan, we find that in the 11 States of this division from 1920 to 1930 the decrease in owners operating farms amounted to 83,840; of managers, 4,441; with an increase of tenants amounting to 64,367. In values of the farms and farm buildings, worth in 1920, $29,625,361,688, shrinkage was, in Wyoming, $28,054,806; Idaho, $163,125,492; Colorado, $235,840,419; Montana, $250,844,022; North Dakota, $535,149,779; Kansas, $544,425,287; South Dakota, $1.183,516,370; Nebraska, $1,212,735,821; Missouri, $1,262,153,039; Illinois, $2,652,883,729; and Iowa, $3,376,990,454—a loss in values of farms and farm buildings amounting to the stupendous sum of $11,445,719,218, or ever 28 per cent, in 10 years.

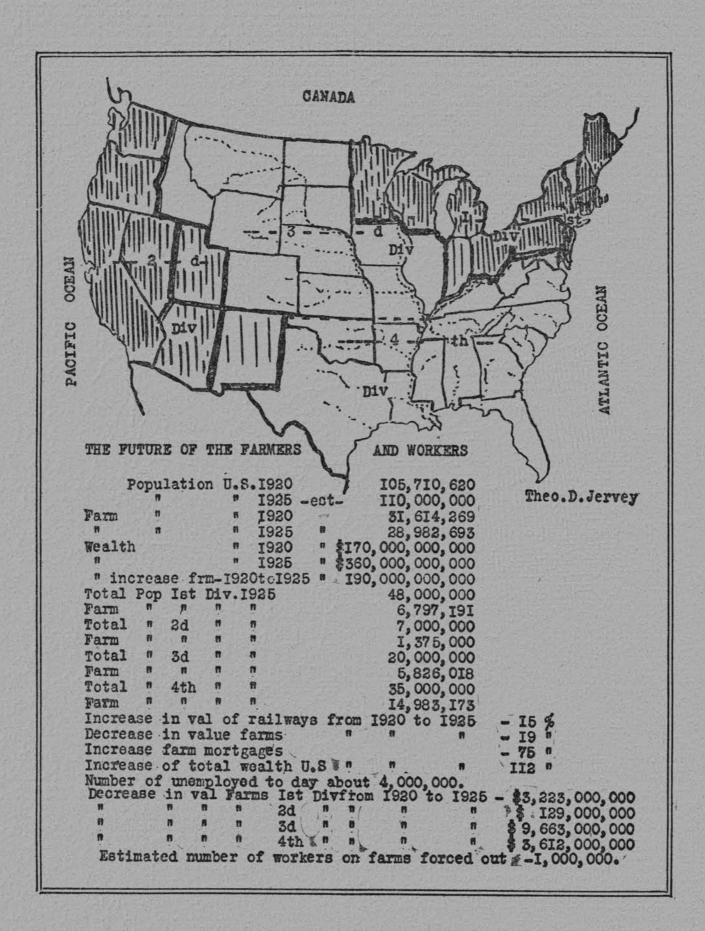

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Record a communication in reference to the agricultural situation from Mr. Theodore D. Jervey, of Charleston, S. C., and also some maps accompanying it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered. The communication is as follows:

The communication is as follows:

In the 33 States of the North and West the values of farms and farm buildings, amounting in 1920 to $51,224,103,326, had been reduced by 1930 to $35,671,915,338.

In the remaining 15 States of the Union, generally designated as the Southern States, and containing in 1920 a little less than half of the 6,448,139 farmers of the United States, their farms and farm buildings, of course, were of less value, amounting in 1920 to only $15,086,321,907. But they furnished occupation at that date to 1,591,115 owners, 18,155 managers, and 1,587,060 tenants, as compared to 2,333,875 owners, 50,275 managers, and 867,619 tenants in the other 33 States of the Union. The total loss in values of farms and farm buildings in the 15 Southern States amounted to $2,764,514,591, but it was a loss of $2,909,092,809 in 14 of the Southern States, because in one, Florida, there was an increase in owners and in the value of farms and farm buildings amounting to $144,578,218, second only to the increase in California. In the 14 Southern States, where the values of farms and farm buildings shrank, they fell in Maryland from $386,596,850 in 1920 to $360,156,066, a loss of $26,440,784; in Alabama from $543,657,755 to $504,756,249, a loss of $38,901,506; in Louisiana from $474,038,793 to $423,410,169, a loss of $50,628,624; in West Virginia from $1,033,406 to $344,023,644, a loss of $66,759,762; in Texas from $3,700,173,319 to $3,606,223,554, a loss of $93,949,765; in Oklahoma from $1,863,865,294 to $1,244,937,126, a loss of $118,928,168; in Virginia from $1,024,435,025 to $859,633,375, a loss of $164,801,635; in Arkansas from $753,110,666 to $550,537,206, a loss of $202,573,460; in Mississippi from $789,896,773 to $569,004,958, a loss of $220,091,820; in North Carolina from $1,024,979,894 to $745,643,794, a loss of $220,050,166; in Tennessee from $1,024,979,894 to $745,643,758, a loss of $220,050,166; in Tennessee from $1,024,979,894 to $745,643,758, a loss of $220,050,166; in Tennessee from $1,024,979,894 to $745,643,758, a loss of $220,050,166; in Tennessee from $1,024,979,894 to $745,643,794, a loss of $220,050,166; in Tennessee from $1,024,979,894 to $745,643,794, a loss of $220,050,166; in Tennessee from $1,024,979,894 to $745,643,794, a loss of $220,050,166; in Tennessee from $1,024,979,894 to $745,643,794, a loss of $220,050,166; in Tennessee from $1,024,979,894 to $745,643,794, a loss of $220,050,166; in Tennessee from $1,024,979,894 to $745,643,794, a loss of $220,050,166; in Tennessee from $1,024,979,894 to $745,643,794, a loss of $220,050,166; in Tennessee from $1,024,979,994 to $745,643,794, a loss of $220,050,166; in Tennessee from $1, Specific industries are wholly prostrate and there is wide-spread business difficulty and discontent among the individual business men of the country. Prosperity to the extent that we have it is unduly concentrated and has not equitably touched the lives of the farmer, the wage earner, and the individual business man."

The wealth of the United States in 1920 was calculated to be then $170,000,000,000. It is now stated to amount to $400,000.000,000, and at 6 per cent income, the income-tax returns seem to establish that, certainly up to the gambling orgy of October,

As the value of all farm property in 1920 was found to be $77,923,651,599, and by the census of 1930 was about $55,000,-000,000, the farmers of the United States have apparently been "touched" to the extent of about $22,000,000,000 in the depreciation of all farm property in the 10 years. Nearly four years

In 7 of these 1.5 Southern States—Kentucky, West Virginia, Virginia, North Carolina, Tennessee, South Carolina, and Georgia—with but little more than one-third of the farm acreage of the whole division, the loss was three-quarters of the whole, or about $2,156,476,525. In only 1 State, Florida, did owners increase. In his acceptance address, when nominated by the Republican Party for the office of President of the United States in 1928, Mr. Herbert Hoover said:

"The most urgent economic problem in our Nation to-day is in agriculture. It must be solved if we are to bring prosperity and contentment to one-third of our people directly, and to all our people indirectly. We have pledged ourselves to find a solution."

In his acceptance address, when nominated by the Democratic Party for the office of President of the United States in 1928, Gov. Alfred Smith said:

have elapsed since the President, Mr. Hoover, as nominee of the Republican Party, recognizing agriculture as "the most urgent economic problem in our Nation," pledged his party to a solution of the problem; but the result so far seems to have been but a doubling of the number unemployed, stated by the Democratic nominee in 1928 to amount to 4,000,000, now 8,000,000. If they continue to increase at this rate, it will be useless for anyone to contend that they shall not be politically arrayed, save as he thinks fit, they will array themselves against the forces of greed which have brought the country to the condition in which it is and in which the farmers and the workers, the foundations of the Republic, are being undermined.

CHICAGO POLICE AND SPEAKEASIES

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I ask leave to have printed in the RECORD extracts from an article by Frank R. Kent in to-day's issue of the Baltimore Sun relative to conditions in Chicago.

There being no objection, the extracts were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Baltimore Sun, June 11, 1932]

And the Chicago situation itself should count some with the ates if it could be brought home to them. Because cer-the condition that exists here is almost incredible. What delegates if it tainly the condition that exists here is almost incredible. What you have is a city bankrupt through rotten politics in which it is generally admitted the police force is carried by the speakeasies. It is a startling thing to say, but there seems little doubt about it. Policemen in this town have received no salaries for three months. They frequently have gone that long in the past without any. The salary of a Chicago patrolman is $45 a week, but he does not get it. There are between five and six thousand of them, and they have had no pay since March.

Yet there are no resignations from the force no distress among

Yet there are no resignations from the force, no distress among the families of policemen, no evictions for failure to pay rent, and very little complaint. And just as many men want to become very little complaint. And just as many men want to become policemen. Why? How do they keep going? The answer supplied by men who ought to know seems the only answer. It is that they are carried by the "speakies," Of these, there are between 12,000 and 15,000 in the city. Upon them, it is charged, the police force of Chicago largely depends.

The property of a well-leaded and are all leaded and all the police force of the property of a well-leaded and all the property of the property of of Chicago largely depends.

The proprietor of a well-located and decently run speakeasy says quite frankly that he has 28 patrolmen on his pay roll at $5 and $10 a month. In this police district there are about 50 speakeasies. If the police collect from all of these at that rate, they more than make up for their lack of salary from the city. "How else," asked this man, "are they going to live? Where else are they going to get it? It isn't much for us to pay and it isn't much for them to get. It pays us to give it and they have got to have it."

have it."

"Of course," he continued, "they get all they want to eat and drink besides, and no one ever thinks of expecting a policeman without a salary to pay rent or grocery bills. What's the use of kidding about it? They are being carried by the "speakies," and drink besides, and no one ever thinks of expecting a policeman without a salary to pay rent or grocery bills. What's the use of kidding about it? They are being carried by the "speakies," and anybody with a grain of sense knows it. If we didn't carry them there wouldn't be any police force. You wouldn't have any town, because the gangs would just take it apart. You know that as well as I do. You have got to have policemen or you haven't got a town. We've got to have policemen just as well as anybody else. It's good business for us to carry them, but it's good for the town, too, and it makes it worth while for a policeman to stay a policeman. It doesn't hurt anything and everybody is satisfied."

That's the state of affairs in present-day Chicago. It does not man. It doesn't hurt anything and everybody is satisfied."

That's the state of affairs in present-day Chicago. It does not apply, of course, to all policemen. There are individuals among them who manage to scrape by without "speakle" support, though how they do it for three months is more or less of a mystery. But that to a large extent the patrolman's living now depends upon speakeasy pay seems beyond question. There isn't any other way to explain how they keep going, and there seems to be no secrecy about it. It is simply accepted. None the less to an outsider it is more or less of a shock that in the third largest city in the world the forces of law and order should be so completely sustained by the law violators. the law violators.

"IS THE CONSTITUTION A MERE SOUVENIR?"

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I present and ask leave to have printed in the Congressional Record an address delivered by Hon. Thomas P. Gore, United States Senator from Oklahoma, entitled "Is the Constitution a Mere Souvenir." This address was delivered under the auspices of the Sentinels of the Republic, over a nation-wide broadcasting network.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Friends, Americans, countrymen, eavesdroppers all, lend me your ears. Please keep quiet, as I have but 13 minutes in which to exhaust both you and my subject. I speak under the auspices of the Sentinels of the Republic.

Did it ever occur to you that even the crows, the chattering crows in the wildwood, have their appointed sentinels? But what crows in the wildwood, have their appointed sentinels? But what is stranger still, the crows heed the warnings of their sentinels. This contributes alike to the safety and to the happiness of the crows both individually and collectively. Thus the Sentinels of the Republic seek to safeguard the foundations of the Republic, to safeguard the citadel of your rights and liberties, to safeguard constitutional liberty itself—which means liberty regulated by law. My friends, there is no other liberty. Liberty unrestrained by law is mere license. Liberty unprotected by law soon falls, a helpless victim beneath the iron heel of arbitrary power. The Sentinels of the Republic, without making of the Constitution either a fetish or an idol, would smite those, and only those who would lay profane hands upon the Ark of the Covenant of your liberties. They would protect liberty against license on the one hand and against centralized power on the other. For ages, if I hand and against centralized power on the other. For ages, if I may say so, the unsolved riddle of the ages was this: How to reconcile liberty with power. Where power is unrestrained, liberty is dead. Where liberty is unrestrained, government is dead. In this country we have sought to reconcile liberty and power. We have solved this problem, as we believe, under our Constitution. Wherever men live together in organized society, there government exists. Wherever government exists, there power must be vested either in one or in the few or in the many.

The first form of government to arise was monarchy, where power was vested in the king. The will of the king was the law of the land. He could protect himself and his court, but the people had no rights that the king was obliged to respect.

Next came oligarchy, power vested in the few. The will of the few was the law of the land. The few could protect themselves, but the many had no rights that the few were obliged to respect.

Came next, democracy. I mean the democracies of Greece, where power was vested in the majority. The will of the majority was the law of the land. The majority could protect itself; the minority, however great, had no rights which the majority was obliged to respect.

was obliged to respect.

But in searching the family tree of our own institutions, we look less to the Republic of Rome or the democracies of Greece than to the popular assemblies of the ancient Teutonic tribes in Central Europe. Their assemblies met year after year, and they voted upon the laws that were to govern them and upon the rulers who were to administer those laws—no laws but of their own making—no rulers but of their own choosing. That was Government by consent. In two of the Swiss Cantons, these assemblies still meet year after year and vote upon the laws and the rulers who are to administer the laws. Mr. Freeman, the great constitutional historian of England, says that in these primitive constitutional historian of England, says that in these primitive assemblies is to be found the germ of every free constitution upon the globe to-day. Those institutions were transplanted by the Angles and Saxons to England and by our own ancestors were transplanted to the wilderness of the New World. The principle enunciated in the Declaration of Independence is, under our theory, that the minority, however small, has rights and liberties, which no majority, however great, has the right or should have the power to invade or to violate. Under our theory the minority, though consisting of only a single individual, and though that individual be the veriest tatterdemalion in the land, has certain rights which no majority, however numerous, and no government, however great, has the right or should have the power to invade or to violate.

I have said before that to my mind it is one of the chiefest

I have said before that to my mind it is one of the chiefest glaties of our free institutions that the Government of the United States, with all its armies and all its navies and with all its power States, with all its armies and all its navies and with all its power and all its majesty can not strip a street urchin of the rags upon his back—not without the urchin's consent—except upon the payment of just compensation for the rags. Thus far have we gone to protect the liberty of the individual against power, against the tyranny of the state. This principle was laid down in the Declaration of Independence when our fathers declared that all men are created equal; not equal in physical or mental or moral or material strength, but equal in the right to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness, and, as some of us believe, not only the right to pursue but the right upon occasion to overtake happiness. Is the happiness of the human race bound up with the freedom or with the slavery of the individual? Individualism versus communism may be the ultimate, the inevitable issue of the future. be the ultimate, the inevitable issue of the future.

This is the spirit of our free institutions. If the Declaration of Independence be the spirit of our free institutions, then the Constitution is the body of our free institutions.

The Constitution was adopted to guarantee and preserve the rights and liberties proclaimed in the Declaration of Independence. rights and liberties proclaimed in the Declaration of Independence. The fathers of our Republic were wise men. They learned the lessons of experience. From experience they learned the truth so well expressed by Guizot: "Liberties are nothing until they have become rights, positive rights formally recognized and consecrated. Rights, even when recognized, are nothing so long as they are not intrenched within guaranties. And, lastly, guaranties are nothing so long as they are not maintained by forces capable of maintaining them—such are the successive steps in the progress toward a free government." To provide these guaranties the Constitution was ordained and established. a free government." To provide these guaranties the Constitu-tion was ordained and established.

tion was ordained and established.

To my mind, the preamble of our Constitution is the most eloquent passage in all political literature. "We, the people of the United States, in order to form a more perfect union, establish justice, insure domestic tranquility, provide for the common defense, promote the general welfare, and secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and our posterity, do ordain and establish this Constitution of the United States of America." If the liberty of the individual is to be protected, then the power of the Government must be limited.

ment must be limited.

Ours is a government of limited powers. Under no other system can liberty survive. I speak not of the partition of power between the Federal Government and the States, nor of the partition of power either in the General or the State Governments into legispower either in the General or the State Governments into legislative, executive, and judicial departments. All governments have certain features in common. Free governments have more points of resemblance than they have points of difference. But, after all, it is the points of difference that give them character and individuality. I will speak of these points of difference.

I come now to the bill of rights, to the first 10 amendments to the Constitution of the United States. The American bill of rights, apart from the Federal system itself, is our chief contribution to the science of politics to the ext of covernment. The first rights, apart from the Federal system itself, is our chief contribution to the science of politics, to the art of government. The first 10 amendments did three things—they limited the powers of the General Government; they secured the rights of the States; they guaranteed certain rights and liberties to the individual.

This brings me to one of the distinguishing differences between our system of government and all other systems of free government. Even in England the theory still prevails that the Government granted certain rights and liberties to the people—charter rights, they are called— and, as the Government granted those rights to the people, the Government can revoke those rights at its pleasure. We accept no such theory in this country; we do not derive our rights and our liberties from our Government. We did not create the Government to grant us certain rights; we created not create the Government to grant us certain rights; we created our Government to safeguard our rights and our liberties. In England sovereignty resides in the Parliament, not in the people. In our country and under our theory sovereignty resides in the people themselves. They have delegated certain powers to the General Government. They have delegated certain powers to the State governments. They have reserved other powers to themselves, have delegated them to no government whatever. If the English Parliament to-day should pass a law abolishing freedom of press, freedom of speech, freedom of conscience, or trial by jury, no court in the realm could annul such an act. It would be a valid law and only revolution could rescue the people from such tyranny.

But under our system if Congress should pass an act to-day abolishing these inalienable rights and liberties, the Supreme Court would on the morrow declare such an act to be null and The court would declare that Congress had no constitutional void. The court would declare that Congress had no constitutional power to abrogate the constitutional rights and liberties of the people. This is another principle which differentiates our free institutions from all others. In no other country has the court the power to annul an act of the legislature—of Congress or Parliament. There are those who think that we ought to strip the courts of this extraordinary power. The people could deprive the courts of this power and could make Congress omnipotent. But you can not make the powers of Congress omnipotent on the one hand and make the rights of the people inviolate and inviolable upon the other. The people have made their choice. To abrogate this choice would render the Constitution a mere souvenir.

Remember this: Not all movement is improvement. Some one has said, "Be as revolutionary as science; be as reactionary as has said, "Be as revolutionary as science; be as reactionary as truth." Conservatism, unspurred by liberalism, would degenerate into helpless stagnation. Liberalism, unbridled by conservatism, would degenerate into hopeless confusion.

My time has expired. I can only allude to the incompatibility between civil liberty on the one hand and economic slavery on

The Sentinels of the Republic might well adopt as their motto the words of the great southern orator: "He who saves his country saves all things, and all things saved will bless him; he who lets his country die lets all things die, and all things dying curse him."

Americans, be of good cheer. Bet on America. No matter how dark or how long the night, the morrow cometh.

ECONOMIC CONDITIONS AND UNEMPLOYMENT RELIEF

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a copy of a letter received from Robert M. Harriss, of New York City.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The letter is as follows:

NEW YORK, N. Y., June 7, 1932.

Senator ELMER THOMAS.

Senator Elmer Thomas,

Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

Dear Senator Thomas: Last week foreign nations took $120,000,000 of gold from our country. During the last 8½ months they have taken $1,142,000,000 in gold. Foreign nations already have about 25,000,000,000 of our dollars, the principal and interest on a large part of which they are not meeting.

If the present policy is permitted to continue, they will not only have our dollars and our gold, but all we will have will be their debts. Therefore it is important that our Government lay aside false pride, banking technicalities, and the prejudiced advice of some, and immediately stop further shipments of our gold to foreign countries. This will stop this devastating deflation, quickly bring about currency expansion, and rise in prices of commodities and other values, and an equitable revaluation of the present destructive gold dollar in the neighborhood of its value when the existing stupendous inflated debts were incurred. incurred.

The unfair purchasing power of this gold dollar is paralyzing and destroying business. Stupendous inflated debts can not be paid with a dollar that is buying about three times as much in commodities as when the present debts were incurred. They simply will not match. Do you not believe this unfair dollar is the fundamental difficulty of balancing the Budget? Is there any valid reason for these unnatural failures, bankruptcies, loss of home forms of a when a country has short half the of homes, farms, etc., when a country has about half the gold of the world and is blessed with such an abundance of all the necessities of life? Is it not inevitable that we must come to some form of controlled inflation or currency expansion, fol-lowed by an equitable revaluation of the gold dollar, unless we wish to face financial and economic disaster?

There were about 25 nations involved in the World War, during which time they also incurred stupendous inflated debts. All of these countries except our own country have adopted some form of currency expansion and revaluation to avert economic ruin. Do you believe we can be any exception to this rule, with our existing impossible, stupendous, inflated debts?

There are three ways that this urgently needed currency expansion may be accomplished:

First. The Government immediately to stop further exports of Second. A comprehensive Government building relief program financed with currency issued against Government long-term consol bonds. (The program should not be financed by selling of Government bonds, for the people have neither the money nor the incentive to purchase them, and if such bonds were issued and sold, they would only further increase the burden of the existing heavy and impossible taxes, and would not bring about the urgently needed controlled inflation.)

the urgently needed controlled inflation.)

Third. The prompt payment of the balance of the adjusted-compensation certificate obligation made optional at a reasonable discount of, say, 2 per cent per annum, payment to be made by currency issued against Government long-term consol bonds, for the reasons explained in No. 2. If payment is handled on a business basis and made optional at a discount to those soldiers in need, it will have the following beneficial results: It will save the Government approximately $600,000,000 in the principal and reduce the Budget for the time being by about $150,000,000 per annum, and defer payment until many years hence. It will greatly increase currency expansion and circulation equally in all greatly increase currency expansion and circulation equally in all parts of the United States, bring a halt to the defiation, and a quick rise in prices of all kinds. It will not be making a new Government obligation but discounting an existing Government

The enactment of any of the measures mentioned in Nos. 1, 2, or 3 will immediately halt the deflation, bring about controlled inflation, followed by an equitable revaluation of the existing destructive ratio of the gold dollar. We must cease adoring the golden calf, and the sooner we come to an equitable revaluation of this impossible gold dollar, the better it will be for our people, our country, and the world. Do you not believe quick action is imperative in this grave crisis, unless we wish to face a catastrophe? Are not human lives and rights more important than trying to preserve this existing unfair, destructive gold dollar and attempting to balance the Budget with it? During the war we were not concerned with balancing the Budget when we spent about $25,000,000.000.

Inclosed is copy of my statement recently made before the Ways and Means Committee on the payment of the adusted-compensation certificates and currency expansion, which you may be interested in reading at your leisure.
With best wishes, sincerely yours,

ROBT. M. HARRIS.

ALFRED E. SMITH AS A PRESIDENTIAL CANDIDATE

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD an editorial which appeared in the Pittsburgh Press and other Scripps-Howard papers yesterday, and likewise a short editorial appearing in to-day's papers of the same issue.

There being no objection, the editorials were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From Scripps-Howard papers of June 10, 1932]

GIVE US SMITH

Every item of his economic training and his international ex-perience cried out against the tariff bill, yet Herbert Hoover signed it. Every instinct in Franklin Roosevelt's make-up revolts against the New York City revelations, yet for over a year he has temporized before Tammany.

Herbert Hoover and Franklin Roosevelt possess in common one dominating trait. Faced in a pinch with political consequences, they yield.

And now, when decisiveness is called for as never before in history, our Nation is confronted with the possibility of four more years of vaciliation. Between the two it is a toss-up.

The nomination of Hoover is certain. The nomination of Roosevelt is possible, but not certain. Between Roosevelt and the White House there now stands a man endowed in the very highest degree with those qualities which both Hoover and Roosevelt lack and which the country so direly needs. That man is Alfred E. Smith. Something down deep in the human being determines the type.

As certain as it is that some eyes are blue and some brown, some men are negative and some positive. In Roosevelt and Smith we have the extremes. As Roosevelt generalizes, Smith is specific. As Roosevelt loves to delay, Smith loves action. Irresolution is ingrained in the one; boldness in the other. And the times plead desperately for boldness.

desperately for boldness.

It is necessary only to review the utterances of the two in recent weeks to get the full effect of the contrast. The speech by Smith, for example, on May 17; the one by Roosevelt five days later. On the issues that beset the Nation Smith declared himself in words that no one, no matter whether he agreed or disagreed, could misunderstand—on veterans' relief, that bugaboo of the pussymisunderstand—on veterans rener, that buganoo of the pussyfooter; on Federal appropriations for public works to help unemployment; on the war debts; on the sales tax; on prohibition; and the beer tax. Not a soul who could read or hear was left in doubt as to what Al Smith would do if he were at the helm.

On May 23 came Roosevelt. In columns of graceful generalities

On May 23 came Roosevelt. In columns of gracerul generalities this man discussed the situation, and not once did he touch on a single one of those issues on which Smith had so forcefully spoken—not one. The hope of youth he dealt with; clarity of vision he favored; enthusiasm and imagination and better planning and greater faith he indorsed. Waste in industry and speculation and the present price level he condemned, and so at last he did reach his conclusion. He came out for experimentation.

It is with regret that we say that in Franklin Roosevelt we have another Hoover. For him in the beginning our hopes were high. But the events that have occurred since Roosevelt became Governor of New York have drawn the parallel between the man in Albany and the man in Washington. The parallel is as inescapable as is the contrast between the Roosevelt-Hoover type and Smith. In our solemn judgment, the election of either Hoover or Roosevelt on November next would be a blow from which this Nation would not recover in a generation. We have had about as much as we can stand of government by doubt. The times call for courage and action. We have those qualities in Smith. There are other men in the Democratic Party who possess them. Judged by performance Roosevelt does not.

The Democratic delegates in convention assembled will have it within their power to name the kind of man the country needs. That man, as things now stand, is Alfred E. Smith.

[From Scripps-Howard papers of June 11, 1982] THE ANSWER

The Scripps-Howard declaration for Smith as against Roosevelt has brought from many sources this query:

"If you think so much of Smith to-day, why didn't you support him against Hoover in 1928?" him against Hoover in 1928?"
The answer is, we wish we had.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 11361) making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against the revenues of such District for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The reading of the bill will be proceeded with.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 2, line 7, to strike out "$6,500,000" and insert "$8.550,000," so as to read:

Be it enacted, etc., That in order to defray the expenses of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, any revenue (not including the proportionate share of the United States in any revenue arising as the result of the expenditure of appropriations made for the fiscal year 1924 and prior fiscal years) now required by law to be credited to the District of Columbia and the United States in the same proportion that each contributed to the activity or source from whence such revenue was derived shall be credited wholly to the District of Columbia, and, in addition, $8,550,000 is appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be advanced July 1, 1932, and all the otherwise appropriated, to be advanced July 1, 1932, and all the remainder out of the combined revenues of the District of Columbia, and the tax rate in effect in the fiscal year 1932 on real estate and tangible personal property subject to taxation in the District of Columbia shall not be decreased for the fiscal year 1933, namely:

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to line 5 on page 9. Mr. KING. Mr. President, I call the attention of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BINGHAM] to an amendment on page 2 involving an increase from $6,500,000 to $8,550,000. Is that the amount which it is expected the Federal Government shall appropriate to help pay the expenses of the District government?

Mr. BINGHAM. The Senator will remember that from about 1876 until 1920 the Federal Government paid one-half of the expenses of the District. From 1921 to 1924 the Federal Government paid 40 per cent of the expenses of the District government. Then a compromise was agreed upon whereby the Federal Government contributed $9,000,000 to the District, and that lasted from 1925 to 1930, when a new compromise was reached, and the Federal Government has contributed $9,500,000 for the past two years. The Bureau of the Budget in preparing the bill based its estimates on a continuation of the amount which had been agreed upon by the Congress in the past two years.

At the time that compromise was reached certain Members of the House of Representatives announced in the public press that the next time they had a chance they would lower it to $6,000,000, so as to have something on which to contend with the Senate. That has been done by the House lowering it to $6,500,000, which is very much less than any similar appropriation during the last 10 or 12 years. The committee was inclined to take the views of the Bureau of Efficiency that the proper contribution on the part of the Federal Government was something over $10,000,000; but in view of the economy program, the committee finally came to the conclusion that the best thing to do was to continue in theory the appropriation at the same figure which has been made during the past two years, namely, $9,500,000, and strike from that figure 10 per cent as a reduction for the present year, hoping that it might go back to the higher figure in the future. That leaves in this bill the figure $8,500,000.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, there has been a protracted controversy as to whether the Federal Government should contribute to meet the expenses of the District government; and if so, the amount of such contribution. Before Washington assumed the proportions now attained and before it had the wealth and population which it now possesses there was a feeling upon the part of Congress that the Federal Government should give important aid in the development of the Capital of the Nation. Perhaps that view was correct, but since those early days Washington has increased in wealth and in population. Hundreds of thousands of people have been drawn to this city for various reasons. There are more than 100,000 Federal employees in Washington, and all important nations of the earth, as well as many that are limited in wealth and population, have their diplomatic and other representatives located here.

Business interests of the United States have permanent representatives located in Washington. Men of wealth spend a portion of their time in this city, and bring with them capital for investment. The many banks within the District and the heavy deposits therein are evidences of the growth, the business development, and the prosperity of the District. It is known that people of means establish not only domiciles but bona fide residences in the District of Columbia, and many of them engage in business activities, and, of course, materially add to the wealth and the growth of the city. The Federal Government expends annually enormous sums not only to meet the salaries of the tens of thousands of employees located in Washington but for the purpose of erecting important and, indeed, magnificent buildings for Federal purposes.

I think there is no doubt that Washington is the most prosperous city in the United States to-day, and that it gives less evidence of depression than can be found perhaps in any place in the world. There is a constant stream of money poured into the District by the Federal Government to pay the compensation of its employees, as well as to meet other obligations which it incurs. It is not a manufacturing city such as Detroit or Philadelphia, although there are important business concerns within the District. It is obvious, of course, that the large expenditures of the Government constitute the golden stream from which the majority of the residents of the District are nourished. If it were not for the money expended by the Federal Government within the District, Washington would shrink to insignificant proportions. It is the Federal Government that enriches the District. Every building that it constructs furnishes employment to a large number of people and puts additional money into the pockets of the people. The expenditures of the Government enrich the residents of the District and add immensely to the value of the privately owned property in

It is conceded that the value of real estate in Washington has reached very high levels, and that such values have been largely due to the activities of the Federal Government and the hundreds of millions of dollars which it has expended within the District. One has only to make inquiry as to the value of real estate in all parts of the District 15 or 20 years ago, and then ascertain the value in 1929, 1930, and even now, to appreciate the great increase in wealth brought to the people of the District by reason of the activities of the Federal Government.

Nearly every city in the United States is overwhelmed with debt; the cities, as well as the States, are cutting down expenses in order that existing deficits may be met and the necessary operating expenses for the coming year provided for. The result is that with the shrinking values the taxes imposed upon the people of the various cities and States weigh heavily upon their inhabitants. Indeed, it is difficult to find sources of revenue and millions of people find it impossible to meet the taxes levied by the States and their political subdivisions. The result is that millions of dollars worth of real estate and homes are sold under the hammer by the tax gatherer. This situation adds to unemployment, intensifies the depression, and contributes to the tragic and deplorable condition now confronting the American people. Many cities and school districts are unable to meet their bonds and we read of schools being closed and teachers being discharged and people being unable to obtain credit or meet their obligations.

Mr. President, in view of the deplorable situation, I think it improper to call on the Federal Government to make a contribution of $8,500,000 to aid the District of Columbia in meeting its municipal expenditures. As I have indicated, there is no reason why the Federal Government should make as large a contribution to help the District of Columbia meet its expenses at the present time as it did many years ago. Indeed, there are many people who believe that in view of the advantages which the District of Columbia possesses the Federal Government ought not to make any contribution whatever toward the expenses of the District government.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I want to ask the Senator if he knows whether the Federal Government contributes to the taxes in the various cities of the country in which the Federal Government has Federal buildings? Take the city of New York, for instance, where the Federal Government owns a great number of buildings, or any other city of any size where the Government owns buildings. As I understand, in not a single city outside of Washington does the Federal Government contribute to its taxes, and yet here in Washington, as I understand, the Federal Government contributes to city taxation because of the fact that it owns many buildings here.

I feel that we ought to be liberal toward the city of Washington; it is the Capital of our country, and we ought to contribute a reasonable amount, and we have contributed very large sums. We have appropriated during the last few years scores of millions of dollars toward the upbuilding and beautifying of this city. I think the taxpayers of the city ought to do their part, and that the Federal Government ought not to be required to contribute as much as the citizens of this city demand. I think they are demanding too much. I think this appropriation is too large. I think the amendment ought to be disagreed to, and that we ought not to pay more than what the House has provided.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I am in substantial agreement with the statements made by the Senator from Tennessee. If people of the District of Columbia were taxed as heavily as the people are in many parts of the United States, then there might be stronger reasons for the Federal Government appropriating to help discharge the expenses incurred by the District government.

As Senators know, in many States in addition to heavy ad valorem taxes there are income taxes and estate taxes levied upon the people. I think the facts are that the inhabitants of the District of Columbia pay less taxes than are paid generally throughout the United States. In the States there are the State taxes, which are very heavy, then there are city taxes, county taxes, and various other burdens laid upon the people in order that funds may be obtained to meet State and municipal demands. We hear of thousands of homes, as well as personal property, being levied upon to meet the taxes imposed in various States and municipalities. There is incontestable evidence brought to our attention from day to day that in many parts of the United States real-estate values have been so reduced that holders of mortgages can not realize sufficient from the sale of the mortgaged property to meet their demands and not infrequently the taxpayers are unable to sell the property levied upon for sufficient to pay the taxes due the city or county or State.

I think the facts will establish that property values in the District have suffered less than those of any important city in the United States, and that the residents of the District of Columbia enjoy more of the comforts, indeed, the luxuries of life, than are enjoyed by, perhaps, any people of any city in the United States. Of course, we have an interest in the Capital of our Nation and desire to see it beautiful. For that reason Congress has been liberal in appropriations for parks and Federal buildings. The large construction program to which I have referred has furnished profitable employment to thousands of individuals, and those who supply the commodities and articles required in this large building program and in the equipment of the buildings for occupancy have derived large profits.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The Senator from Utah referred to the relative tax situation in Washington and that in other municipalities of the country. As the Senator well knows, one of the prime difficulties in our other cities is tax delinquency. I was wondering whether the Senator had any information as to the extent of tax delinquency in the city of Washington. It seems to me that figures on that subject would be very illuminating and suggestive and would have a bearing upon the capacity of the municipality to pay. Has the Senator any figures on that subject?

Mr. KING. I regret to say that I have no authentic figures relative to that matter, although I asked one of the officials of the District several months ago if there was any considerable amount of tax delinquency, measured by the tax delinquency in other cities. As I understood him, the situation here was much better than in other cities.

Testimony has been presented from time to time to the Senate District Committee showing the increase in values of real estate and the enormous prices at which many pieces of real estate have been sold. The Senator from Kansas has recently stated that a combination has been entered into by owners of real estate to maintain unreasonably high prices for real estate and unjustifiably heavy rentals for their properties. As I understand, he has referred the matter to the Attorney General to ascertain whether the Sherman antitrust law has been violated. Senators are familiar with the fact that a number of years ago, because it was believed that extortionate rents were charged not only for residences but for business properties, a commission was created to inquire into the matter and to fix rents, and many persons resorted to this commission in order to be relieved of what they declared were unjust if not extortionate charges.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator from Utah permit me, in his time, to ask the Senator from Connecticut whether he has any information with respect to tax delinquency in the District of Columbia?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield for that purpose?

Mr. KING. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, in the testimony given before the subcommittee on this bill, of which the Senator is a distinguished member, the auditor of the District reported the falling off in revenue collections was about $1,500,000; he intimated that the revenue collections for 1932 might drop a further $1,500,000, and that the tax sales this year had been for the first time very unsatisfactory. I quote from the auditor's testimony:

This year, for the first time, we sold very little of the property at the tax sale. * * * In the past we have received from $800,000 to $900,000 from the sale of property at the annual tax sales.

But this year it appears that those who have been making it their business to purchase property at tax sales were unable to obtain money from the banks and consequently the District has been unable to get even at the tax sales some $500,000, and has the property technically on its own hands. The number of delinquencies is constantly increasing, and this is the first year when the District has been unable practically to make up the delinquencies by tax sales.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield further to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. If the delinquencies are in the neighborhood of a million and a half dollars, will the Senator indicate what percentage of the total tax that would be for a year?

Mr. KING. My recollection is that the revenues of the District for 1932 were considerably more than $30,000,000; in fact, approached $40,000,000.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The delinquencies, then, would not be more than 3 or 4 per cent?

Mr. KING. I think the Senator is right.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Of course, in the average city the percentage is infinitely higher than that.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, no doubt there have been sales of real estate to meet tax levies. There have been many real-estate additions and houses built thereon. In some instances there were several mortgages or trust deeds upon a parcel of real land because of inflated values and unsound methods of financing buildings, and purchasers' equities in many instances have been destroyed and the taxes levied were not met by mortgagees. Of course, from the inflated levels there have been declines in values in various parts of the District and persons who had legal or equitable interests in these properties where the values were inflated have suffered losses, and undoubtedly some of them have been delinquent in meeting the tax imposed upon the same.

Mr. President, notwithstanding all that the Federal Government has done and is doing for Washington and the benefits which the people of the District enjoy at the hands of the Federal Government, the House was willing to appropriate $6,500,000 toward the expenses of the District government for the ensuing year. In my opinion that was a generous contribution, and I do not approve of the action of the Senate committee in adding $2,000,000 to that sum. The amount so contributed is taken from the taxpayers of the United States, and they not only have their own cities, counties, and States to maintain, but they are called upon to aid in meeting the expenses of the District government.

The Senator from Tennessee asked pertinent questions when he inquired as to whether the Federal Government contributed to the expenses of the various cities in the country in which it had Federal buildings. Only a negative answer is admissible. Undoubtedly the millions which the Government is spending for public buildings in New York City and Chicago and other parts of the United States add to the values of the real estate within those cities, but the Government is not called upon to pay money into their treasuries for the purpose of meeting municipal expenses.

The cities are anxious to have Federal buildings erected, knowing that work is furnished to the people, money is brought into the cities, real-estate values are increased, and the general interests of all the people are served. If the expenditures made by the Federal Government within the District were of no advantage to the District and did not increase property values and add to the wealth of the people living therein, another question would be presented; but every dollar expended by the Federal Government in the District is of material advantage to its inhabitants.

Mr. President, conceding that there should be some contribution made by the Federal Government, the condition of the Treasury at the present time demands that it should be less than heretofore made. It goes without saying, in view of the economic situation, that the expenses of the District government should be materially reduced. In my opinion, neither the Appropriations Committee of the House nor of the Senate has taken proper cognizance of the economic conditions, and particularly of the condition of the Federal Treasury. I need not tell Senators that there is a Federal deficit of $3,000,000,000 for the current year, and that there is no certainty that, notwithstanding the revenue measure recently passed by Congress, a deficit for the coming year will be avoided. Indeed, with the demands that are being made for additional appropriations, it seems certain that the revenues that will be derived by the Federal Government will be inadequate to meet the appropriations which will be made. In examining the pending bill I can not help but feel that many of the items of appropriation are entirely too large, and that the committee failed to make reductions where it should have made them. Only a few years ago the expenditures of the District were considerably less than $20,000,000, and a measure now calling for the stupendous sum carried by this bill can not, in my opinion, be fully justified.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The next amendment will be stated.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Department of vehicles and traffic," on page 9, line 7, after the word "services," to strike out "$81,380" and insert "$83,000," and in line 8, after the words "in all," to strike out "$86,380" and insert "$88,000," so as to read:

For personal services, $83,000; temporary clerk hire, $5,000; in all, $88,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 10, after line 22, to

For a building for the Georgetown branch library, including necessary furniture and equipment and improvement of grounds, $75,000, and the commissioners are authorized to enter into contract or contracts for the completion and equipment of the building at a cost not exceeding $150,000: Provided, That not to exceed $5,500 of the unexpended balance of the appropriation of $30,000 for the grading of the Georgetown Reservoir for utilization as a site for a Georgetown branch library, and for drawing plans for a library building to be erected on such site contained in the District of Columbia appropriation act for the fiscal year 1932, shall be available for erecting necessary retaining walls at such branch library site. library site.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 11, line 12, to increase the appropriation for personal services in the office of the register of wills from $70,000 to $74,720.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 11, line 21, to increase the appropriation for personal services in the office of the recorder of deeds from $100,000 to $105,020.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Contingent and miscellaneous expenses," on page 13, line 9, after the word "offices," to strike out "$37,500" and insert "$41,000," so as to read:

so as to read:

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 13, line 15, to strike out the subhead "Printing and binding."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 13, line 19, after the figures "$65,000," to insert a semicolon and "for exchange of two motor ambulances, $3,000; in all, $68,000," so as to read:

For maintenance, care, repair, and operation of passenger-carrying automobiles owned by the District of Columbia, including personal services, $65,000; for exchange of two motor ambulances, $3,000; in all, $68,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Connecticut how many automobiles have been furnished to the employees of the District of Columbia from the commissioners down? It seems to me that wherever one goes he sees an official automobile here.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, I agree with the Senator that we have been too liberal in the past in furnishing automobiles. Under this bill the only new ones allowed are the two motor ambulances that must be provided for the sake of health and sanitation, and there is made a small allowance for those using their own automobiles in attending to the business of the District. I agree with the Senator that we have been too liberal in the past, and I assure him that we will not be so liberal in the future. We have provided too many automobiles.

Mr. KING. I will ask the Senator if the officials or semiofficials or halfway officials who have been having automobiles in the past are being provided automobiles now, either the old ones they have had or those that were purchased last year or new ones, and whether provision is made that they shall continue to operate automobiles they have been furnished?

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, I do not quite understand the Senator's question.

Mr. KING. What I am trying to get at is, Have any of those who in the past have been furnished automobiles been restricted by this bill?

Mr. BINGHAM. They are restricted to using them for official purposes. The committee has not recommended that they be taken away from them, but that they be permitted to use them as they have in the past, but for official uses.

Mr. KING. In my opinion, too many officials have been awarded automobiles in the past who were not entitled to them. I think there has been great extravagance and waste in the number of automobiles which have been furnished to employees of the District of Columbia, and that goes for the entire Government. You can not go down the streets of Washington without encountering a large number of official automobiles, those in use by the various departments as well as those employed in the service of the District of Columbia.

PHILIPPINE INDEPENDENCE

Mr. HAWES. Mr. President, on yesterday I asked unanimous consent to hold night meetings, beginning on the 17th of this month, for the consideration of the Philippine independence bill. Senators, of course, are familiar with the fact that the House bill has been here since the 4th of last April. At the request of several Senators, I am changing that request, and ask that the Senate be in session on Monday, the 13th day of June, from the hour of meeting until 10.30 p. m., and that at the hour of 6.30 any unfinished business then before the Senate except a conference report be temporarily laid aside, and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of H. R. 7233.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the unanimous-consent request proposed by the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, may it be stated? We could not hear the request.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will state the proposed unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. HAWES. The proposal is that we meet on Monday evening at 6.30, and that from that time on we consider the Philippine question, giving priority to conference reports.

There seems to be a disposition for the Senate to adjourn a week from Saturday. I want to assure some of the Senators that, in my opinion, there will not be an adjournment a week from Saturday or a week from that time. The House sent this bill to us on the 4th of April by a vote that was most impressive; and the friends of this measure have not occupied the time of the Senate. This request is not to displace the measure that the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] has in mind, or the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] or the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Howell]. It is merely to start the discussion of the Philippine independence bill, which, in my opinion, will not occupy 10 hours.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I am inquiring of the Senator the nature of his unanimous-consent proposal. Is he requesting that the consideration proceed to a finality?

Mr. HAWES. No.

Mr. BORAH. Just a night session.

Mr. VANDENBERG. May the request be read in full,

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will state the proposed unanimous-consent agreement.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

I ask unanimous consent that the Senate be in session on Monday, the 13th day of June, from the hour of meeting until 10.30 p. m., and that at the hour of 6.30 o'clock any unfinished business then before the Senate, except a conference report, be temporarily laid aside, and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? Mr. VANDENBERG. There is nothing involved in the consent, as I understand, except the consideration of the bill on Monday evening.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands that the effect of the unanimous-consent request is that the Senate shall devote itself to the consideration of the Philippine independence bill from 6.30 p. m. until 10.30 p. m. on Monday.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator make that 7 o'clock?

Mr. SMOOT. Is that all of the request?

Mr. KING. Some of us have a disposition to eat once in a while; and I suggest that the Senator permit us at least an hour within which to return to our respective abodes and get something to eat and come back again. I suggest 7 o'clock. Mr. HAWES. I very gladly accept the suggestion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. But the Chair understands that this unanimous-consent request implies a continuous session from the time of assembling of the Senate until 10.30 at night, and that at 6.30 during that period the Philippine bill shall be taken up. That is the Chair's understanding of the unanimous-consent request; and the author of the request nods his head in acquiescence.

Mr. SMOOT. Does that mean that at 10.30 o'clock we will vote upon the bill without further discussion?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No; there is nothing in the request regarding final action on the bill. The request is only for a discussion of the bill for four hours.

Mr. SMOOT. That is all there is to it—to discuss it from 7 to 11, and after that the bill will be in the same status that it is at the present time?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It might have been amended in the meantime.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; of course, it might have been amended in the meantime, but it will not displace any other business except during the four hours asked for?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is the Chair's understanding.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President, I suggest to the Senator from Missouri that he withdraw his request for a moment, as I have a request which I want to present, and then he can present his afterwards.

Mr. HAWES. I am very glad to do so, Mr. President.

Mr. McNARY obtained the floor.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous con-

Mr. McNARY. Just a moment, please; one at a time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There can be only one unanimous-consent request pending at a time. Until the Senate disposes of the one proposed by the Senator from Missouri there can not be another one.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I came in just at the time the matter was being discussed informally. The request is that we convene at 7 o'clock?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair's understanding of the request preferred by the Senator from Missouri is that the Senate shall assemble on Monday at 12 o'clock, unless otherwise ordered by action of the Senate to-day; that it shall adjourn at 10.30 at night; and that the last four hours of that session of the Senate shall be devoted to a discussion of the Philippine bill.

Mr. McNARY. There is nothing in the request that would affect the status of the bill if no disposition is made of it at the end of the night session, namely, at 10.30? It would then remain on the calendar as though nothing had been done?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is the Chair's understanding, inasmuch as it is being done under unanimous consent.

Mr. McNARY. So far as I am concerned, regarding the presentation of the subject matter for one evening and a possible vote, I have no objection; but if we are going to enter into this agreement, I would rather that we convene at 11 o'clock on Monday instead of 12.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That can be taken care of by an order to be made later in the day without reference to this proposed agreement.

Mr. McNARY. But if this agreement is to be made, I want 11 o'clock inserted as the hour of meeting instead of 12. I insist on that insertion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Missouri modify his request accordingly?

Mr. HAWES. I shall be glad to accept that suggestion.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President, as I understand, there is no request now before the Senate.

Mr. HAWES. At the request of the Senator from Nebraska I am temporarily withdrawing my unanimous-consent request while he presents one of his own.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri for the time being withdraws his request. The Senator from Nebraska is recognized.

AMENDMENT OF AGRICULTURAL MARKETING ACT

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that following the completion of the consideration of the District of Columbia appropriation bill, Order of Business 780, Senate bill 4536, the amendment to the agricultural marketing act, be made the unfinished business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the Senator must make that subject to the appropriation bills, or I shall object.

Mr. HOWELL. If I make it subject to the appropriation bills, and the appropriation bills are gotten through, we shall adjourn, and nothing will be done for agriculture.

Mr. SMOOT. Then, Mr. President, I shall have to object. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Costigan	Kean	Robinson, Ind.
Austin	Cutting	Kendrick	Schall
Bailey	Dill	Keyes	Sheppard
Bankhead	Fletcher	King	Smith

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I desire to announce that the Senator from Michigan [Mr. Couzens], the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. Norbeck], and the Senator from Iowa [Mr. Brookhart] are detained in a meeting of the Committee on Banking and Currency.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Seventy-four Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the junior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Howell] has asked unanimous consent that the bill designated and known as the farm relief bill be made the unfinished business following the bill now before the Senate. The Senator from Utah has objected unless there are excepted from the unanimous consent the appropriation bills.

I think that the leaders ought to be candid with the Senate about this matter. I understand that it is the purpose of those in charge of the program to adjourn a week from today. Of course, when the appropriation bills are out of the way, they can bring over their motion for an adjournment from the House, which, I understand, would not be debatable, that all we could do would be to vote on it. May I ask the Chair whether or not a motion to adjourn is debatable?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is not debatable; but it may be amended.

Mr. BORAH. Amendment would not avail anything, if it is not debatable.

I think there are several measures here which, in all good conscience, we ought to dispose of before this session ends. I understand perfectly how interesting the Democratic convention is going to be, and, in all probability, in the way of contrast, exceedingly interesting. But we have the appropriation bills, we have the farm relief bill, the Philippine independence bill, the home loan bill, and the measure reported by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. Glass], as a substitute for what is known as the Goldsborough bill, such bills as are in every sense essential to the public interest. It ought to be understood, and I hope we may have an understanding, that we may have a reasonable opportunity to dispose of those measures before we adjourn. There are other measures which ought to be disposed of, but they do not appeal to me as being so vital. I want to ask the Senator from Nebraska to renew the unanimous-consent request which he made a few moments ago.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President, I renew the unanimousconsent request, that after the District of Columbia appropriation bill is disposed of, the Senate shall proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 4536, an act amending the agricultural marketing act.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I shall have to object to the proposed unanimous-consent agreement. I am perfectly willing, as far as I am concerned, to stay here until we get a vote upon the bill. I have no intention whatever of delaying it, or of interfering with its final passage, or whatever the action may be. I am perfectly satisfied to stay here, but I do not feel that the appropriation bills ought to be laid aside now for that particular bill.

So that my idea may be known, I would suggest to the Senator that he include this language, or something like it, "subject, however, to appropriation bills, with the exception of the second deficiency appropriation bill."

I would be perfectly willing to have such an agreement as that, so that the Senator's bill would be considered before the second deficiency appropriation bill is taken up and passed; and we can not adjourn until that bill is passed.

I want the Senator to know that my objection is not because of the fact that I want to defeat the bill in which he is interested.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Idaho yield to me?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I would like to suggest to my colleague, before he agrees to that, that there will be no assurance, if the suggestion of the Senator from Utah is agreed to, that we will even have a vote on the farm bill at this session. There will be practically a certainty that we would not be able to pass it through both Houses, because as soon as the appropriation bills are out of the way a motion to adjourn will be held to be privileged, and we can take it up at any time and Congress can adjourn even in the midst of the consideration of the farm relief bill. So I do not see that that would help any. That would give no assurance that we would act on the farm bill at this session.

Mr. SMOOT. It is an assurance that the Senate will act upon it.

Mr. NORRIS. No; we could adjourn while that bill was before us, if we wanted to.

Mr. SMOOT. We can not adjourn without the second deficiency appropriation bill being acted upon.

Mr. NORRIS. Is the Senator willing to have that follow the farm bill?

Mr. SMOOT. As far as I am concerned; yes. That is what I suggested.

Mr. NORRIS. Let me make another suggestion.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Idaho yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I am not quite through.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I merely wish to say something in response to the remarks of the Senator from Utah. I remember very well when the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Reed] was running his filibuster against the continuation resolution for the so-called Reed investigating committee, they did kill the deficiency appropriation bill here, and we adjourned just the same.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President-

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. McNARY. The able Senator from Idaho expresses the desire that certain legislative action be taken regarding bills now on the calendar. What may be done in that regard, of course, I can not say at this time.

It has been my hope, and I have expressed it several times, that we might recess or adjourn next Saturday, a week from to-day. I recognize the necessity of considering some of the measures which have been referred to. For one, I should protest violently against any final adjournment until the Senate shall have an opportunity to pass its judgment upon the bill proposed by the junior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Howell], the so-called farm bill. I am also conscious of the necessity of getting through the appropriation bills as fast as possible.

I am going to suggest to the Senator from Utah—and I think this will meet with the general approval of Members of the Senate who honestly desire to have a vote on the farm bill—that the status of the bill proposed by the Senator from Nebraska be fixed, subject, however, to the pending bill, the emergency bill, and the conference report on the economy bill, which will be here Monday.

I think the farm bill can be explained and a vote can be

I think the farm bill can be explained and a vote can be had upon it within two hours. It is not a new measure. It proposes three amendments to the marketing act, all of which are understood and have been passed upon heretofore by the Senate and the House. There is no reason for any prolonged debate. I am satisfied that the Senator from Nebraska can present the provisions of his bill in a brief address, and I desire to speak briefly on the subject with respect to its application to the present economic conditions.

I appeal to the Senator from Utah to settle the matter in this fashion: Let the status be fixed as to the pending appropriation bill and the conference report on the economy bill, which will be here Monday. Then the Senator can be assured that we propose to take action, and the other bills can come along without objection.

Mr. BORAH. The conference report will be here Monday?

Mr. McNARY. The conference report will be here Monday, and we ought to act on it promptly.

Mr. BORAH. That would be privileged anyway.

Mr. McNARY. Yes.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I do not think the Senator from Oregon can assure us that the conference report will be here Monday. We will start conferring Monday.

Mr. McNARY. I am suggesting that in case it is here,

Mr. McNARY. I am suggesting that in case it is here, it will have the right of way; it will have its status fixed. In the meantime let the Senator have his proposal as to the unfinished business laid aside. I suggest that as a compromise which I think will work to the advantage of the whole program, and give those who desire consideration of the farm bill an opportunity to be heard.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, will the Senator from Idaho yield?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. SMOOT. I want again to assure the Senate that I shall do all in my power to see that a vote is taken upon the bill in which the junior Senator from Nebraska IMr. Howell is so deeply interested. I thought he would be perfectly secure in getting that assurance by an agreement that it should be voted on before the second deficiency appropriation bill was passed. But if the Senator from Oregon thinks that that is too indefinite, I am not going to object.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, we can not hear what is going on.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senate will be in order.
Mr. SMOOT. Will not the Senator restate his unanimousconsent agreement, so the Senate may know just what it is?

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, a point of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.
Mr. ASHURST. It may be, and it is entirely probable, that there is something wrong with my audition this morning, or the acoustic properties of this Chamber have suddenly depreciated. I frankly say that I am unable to hear a thing that is going on, although I have been listening intently for 20 minutes. I do not hear what is going on. There is something wrong with the Chamber or with my Senate will please be in order.

Mr. BORAH. Let the clerk read the proposed unanimousconsent request.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will read it.

The CHIEF CLERK. The Senator from Nebraska proposes the following unanimous-consent agreement:

That after the District of Columbia appropriation bill is disposed of the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 4536, an act amending the agricultural marketing act.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I understood the Senator from Nebraska to include the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus appropriation bill, which has been reported and is on the calendar.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, that bill can be taken up Monday, anyway. It will necessarily have to go over for a day or so in order that some interested in the matter may get some information in order to discuss it.

Mr. SMOOT. The bill itself?
Mr. BORAH. Yes; the bill itself. Therefore it seems to me that we can take the farm relief bill up following the pending appropriation bill and, as the Senator from Oregon has suggested, in all probability the bill will not take over a couple of hours, we can dispose of it and get it to the other body for consideration.

I ask the Senator from Utah to let us proceed with this unanimous-consent agreement and take up the measure referred to by the Senator from Nebraska after the disposition of the District of Columbia appropriation bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, there is an appropriation bill pending before us now which is held up wholly by reason of this discussion, wherein we are attempting to arrange the order of business of the Senaté by a unanimous-consent agreement, which is a most unusual proceeding, as I see it.

It is in order for the Senator from Nebraska at any time to move to take up his bill, and get every advantage which he could get from a unanimous-consent agreement, without taking up a lot of the time of the Senate. My suggestion would be that we go on with the District of Columbia appropriation bill and get rid of it as speedily as possible, and then take up the discussion of what we are going to do afterwards. I think it is a most unusual proceeding to undertake to set out a program for the Senate for the next week or the next two weeks. My own opinion is that we are not going to adjourn a week from to-day.

Mr. SMOOT. That is my opinion, too. Mr. MOSES. Not before two weeks from to-day. That would be the earliest date, as I see it.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, so far as I am concerned, I shall not object to the unanimous-consent agreement. We have spent so much time on it now that if we had devoted that time to the District of Columbia appropriation bill we would have been half through it. I withdraw my objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, the colleague of the senior Senator from Utah agrees with me, and therefore for the present I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is made.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, while we are on the subject and discussing, as I am, the District of Columbia appropriation bill, I want to recall to the minds of Senators a little history. I had intended to do this when the Senator from Idaho [Mr. Borah] interrupted me, and I was not able to complete what I started to say. I want to say it now.

A parliamentary inquiry was propounded by the Senator from Idaho to the Chair, the President pro tempore, the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. Moses] then being in the chair, as to whether a concurrent resolution to adjourn without day would be debatable.

The Senator from Idaho was told by the President pro tempore that it would not be debatable, but that it could be amended. I want to call the attention of the Senate and the Vice President to what happened in the Senate on December 22, 1931, when we were about to take a holiday recess and

The VICE PRESIDENT (rapping with his gavel). The | having passed the House. There was some objection to it. Some inquiry was made about it. Our then Presiding Officer, the President pro tempore, the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. Moses], being in the chair, said—and I quote from the RECORD of that day at page 1129:

The President pro tempore. The concurrent resolution is privileged, not debatable, may be amended, and a motion to recommit is in order, which would be debatable.

So I will say to the Senator from Idaho that we will be able to debate all day or all week that motion if such a concurrent resolution is presented, provided we make a motion to recommit and provided also the Presiding Officer does not change his ruling.

Mr. BORAH. Is that the view of the present Presiding Officer?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The present Presiding Officer has not had time to look up the question. The present Presiding Officer is of the opinion at this time that a motion to recommit is debatable.

Mr. NORRIS. If we can be assured that the ruling of the President pro tempore, who presided at the time the motion was made on the occasion to which I have referred, will be sustained by the present Presiding Officer, there will not be much question about the debatability of the motion to recommit the concurrent resolution. Of course, this is bringing home the chickens to roost. The chickens will come home to roost, and the only thing we are concerned about is whether the Presiding Officer is going to be the same and whether the ruling is going to be the same.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It would be hardly fair to ask the Chair to pass upon a question when he has not had time to look up the precedents. The present occupant of the chair would be governed by the precedents.

Mr. NORRIS. The last precedent then was established by our President pro tempore, and if the Vice President feels disposed to follow the last precedent there will not be much danger, when this matter comes over in the form of a concurrent resolution, because it will, in effect, be debatable.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska vield to the Senator from Arizona?

Mr. NORRIS. Certainly.

Mr. ASHURST. It almost is an act of temerity-and I say it respectfully-to disagree with the conclusions of the Senator from Nebraska. He tries to be fair. But I doubt if it would be fair to the Chair to ask in advance what its ruling would be. I join, however, with the Senator from Nebraska and the Senator from Idaho and with all other Senators who make the suggestion that the Senate should not adjourn unless and until the farm relief bill and the Philippine independence bill shall have been disposed of.

I have no knowledge superior to that possessed by every other Senator, but any man who has been here six months knows that just as soon as the appropriation bills pass, the Senate will adjourn. Nothing can keep this Senate in session after the appropriation bills have passed.

I now suggest to Senators who are interested in the Philippine independence bill and the farm relief bill that the only way they will get action on either of those bills is to delay action on appropriation bills until a final vote is had on these two bills, namely, farm relief and Philippines. I believe that every Senator here knows-at least, he ought to know-that when the appropriation bills are out of the way the Senate will evaporate, dissolve, adjourn, and disappear.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Arizona has given us some of his usual good advice. As a practical proposition, when appropriation bills are out of the way probably even the President, if he wanted to do so, could not keep us here with the assistance of the Army.

Mr. ASHURST. That is quite true. It sounds like an exaggeration, but the entire Army of the United States would not be able to keep the Senate here after the appropriation bills are passed.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I want to continue reading a little more from the Record to show what happened on had a concurrent resolution here for that purpose, the same | the 22d day of December, 1931, so as to emphasize the decision of the Chair. It was not just an accident that the Chair made that decision. I read further:

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.
Mr. BARKLEY. At what time is a motion to recommit in order?
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. At any time.
Mr. BARKLEY. I wish to make that motion if the Senator from Idaho will yield to me to do so.

Mr. Borah. Certainly.
Mr. Barkley. I move to recommit the concurrent resolution to the Committee on Appropriations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion proposed by the Senator from Kentucky, and that motion

Then the Senate proceeded to debate it.

Mr. McNARY. It has been suggested that the junior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Howell] might, with propriety, renew his unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that following the vote on the District of Columbia appropriation bill the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill to amend the agricultural marketing act.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, in connection with the episode, having succumbed once to the solicitations of the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. King], I have now yielded to the blandishments of the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. Smootl, and I shall not object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The unanimous-consent agreement was reduced to writing, as follows:

Ordered (by unanimous consent), That after the District of Columbia appropriation bill is disposed of the Senate will proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 780, the bill (S. 4536) to amend the agricultural marketing act, approved June 15, 1929.

Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. KING. I did not understand the entire request. It is not intended that there shall be a vote on the bill to-day?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Not at all. The unanimousconsent agreement just entered into merely provides that after the disposition of the District of Columbia appropriation bill the Senate will then proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 4536, the bill mentioned by the junior Senator from Nebraska.

PHILIPPINE INDEPENDENCE

Mr. HAWES. Mr. President, a little while ago I presented a unanimous-consent agreement and withdrew it at the request of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Howell]. I now present it and ask that it be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will read the unanimous-consent proposal submitted by the Senator from Mis-

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Ordered (by unanimous consent), That when the Senate concludes its business to-day it take a recess or adjourn until 11 o'clock a. m. Monday; that at the hour of 7 o'clock p. m. on said day the unfinished business, if any, be temporarily laid aside, and the Senate thereupon proceed with the consideration of the bill H. R. 7233, the Philippine independence bill, and continue the same until 10.30 o'clock p. m., at which time the Senate shall take a recess until 11 o'clock a. m. Tuesday.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I thought it was arranged that we were to have a call of the calendar on Monday and that we would adjourn to-day until 11 o'clock a. m. on Monday. Is not that the arrangement?

Mr. McNARY. Yes. Let me say to the able Senator from Pennsylvania that the proposal applies to Monday evening. Mr. REED. Oh, no; it calls for a recess to-day until 11 o'clock on Monday morning. The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is advised that the request contains both expressions, "recess" and "adjourn."

Mr. McNARY. It is the desire of a number of the Members of the Senate to have a morning hour Monday. It is my hope that we may adjourn to-day until Monday at 11 o'clock a. m. and have routine morning business until 1 o'clock, when the unfinished business would come before the Senate.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I shall make no objection. In fact, I am in sympathy with the suggestion of the Senator from Oregon; but in this connection I wish to state that I think the Senator from Missouri is entitled to a time for the consideration of the Filipino independence bill. It has been on the calendar a long time. It is well known that there are the votes here to pass the bill with such amendments as the Senate may see fit to adopt. It is not quite right to deny the bill consideration. I should like to have the unanimous-consent request restated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is informed that the Senator from Missouri wishes to modify his request so as to provide for an adjournment to-day. The clerk will read the unanimous-consent request as modified.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Ordered (by unanimous consent), That when the Senate concludes its business to-day it adjourn until 11 o'clock a. m. Monday; that at the hour of 7 o'clock p. m. on said day the unfinished business, if any, be temporarily laid aside and the Senate thereupon proceed with the consideration of the bill H. R. 7233, the Philippine independence bill, and continue the same until not later than 10.30 o'clock p. m., at which time the Senate shall take a recess until 11 o'clock Tuesday.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, may I suggest to the Senator from Missouri the insertion of the words "unless the measure shall sooner be disposed of '

Mr. HAWES. I have no objection to that.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The Senator from Utah [Mr. Smoot], who knows everything, declares sotto voce that it would not be disposed of before the time set for a recess on Monday evening.

Mr. SMOOT. I am quite sure of that. What I want to be sure about is that the unanimous-consent agreement does not provide that if the bill is not disposed of Monday evening it will not then displace the unfinished business, but will simply go to the calendar.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The unfinished business will be taken up on the next day. Is there objection?

Mr. SMOOT. I do not want it to interfere with the unfin-

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I quite agree with the Senator from Arkansas that there ought to be inserted the words "unless sooner disposed of." If those words shall not be inserted there will not be half a dozen Senators here that night and it will not be possible to obtain a vote.

Mr. McNARY. I also agree with the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I make that suggestion, and, as I understand, the Senator from Missouri accepts it. The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the modified request? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. BUSINESS OF THE SESSION

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I do not intend to take any great length of time to discuss matters irrelevant to the bill immediately under consideration. The fact is, I think the Senate should proceed to dispose of that measure and other measures that are to come before it just as speedily as possible. I have not any doubt there is a feeling, almost universal in this country, that the Congress ought to dispose of the measures upon which it deems necessary to act with promptness and then adjourn. I have not any sympathy with the idea that we ought to string out this session indefinitely; but, on the contrary, it is my belief that the quicker we get away from here the greater will be the satisfaction on the part of the public. At the same time we must recognize the necessity for disposing of certain measures which, because of the importance of their subject matter, are prominently in the minds of Members of the Congress, if they are not prominent in the thought of the people of the country.

I agree that the so-called farm relief bill should be acted upon; that the Philippine independence bill should be acted upon; and I think also that the measure, being Calendar No. 851, Senate bill 4755, to provide for the expansion of the loaning power of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation so as to provide that self-liquidating projects and certain carefully selected public works may be carried forward should be disposed of. That measure is of very great importance; it is a part of the program which was separated from the bill that was passed yesterday; it has the unanimous support of the Banking and Currency Committee; and while there are some controversial features in the bill, particularly that relating to the construction of public works, it is a matter of such recognized importance that it ought to be acted upon and sent to the other House, so that that body may have an opportunity to consider it.

It is my thought that the bill already here from the House of Representatives, which is known as the Garner bill, should be taken up, with a view to substituting the Senate measure for it. That will put the substance of the two bills in conference; it will give the Senate an opportunity to amend the Senate bill on the calendar as also the House provisions; and it will enable the Congress to include them in its program for enactment before adjournment.

I am in sympathy with the passage of appropriation bills just as rapidly as that can be done consistently with proper deliberation and the determination of whether the measures that have been referred to shall be acted upon, the passage of them in such form as the Senate shall agree to, and then I favor an adjournment of Congress just as quickly as possible.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 11361) making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against the revenues of such District for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the next amendment.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 13, after line 20, to insert:

For allowances for furnishing privately owned motor vehicles in the performance of official duties at the rate of not to exceed $312 per year for each automobile, $7,380.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 14, line 11, after the figures "$650," to insert a comma and "except as may be herein specifically authorized," so as to read:

All of said motor vehicles and all other motor vehicles provided in this act owned by the District of Columbia shall be used only for purposes directly pertaining to the public services of said District, and shall be under the direction and control of the commissioners, who may from time to time alter or change the assignment for use thereof or direct the joint or interchangeable use of any of the same by officials and employees of the District, except as otherwise provided in this act: Provided, That no passenger-carrying automobile, except busses and ambulances, shall be acquired under any provision of this act, by purchase or exchange at a cost, including the value of a vehicle exchanged, exceeding $650, except as may be herein specifically authorized. No motor vehicles shall be transferred from the police or fire departments to any other branch of the government of the District of Columbia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 15, line 19, after the word "of," to strike out "$8,300" and insert "$9,500," so as to read:

The commissioners are authorized, in their discretion, to furnish necessary transportation in connection with strictly official business of the District of Columbia by the purchase of street-car and bus fares from appropriations contained in this act: Provided, That the expenditures herein authorized shall be so apportioned as not to exceed a total of $9,500: Provided further, That the provisions of this paragraph shall not include the appropriations herein made for the fire and police departments.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 16, line 7, after the word "regulations," to strike out "$5,000: Provided, That this appropriation shall not be available for the payment of advertising in newspapers published outside of the District of Columbia, notwithstanding the requirement for such advertising provided by existing law," and insert "$9,500," so as to read:

For general advertising, authorized and required by law, and for tax and school notices and notices of changes in regulations, $9,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 16, line 16, to strike out "$8,000" and insert "$9,500," so as to read:

For advertising notice of taxes in arrears July 1, 1931, as required to be given by the act of February 28, 1898, as amended, to be reimbursed by a charge of 50 cents for each lot or piece of property advertised, $9,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Municipal center," on page 17, after line 20, to strike out:

For the acquisition of land in the municipal center, and for grading and paving of streets, and relocation and construction of District of Columbia owned utilities within and/or adjacent to the municipal center, $222,000, and in addition thereto not to exceed $1,278,000 of the unexpended balance of the appropriation for the municipal center contained in the District of Columbia appropriation act for the fiscal year 1932, of which sums not to exceed $900,000 shall be available for the acquisition of land in the municipal center, and not to exceed $600,000 shall be available for grading and paving of streets, and relocation and construction of District of Columbia owned utilities within and/or adjacent to the municipal center.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

For continuing the construction of the first unit of the municipal center, $1,000,000, of which sum not to exceed $900,000 shall be available for the acquisition of land in the municipal center and not to exceed $100,000 together with not to exceed $500,000 of the appropriation for beginning the construction of the first unit of the municipal center contained in the District of Columbia appropriation act, fiscal year 1932, shall be available for grading appropriation act, fiscal year 1932, shall be available for grading and paving of streets and relocation and construction of District of Columbia owned utilities within and/or adjacent to the municipal center: Provided, That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are authorized to enter into a separate contract for the construction of the foundations of the said first unit: Provided further, That not to exceed $85,000 of the unexpended balance for the municipal center contained in the District of Columbia appropriation act for the fiscal year 1932 is hereby made available for the preparation of plans and specifications for the second unit of the municipal center.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I inquire of the Senator from Connecticut whether under all the circumstances—and I suppose they were duly considered by the committee—it is deemed wise to go ahead with the Municipal Center project?

Mr. BINGHAM. Yes, Mr. President. The land has been bought, the old buildings have been cleared from it, and the site is at present in the nature of an eyesore. Furthermore, all this money will be used for employment purposes. The project has already been begun. I will say to the Senator I was not in favor of the expenditure proposed for that project, but I was outvoted. The land, as I have said, has been acquired, and what is provided is a certain step toward the improvement. I would not, however, be in favor of taking a greater step at this time. I only regret that the measure was put through some years ago providing for the project, and that the land was purchased. I think the Senator and I united in opposing it at that time; but this makes a step forward and provides a certain amount of employment in the District, which is greatly needed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, may I inquire of the Senator from Connecticut if there is a provision in the bill making appropriation for relief work and relief aid?

Mr. BINGHAM. That has not as yet been reached. The

Mr. BLAINE. This bill was only reported a day or so ago, | and I have not had time to read it, and perhaps hardly any other Senator has had time to read it.

Mr. BINGHAM. The item is exactly in the form in which it came from the Bureau of the Budget and the House, except that it also provides for employment. In the form in which it came from the Bureau of the Budget it was merely for loans or direct relief, but we were advised by the Department of Public Welfare that it would be much better to frame the provision so that the money could be used for employment purposes. The amount appropriated is the full amount recommended by the Bureau of the Budget.
Mr. BLAINE. That amount is $600,000, is it not?

Mr. BINGHAM. Yes.

Mr. BLAINE. For the purpose of unemployment relief?

Mr. BINGHAM. For the purpose of affording relief in the District of Columbia. I may say to the Senator that Washington is the only large city in the United States which has never provided what is known as outdoor relief.

Mr. BLAINE. This is the only proposition before the Congress, as I understand, for the direct relief of unemployment and for outdoor relief payment for which is to come, in part, out of the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. BINGHAM. Of course it is payable out of the revenues of the District, most of which comes from the taxpayers of the District, less than 22 per cent coming from the Federal Government.

Mr. BLAINE. The Federal Government contributes 22 per cent; that is, the people of the United States contribute 22 per cent of the amount appropriated for direct relief of unemployment in the District. I say that this is the first proposition before the Congress for direct relief of unemployment, and of those who need food and clothing, as to which there is afforded any opportunity for passage.

Mr. BINGHAM. I suppose that is a fair statement of the case, although in lines 15 and 16 it is explicitly provided that the amount shall be payable from the revenues of the District of Columbia; but, since part of the revenues of the District of Columbia are Federal contributions to the District, which are regular, and which are ordinarily used properly for such purposes as parks, police protection, and so forth, it is not an additional sum payable by the Federal Government. However, of course what the Senator has said has a certain amount of truth in it.

Mr. BLAINE. What I was getting at is that it is a recognition by the Federal Government that there is a responsibility on its part to afford direct relief.

Mr. BINGHAM. The Senator knows my views on that subject. I should dislike to take up the time of the Senate to argue it with him at present. Personally I do not recognize any such obligation, but I do recognize an obligation on the part of the Federal Government to pay part of the costs of running the District of Columbia. The people of the District of Columbia have never provided outdoor relief, and this is the first provision for that purpose. Like every other large city, Washington should provide such relief and ought to use a part of its revenues for that purpose. Therefore I am in favor of it.

Mr. BLAINE. The Senator reverses his position in this respect. Twenty-two per cent of this relief is to be paid out of the Public Treasury direct, which money comes out of the taxpayers. Why does the Senator contend that that is perfectly proper concerning the city of Washington when he denies that it would be proper to pay 22 per cent of direct relief in the city of New York or the city of Chicago, or Cleveland, or Buffalo, or Hartford, Conn., or any other city?

Mr. BINGHAM. I think the Senator's argument would have more force if we were under the old 50-50 or 60-40 basis of appropriation, when any addition to the District bill would have to come out partly of the Federal Treasury. As a matter of fact, the amount paid by the Federal Government this year toward the District under the present bill is considerably less than it was last year, when there was no amount for direct outdoor relief. It is only indirectly that the Federal Government contributes, because it is merely paying its proper share—and not all that, in my opinion, I may say to the Senator-to the District, and the District revenues are used for this purpose. The Senator, of course, is quite within his rights in making that claim, but I hope he will not take time to debate the matter now. It is a matter which is at least open to debate, in view of the fact that this is a definite amount of money or contribution to the District in lieu of taxes by the largest business concern in the District of Columbia. The District uses its revenues as the Congress may direct.

Mr. BLAINE. But the Senator does now contend that we are not paying quite enough out of the Public Treasury, and therefore out of the pockets of the taxpayers, for direct unemployment relief in the city of Washington?

Mr. BINGHAM. No, Mr. President; the Senator misunderstood me. What I said was that in my opinion the Federal Government was not making its proper contribution to the total expenses of the District of Columbia. The Bureau of Efficiency has prepared a very able document in which it states and works out mathematically and scientifically the fair share of the Federal Government in maintaining the District of Columbia as something over $10,000,000, and that does not include this item.

Mr. BLAINE. I was perfectly willing to have the Senator state his position in his own words; but, as I view the situation, the more money that is paid out of the Public Treasury of the United States, the greater will be the taxes of the people of the whole of the United States for District purposes. The situation now seems to be that the Senator thinks that the Government is not contributing what it ought to contribute toward District expenses—that means the total District expenses—and of course the total District expenses include every item in the appropriation bill and include the $600,000 for direct unemployment relief.

What I was getting at is this: I was glad that the Senator from Connecticut had finally, probably in a small degree, however, recognized the responsibility of the Government of the United States in this crisis, and that the same logic that can be applied in favor of this appropriation of $600,000 for direct relief can be applied for direct relief respecting all cities in the country.

I am just interested in the change in the viewpoint of the Senator from Connecticut. I do not want to misrepresent his position. I think I state it fairly when I say that he believes that we are not paying quite enough of the total District expenses, among which is the $600,000 for unemployment relief. I wanted to have the matter made clear and to emphasize it by having the interrogatories that I put to the Senator answered as frankly as he has answered them, and, of course, perhaps with slight apology for the change in his position, but yet indicating a change in his position.

I just want to say now, however, that this appropriation demonstrates that there has now and presently grown up a feeling respecting this one city, at least, that there ought to be direct aid out of the Public Treasury for unemployment relief. We are contributing for unemployment relief out of the Public Treasury of the United States, and that means out of the taxes collected from the people of the United States, 22 per cent of the total amount that is to be appropriated for unemployment relief under this bill; and it represents a change in heart—a very slight change, but the heart does throb with a little greater flutter-and it may and perhaps will be with perfect logic applied to aid when other cities find themselves without sufficient money with which to take care of the unemployment situation, for which those cities are in no way responsible.

The existing unemployment arises out of a situation that is national and not local, and for that reason the obligation for relief is national; and that obligation is recognized in the appropriation of $600,000 for unemployment relief, of which the people of the United States will pay 22 per cent.

Another suggestion has just come to me in respect to this appropriation. I notice in the first line of page 80:

For the purpose of affording relief to residents of the District of Columbia who are unemployed or otherwise in distress because of the existing emergency.

I assume that that phraseology is broad enough to include aid for the relief of the veterans who are presently residents of the District of Columbia. The Senator will appreciate that residence within the District of Columbia can not be fixed by the rule that is applied in the respective States respecting qualifications for voters, and therefore anyone who is within the District of Columbia-I do not mean just passing through—is a resident of the District of Columbia. Was it the intention of the Senator to exclude from the benefits of this provision the visitors who are here and are now residents down on the flats of the Anacostia River and in other sections of the city, whose presence here is due to an existing emergency, and who are unemployed and in great distress? I hope the language is broad enough to cover the veterans who are here.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, from the fact that the Senator from Colorado [Mr. Costigan] introduced the authorization into the District of Columbia Committee, of which the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin is a member, providing $75,000 for that purpose, I rather gathered that he did not conclude that the phrase "residents" could be used to apply to transients who might be here for a few days or a few weeks. I rather gathered that he construed it contrary to the construction of the Senator from Wisconsin.

Personally I feel that the matter being paid largely out of the District of Columbia taxpayers' pockets should be confined to those who may properly be called residents of the District rather than to those who are transients and are here only for a few days or a few weeks.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I doubt if the construction suggested by the Senator from Connecticut is a proper construction. The aid that is rendered to persons within the District of Columbia independently of this appropriation proposal goes to transients and persons who are homeless, people who are merely passing through the District, or for some purpose have come to the District and found themselves stranded, with no shelter, no food, and no medical care. They have been taken care of to a certain extent, and very likely the District has carried out its full responsibility, out of funds that were designed for the purposes to which the Senator has referred. As a matter of fact, however, those funds have been used for the purpose of assisting transients and homeless persons within the District of Columbia who have been here but a few hours, some of whom remain only overnight. It seems to me that this $600,000 would be available for identically the same purposes as the relief funds in the District have heretofore been available; and, since the Government of the United States contributes 22 per cent of the $600,000, I think perhaps a portion of that at least ought to be made available to those whom we may regard as transients and homeless persons within the District.

We have to-day I do not know how many thousand World War veterans here. I understand that the number is increasing very rapidly. I do not know that a complete census has been taken; and even if a complete census has been taken at any particular hour, the number here in the District, of course, has increased since that enumeration was made. I understand that a large number of additional veterans of the World War are coming to Washington. I have met some of these men. Some of them, I find, were members of the Thirty-second Division, which was made up largely of troops from Wisconsin and Michigan and which performed such signal service in the World War. They are now wearing the badges and the insignia of honor and meritorious service which they acquired overseas, and I understand that at least those who had arrived by Friday noon were men who were overseas veterans. I understand that at these improvised cantonments or camps there is a roll call at mess time, and the men produce evidence of their being soldiers, and that it is found from the discharge papers that 90 per cent of them have seen service overseas.

I met a small group this morning, some of them overseas veterans.

Out of this one group, three of them were overseas veterans. Those men made an appeal to me this morning, which I think was very logical and a very proper appeal.

I understand that there are about 300 of those men here. or who soon will be here, from my State. Of the committee which called upon me, I think all were men with families, all of them without jobs. I personally knew some of them. They are all clean, decent, wholesome young men. They come from our industrial centers, where there is tremendous unemployment; no work to be had. Those men want to preserve their health and their decency. They have asked for a camp where they may be segregated so that they will not be subjected to the possibility of typhoid and to the possibility of other epidemics which are bound to break out where there is a large group of men lacking sanitary facilities and housing facilities.

I understood from some of the men that the most improvised utensils are used for preparing their food. There are in evidence swarms of flies, which are carrying the germs of disease everywhere within the District, and those men, who are going to be subjected to the possibility of typhoid and the possibility of other epidemics which are transmissible, where the germs may be carried with them to their homes, those men, through no fault of their own, may be the means of spreading an epidemic throughout our whole country.

I do not think those men can be charged with the responsibility for the sort of thing which is bound to happen. They are located over on the low flats of the Anacostia River. with the dense humidity which prevails at the altitude of their camp, almost at sea level. They are subjected to typhoid and other epidemics. They are forced, in effect, to live under those conditions, and I think it has become a real serious problem here in the District of Columbia.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CUTTING in the chair). Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. BLAINE. I yield.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I desire to ask the Senator what percentage of our unemployed, in his estimation, are made up of ex-service men? I understand the records show that there are now more than 8,000,000 men unemployed in the United States, some estimating as many as 10,000,000. What percentage of the unemployed would probably be made up of ex-service men?

Mr. BLAINE. My opinion would be based entirely upon conjecture, but I think there is some ground upon which a reasonable estimate can be made. Those men who were overseas enlisted in 1917 and 1918. They were young men, generally of the age of 18 to 25 years. It has been about 12 or 13 years since they were discharged from the service. Therefore those men have reached the age of anywhere from 31 to 40 years. They are men who naturally would go into industry and transportation because of their youth and their vigor. Outside of the men who came from the farms, no doubt a large portion of the veterans went into industry and into transportation. As I have said, they were of that age and of that physique and of that determination where they were choice men for positions.

When the young men who came from the farming communities and enlisted in the service came back, they were unable to purchase farms, there was no employment to speak of upon the farms, so a large number of those men drifted into the industrial cities, and took their places as well with the industrial workers. So it would seem to me that a very large number are out of employment to-day. I do not know whether it would run to 50 per cent or not. Approximately 4,000,000 men were enlisted in the World War, and I am rather under the impression that the number of those men out of employment would probably exceed 50 per cent.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. The facts are that there were about four and a half millions in the training camps and in the service overseas during the World War. Does the Senator think that a million of those men are, more than likely, now in the unemployed class, which would mean about 25 per cent?

Mr. BLAINE. My own opinion, based upon the analysis I have made, would be that a million men would scarcely out of employment.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I think it is safe to assume that at least a million of our unemployed are ex-service men. Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, will the Senator from Wisconsin yield to me?

Mr. BLAINE. I yield.

Mr. MOSES. As the Senator from Wisconsin has said, this is a matter of conjecture. As a matter of fact, however, we know from statistics that the total number of men in the Army during the World War was slightly over 3 per cent of the population. I do not think it necessarily follows that such an excess of the percentage of those men is to be found in the ranks of the unemployed as the Senator from Oklahoma seems to think. I can well understand how the Senator from Wisconsin feels about it, that because of the spirit of adventure, because of the active temperaments of those young men, they would have gone into employment of a character which necessarily would result in great unemployment in times like these, but it seems to me that the figures are highly exaggerated, when Senators undertake to say that a million of the ex-service men, 25 per cent of the total enrollment of the ex-service men, are now out of Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I think the number the Senator from Oklahoma has stated may approximate the number out of employment.

I think that, if an accurate census were taken in this period of unemployment, the number of ex-service men out of employment would be found to be not less than a million men.

Assume that it is less, assume that it is only three-quarters of a million, 750,000 men. Most of those men are married and have families. In this period of their lives their families consist, probably, including themselves, of about four persons on an average. That would mean that there were about 3,000,000, including the veterans and their dependents, facing a very desperate situation.

I do not speak this morning from excitement or emotion, but I speak with a deep seriousness of the realities which certainly ought to be obvious to everyone. I am concerned about the situation.

I am not objecting to this appropriation of $600,000, 22 per cent of which is to come out of the taxpayers of the country. I opened the discussion to demonstrate that there is, in a degree, a recognition of the fact that the emergency is a national emergency, and therefore the responsibility is a national responsibility.

I discussed the former service men who are present here in Washington in the hope that I could persuade the Senator from Connecticut and the Senate to make an appropriation out of the Federal Treasury to take care of what I regard as the gravest emergency we have faced in any community in the country.

I do not want to take out of the $600,000 the money necessary to provide the shelter, the food, the sanitation, and the hospitalization for the veterans who are here. I am aware of the fact that the District needs that money for those who are dependent upon the District, whether they are residents in the popular and legal sense or transients and homeless people who find themselves stranded within the District of Columbia.

The $600,000 is necessary for these local purposes. I think we are short-sighted when we do not recognize the possibilities that may come not only to the veterans, but to the people of the District. As I said these men will become carriers of the typhoid germ and other germs that produce other epidemics, carriers of those germs to their home communities when they return, not because the men want to be carriers of these devastating germs, but that is unavoidable unless we protect against it.

There are some places where the men are camped where there is an entire lack of adequate water supply, barely enough water for their meager cooking requirements, wholly inadequate for the ordinary sanitary requirements, and grossly inadequate for complete sanitation. There is no op-cover the number of the former service men who are to-day | portunity for the men, because of a lack of the necessary water, to keep themselves in the condition in which they want to keep themselves. Many of the camps have improvised housing facilities. Sometimes the men rig up shelter by carrying from the dump heap, the refuse pile near their camp, old pieces of tin that have come off the roofs of buildings, or an old automobile top they have rescued from the refuse; sometimes an old piece of carpet. At best their shelter is only that of rough boards for the roof without any siding. They are not objecting to the physical hardships to which they are subjected. They will not be found complaining because of hardships. But what these men do fear is the possibility of an outbreak of epidemics to which they will be subjected. They are not going to leave the District for some time, at least until the Congress votes upon the soldiers' bonus bill.

> Senators may rise in their places and demand that these men must show their good faith that they are going to leave the District before any consideration will be given the bonus. Of course such a demand on the part of a Member of Congress is easily made.

> But that does not answer the question I have been discussing. These men can not be put aboard trucks and freight cars and shipped out of the District. I am not discussing whether they should or should not be here. I have my own views about it. I think they have a perfect right to be here. I can pay a tribute to these young men for the splendid discipline they have shown. They have observed every rule of conduct that would apply to the people of the District. They have made no demonstration of force, no suggestion of violence. They constitute as pacific an aggregation of human beings as ever assembled-yes, even as ever assembled at the peace conferences of the world. They are not hoboes or tramps or vagrants. They have not come to the city of Washington for unlawful purposes. They have come for a perfectly legitimate purpose. There is no more demonstration of force applied by them than there is applied by the army of lobbyists just outside the Senate door who accost a member of the Senate, taking him by the coat collar, detaining him until they can present their demands, and usually those demands are for some sordid. selfish interest. These men as I have observed them are dignified, courteous, gentlemanly.

> So, Mr. President, it seems to me that we can not discharge our duties in these premises unless we make an appropriation to the authorities of the District of Columbia to provide for additional housing facilities for the men, for sanitation purposes, for food, and medical supplies. Up to this point the authorities of the District of Columbia have done the best they can, and have done remarkably well when we consider the limited amount of funds which come into the hands of the police department and into the hands of the superintendent of police, General Glassford. Those funds come in small amounts. This morning another hundred dollars was turned over to the department out of some local charity. But they must have more than $100, they must have more than $1,000 if they are to provide for the bare essential necessities of food, shelter, and sanitation.

> I think that the police department are entitled to great praise for handling the situation as well as they have and with the limited amount of money available to them. I do not believe any criticism can justly be heaped upon the police department of the District. I do not believe any just criticism can be heaped upon the heads of the veterans who are

> In their parade the other evening there was a large group of men, thousands of them, who for two long years had been taught how to shoot. That was the purpose of their training for the front. Yet those men in that march, grim, it is true, and determined, demonstrated a self-control which I think is entitled to the encomiums of the people of the country. I could deliver encomiums attesting the restraint and the deliberation exhibited by these men during the many days they have been among us. I confess, Mr. President, that I am unable to choose language properly to describe the splendid conduct of these men while they have been with us temperate in their speech, peaceful in their conduct, and courteous and gentlemanly to everyone with whom they have come in contact.

Mr. President, unfortunate as these men may be, they are choice men; those whom I know who come from my State are splendid citizens of that State; they are men to whom I would be willing to intrust the gravest affairs of their communities, with the assurance that they would carry out their trust as diligently and as gloriously as they carried out their trust in war.

Mr. President, what I have said is wholly inadequate to paint the picture as it really is. In calmness and deliberation I have endeavored to point out the responsibility of this Government in protecting the lives and the health of our people everywhere, and I shall ask that the $600,000 appropriation provided on page 80, in line 16, be increased by $100,000, which hundred thousand dollars shall be appropriated out of the Treasury of the United States to the District of Columbia, and shall be available for emergency temporary care of the visiting veterans in the District of Columbia, and which sum shall be made immediately available.

I understand that such an amendment is not in order at this time, but when we come to the consideration of the amendment on page 80 I shall submit that amendment to the bill. I propose it now as an amendment, and will offer it at the proper time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment intended to be proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin will lie on the table.

The next amendment will be stated.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 32, line 4, before the word "of," to strike out "one-fourth" and insert "one-sixth," so as to make the further proviso read:

Provided further, That after the completion of said bridge and approaches herein authorized no street-railway company shall use said bridge or approaches until the said company shall have paid to the collector of taxes of the District of Columbia a sum equal to one-sixth of the cost of said bridge and approaches, which sum shall be paid to the collector of taxes of the District of Columbia for deposit to the credit of the District of Columbia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 32, after line 15, to insert:

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I inquire of the Senator from Connecticut whether plans for this bridge have been prepared and if it is deemed expedient to go forward with this project during the coming year?

Mr. BINGHAM. Yes; it is very important in order to relieve traffic congestion, because this bridge, when completed, will permit Rock Creek Parkway to be joined with the parkway below Pennsylvania Avenue and thereby give a new north and south avenue for traffic, which will relieve congestion on Sixteenth Street, Connecticut Avenue, and some of the other north and south streets.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I inquire of the Senator concerning the item just referred to and the following one which appropriates $1,115,000, an increase of $115,000 over the House provision. It seems to me there are no sufficient reasons for these increases.

While I have the floor permit me to say that in this period of depression, while all States and municipalities are cutting their expenses and abandoning projects not indispensably required, the Appropriations Committee reports a measure for the District of Columbia that fails to take cognizance of the financial situation of the Government or the nation-wide distress and depression. The bill before us is top-heavy with enormous appropriations aggregating more than $43,000,000. This sum is much larger than the entire appropriations of some States and their political subdivisions. An examination of the items of the bill reveals the fact that reductions could and should be made aggregating at least five or six millions of dollars. Indeed, measured by the economies adopted in other parts of the country, an appropriation of $30,000,000 or certainly not more than $33,000,000 would more nearly meet the present situation. But when the Federal Treasury can be resorted to for $8,500,000, it is an invitation to enlarge the District appropriations and to embark upon projects which otherwise would not be considered. Senators will recall that not many years ago the District appropriation bills were less than one-half of the amount carried in the pending measure.

Mr. President, this bill should be recommitted to the Appriations Committee as a number of other appropriation bills have been, with instructions to reduce by at least eight or ten million dollars the total amount carried in the bill.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. FLETCHER. I should like to inquire how the items in line 2 on page 37, and in line 9, on the same page, compare with the Budget estimates?

Mr. BINGHAM. They are the Budget estimates. There is only a slight increase over the present cost of removing rubbish and garbage, and so forth, and the increase is caused by the growth of the city. The appropriations proposed are exactly the Budget estimates.

Mr. FLETCHER. That is, the Senate amendments are in accordance with the Budget estimates?

Mr. BINGHAM. Exactly.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, our experience with presidential budgets confirms the view that they are not safe guides to be followed. They are universally larger than the appropriations made by Congress. The President of the United States is required, as Senators know, to prepare and submit to Congress when it convenes, Budget estimates and recommendations for appropriations for the following fiscal year. In other words, the President of the United States with a large Budget force at his command, prepares Budget recommendations covering all items of appropriation which it is expected the Congress will make. Last December the President submitted his recommendations for appropriations for the fiscal year 1932–33. We have discovered that his recommendations were in excess of what Congress is willing to appropriate—in excess of what the condition of the Treasury permits. Accordingly Congress has been engaged in cutting and mutilating the Budget recommendations, in order, if possible, to bring the expenditures of the Government so far below Executive recommendations that with the increased taxes a balanced Budget might be provided.

The Budget recommendations during the administrations of Presidents Harding, Coolidge, and Hoover have exceeded by $440,000,000 the appropriations made by Congress. In this statement I do not take into account the recommendations made by the President for the coming fiscal year and the reductions below it which will be made during this session of Congress. I do not desire to criticize the Chief Executives, but it is a fact that it has been claimed by them or for them that they were the protagonists of economy, while Congress was extravagant if not wasteful. I concede that appropriations made by Congress have been in many instances unwarranted and properly could be characterized as wasteful and extravagant. Nevertheless they have been less in the aggregate than those recommended by the three Presidents who have held office since the Budget law was enacted.

Mr. President, the country is in a serious condition financially. States and municipalities are reducing expenses, eliminating unnecessary projects, cutting the salaries of all employees. In private business economies are being introduced and activities abandoned which in days of prosperity would be carried forward. The situation demands a readjustment in our business, economic, and political life. The orgy of extravagance which has characterized the country has come to an end; and the sooner the people learn prudence in expenditures, wisdom in business and public concerns, and a proper understanding of industrial and economic principles the better it will be for the people and the sooner will we tread the path of security, safety, and prosperity.

Mr. President, I know my criticism of this bill will be unavailing. The very few Senators present during the consideration of the bill reveals the lack of interest in its provisions. It is taken for granted that it will pass as it emanates from the Committee on Appropriations. I can only, therefore, voice my disapproval of some of its provisions and protest against an appropriation which in the aggregate is greatly in excess of what under all the circumstances may be justified, and also against the provisions which take from the Treasury of the United States $8,500,000 to be applied in meeting the operating expenses of the District for the coming year.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment was, on page 37, line 9, after the word "expenses," to strike out "$1,000,000" and insert "$1,115,000," and in line 11, after the word "plant," to insert "of which not to exceed $10,000 shall provide for the construction, by day labor or otherwise, in the discretion of the commissioners, of a 2-story brick bunk house," so as to read:

To enable the commissioners to carry out the provisions of existing law governing the collection and disposal of garbage, dead animals, night soil, and miscellaneous refuse and askes in the District of Columbia, including inspection; fencing of public and private property designated by the commissioners as public dumps; and incidental expenses, $1.115,000, including not to exceed $25,000 for repair and improvement of the garbage-reduction plant, of which not to exceed $10,000 shall provide for the construction, by day labor or otherwise, in the discretion of the commissioners, of a 2-story brick bunk house, and there is further made available for the purposes of this paragraph not to exceed $72,500 of the unexpended balance of the similar appropriation for the fiscal year 1932.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I have the attention of my friend from Connecticut? On line 15 I notice that $72,500 appropriated heretofore has not been expended, and it is reappropriated. Ought not that $72,500 to be returned to the Treasury? Of course it means, if not, that an additional amount is to be expended by this particular organization—that is, the amount of $72,500.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator that that is needed for the improvement of the garbage-reduction plant. That is why the unexpended balance is reappropriated. The amount needed for the collection and disposal of garbage, dead animals, night soil, and miscellaneous refuse and ashes, and so forth, is not too large to provide for the necessary keeping clean of the city.

Mr. KING. I was not adverting to the item to which the Senator has just referred, but I was wondering why that $72,500 had not been expended, and, if not, why it should not be covered into the Treasury.

Mr. BINGHAM. The Budget estimate was based on the fact that that money would be available to be used. If there had not been an unexpended balance, the estimate would have been larger.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I desire now to offer the amendment I proposed a few moments ago.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Will the Senator restate the amendment?

Mr. BLAINE. On page 80, line 16, I move to strike out the figures "$600,000" and insert "$700,000," and to add thereafter the following language:

$100,000 of which is hereby apprapriated out of the Treasury, and which shall be immediately available for emergency temporary care of transient and homeless persons in the District of Columbia.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, in view of the fact that this amount has not been recommended by the Budget or by the Appropriations Committee, it is necessary that I should make a point of order against it.

Mr. BLAINE. I am very sorry the Senator has made the point of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The point of order is sustained.
Mr. BLAINE. I therefore propose the following amendment: In line 18, after the word "expenses," I move to strike out the period and insert the following:

$100,000 of which shall be made available immediately for the sole purpose of affording emergency temporary care of transient and homeless persons in the District of Columbia.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, I make the point of order that this is new legislation, not recommended by the Budget.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I offer this amendment: At the end of line 18, after the word "expenses," I move to strike out the period and insert the following language:

$100,000 of which shall be limited for relief of transient and homeless persons in the District of Columbia for emergency temporary care, available immediately.

I submit that that is a limitation upon the appropriation, and, in my opinion, is in order, because the first paragraph of this appropriation is:

For the purpose of affording relief to residents of the District who are unemployed or otherwise in distress.

This language limits the use of $100,000 of the $600,000 appropriation.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, I am obliged to make a point of order against it, since it is not strictly a limitation, but, in fact, broadens the language. This in effect would broaden the provision so as to apply the money recommended by the Budget and adopted by the committee, the $600,000, for use among residents of the District of Columbia, to those not residents of the District, but transients.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I offer the following amendment: On page 80, line 18, after the word "residents," to strike out the period and insert "Provided, however, That not exceeding $100,000 shall be immediately available for those who are temporarily unemployed or otherwise temporarily in distress because of the existing emergency."

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, I have not seen the wording of the amendment, but it strikes me that that is provided for in lines 9 and 10 and therefore is not necessary, but is not new legislation, and therefore that a point of order would not lie against it. In order to make sure, however, and protect the committee which I have the honor to represent, I make the point of order and submit it to the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is of opinion that the amendment is out of order.

Mr. BLAINE. Then, Mr. President, I offer this amendment, on line 8, page 80, to strike out the words "residents of" and insert in lieu thereof the words "persons in."

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, I make the same point of order against that, since it enlarges the scope of the proposed appropriation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, before passing over this matter, I want to present an observation. First, however, I would like to ask the Senator from Connecticut if the appropriation of $600,000 is for the present fiscal year?

Mr. BINGHAM. Yes, Mr. President.

Mr. BLAINE. It is for the present fiscal year?

Mr. BINGHAM. Starting with July 1. Mr. BLAINE. Not available until June 30?

Mr. BINGHAM. I call the Senator's attention to the fact that in line 15 the entire appropriation is made immediately available.

Mr. BLAINE. I thank the Senator for the information. So that the Record may be perfected, and there may be no misunderstanding about this appropriation, I direct the attention of the Senator from Connecticut to the language, "for the purpose of affording relief to residents of the District of Columbia who are unemployed or otherwise in distress."

The interpretation of the language "residents" it would seem to me would be broad enough to include those who are here constituting the so-called bonus expeditionary force, former service men. They are not homeless in the sense that they have no shelter, no protection. Temporary places have been afforded them, in some buildings, in some cases improvised shelters, and to all intents and purposes they are now residents of the District of Columbia. They are here. They reside here. They actually live here. They eat and sleep here. They may be here temporarily, but they are not of the character of that person who is a transient. In other words, we do not know how long they will be here. They are here for more than a night. They are men who are not just passing through the District. They are men who have come to the District, and, for all I know, unless some relief measure is afforded, a large number of them may remain here and become permanent residents of the District of Columbia.

It would seem to me, therefore, that under the language of this bill in the present emergency the District authorities in all probability would be authorized to provide relief for those who are here, and for those who are unemployed and who are in distress out of this appropriation.

Mr. President, I am not going to discuss at any length the proposition of what constitutes residence in the District of Columbia. The people here in the District do not vote; therefore we can not by any rule relating to franchise define who is a resident of the District of Columbia. There are men and women in the District who do vote in their respective States, maintaining their voting residence in those States, but a voting residence and an actual residence are two entirely different kinds of residences.

A person domiciled in the District would therefore appear to be a resident of the District, and the interpretation no doubt would be that when we determine the domicile of a person, we then determine the residence of that person, and if a person is domiciled here he is a resident within the District of Columbia.

These ex-service men are not transients. They have come, of course, for an indefinite period of time, but they are not just passing through; they are not temporarily here in the sense of being transients, here to-day and somewhere else to-morrow. They are here, domiciled here, for a specific purpose, and while it is possible that some of them may not be residents it is very probable that a large number of them have become residents of the District of Columbia and would come within the provisions of this appropriation.

However that may be, I want to discuss another feature. My purpose in carrying on this debate is to find some way by which the District of Columbia will be afforded sufficient money to provide for the health of the people of this District and those who are here as veterans. I want to propose that the District authorities should have made available sufficient funds to provide for proper sanitation for these men, as a matter of self-interest, or self-protection, to the people who live in this District, as a matter of protection to the men who are here, and as a matter of protection to the men, women, and children in the respective vicinities from which these men come. I am not going into a further discussion of the eventualities which may come out of the very possible menace that confronts the health and welfare of the people of the District of Columbia.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BLAINE. I yield.

Mr. BINGHAM. May I suggest to the Senator that it would scarcely be fair to expect the taxpayers of the District of Columbia to provide a considerable amount of money for the care of transients who have come here for the purpose of lobbying with the Congress of the United States to secure what they believe is their right, and who have come here in very large numbers. It is scarcely fair to ask the taxpayers of the District of Columbia to do more than provide, as well as they can, for those of their fellow residents who are bona fide residents, and who are in trouble.

May I suggest to the Senator that yesterday the second deficiency appropriation bill came to the Senate and is now before the Committee on Appropriations, and that the proper way to secure the fund for the object which the Senator has in view is through securing an item in that deficiency appropriation bill, so that the money would not come out of the taxpayers of the District of Columbia alone, but would come, as the Senator believes it should come, out of the Federal Treasury. Will not the Senator take the matter up with the Committee on Appropriations in that connection, and let us get on with the District of Columbia appropriation bill, and protect the taxpayers of the District against any undue burdens being laid on them at this time?

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I think I can outline a method by which money may be made immediately available under this bill, and I want to pursue what I think ought to be made a matter of record.

I do not desire to urge unduly the Senator from Connecticut, but to delay this matter until the deficiency bill is considered means over Sunday, Monday, Tuesday, long into next week, and if we have a spell of weather such as is threatening now, Mr. President, instead of sending these men back as living human beings, the chances are that we will be loading many of them upon railroad cars in wooden boxes. I want to say, Mr. President, here this afternoon, that a real menace confronts these men.

The danger to their health, the danger to the health of the people of the District, and the several communities of the country, is a grave danger. It is immediate action that we should have. I hope we can get immediate action even under the strict provisions of the pending bill. I preferred to go at the matter directly and make a direct appropriation. I have failed in that because of the objection made by the Senator from Connecticut. This bill will pass to-day, it will go to conference Monday, possibly it will get to conference this afternoon. It can become a law Monday morning.

Under the provisions of the bill the District of Columbia may use any part of the $600,000 for relief of residents of the District who are unemployed or otherwise in distress because of the existing emergency. There is no specific emergency defined in the bill. The existing emergency in the District of Columbia is a general emergency that exists all over the country, and specifically there is an immediate existing present emergency and that is the danger which threatens the large group of men and the people to whom I have referred. It would seem to me that those who conduct the financial affairs of the District would have justification in law for using a part of the $600,000 for the purposes I have pointed out.

I appreciate that the people of the District of Columbia should not be burdened with the expense of the present existing emergency, but, as the Senator from Connecticut has suggested, there is a second deficiency bill coming on, and if the District authorities will take money presently and devote it to the present existing emergency, then that money can be covered into the District treasury by an appropriation made in the second deficiency appropriation bill. There is a failure to appreciate that haste is the essential thing in the present existing emergency. Thousands of additional men, I understand, are coming to Washington, in spite of all the warnings that have been sent out. These men have been meeting in the rooms of their service organizations all over the country, selecting committees to come here, selecting large groups to come here. Those men, notwithstanding the warning, are determined and they are coming. There is no force in this country that can prevent their coming. It is a serious situation that confronts us, and we ought to have a realization of the very things that we know are now here presently with us. It is to avoid an untoward situation that I am seeking the relief for which I am pleading.

Mr. President, I want to say now in closing that if there is a single one of these veterans who are here to-day who, by reason of the inadequate sanitary conditions and inadequate housing conditions, is subjected to an epidemic that takes his life, his blood will be on the hands of those who fail to respond as they ought to respond in these times.

Mr. President, I have endeavored to make a record here so that if there is sufficient courage, as I believe there is, on the part of the District commissioner of police and on the part of the District superintendent of police, these authorities will do everything in their power to prevent the untoward situation which is bound to come from the causes to which I have referred. But I do not want to place that full responsibility upon them. There may be questionable authority, but I think when the emergency is grave enough and the danger is impending, then there is authority to take some of this money for the relief of the residents of the District who are in distress. It may be that they will be compelled to apply the appropriation beyond a point which would not be justified in ordinary times; but when this menace becomes a reality and an epidemic of typhoid breaks out in the District, the District authorities will have moral justification, if not absolute legal justification, to protect the people who live here or who may be sojourning here.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment on page 80, line 8.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 86, line 6, to increase the appropriation for cleaning and repairing uniforms, arms, and equipment, and contingent expenses of the militia from $400 to $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Public buildings and public parks, salaries, public parks, District of Columbia," on page 86, line 14, to increase the appropriation for personal services under the public parks from $400,-000 to $405,900.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I invite attention to one item just passed. On page 85, under the head of "Militia," for personal service, the House allowed $19,000, which the Senate has increased to $27,150. The House allowed for temporary labor $6,000, in all $25,000, which the Senate has increased to $34,150. I am wondering if there is any justification for that. As a matter of fact, I do not see the necessity for very large appropriations for the militia at this time. Following the items to which I have just called attention there is an appropriation of $12,500, and on the next page a further appropriation of $11,000.

Mr. KENDRICK. Mr. President, the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BINGHAM], in charge of the bill, is temporarily absent. However, the clerk of the committee tells me that this is exactly the same amount that was employed for this purpose last year.

Mr. KING. I can not understand the reason for such a large sum for personal services.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the heading "National Capital Park and Planning Commission," on page 88, line 14, after the figures "$1,000,000," to strike out the colon and the following proviso:

Provided, That until otherwise permitted by law no further obligations shall be incurred under the appropriations heretofore made pursuant to the provisions of the act entitled "An act fore made pursuant to the provisions of the act entitled "An act for the acquisition, establishment, and development of the George Washington Memorial Parkway along the Potomac from Mount Vernon and Fort Washington to the Great Falls, and to provide for the acquisition of lands in the District of Columbia and the States of Maryland and Virginia requisite to the comprehensive park, parkway, and playground system of the National Capital," approved May 29, 1930 (46 Stat. 482-485), except such as may be for reimbursement of the United States or necessarily incidental to the discharge of obligations heretofore incurred.

For reimbursement to the United States in compliance with section 4 of the act approved May 29, 1930 (46 Stat. 482), as amended, $1,000,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "National Zoological Park," on page 90, line 9, before the word "no," to strike out "$228,880" and insert "$233,880," so as to

For roads, walks, bridges, water supply, sewerage, and drainage; grading, planting, and otherwise improving the grounds, erecting and repairing buildings and inclosures; care, subsistence, erecting and repairing buildings and inclosures; care, subsistence, purchase, and transportation of animals; necessary employees; traveling and incidental expenses not otherwise provided for, including not to exceed $2,000 for travel and field expenses in the United States and foreign countries for the procurement of live specimens and for the care, subsistence, and transportation of specimens obtained in the course of such travel; maintenance and operation of one motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicle required for official purposes; for the purchase, issue, operation, maintenance, repair, and exchange of bicycles and motor cycles, revolvers and ammunition; not exceeding $2,500 for purchasing and supplying uniforms to park police, keepers, and assistant keepers; not exceeding $100 for the purchase of necessary books and periodicals, $233,880, no part of which sum shall be available for architect's fees or compensation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 93, line 2, after the word "payments," to strike out "$125,000" and insert " $150,000," so as to read:

For replacement of old mains and divide valves in various locations, on account of inadequate size and bad condition of pipe on account of age, and laying mains in advance of payments, $150,000, to be immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 97, after line 16, to strike out:

strike out:

Szc. 6. No appropriation under the government of the District of Columbia, or for any other activities for which appropriations are made in this act, available during the fiscal years 1932 and/or 1933 shall be used after the date of the approval of this act to pay the compensation of an incumbent appointed to any position under the government of the District of Columbia, or such other activities, which is vacant on the date of the approval of this act or to any such position which may become vacant after such date: Provided, That this inhibition shall not apply (1) to absolutely essential positions the filling of which may be approved in writing by the President of the United States, or (2) to temporary, emergency, or seasonal positions. The appropriations or portions of appropriations unexpended by the operation of this section shall not be used for any other purposes, but shall be impounded and returned to the Treasury to the credit of the District of Columbia, and a report of all such vacancies, the number thereof filled, and the amounts unexpended, for the period between the date of the approval of this act and October 31, 1932, shall be submitted to Congress on the first day of the next regular session. next regular session.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KENDRICK. Mr. President, that completes the committee amendments as set forth in the printed copy of the bill. I have a committee amendment which I desire to offer.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 28, line 11, after the numerals "$30,000," insert the following:

And the commissioners, under such conditions as they may prescribe, are further authorized to utilize the existing testing laboratory of the highway department for making tests of all materials for other departments and activities of the District government.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator explain the purpose of the amendment? Is it an amendment offered by the committee?

Mr. KENDRICK. Yes; the committee authorized the amendment. I desire to say that there was a good deal of discussion before the committee as to the wisdom of this course. The hearings developed the fact that the District owns and operates a complete testing plant. The contention was made by the commissioners that a good deal of expense could be saved by using their own plant in testing materials. Furthermore, that a considerable saving would be effected in the one item of hauling material back and forth from the city to the Bureau of Standards.

Mr. KING. Is there any purpose to set up a new organization?

Mr. KENDRICK. Oh, no. The District owns this laboratory and it is fully equipped. The contention was that there would be no extra expense whatsoever, but there would be real economy in the actual cost of testing the materials.

Mr. KING. I have no objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Wyoming on behalf of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KENDRICK. I offer another amendment, which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated. The CHIEF CLERK. In the committee amendment, on page 18, line 21, after the word "unit," it is proposed to insert a colon and the following additional proviso:

Provided further, That the Washington Railway & Electric Co. is hereby directed to rebuild and relocate at its own expense the tracks of said company in D Street NW., between Fifth Street and Indiana Avenue, and in Indiana Avenue east of Fifth Street to the vicinity of Second Street, in accordance with plans and profiles to be approved by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, and in the event of the failure of said Washington Railway & Electric Co. to perform the work herein directed within the time fixed by the said commissioners the said work shall be performed by the District of Columbia and this appropriation shall be available for such purposes, and the cost of said work shall be a valid and subsisting lien against the franchises and property of the said railway company and shall constitute a legal indebtedness of said company in favor of the District of Columbia, and ness of said company in favor of the District of Columbia, and the said lien may be enforced in the name of the District of Columbia by a bill in equity brought by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, or by any other lawful proceeding against the said railway company.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The vote whereby the committee amendment was agreed to will have to be reconsidered in order that the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wyoming may be offered. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the vote whereby the committee amend-ment was agreed to is reconsidered. Without objection, the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wyoming to the committee amendment is agreed to, and without objection the committee amendment, as amended, is agreed to.

Mr. KENDRICK. I have another amendment to offer, which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Wyoming will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 40, line 15, after the word "service," and before the colon, it is proposed to insert a comma and the words "said sum to be expended by contract or otherwise and without reference to section 3709 of the Revised Statutes and the classification act of 1923, as amended."

Mr. KING. Mr. President, what is the purpose of that amendment?

Mr. KENDRICK. This fund, which is being used at the present time, is intended for the study of power needs in the District of Columbia.

Mr. KING. Will it increase the expenses?

Mr. KENDRICK. It will not involve any increase in expenses.

Mr. KING. Nor create any new jobs?

Mr. KENDRICK. I do not understand that it will do so.
The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Wyoming.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, to come in on page 52.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Let the amendment be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 52, line 4, it is proposed to strike out article "a"; in line 5, to strike out the word "school" and insert "schools"; and in line 6, after the word "section," to insert the following: "and on a site already acquired in the Manor Park section."

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, I have consulted with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. Bingham], who is in charge of the pending bill, in regard to this amendment. He has no objection to it. The amendment simply provides for the preparation of plans and specifications for the school, which is to be built on a site already purchased at Manor Park, out near Takoma Park. The two plans are to be considered at the same time under the same appropriation. There is no additional appropriation. It simply means considering of two plans instead of one. I hope the amendment may be adopted. The Senator from Connecticut has stated that he had no objection to the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from North Dakota.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there be no further amendments, the question is on the engrossment of the amendments and the third reading of the bill.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

AMENDMENT OF AGRICULTURAL MARKETING ACT

The VICE PRESIDENT. Under the unanimous-consent agreement, the Chair lays before the Senate Order of Business 780, being Senate bill 4536.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 4536) to amend the agricultural marketing act, approved June 15, 1929, which had been reported from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry with amendments.

PROPOSED INTERNATIONAL TRADE AGREEMENT

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, at this moment I desire to make free to express my personal and official congratulations to the President of the United States and the Secretary of State upon the decision which is being announced through the public press as to the attitude that shall be taken by the United States toward the invitation that has subterraneously filtered in our direction suggesting that the United States enter a conference at Lausanne, there to be met with a compact, which it is assumed our Government will adopt, seductively entitled "An Arrangement for the Adjustment of World Trade."

It appears, Mr. President, that the real meaning of this inivitation has been communicated in more complete detail to the officials of our Government than has been related in the public press to our countrymen, but if the response, as gathered from the public press, be accurate, as I shall assume it is, upon investigation on the part of the President and that of his Secretary of State, we have informally but with directness given notice that we do not propose to join into an understanding precipitated by the diplomatic representatives of the countries which are in debt to the United States

The proposition from time to time has been allowed to trickle to us, and after it takes a form in which it may be recognized in its watery substance it appears as a duplication of a very old theory previously applied, but with a result that has been the same under the circumstances either of its refusal, followed with enmity, or of its acceptance, with national loss.

The proposition, sir, which does not seem to arrest any attention on the part of our countrymen generally, is that there shall be assembled the representatives of the nations which are in debt to the United States to meet at Lausanne and from there to such other locations as shall be recessed to or designated for future, there to be presented what is already framed and shaped, a proposition that the United States shall enter into an arrangement wherein she subscribes herself that the products of our country shall not be sent to the world at large in export except upon the basis of such prices as shall have been agreed upon by these countries in the assemblage where they meet. It is assumed that a price list of the products of our country and the countries which are in debt to us can be reached, sir, and we are asked to join in the suggestion that there be no sale of our products in any European or other lands save at the price agreed upon under what may be called in homely parlance "a price-fixing arrangement," this to be international.

In this connection it is now more audaciously presented that we shall enter into an agreement that whatever goods may be sold to America under the theory of the fixed-price and standard shall be accepted by us in some form of payment of outstanding indebtedness which has been incurred since the war in private commercial engagements.

Mr. President, the plan is adroit, but it very impudently suggests that this is a time when the debts due our country and the debts of those who owe us may be completely wiped out or a reason found for suspending them for such length of time that the present generation will be exhausted before any payments from these nations shall find their way into the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. President, I have often assumed that many of the errors committed by our country, that many of the complications into which we have been drawn, have been due to the fact that we did not understand at the beginning the purport of those things initiated against us. It is only when it has grown too late for us wholly to oppose them and defeat them we enter into some form of compromise with them to find ourselves subdued in our rights and defeated in our dignity. In the language of Mr. Hamlet, "Let us to the full stop and ask what is the design."

Mr. President, by slow process it has now reached us, the newspapers of the larger metropolitan centers this morning aiding us in giving more definite details, that by agreeing with the other nations under the name of a trade treaty upon a single price for commodities those from us and those from other nations which are like unto each other, we will establish a definite schedule of international price lists.

It will be impossible, of course, for America to yield the legitimate prices of her products measured by the cost of their production. On the other hand, the foreign countries will not raise their prices to the point which essentially must be the prices of America. But when we have been entrapped into the design, then will come the proposition which is the underground purpose:

"Gentlemen, before you can have the exchange of the trade you must put us in a position where we can pay this high price which your America says she can not reduce, out of due regard to the dignity of your Nation and the legitimate earning power of your people.

"Therefore, in order that we shall be those who are your customers and purchase your products "-which will be professed to be their very earnest desire-" you must wipe out the debt you have over us, thus exempting us from having to expend our money in the payment of these debts, and we then will expend the money, instead, upon your products and at the prices which you are compelled to maintain. Otherwise we are unable to buy anything from you, because the sum of money which we may possess, if we could have enough, is demanded by the debt we owe you; and as we can not pay the debt we owe you in money, the only way you can be assured of payment is to take it in the goods we will give you at a much less price than they can be created in America under your system of free government. You then can raise the price from that at which we let you have the material to the price which you would charge in America and gain the profit between that at which we let you have it and that which you will obtain from your own American customers."

who are willing to speculate upon their country's dignity and to profit by the loss of their country's credit.

Now, in addition to this, comes a second proposition:

"If you gentlemen will not agree to wipe out the debt in some form by which we can hold the money and distribute it to you in the purchase of material, there is nothing left for us to do under the trade treaty but obtain from your Government something of a perpetual moratorium, one that shall suspend all payment of money in every form and in any form during the present generation."

Mr. President, as I am complimented to have the attention of the chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee [Mr. Borah]-I attract the attention of the eminent chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee-conscious as I am of how he personally keeps abreast the current-day events of the world. I am anxious to ascertain from him if he had knowledge of this last bargain that is suggested, as it comes to us this morning.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I want to say, first, that I was listening intently to what the Senator had to say, he may be sure. Now, what is the question?

Mr. LEWIS. I was merely asking the chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee if he had had time to give a little note to these propositions. Since he was listening to me, he has already caught them. A little later I will take the liberty, possibly, of presenting some other suggestion in his presence.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LEWIS. Let me finish this phase, please, then gladly I vield.

The second suggestion is, "Well, then, gentlemen, if you can not find it agreeable to grant the cancellation by which we may have the money which we flatter you with the prospect of expending in your country as a consideration for suspending the obligation, then we would seek a moratorium for such length of time as will enable us to accumulate money in excess of the interest or installment payments. which money, we beg to assure you, it is our purpose to spend in America." This will do much to induce the moratorium to those whose minds ascend no higher than private financial profit, or whose patriotism to their land has so lapsed that it may be seduced by the suggestion of private advantage.

Mr. President, it is now apparent to me that the President of the United States and his Secretary of State have been advised with a just completeness, and that they have awakened to the design, and in the statement given out it is made plain that while they may have some one attend some of these meetings as a mere courtesy, as one of the observers, it is no purpose of theirs to enter into a compact which will carry out by contract an agreement such as I have suggested is the object of these foreign nations.

Mr. President, never since I have had to do with public life-limited as my experience necessarily is in point of time and in point of responsibility compared to many-never have I seen a design that has worked such a farce under the designation of international affairs as the result at Lausanne and the one at Geneva. We have not moved one inch looking to the reduction of the great armaments of the war lands of the world. We have spent months of time and millions of money.

It is evident to me that the spirit of America, properly caught and justly appraised by the President of the United States and his Secretary of State, has suggested to them with great potency very early-indeed, at an immediate momentto inform these who design this trick of trade that the American people will not accept it; that there has come an end to these different forms of multiple calculations to influence what is assumed to be the adaptability of the American mind to any plausible pretext or influenced by deliberate absurdity in the conclusions it may reach in the name of diplomacy.

In my estimation, speaking as I do in the presence of my friend of long years, the distinguished chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee and the Senators who flatter me with their close relations, I say we shall do a service to these

The suggestion, of course, has a bit of seduction to those | foreign lands who avail themselves of what they think is the hour just before the election, when vast millions are out of employment in our country, and when, to their conception, we are in need of something that can give some promise either of reward, return, and compensation to those who seek employment, or create an issue political that might be of avail to one political party and adverse to another, we do them a service if we very early say to these master manipulators and those who fancy they create a Frankenstein in which they may grind us at the proper hour, that we now know their object, that it is to the single purpose of either the cancellation of the debts or a moratorium that shall perpetuate itself through the generations, and make impossible the collection of these debts to be applied in behalf of ourselves to our Treasury.

I feel, Mr. President, that much will be gained by having it go out from this body, which it is well understood by the parliamentary masters of Europe must ratify any agreement that shall be made by the President or his representatives, that here comes the announcement again from the United States Senate that no specious devisement on the part of these who calculate themselves superior in the finesse of diplomacy will succeed where the ultimate object is the cancellation of the debt or the dragging of our Nation in one form or another into a moratorium by which we are robbed of the final results of the debt.

Mr. President, may I be so bold as to say that these suggestions that have come to us in relays have no originality. I am vain enough in the presence of old friends, Senators and Members of the House assembled, to remind you that there is a book existing, to be seen on one or two of the desks here, of which I am the author. This is only mentioned to designate it, and that in the preparation of that volume of the Two Great Republics, which I have written, there was a necessity for my investigation of the records of ancient lands at their capitals, by which I could make comparison of the institutions of this, our land, and those of others from the point of view as I would perceive them. It is an interesting thing for me to confess here that only through those investigations did I learn-as I profess no general information in excess of any of my fellows upon the general subject of the world-that when Greece was in debt by reason of a relay of wars upon Rome the representatives of oriental lands, led by the land we now speak of as China, but which was then in power, at the suggestion of officials who came from a lesser community which we now designate in geography as Korea, marched across the country, aided by those we speak of now as the Muscovites, and proposed to Greece the suggestion that she propose to Rome that they have an understanding for a combination trade cartel, and that Greece, being semioriental, would be able to bring the aid of these of China and those of Korea and the Muscovites of Russia to the purposes of Greece and thus offer a new profit to Rome; then when once the agreement was made that in the exchange of these products in the manner I have pointed out as between them upon a stated price for the same commodity grown by either country, then and there Rome would abandon her claim against Greece for the sesterces of money and would be willing to take the goods which Greece could send over as payment and wipe out the debt. It was then seen that the real object, of course, was to prevent the dealing by Rome with Egypt for the grain, which it was readily understood, coming by way of Egypt, would supply the demand and cut off the market of those who were seeking to ally themselves with Greece to the objects which are being suggested now in this day by these eminent statesmen of modern

Mr. President, when France succeeded in subjecting 11 lands of the European world to her military domination under Napoleon, and there was the announcement of the indebtedness due from them through the fury of war and the exactions of Napoleon, these lands under the leadership, if it will be recalled by my good friends around me, of Metternich, then of Austria, and the first of Machiavellian diplomats, revived the plan and made it specifically in the exact language of these eminent gentlemen who are now sending

Sir, I pause to suggest that the dolorous philosophy of Ecclesiastes, that "there is no new thing under the sun," more completely applies to matters of government and diplomacy than to any other subject with which mankind is

Mr. President, the time that I have taken is longer than I expected. I know that our excellent friend from Oregon [Mr. McNary] has his calendar, which I must aid him in carrying out as the leader of the floor for the present. I want to conclude, then, by saying that I have often criticized the President of the United States and his Secretary of State in matters wherein I felt their position was wrong; and, while entertaining great respect concerning them as gentlemen, I have not at all been reluctant to condemn their conduct in expressions that gave evidence of antagonism. Now, however, as a Senator representing in part the great tribunal of what might be called the courts of justice and honor of my State of Illinois, and representing the State and being one of her ambassadors here, I desire to extend both to the President of the United States and to his Secretary of State my congratulations and commendation that they have been so quick to gather the design, and so prompt in giving evidence of its rejection; but more, sir, of the announcement that the Senate of the United States would not tolerate a movement that had for its purpose that which is confessed on the part of these eminent masters of modern diplomacy, of these European lands that are our debtors.

Mr. President, no one wishes more than I that all of these lands shall have quick prosperity and blessedness; but I can not conceive for a moment that our citizens in this country would wish us to sacrifice the rights of America or defer from protecting the dignity of her station merely to serve that which in mercy and charity we would be glad to extend to any of God's humanity.

I yield to my friend the Senator from Utah, who a moment ago desired to interrupt.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the Senator has departed from the point about which I desired to inquire, and I shall take the floor when he gets through.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I have stated my position. I yield to whoever desires to take the floor, conscious of the fact that the subject is worthy of consideration of such splendid minds as sit around me.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I have not been in the Senate Chamber during the entire address of the distinguished Senator from Illinois, and therefore may not accurately interpret his position with respect to matters which he has been discussing. If I correctly understood his remarks he was criticizing, and indeed condemning, representatives of some European governments, among them Ramsay Mac-Donald, perhaps the outstanding political figure in Europe to-day. Many of us have the pleasure of knowing Mr. MacDonald, and I am sure that those who do know him will acquit him of an intriguing mind, and do not attribute to him a malevolent feeling toward this or other countries, or regard him as belonging to a group of "master manipulators." He organized the fragmentary labor forces of Great Britain into a militant political party, which, under his leadership, achieved political and economic victories, and influenced domestic and foreign policies of Great Britain, if not the British Empire. He has been frank and candid in his political expressions, and when he broke with the Labor Party, or rather when the Labor Party broke with him, he gathered around him leaders from all political parties and formed a national or coalition organization in order to cope with the disturbing and difficult problems, domestic and foreign, with which Great Britain and the British Empire has been and is confronted.

Mr. President, I am not prone to be critical of other peoples and of political leaders in other lands. We do not always realize our own infirmities or perceive our own unwise political and economic policies. I recall not long ago, when some enthusiastic and overzealous American patriots were denouncing another country because of its alleged imperial-it, through some form of percolating process, to the United | istic policies, reference was made in reply to the record of this Republic and its dealings with other nations. It was asserted that this Republic had waged war with Mexico and compelled the defeated nation to cede a vast empire to the United States; that in the War with Spain the United States annexed foreign territory containing millions of inhabitants without the consent of the latter. Reference was also made to incursions by the United States into Latin America and into Santo Domingo and Haiti. The Hawaiian Islands and Guam also came under the flag of this Republic. It was further averred that policies had been pursued by this Republic and by American citizens which could properly be called economically imperialistic.

I allude to these matters merely for the purpose of indicating that our conduct may be the subject of discussion in other countries.

There has been no little criticism, not only in the United States but abroad, growing out of credits which have been extended by American financial interests and the deplorable consequences that have attended the sale of foreign securities in American markets. In my opinion, international misunderstandings are not infrequently the result of unfounded criticisms, if not aspersions, upon the character and integrity of those occupying responsible governmental positions.

We should not forget that statesmen and leaders in other lands are as desirous of peace and world fellowship as those in our own land. There are, of course, in this and in all lands chauvinists, disturbers of the peace, agitators who seek to arouse national and international resentments: but, as I read history, progress, though slow, is being made, and men and nations are plodding courageously from the lowlands to the uplands which are bathed in a radiance which some day will envelop all nations.

We can not forget Stresemann-that mighty apostle of peace and world fellowship who struggled with the immortal Briand to promote peace in Europe and in all the worldand Benes and Mazaryk, of Czechoslovakia; Lord Cecil, of England; Heymans, of Belgium; Branting, of Sweden; and a multitude of others in this and other lands, who have labored for the eradication of maladies harmful to the health and happiness of the world.

Europe is beset with difficulties that seem insurmountable. The World War left wounds that have not yet healed and scars that only time will efface. Political problems, serious though they are, perhaps are less difficult of solution than economic problems. Throughout the world there are unstable forces, many of them disintegrating and challenging. Old forms-political and economic-are compelled to answer these challenging elements which seem omnipresent. Even in this blessed land, which seems to have been the heir of all the ages, is not immune from questioning and disturbing forces that bring apprehension to the hearts of many. Humanity is not a protoplasmic mass, but it is responsive to evolutionary growth. There is social evolution and political evolution, and the progress of the world is measured by the triumph of the forces of evolution. But these forces are not blind; there are moral and spiritual influences which manifest themselves and powerfully influence the foundations of society and governments. History is replete with examples of the far-reaching effects of violent international conflicts. The marching legions of Rome, planting the symbol of Roman authority in many lands, set in motion forces which changed the face of the world. And other mighty contests have wrought economic, social, and industrial changes. The effects of the Napoleonic wars still persist, and it is to be expected that many hundred years will elapse before Europe and other parts of the world will be beyond the periphery of its influences.

In this disturbed and critical period—and it is a natural sequence of the World War-there should be voices raised by men of influence and leaders of thought in all lands should seek to temper the elements and to calm the passions and, so far as possible, eradicate the prejudices and antipathies so prevalent throughout the world. The world needs to-day not narrow and provincial leaders, not agitators and bitter partisan critics, but men who not only understand the problems of their own countries but whose vision enables them to comprehend the problems of other lands. The progress toward world peace and brotherhood to many seems scarcely perceptible, but that should only increase the zeal of world leaders and, indeed, of all animated by a desire for the happiness and welfare of their own and other lands to reach the objective which in all ages has been before the eyes of inspired men and women.

The World War imposed upon Europe a mountain of indebtedness. Many of the people feel that they are in chains and that unless released therefrom the future is but a prison house. In our own land millions of American citizens are being crushed beneath the increasing burdens of debt. The obligations of the National Government have been augmented to the extent of millions of dollars during the past year and it is certain that the coming year will add to this stupendous sum of indebtedness. States and all of their political subdivisions are bowed beneath heavy burdens and in all the land are heard the cries of the debtors who plead to be released from their chains of bondage. It has been claimed that private obligations in the United States have reached the staggering sum of between one hundred and two hundred billion dollars. Are not the American peop!e all concerned with this oppressive burden which depresses the spirits of some and constitutes an apparent insurmountable obstacle to happiness and national prosperity? We live in a land choice above all other lands. America seems to be the favored land of earth. If we, in this favored land, have problems we are seeking to solve and burdens from which we are struggling to be freed, may we not expect that European peoples, less fortunate than we are, are looking forward to a day of deliverance? If we are critical of others and of ourselves should we expect that the peoples of Europe and of other lands should be silent and satisfied and uncritical? I am not attempting to excuse European statesmen or the nationals of European nations. We have been generous in dealing with nations indebted to our Government, but we have clearly indicated that contracts which have been signed and the bonds which have been given may not be repudiated.

Undoubtedly our debtors as well as other nations are attempting to reach an agreement that they believe will enable them to arrest any retrograde movements threatening to the social, economic, and political structure of Europe. We can not complain, indeed we should approve of policies devised and executed that will prevent further degenerative conditions in European countries.

If European nations can adjust their intergovernmental obligations and compose their differences and unite upon just and sound policies promotive of peace and social and economic progress and development, they should not encounter opposition from us but their efforts should be commended and their hands strengthened. If among themselves they can reach an agreement to extinguish or forgive their obligations inter se, there can be no doubt that Europe would witness a renascence. If France and Germany reach an accord so that neither will fear the other, if all other European nations reach a like understanding, it is obvious that a new day will dawn not only for Europe but for other lands. It may be that appeals will be made to this country to make contribution to the intergovernmental settlements which are being sought by our debtors. We have, however, clearly indicated that the obligations due the United States from the nations to which I have referred will not further be reduced. I can not find it in my heart to denounce our debtors or any nation seeking in a proper manner relief from crushing burdens, nor can I see in any of the conferences to which my attention has been called any conspiracy or wicked and meretricious scheme aimed at this Republic.

That many of the peoples of Europe believe that all intergovernmental obligations should be canceled I have no doubt, but I am not willing to denounce such persons as "master manipulators" or intriguing enemies of my country because they entertain that view. Senators know that Great Britain extended credits to her associates in the war in excess of the credits which she obtained from our Government; and when Lord Balfour, speaking for Great Britain, suggested that there should be an intergovernmental cancellation of war obligations there were many persons in this and in other countries that looked with favor upon the suggestion, believing that if accepted the results would be beneficial not only to the debtor and creditor nations but to the entire world. It was understood that the allied nations owed Great Britain more than Great Britain owed the United States. Those who favored the suggestion believed that if Europe were freed from war obligations resentments growing out of the war would be diminished, if not dissipated; that the fierce spirit of nationalism which obstructed international agreements, understandings, and relations would be exercised from the nations involved; and that the peoples would take new courage and address themselves with zeal and earnestness to the rehabilitation of their shattered fortunes and the restoration of their respective countries.

Mr. President, I have not intended in anything I have said to advocate that the United States relieve European nations who are indebted to it of their obligations, but I am attempting to convey the thought that the efforts of European statesmen and the people themselves to adjust the problems that are obstacles to peace and progressive development, should not be condemned. It will be recalled that when former Premier Laval visited the United States the President, if we are to believe the public press, suggested that European nations settle their own intergovernmental obligations, and, as I understood the President's position, that they should attempt to reconcile their differences with a view to promoting the welfare, prosperity, and concord of such nations. Undoubtedly, European nations have in their various conferences attempted to improve their material economic and political conditions, to adjust tariff duties, and to remove obstacles to trade and commerce.

The Senator from Illinois has referred to one of these conferences, which I have no doubt discussed international questions and particularly European problems. As I have indicated, it is quite likely that some of the European nations urged a cancellation of all intergovernmental obligations, and that German reparations be materially reduced, if not entirely canceled. It is probable that the suggestion of Mr. Balfour, to which I have referred, was in mind in these discussions.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Johnson in the chair). Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. The suggestion the Senator called to our attention is often made, and I am wondering whether those who make it are acting in good faith or whether they realize how unfair such a proposition would be even if we were inclined to accept it.

For instance, if Great Britain should forgive $100,000,000 of what Germany owes Great Britain, on the ground that we would forgive $100,000,000 which Great Britain owes to us, on its face to some at first blush that might appear to be a fair proposition; but let us see about it. What sacrifice would Great Britain make in that kind of a bargain? She would get a cancellation of $100,000,000 of her debt by canceling $100,000,000 that somebody owed her: She would not lose a penny; she would not make any sacrifice whatever. What would that mean to us? We would sacrifice $100,-000,000 which Great Britain owes to us. On the other hand, nobody would sacrifice anything which they owed us. In other words, it would be a loss to us of $100,000,000, while not a loss to Great Britain of a single cent. The only way our Government, not owing other governments, could be made whole in that kind of a proposition would be for our Government to repudiate $100,000,000 which it owes to its own citizens, who were induced, under great pressure, to buy bonds during the war, and sometimes made great sacrifices in order to do it. Is there any justice in that kind of Mr. KING. Mr. President, I have indicated that Congress has declared against the cancellation of debts due the United States from European nations, and I am not advocating that the United States adopt for itself the suggestion made by Lord Balfour. I am only attempting to indicate that it is quite natural that European nations, with the unsettled problems before them, and the heavy burdens resting upon them, which undoubtedly are obstacles to economic prosperity and indeed political stability, should confer together for the purpose of reaching agreements or adopting policies that would improve their economic and political situation.

Immediately following the war, in this and other countries, there were many who believed that if the intergovernmental obligations were extinguished and Germany was subjected to the payment of a limited sum in reparations, economic conditions would revive and the political structure of Europe would be strengthened.

I think those who have been familiar with Europe since the war will be in substantial agreement that some of the conditions of the Versailles treaty have proven oppressive or at least have been provocative of unrest and discontent, and the view has been entertained by many not only in Europe but in the United States that the burdens resulting from the war must be reduced or lifted from the shoulders of the people in order that the world may emerge from the morass in which it is now found. We find in our own country that the people are oppressed with burdens of debt. It is obvious, therefore, that if they were relieved of these burdens new hope would spring up in their hearts and, as if touched by some magic wand, the whole industrial and intellectual life of the people would be quickened.

It is believed by many that the debts resulting from the World War will never be fully discharged, and, realizing that fact, many farseeing persons of recognized statesmanship have not hesitated to approve a policy that would relieve nations of those obligations and claimed reparations resulting from the war.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield again? Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. The suggestion to which the Senator has referred has come from a great many Americans in addition to foreigners, a great many eminent men, whom the Senator calls farseeing. To my mind, at least in this respect, they are shortsighted. The proposition always is that the foreign nations will forgive their debtors if we will forgive them in the same amount in which they release those who owe them.

It is quite manifest that if they wanted to be fair in that kind of a proposition and let each government sacrifice equally, they would propose that they would forgive the amount owing to them from other governments in twice the amount they would ask us to forgive them.

In the illustration I gave awhile ago, if Great Britain said, "We will forgive $100,000,000 if you will forgive $50,000,000," that would involve Great Britain sacrificing $50,000,000 and our sacrificing $50,000,000, which, to me, would be some evidence of fairness.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, in adjusting the problems resulting from the World War it is a difficult matter to unravel the skeins and to determine just what would be wise and a just and equitable course to pursue. May I say to the Senator from Nebraska that there were some in 1920 and 1921 who foresaw what would be the result of the heavy reparations required of Germany and the attempts to collect intergovernmental debts and who believed that nothing would so much contribute to the rehabilitation of the world and the strengthening of the morale of the people as to remove the chains of bondage created by these obligations. Time, I think, has demonstrated that if in 1920 or 1921 a policy of that nature had been adopted many of the economic ills, as well as the political vicissitudes, which have come to the peoples and governments of the earth would have been averted. Europe would have been in a sounder and saner condition than she is to-day. World trade and commerce would not have languished as it has languished and the surplus products of our land would have found hospitality in the markets of the world to the material advantage of the United States, to say nothing of the moral values that would have been enjoyed by this and other lands.

The Senator from Illinois has referred to a conference which is to be called. I do not understand that it is to deal with the matter to which the Senator refers. I read in the press a few days ago that an economic conference was to be called by Great Britain, and that our Government had signifled its willingness to participate. I am betraying no confidence when I state that a few days ago in a conversation with the President I referred to the economic conference and respectfully urged that the question of silver and its restoration to its proper monetary status be one of the subjects of consideration. From the Under Secretary of State, Mr. Castle, as well as from the President, I obtained the impression that the economic conference to which the press referred was not for the consideration of intergovernmental debts or for the purpose of dealing with the question of reparations, but its sole purpose was to consider questions of trade and commerce and what steps, if any, might be taken to promote and improve international commerce.

I knew that our Government would not participate in a conference called for the purpose of dealing with intergovernmental debts or their cancellation. An economic conference devoted to improve world trade and commerce and to remove barriers prohibitive of the same is one, it seems to me, that should be desired and from which results important and advantageous to all peoples would follow.

The Senator from Illinois will recall that recently the Senate passed a measure which contemplated that economic conferences would be called for the purpose of dealing with international trade. It was believed that treaties of reciprocity might be entered into or agreements made which would prove effective in increasing world trade.

The people of the United States should be interested in the rehabilitation of other nations, particularly those indebted to it, whose nationals are owing billions of dollars to the people of the United States. In addition to the more than $10,000,000,000 owing to the United States by foreign governments, there are many billions of dollars owing by the nationals of other countries to American banks and to American citizens who hold their obligations.

While the Senator from Illinois was speaking I wa: wondering how he thought our Government and the American people were to be paid the more than $25,000,000,000 due from foreign governments and their nationals. There is not sufficient gold in the world with which the obligations due may be paid. It is obvious that payment can only be made in services or in commodities. Manifestly an international economic conference is required in order that artificial barriers erected by reason of fear or enmity or from any ignoble cause should be removed. The day of isolation is past. Moral and intellectual currents are sweeping around the world and bringing men and nations into closer relationship. Cultural development demands the removal of narrow and provincial restrictions. Even from a material standpoint, it is important that wider and broader fields within which trade relations may be conducted, should be opened. This Nation should take the lead in every movement that would be promotive of international trade and commerce and world fellowship.

I repeat when I state that if our Government and the American people are to receive payment for but a moiety of that which is due from foreign nations and their nationals, it must come through the channels of trade and commerce. The monetary gold of the world is but $11,000,000,000, nearly seven-tenths of which is held by the United States and France. Many nations have been forced from the gold standard because of the paucity of gold and the restrictive trade policies that have been imposed.

Though perhaps not germane to the theme which engaged the attention of the able and eloquent Senator from Illinois, it is not inappropriate in a discussion of economic questions and world indebtedness to refer to the situation caused by the gold standard and the difficulties which nations and peoples are encountering by reason of the scarcity of gold and the attempts to maintain such standard. The limited world supply of gold has resulted in a catastrophic decline in commodity prices; perhaps it would be better to say that gold has appreciated to the advantage of the creditors and to the serious injury of the debtors. How are the debts of the world to be paid with this limited supply of gold? All economists concede that with the normal increase in population and with the normal development in trade, there should be an accretion of at least 3 or 4 per cent annually to the basic money of the world in order to prevent falling commodity prices with the disastrous consequences that inevitably will ensue. Instead of there being this augmentation of the gold supply of the world, it is the view of those thoroughly familiar with the subject that within a very few years the gold fields of South Africa, which yield the greater part of the world's gold supply, will be practically exhausted.

This portends economic and financial disturbances and admonishes the world that commodity prices may reach still lower levels and that the world will continue to labor under a weight of debt which will arrest progress and produce economic and political disturbances. The world needs not only credit but a metallic base upon which to rest credit. Some of the leading economists in the world perceive the menacing situation resulting from the maintenance of the gold standard and the failure of governments to adopt sound and progressive banking and financial policies.

When Great Britain demonetized silver in 1816 disastrous consequences followed. When in 1873 silver was demonetized by the United States and other nations the world was visited by most serious financial and economic disasters. Commodity prices fell and the debtors of the world had their burdens increased far beyond their capacity to bear. The indebtedness of the world to-day is perhaps four of five hundred billion dollars. It is absurd to even suggest that this stupendous sum may be met with the limited supply of gold or that the limited supply of gold can bear the strain of currencies and credits which rest upon it.

Quite recently Cailleaux, the eminent statesman of France, in condemning the gold standard declared that the credits of the world were like a pyramid the apex of which was the narrow point of gold. He advocates the rehabilitation of silver, the enlarging of the metallic base upon which currencies and credits may rest.

Quite recently a committee of able experts known as the McMillan committee submitted a report in which they discussed world economic conditions and declared that until commodity prices were increased there could not be improved economic conditions, and that a world economic conference is needed at which the rehabilitation of silver should occupy the most conspicuous position upon the agenda. A few months ago some of the leading statesmen, bankers, and business men of Great Britain formed an association known as the silver association and issued a manifesto which is an invincible argument in favor of the restoration of silver to a proper monetary status.

In this manifesto reference is made to the diminishing quantity of gold, its maldistribution, the world depression, and the importance of broadening the base upon which to rest the commerce and credits of the world. The manifesto states that the—World's monetary psychology still demands that currency and credit should rest upon tangible metallic substances possessing intrinsic, universally recognized value, easily stored, and easily transported. Experience shows that without such basis confidence in times of crisis gives way to panic and inflation becomes all too likely.

The further statement is made that strengthening the metallic basis is the easiest and quickest way of restoring the confidence, raising values, and stabilizing them when raised, and that this would be accomplished by widening the metallic basis of currency and restoring confidence in silver "by reintroducing it into the world's monetary system." The British Government is requested, in the manifesto, to convene or to agree to participate in an international conference on silver, with a view to its reintroduction into the world's monetary system.

If time permitted, I should like to quote from this remarkable document. It has been signed by, as I have stated, some of the leading statesmen of Great Britain, and among them are Sir Robert Horne, M. P.; Hon. L. S. Amery, M. P.; Lord Barnby; Mr. R. Boothby, M. P.; Mr. John Buchan, M. P.; Sir G. Clarke; Sir H. Cunliffe-Owen; Lord D'Abernon; Sir W. Dampier; Mr. J. F. Darling; Lord Desborough; Lord Greenway; Mr. S. S. Hammersley, M. P.; Lord Hunsdon; Lord Lloyd; Sir Bernard Mallet; and many others

A few months ago there was held in London an important meeting presided over by Sir Robert Horne, former Chancellor of the Exchequer. At that meeting the following resolution was adopted:

That this meeting states its conviction that the raising of the price of silver and its restoration to a place in the world's monetary system offers the quickest and most effective remedy to the present disastrous fall in prices, and expresses the hope that the governments principally concerned will at the earliest possible moment confer with this object in view.

At this meeting, which was attended by a large number of the most eminent statesmen, bankers, and financiers of Great Britain, addresses were delivered showing that the gold standard had failed to meet the financial needs of the world and that the rehabilitation of silver was indispensable to bring about economic recovery and the stabilization of prices.

Mr. President, if time permitted, I should be glad to discuss what some are pleased to call the "silver question," and to show the necessity of steps being taken to restore silver to its proper monetary status. It is unfortunate that the President of the United States has failed to call an international conference as requested by the Senate for the purpose of considering this vital and important question. In my opinion, those suffering from the gold mentality have exercised too great an influence in determining the fiscal policies of our Government as well as the governments throughout the world.

The gold standard has failed to meet the needs of the people; under its dominion nations have been brought to ruin and the world encumbered with obligations which it can not meet, which may lead some nations and millions of people to repudiate their obligations. A financial policy that is chiefly concerned with creditors and is heedless of the cries of debtors will produce repercussions dangerous to the economic, and particularly to the political, structures of the world. We perceive in our own an increasing demand that governmental policies shall not be adopted that will not increase the values of creditors' claims and narrow the opportunities and the chances of the debtors to discharge their obligations. There is a growing belief that financial policies during the past few years have unjustly enhanced the wealth of creditors by reducing commodity prices with which debtors must meet their obligations. As indicated by the eminent British statesmen and authorities to whom I have referred nothing will contribute more to raise and stabilize commodity prices than the restoration of silver to its proper monetary status. An international monetary conference for the consideration of the silver question should be immediately called by the President of the United States. Upon two previous occasions joint resolutions were passed declaring it to be the policy of the United States to continue the use of both gold and silver as standard money and to coin both gold and silver into money of equal intrinsic and exchangeable value, and authorizing the President to call or participate in any international conference for the purpose of securing international bimetallism. One of the measures referred to carried an appropriation of $100,000 to pay the joint expenses of any conference called for such purpose. The time for the calling of such conference is propitious. Our Government should make the call. Other nations would gladly participate in such conference, and it is certain results would follow of incalculable benefit not only to the United States but to the entire

Mr. KING. POSTMASTER AT PRESCOTT, ARIZ.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, on yesterday, as will appear from the Record, I gave notice under Rule XXVI of the Senate, of my intention to move to-day to discharge the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads from the further consideration of the nomination of Helen A. McNutt to be postmaster at Prescott, Ariz.

The name of the nominee was sent to the Senate on April 1 of this year, and it remained with the committee until May 26, when it was favorably reported to the Senate and then, upon the suggestion of a Senator, it was returned to the committee and now is before that committee. The committee has had the nomination before it for a total of 71 days. No charges have been filed against the nominee. I insist on my motion that the committee be discharged and the nomination placed on the calendar. I do not make this motion out of any discourtesy to the committee. In fact, I have notified the chairman; and while he has not consented to the motion, he is not offended by it and will not resist the same; as I say, the nomination has been before the committee for 71 days.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Arizona to discharge the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads from the further consideration of the nomination referred to by him.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ASHURST. I do not know whether or not it would be in order for me to ask at this time for the confirmation of the nominee.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I should have to object to that at the present time, Mr. President.

Mr. ASHURST. Then let the nomination go to the

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The nomination will go to the calendar.

JUDGES OF PHILIPPINE SUPREME COURT

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, as we are nearing the end of the session, as we may not have many more executive sessions, as there is need for haste, and there is no objection to the nominees concerned, I ask unanimous consent that, with regard to the two justices of the Philippine Supreme Court whose nominations we have confirmed, the President may be notified.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I can not find it in my heart to object to anything that the esteemed Senator from Connecticut might wish, but a sentence dropped from his classic lips which concerns me very much. If I heard him correctly, he said that there might not be any more executive sessions before the adjournment of Congress.

Mr. BINGHAM. No; I said that there might not be a sufficient number; I am sure that there will be one or two more; but the Senator knows, under the rules of the Senate, that it is only after the second executive session that notification can be sent to the President; and, in view of the necessity for haste, I asked unanimous consent that the President may be notified.

Mr. ASHURST. Repeating what I said before, that only confirms and strengthens my opinion that, unless I secure the confirmation of the nominee for the post office at Prescott, that nominee might be isolated. While the nomination indeed might be confirmed, there might not be a sufficient number of days elapse whereby it would be possible to have the President notified.

I have learned a vast deal from the Senator from Connecticut during my senatorial experience. He is diligent and prudent, and I think I would better emulate his prudence and insist that this particular nomination be confirmed before any other nomination is confirmed or before the President is notified as to the confirmation of other nominations. So, unless my able friend from Michigan insists upon his objection, I should like to have the nomination confirmed now.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Let me assure the Senator from Arizona that there will be an additional executive session which will amply suit the Senator's purpose.

Mr. ASHURST. The assurance of the Senator from Michigan is to me as good as a bond; but that is not satisfactory, because the Senate might indeed confirm the nominee, and yet the President might not be notified. Will the Senator guarantee that a sufficient number of days shall elapse and a sufficient number of executive sessions be held so that the President may be notified of the confirmation of the nomination?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I would not care to take in too much territory.

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator will not give the guaranty, because he is too honest.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I think the Senator is unnecessarily borrowing trouble.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, to win a battle nowadays one must go out and anticipate trouble and be ready for it.

I assert respectfully, of course, that when a nomination for postmaster has been before the committee for 71 days and no charges have been filled and the nominee is a person of good character, the Senate should be an example of diligence and confirm the nominee; and if other Senators desire nominations confirmed and desire the President to be notified of such confirmation, I must be in that same omnibus at the time they ask for such action.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me a moment to state that we have been trying for more than 371 days to secure the necessary judges for the Philippine Supreme Court in order that the court may function?

I hope the Senator will not object.

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator is right; I did not fully catch from him that the nominations to which he referred were those of judges of the Philippine Supreme Court. The Senator is correct. I think they should be confirmed; I know the circumstances; I hope they may be confirmed and that the President may be notified.

Mr. BINGHAM. I thank the Senator. Mr. ASHURST. Before I leave the question of postmasters I should like to secure-

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, will the Senator permit the Presiding Officer to put the request?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the President will be notified-

Mr. McKELLAR. One moment, Mr. President. I ask if the report on the nominations was unanimous?

Mr. BINGHAM. I so understand. The Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] is a member of the committee; I am not a member of the committee, but I have been informed that the report was unanimous, no objection whatsoever having been made. The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the President being notified?

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, what is the request?
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The request is that the President be notified of the confirmation of judges of the Philippine Supreme Court.

Mr. CONNALLY. I object to the notification to the President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made.

Mr. CONNALLY. I do not mean to object to the confirmation of the nominations.

Mr. BINGHAM. They have been confirmed. One of them, I may say, is a constituent of the Senator from Texas.

Mr. CONNALLY. I realize that. Mr. BINGHAM. I refer to Judge Butte. The court has been unable to function for some time, due to the fact that there has not been a quorum present, and I am merely trying to expedite the business of the court. That is the only object I have in view.

Mr. CONNALLY. I shall say to the Senator that I am friendly to the appointee to the Philippine Supreme Court who comes from my State, Judge Butte; I am not making this objection on any personal grounds; but there is no quorum present, and under the holding of the Supreme Court when we notify the President of the action of this body upon those nominations the matter is at an end. So in justice to other Senators I do not propose to agree to a unanimous-consent request that a confirmation shall be had and the President immediately notified, because such action prejudices the rights of Senators with respect to these matters and cuts off any opportunity to reconsider. For that reason, and that reason alone, I think I am certainly standing up for the rights of the Senate as a confirmatory body, and I shall have to object to notifying the President. I do not object to confirmation; I am for confirmation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas

HELEN A. M'NUTT

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President. I want to comment for a moment on the question of the nomination of the postmaster at Prescott, Ariz., which the senior Senator from Arizona [Mr. Ashurst] has been discussing. A week or more ago I reported that nomination to the Senate, but on the request of another Member of the Senate I allowed it to be recommitted to the committee. Since then a second Member of the Senate has requested more time in order to investigate some matter in connection with it.

I have no objection to the confirmation, and so as soon as it is possible to have the objections withdrawn and the request of one of the Members of the Senate for an investigation determined, I will be very glad to report the nomination from the committee.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, the present state of the record is that I gave notice yesterday of my intention to move that the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads be discharged from the further consideration of the nomination. That motion has been made and agreed to; the committee has been discharged, and the nomination is now on the calendar.

Mr. ODDIE. I was not aware of that fact, but that is perfectly satisfactory to me.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. Is the nomination on the postmaster at Prescott, Ariz., now on the calendar?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be on the calendar. Mr. ASHURST. It is now on the calendar, is it not? The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is now on the calendar.

TARIFF COMMISSION

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President-

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield to the Senator from Colo-

Mr. COSTIGAN. Am I correctly advised that the nomination for a position on the United States Tariff Commission has been passed over to a future executive session?

Mr. VANDENBERG. That is correct.

The Senate resumed legislative business.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, pursuant to the unanimous-consent agreement I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, will the Senator from Michigan withhold the motion for a moment?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I withhold it.

Mr. JONES. I ask unanimous consent that the House bill 11452, the naval appropriation bill, may be considered as reported to the Senate. The report is practically ready. but the Senator in charge of the bill has not got it here. So I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be considered as reported, in order that it may be on the calendar and ready for consideration on Monday.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I object. The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. VANDENBERG. I renew my motion that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 3 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.), under the order previously entered, the Senate adjourned until Monday, June 13, 1932, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

SATURDAY, JUNE 11, 1932

The House was called to order by the Clerk of the House of Representatives.

The Clerk read the following communication:

THE SPEAKER'S ROOMS,

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C., June 11, 1932. I hereby designate Hon. Henry T. Rainey to act as Speaker pro

JNO. N. GARNER.

Mr. RAINEY took the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Awaken our souls, gracious Lord, that we may walk in Thy light. Let there be to-day radiant manifestations of harmonious wisdom. In the urgency of a courageous confidence may we be willing to work, to bear, and even to suffer. Restrain all intemperate words, and may kindness and prudence be exercised as matters of duty. Bless us with the excellency of strength and cooperation that all decisions may be impartial, calm, and dispassionate. May the inextinguishable glory of our flag be preserved; no man can compute it. It gathers up in its immortal folds the wealth and the fullness of a nation's life and embodies and emblazons it all in one gorgeous emblem. As we behold it may we gaze upon and adore it. Amen.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate by Mr. Craven, its principal clerk, announced that the Senate had passed a bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House is

S. 4860. An act to provide for loans or advances to States and Territories for the relief of distress arising from unemployment, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 11267) entitled "An act making appropriations for the legislative branch of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, and for other purposes."

The message also announced that the Senate further insists upon its amendments Nos. 46 to 168, inclusive, to the above-entitled bill, disagreed to by the House, asks a further conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. Jones, Mr. Smoot, Mr. Hale, Mr. Broussard, and Mr. Bratton to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Vice President had appointed Mr. REED and Mr. FLETCHER members of the Joint Select Committee on the part of the Senate as provided for in the act of February 16, 1889, as amended by the act of March 2, 1895, entitled "An act to authorize and provide for the disposition of useless papers in the executive departments," for the disposition of useless papers in the War Department.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Reserving the right to object, I was wondering if this is an advance copy of the speech the gentleman intended to make as permanent chairman of the Republican National Convention?

Mr. SNELL. No. I think that is what is the matter with our Speaker. I read him some portions of my speech and he collapsed immediately afterwards. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. BLANTON. The country will collapse before it will hear the gentleman's speech.

Mr. SNELL. Does the gentleman wish to ask me a ques-

Mr. BLANTON. Yes. I would like to know how you are going to get the country out of its complete collapse?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. BURTNESS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by including a statement with reference to the bill H. R. 20, which I introduced in Congress, the statement being made by the author of the plan embodied in that bill and constitutes an analysis of the bill.

Mr. RANKIN. Reserving the right to object, what does the bill refer to?

Mr. BURTNESS. It is a bill to stabilize the buying power of the dollar.

Mr. RANKIN. Farm relief?

Mr. BURTNESS. It is general relief.

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, is the statement lengthy? The gentleman is aware that we do not recognize the policy of incorporating the remarks of outsiders in the RECORD, explanatory of legislation.

Mr. BURTNESS. I recognize that general policy. I have never before asked leave to extend my remarks in that way, but I think this is a case which is entirely different from the usual one, for it is a statement explaining a measure which is pending before Congress and sponsored by myself, and which has been in part considered by a committee of Congress, and I think it would be of value to the Members of the House.

Mr. STAFFORD. How lengthy is the statement?

Mr. BURTNESS. Well, I do not have it with me. I would say it is of medium length. It will probably cover a page or a page and a half in the RECORD. It would probably require 15 minutes to read it.

Mr. SABATH. Reserving the right to object, by whom is it written?

Mr. BURTNESS. It is written by an economist, Mr. D. J. Tinnes, who is the author of the plan embodied in the bill I introduced at the beginning of the session.

Mr. SABATH. I am receiving daily many requests and statements; and if we put them all in the RECORD, though many of them are helpful and beneficial, it would require a great many pages in the RECORD.

Mr. BLANTON. Reserving the right to object, I want to call the attention of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD 1 to what happened yesterday afternoon when I asked permission to put in the RECORD a short letter from the president and owner of 26 wholesale houses in the United States on the Garner relief plan. The gentleman from Wisconsin said that he did not allow any such outside statements to go in, but when one of his Republican colleagues from out in the West wants something in the RECORD, we hear no objection.

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, I am interrogating the gentleman. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it. Mr. LaGUARDIA. A bill has just been messaged from the Senate, providing for loans to the several States for relief purposes. A similar provision was contained in the House bill which has been messaged over to the Senate. My inquiry is if the House expects to pass upon relief in piecemeal or by a comprehensive measure, and if it would not be proper at this time to refer the Senate bill to the committee which considered the relief measure in the House?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In reply to the inquiry of the gentleman from New York, I will say that the bill will lie on the Speaker's desk for to-day.

Mr. BURTNESS. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BURTNESS. Was my request granted? Mr. STAFFORD. I interposed an objection to the gentleman's request, Mr. Speaker, but I intend to withdraw it, because the case is different in principle from that instanced by the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BURTNESS. I did not understand that anyone objected to it.

Mr. STAFFORD. I objected, but I withdraw the objection. The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman desire to renew his request?

Mr. BURTNESS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to renew the re-

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Dakota?

Mr. BLANTON. Reserving the right to object, and I shall not object, I think the gentleman has a perfect right to put in the RECORD data he deems important. I think the gentle-man from Wisconsin has demonstrated that he objects to a statement which a Member on this side desired to put in the RECORD, and then permits such a statement from his own side.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Regular order is demanded. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Dakota?

There was no objection.

STABILIZING THE BUYING POWER OF MONEY

Mr. BURTNESS. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I submit herewith the following statement prepared by Mr. D. J. Tinnes, an economist of Grand Forks, N. Dak., relative to the bill H. R. 20, introduced by myself. Mr. Tinnes is the author of the plan embodied in the bill and the statement is an explanation and analysis thereof.

STATEMENT BY DANA J. TINNES

Whatever the chief cause of the present depression, the central banks thus far have failed to stop it. If we are to have price-level stability, we must make our currency what it was intended to be—a purely national monetary system. The free gold market is a thing of the past. We must cut our money unit free from foreign monetary entanglements by making the weight of our gold redemption unit subject to regulation by the guidance of a scientific price index number, paying out at all times a dollar's worth of gold for a dollar; more when gold cheapens and less when, for any reason, it becomes dearer.

The money of a country can be stabilized independently—na-any reason, it becomes dearer.

The money of a country can be stabilized independently—nationally—and in no other way. Cooperation by other countries in a movement for approximate stability of all moneys might be desirable as an aid to real stabilization of national units; but it could not be a close approximation if based on a world index number. For a world index could be but a compromise between the various domestic price levels, and a unit based thereon would be really stable numbers. stable nowhere.

To be desirable, such cooperation must not aim at establishment of a world currency; nor at the pegging of exchange rates on national currencies. Each nation must be left free to stabilize its own money in terms of domestic buying power. No country should be made to suffer for the financial mistakes or misdeeds of others, nor should the domestic price levels of weaker countries be dragged up or down, particularly down, at the "discretion" of the financially and commercially dominant.

Neither should such cooperation involve the valorization of the cially and commercially dominant.

Nether should such cooperation involve the valorization of the money metals by any group of financiers or experts, whether Government appointees or self-appointed. For, as clear-headed Elizur Wright wrote long ago: "The creation of the best possible measure of debts * * * is a function of the sovereign power * * * and any such class * * * that should get control of this great function would be in fact the governing power, with the national government as its subaltern." Matchless business foresight could be displayed by those who thus held the power to have their forecasts fulfilled.

MONETARY STABILIZATION MUST BE NATIONAL

Each country must stabilize separately its own unit. A world index could be constructed by which each country's price level could be adjusted to the average of all. But this would make them all unstable in terms of domestic buying power. Neighboring countries with common free markets within the same tariff walls may have a common currency; but between countries not so situated there must always be exchange rates, shifting with the trend of trade, with credit conditions, and with other influences which now affect them. However, with the cheapening and speeding up of means of communication and transportation and the possible lowering of tariffs, the price levels of the various countries will differ less and this will tend somewhat to steady exchange rates. Should a secondary money, a monetary Esperanto, seem temporarily desirable for use in foreign trade, we have it at hand in the gram of gold, uncoined. Such a unit, under the name "gramdor," was proposed by the present writer in the American Economic Review in 1918. Three years later an Englishman put forward as a world unit another weight of gold, 1% grams, naming it the "pois-d'or," abbreviated "dor."

The gram-d'or, or to adopt the briefer name, the dor, would be worth at the present mint rate about 60 cents. A larger denomination, the "kildor," about $600, would be useful in large transactions and in statistics. The par of exchange between the stabilized dollar and the gram of gold would be shown each day by the current mint rate. Such a unit, being a fixed weight of gold, would be unsuitable for long-time transactions which should be in terms of a stabilized unit.

For generations the pound sterling has been the international Each country must stabilize separately its own unit.

in terms of a stabilized unit.

For generations the pound sterling has been the international medium of exchange, and this has been a disadvantage to us.

To make our dollar the world medium would disadvantage the British, and no other country would be wholly satisfied with either the pound or the dollar. The dor, specially favoring none, should be acceptable to all. Amounts called for in international trade would appear automatically in grams, the weight in use in most of the countries of the civilized world.

Bridging the gaps between the moneys of the various nations, the dor would serve as a medium for simple and uniform exchange quotation. For, unless artificially "pegged," exchange rates will fluctuate as in the past. Should it be found desirable to peg the rates between safely solvent nations, this could be done to peg the rates between safely solvent nations, this could be done with the dor without interference with the national units, stabilized or unstabilized. The gram-d'or proposal, though advanced by the same author, is not, of course, included in the Burtness bill. It is mentioned here because opponents of real stabilization have used the supposed need of an international money as an argument against passage of the bill named. It meets whatever demand there may be for a world currency without hindering the urgently needed stabilization of national units.

DISCRETIONARY VERSUS AUTOMATIC STABILIZATION

Some of the members of an influential financial group agree with us that the price level ought to be stabilized. But they prefer to have it done through discretionary control of gold and credit, with the discretion vested in the central banks. Soon after the debacle of 1920–21, Dr. Carl Snyder, economist of the Federal Reserve Board, proposed a variation of the theretofore unacknowledged discretions are the control of the theretofore unacknowledged discretions. edged discretionary practice, in which he provided a guide to be followed in the form of an index number. This amounted to "abandonment of the gold standard," for it made the price level the ultimate standard. His plan is said to have been followed from 1922 to August, 1929, when the price level fell into another the ultimate standard. His plan is said to have been followed from 1922 to August, 1929, when the price level fell into another "discretionary" tail spin.

Following the present depression, unless Congress acts, there may be a return to the Snyder plan. For some of the influential supporters of stabilization through gold and credit control do not want real price-level stability. They want mere prevention of inflation or depression, particularly of inflation. Just why inflation is more to be feared than depression I leave it to them to explain. Compare business conditions during any price-level rise with conditions during a period of price-level depression.

A great part of the public has been misled into thinking that if the price level is prevented from rising or falling more than 1, 2, or 3 per cent a month, it is stable enough. But an average decline of 1½ per cent a month for the past two and one-half years has brought us to this. The Snyder plan of control permitted changes greater than this, and the high point in the seven years it is said to have been followed was 11 per cent above the low stage. Is this stability? Give a private profit-earning corporation the power to bring about a price-level rise of 1 per cent one month and a price-level decline of 1 per cent the next, and it could easily cash in on its "business foresight." Yet most of those who prefer a loose "stability" to real stability would allow a wider margin than 1 per cent a month.

Many of those who declare themselves in favor of "maintaining the gold standard" mean merely that they favor continuance of redemption of our currency in gold. They do not favor allowing an unstable metal to drag our commodity price level down or up with every change in its own market valure. (By "valure" is meant rate of exchangeability for goods, as distinguished from the many other meanings of the ambiguous word "value.") For the valure of gold, like the valure of every other commodity, changes with every change in its supply as compared with the demand for it for it. The Burtness bill, hereinafter described, continues redemption in gold but does not retain a fixed weight of an unstable metal as a standard of stability.

With a fixed weight of gold the standard, gold alone is stable in price. Make the commodity price level the ultimate standard, with the composite goods-dollar as its concrete expression, and the price level will remain stable. Being measured in terms of itself it can not change. The gold unit, though subjected to weight regulation, may still be considered a standard of uniformity, since all forms of our media of exchange are redeemable in it, directly or indirectly. But as a standard of stability it is a discredited makeshift. makeshift.

THE BILL TO STABILIZE A NORMAL PRICE LEVEL

The Burtness bill (H. R. 20) has gone through four revisions since its first introduction, under a different number, in 1923. At the time of its third revision early in 1929 it seemed likely that a bill would be passed commanding the Federal reserve system to "act with a view to promoting stability of the commodity price level," as directed in the original draft of the Federal reserve act. For this reason certain features which now appear in H. R. 20 were omitted from H. R. 112, Seventy-first Congress.

The bill has never been fully explained to your committee in the years it has been before you, so I take the liberty of sketching its details by sections.

Section 1 makes the weight of the gold dollar subject to regulation to keep its buying power stable. It also recognizes that the "gold clause" in notes and bonds has outlived its usefulthe "gold clause" in notes and bonds has outlived its useful-ness. Put in to protect creditors from loss by threatened sup-pension of redemption in gold at a time when gold was commonly thought to be stable in value, it has become a menace to honest debtors. Notes drawn in dollars should be payable in dollars, in lawful money, and not in any given weight of metal. For buy-ing power and not weight is the essential quality of money. The thought in the minds of both borrower and lender is of what so many dollars will buy at the time, not of the weight of gold represented. Seldom, in fact, do both lender and borrower even know resented. Seldom, in fact, do both lender and borrower even know how many grains of gold are represented by the dollars named. Section 2: A new division of the Treasury Department handles the stabilization process under strict rules which leave nothing to official discretion. The data and simple calculations in the weekly bulletin can be checked easily for error by any reader while the week's prices are still fresh in mind.

Section 3: Prices are reported by agents in the proper markets and trade data by wholesalers. Only sales in dollars of each commodity are reported by wholesalers. The term "wholesale" is made to include more than the sales commonly ranked as wholesale. Through an oversight, the words "sales to exporters" were omitted. They should be read into the bill.

Section 4: Constructs a scientific gage of price-level tendencies to Section 4: Constructs a scientific gage of price-level tendencies to be counteracted before they affect the retail level and the citizen's dollar. Details of its construction are not necessary to a full grasp of the plan if one knows that price-level tendencies can be measured. Reports of price-level changes are published monthly and the Government now constructs also a weekly index which is but an averaging of data collected daily.

Section 5: Fastern markets elsew three bours before these in the Section 5: Eastern markets close three hours before those in the Pacific time zone, so the reports from the eastern and middle sections can be worked over before those from the far West begin to arrive.

Section 6: Metric weights in our mint rate simplify translation of our money units into the moneys of other countries, most of which are in grams. Our small silver coins are already in grams. The half dollar weighs 12½, the quarter 6¼, and the dime 2½ grams.

Par stage of the market gage is unity, 1, so the daily adjust-ments of the mint rate involve only multiplication of the current ments of the mint rate involve only multiplication of the current mint rate by the new market gage. The gold bullion dollar, adjusted daily, will be the price unit, or "provisional standard," and the composite goods dollar the ultimate value standard to which the bullion dollar is, by weight adjustments, made to conform. The components of the goods dollar—the small parcels of goods that go to make up the standard of value—are shown in column 3 of the market gage schedule. The price of the composite goods dollar, as measured in gold at the current mint rate, serves as the daily price index or market gage.

Section 7: The mint rate is computed and appounced at night the daily price index or market gage.

Section 7: The mint rate is computed and announced at night after the markets and the mint close and before they reopen. This bars all risk of speculation on advance information of weight change and makes unnecessary any disturbing seignlorage charge. Section 8: Gold coins and silver dollars are retired. The greater part of the gold in the Treasury is already in bars, and in settlements of foreign trade balances gold passes by weight. Gold sold for use in manufacture and the arts is also in bars.

Section 9: Federal reserve and national-bank notes are not interfered with, but other forms of currency are replaced by Treasury notes.

Treasury notes.

Treasury notes.

Section 10: All gold and silver reserves now back of money of Government issue, all silver now in silver dollars, and all gold and silver in the general fund are consolidated into one fund for redemption of the new Treasury notes. This gives at the start nearly 100 per cent metallic backing for the Government money actually in circulation, though the par stage of the consolidated fund is but 40 per cent, four-fifths of it gold and one-fifth silver, the silver being reckoned not at any fixed ratio to gold but at its current price, which makes it exactly equivalent to gold. This surplus can be reduced and the fund brought down to par only by a cheapening of gold, which would call for an increase in the weight of the gold bullion dollar; or by a rise in the value of gold, which would call for an increase in the supply of Treasury notes outstanding.

Section 11 provides that the total stock of Government money shall not decrease nor grow less in relation to the bank currency in circulation. Any decrease is made up promptly by issue of more Treasury notes, put out in such a way as to cause no inflation of the currency.

It provides also that whenever the redemption fund is above the par stage and the lowering of the mint rate shows a downward tendency of the price level, additional notes shall be issued to the amount of double the excess of the fund above par. The excess would supply 40 per cent backing for two and a half times its amount, but only double the amount of the excess is issued.

To prevent a too great issue of additional notes at the start, while the redemption fund is still far above par, the note increase in any one week is limited to 10 per cent. Should the downward tendency of the price level continue, these issues are repeated weekly until the fund is reduced to par stage as compared with the notes outstanding against it. Thereafter, should the lowering of the mint rate continue, the Treasury notes outstanding are increased only at the rate of 2 per cent a week and put out in such a way as to not disturb the price level; for the issues of notes no more than balance the purchase of gold for the fund.

Should the fund sink below par with the mint rate decreasing, the Treasury buys the bullion needed for backing, issuing Treasury notes against it. All these issues aid the main stabilization process by enlarging the supply of Treasury notes when the mint rate is declining—gold appreciating. They can not cause currency inflation for they are put out only when price-level tendencies are downward—when there is a shortage of currency—to help prevent depression. And it must be borne in mind that they increase the supply of Treasury notes only, the issues of Federal reserve notes being controlled by the Federal reserve system. Also that their supply relative to the supply of bank notes will not increase unless the supply of the latter is unduly contracted and falls to meet the needs of business.

needs of business.
Section 12: Purchase of gold is equivalent to free coinage. The gold bought and added to the redemption fund can not cause currency inflation, for the new gold can be used to enlarge the money supply only when the mint rate is decreasing—gold appreciating—in which case it properly aids stabilization. To avoid loss to the Treasury from an overstock of gold when gold is rapidly cheapening, purchases are suspended until the gold fund is reduced to per Treasury from an overstock of gold when gold is rapidly cheapening, purchases are suspended until the gold fund is reduced to par.

SEC. 13. Treasury notes are redeemable either in gold or in silver at the option of the applicant. But should the gold in the fund fall much below par, gold withdrawals are limited to give the Treasury time, by purchase, to restore it to par. Meanwhile redemption in silver at its gold price is unrestricted, and sufficient gold withdrawals allowed to more than supply the needs of manufacture and the arts. These, with the knowledge of the public that the restrictions on gold are but temporary, should fully protect the value of the dollar.

SEC. 14. The "trial market gage" device prevents any slip at the time of revision of the schedule. Under this plan the commodity price level should remain permanently stable. The commodities listed will change from year to year. New entries will be added and others withdrawn; individual prices will go up and down; but no noticeable change will take place in the average of commodity prices. Why should reconstruction of the schedule, any more than its first construction, disturb the price level?

I have emphasized the fact that the additional Treasury notes put out under the conditions named will not tend to inflate the currency. Inflation would cause undue enlargement of the bullion dollar and tend to cause export of gold. The additional note issues will, however, increase the volume of Treasury notes as compared with bank notes whenever the supply of the latter is insufficient to prevent depression tendencies. The banks of issue can avert this proportional increase of Treasury notes by keeping their own issues adjusted to the needs of business. The amount of Government currency should not be reduced and it would be better if it were increased up to the minimum needs of trade, leaving the banks to supply the flexible part of the currency. Every additional million dollars of these noninterest-bearing notes could be made to replace a million dollars i

THE MARKET GAGE

Since a gage of the dollar's buying power must be a measure of the prices of goods in actual trade transactions in the quantities actually sold and bought, an ideal index would take its weighting from the day the price-level tendencies of which are to be measured. In the case of a daily index this is impossible. The nearest we can get to it is to use as weighting the relative sales of the various commodities in the 12 months last past, for the sales for a year are but a multiple of the sales for an average day. In order to keep the weightings as nearly up to date as possible, they are revised quarterly. But the average for the past 12 months is taken rather than the average for the preceding quarter, for sales are largely seasonal and relative sales differ more from quarter to quarter than from year to year.

The daily price index, called the market gage, is based on all the commodities on the market, compressed into some 900 entries.

The daily price index, called the market gage, is based on all the commodities on the market, compressed into some 900 entries. For many years the objection was heard that the market gage schedule lists altogether too many price series. One British economist, blind to the fact that the greater the number of price series listed the more nearly correct will be the measurement of price-level movements, had told his readers that "a large number of prices is needless and may even be detrimental." In the same breath they were told that wholly unweighted price index numbers gave practically the same results as the fully weighted.

THE BUREAU OF LABOR STATISTICS INDEX

The present head of the Bureau of Labor Statistics evidently does not subscribe to these views. Referring to the price index published by the bureau up to 1914, based on less than 300 price series and unweighted, he remarks, "The less said about it the better." The number of entries included was raised later to 404 and in 1927 to 550. A recent release by the bureau informs us that the number is now increased to 784 and that the weights are obtained largely from direct reports by manufacturers. By the adoption of improved weights and by increase of the number of series listed, the bureau has brought its index number nearer the market gage in the matter of accuracy, but it is still believed that adoption of improved weights and by increase of the number of series listed, the bureau has brought its index number nearer the market gage in the matter of accuracy, but it is still believed that the latter has the more logical and scientific formula and that its results are more easily checked for errors by the interested public. Following is a brief sketch of the method employed by the bureau: The "base price" of each commodity is the 1926 "average price," which is the unweighted average of 52 unweighted weekly averages of daily prices. Its "weights" are the estimated quantities produced in the years 1923 and 1925 of each of the commodities listed, expressed not in dollars worth but in their diverse physical units. These weights are multiplied by the unweighted average of unweighted averages of daily prices to find the "estimated value." By estimated value is meant the estimated total sales of each commodity listed. Obviously, the total sales of a commodity during a year can not be found by thus multiplying its production, either estimated or actual, by the unweighted average price for the year. The unweighted average price of wheat, for example, during a year may be $1, although three-fourths of the crop produced sells during the brief marketing season at less than 70 cents. Surely the best way of arriving at total sales is to get them directly from those who do the selling.

In constructing an index for the following year this whole process is repeated, and the newly computed "estimated value" for that year is divided by the "estimated value" for the base year. The quotient is then (why?) multiplied by 100. (Why is not unity, 1, a more rational par than 100?) The monthly index is similarly constructed. How can the average citizen satisfy himself of the accuracy of these operations? The writer by no means questions the ability and competence of the distinguished head of the bureau but feels that he is hampered by a blind and loose formula. The method now in use and credited to Professor Knibbs, of Australia, is superior to that of the London wool merchant followed up to 1914. But we are convinced that, even with more complete and reliable data, it can not give satisfactory results. And why should the Labor Bureau, even were its method scientific, construct the index for the regulation of our monetary system? Why not the Treasury?

EXPLANATION OF THE TABLES

All goods on the wholesale market are to be listed, major items divided by markets and grades and small items in homogeneous groups. With each entry is shown its market representative and the market from which its prices are quoted.

Column 1 (Q) shows, in decimals of a physical unit, the amount of each market representative that sold for $1 on the day the schedule was last revised.

Column 2 (W), weighting, the relative trade importance of each entry in decimals of the total wholesale trade.

Column 3 (W times Q), the decimal quantities of the various entries which together make up the goods dollar, which is the ultimate standard of value back of the goldbullion dollar.

Column 4 (P), the current market price of each market representative.

Column 5 (P times QW), the components of the goods dollar, priced. Their sum is the market gage for the day. Deviations of the market gage from its par stage, 1, show inversely the tendencies toward change in the average buying power of the gold-bullion dollar of current weight. These tendencies are at once counteracted by adjustment of the mint rate. The initial mint rate, 1.6718 grams (25.8 grains), is the present weight of the gold dollar.

Columns 4 and 5 are revised daily; columns 1, 2, and 3, quarterly; and the entire schedule yearly.

Daily adjustments are at 2 a. m., when the then current mint rate is multiplied by he newly calculated market gage to get the new mint rate, to be announced at once.

WILL NOT INVITE SPECULATION IN GOLD

As explained in Congressman Burtness's speech on March 2, 1931, this bill will lessen rather than invite speculation in gold; and if adopted by our country alone will not in the least injure our foreign trade. Speculation in gold is more or less possible under any system employing gold as a money metal and will continue until measures are taken to stop it. Restrictions which might not be justifiable in the case of other commodities may be employed to prevent manipulation of the value of a money metal. For example, it would be possible to tax away all profit derived from hearding gold during a rise in its value. Gold hearding, at best, is an interference with the free-gold market.

The Burtness bill (H. R. 20) proposes no such tax, but it contains provisions making speculation at the expense of the Treasury more difficult than it is at present. As an illustration, note that a man who deposited a million in gold in exchange for gold certificates in July, 1929, can now withdraw what is virtually one and one-half millions. That is, the million he can now withdraw will buy as much of commodities in general as one and one-half million dollars would have bought in July, 1929. And he has sacrificed no interest to gain this profit. For during those years he has full use of his million in the form of gold certificates. Under this bill he could not at any time withdraw more value in gold than he had deposited.

WILL NOT INJURE OUR FOREIGN TRADE

As to its effect on foreign trade, the slight shifts in exchange rates it will cause will be shifts in mint pars and not deviations from par. The adjustments of the mint rate, infinitesimal because daily, will be reflected in equally small changes in the pars of exchange. The adjustments will be the effect and not the cause of alterations in the world value of gold. Deviations from mint pars due to shifts in the trend of trade, credit conditions, etc., injuriously affect international trade. Readjustments of mint injuriously affect international trade. Readjustments of mint pars do not. Should Britain resume redemption in gold with the gold weight of the pound sterling cut in half, all that would happen to exchange rates would be that it would take but half as much in our money to buy a pound sterling. With us, sterling would be quoted at $2.43 instead of $4.86; but this would injure neither exporters nor importers. This fact is brought out more clearly in the speech referred to. Even were it possible that independent stabilization of the dollar would affect foreign trade, it should not delay passage of this bill. For our export and import transactions are small compared with our enormous domestic trade. But, fortunately, we do not have to injure the one to benefit the other. Dollar stability will immensely benefit this country without in the least harming our exporters or importers.

DEET ADJUSTMENT POSSIBLE

Were the price level at or near normal in its relation to debts, nothing need be added to this bill to make it fully adequate either with or without an act directing the Federal reserve system to cooperate. For the bill is so drawn as to induce such tem to cooperate. For the bill is so drawn as to induce such cooperation. Were it put into effect now, while the price level is still declining, it would at once stop the decline, and property prices would adjust themselves to the new level. But without annulment of the "gold clause" in monetary obligations previously incurred, the debtor would still be forced to pay his debt in dollars of greater buying power than the dollars borrowed. Put in originally to insure justice to creditors, it has become a source of great injustice to debtors and should be abolished. With the buying power of money made stable, it will be unnecessary. Debts will be paid in money of the same buying power as the money borrowed.

Were the price level to be stabilized.

Were the price level to be stabilized on a lower level than that on which existing debts were incurred, the "gold clause" should be annulled in existing contracts as well as in contracts entered into thereafter, and a debt-adjustment section should be inserted. The debt-adjustment feature would somewhat resemble the "multiple standard" proposals much discussed during a former depression. It would also call to mind a feature of the Dawes plan for Germany and the many wage adjustments in our own and other countries by a cost-of-living index. The following would be its main points:

main points:

Let the monetary standard division calculate the movements of Let the monetary standard division calculate the movements of the price level for, say, 20 years back, employing unity, 1, as the par stage and the date the act passed as the base of reference. Then let a creditor or debtor feeling himself wronged by price-level change during the life of a note, bond, or other monetary obligation, find the amount of his loss by dividing the existing amount of the obligation by the market gage for the date on which it was drawn. Then, either by private agreement or before a proper officer, the amount of the correction can be added to or credited on the instrument. To avoid too numerous adjustments, a sentence could be added excluding small obligations and those on which the loss would be below a given percentage.

This would insure payment of debts in a just amount of buying power. The dollar of payment would have the same average buying power as the dollar borrowed. Similar adjustments of Government bonds and of fixed incomes would be an equally simple matter. It must be borne in mind that all these would be adjustments of wrongs begun before the act was passed and that the need of such adjustments would soon disappear.

SUMMARY

It must be remembered that stabilizing money means stabilizing its buying power at home and not mere pegging of foreign exchange rates

That stabilizing the buying power of money stabilizes the domestic price level without fixing individual prices.

That the only "normal" price level is the level on which existing debts were incurred.

That "maintenance of the gold standard" means maintenance of the outgrown and now dangerous system to which we owe the present disastrous depression.

That "abandonment of the gold standard" does not necessarily involve suspension of redemption in gold, nor suspension of the settlement of foreign trade balances in gold at current exchange

That, while shifts in exchange rates due to their deviation from mint pars are injurious to trade, the readjustments of mint pars made by this bill are not.

made by this bill are not.

That concerted attempts at valorization of the money metals are more markedly against the public interest than are other "restraints of trade."

That a world currency, for the reasons herein given, can not be stabilized in its buying power and is therefore undesirable.

That money must continue to be national and not international, and must be based not on a single commodity but on all commodities, with one of them, preferably gold, as the price unit connecting other commodities with the market.

That, while the buying power of money can be roughly controlled through control of its supply, it can not be stabilized thereby, because changes in supply do not produce the prompt effect needed to counteract the disturbing tendencies developing daily.

That a proposed "stability" which would allow fluctuations of 1 per cent or more a month—double to quadruple the highest bank discount rate—is dangerous instability, particularly if a dividend-earning concern has preknowledge of the "stabilization"

That daily adjustments will prevent change by counteracting disturbing tendencies as they develop and before they affect the retail level.

That such prevention will be aided by the friction of custom, printed price lists, and national advertising, which would operate against infrequent adjustments.

That, as we have tried to explain, the dollar can be truly stabilized by daily regulation of its gold weight, accompanied by proper regulation of the currency supply on which credit is based.

It is confidently claimed for this bill that its enactment would—

(a) Free the hydring power of the currency supply on which credit is based.

(a) Free the buying power of money, and so the commodity price level, from danger of manipulation through control of the credit supply.

(b) Make production and trade safer by elimination of an unforeseeable risk.

(c) Make possible fair settlements between creditors and

(d) Prevent the distortion of wage agreements and other time contracts now caused by change in the buying power of money.(e) Remove the main camouflage of monopolistic or concerted

(c) Steady but not peg the interest rate.
(g) Make all statistics written in dollars more intelligible and reliable.

(h) Free us from entanglement in the monetary troubles of other countries.

(i) Make continuous national prosperity possible by drawing the teeth of the so-called business cycle.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting a letter from the American Legion at Parks, Miss., in which they inclose a check for $75 to feed their hungry buddies who are now in Washington.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Mr. Speaker, I object.

NONTAXABLE BONDS

Mr. HOGG of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for one minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOGG of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, on the Clerk's desk is a petition, No. 6, to discharge the Ways and Means Committee from the consideration of a resolution proposing a constitutional amendment to make subject to tax all further issues of governmental bonds.

There are twenty-five billion-not million-twenty-five billion of nontaxable bonds in the country at the present time. These bonds are the refuge of great fortunes which escape taxes.

The Members are requested, if they are inclined to do so, to place their names upon that petition.

RELIEF LEGISLATION

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for one minute to make an announcement.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, for some time a large number of Members of the House have been unofficially acting in concert to study relief legislation.

A committee consisting of 15 members--5 Republicans. 5 Democrats, and 5 Progressives, of which the gentleman from New York [Mr. Mead] is chairman-has been working out the details. A comprehensive constructive relief measure has been passed by the House. That bill is now before the Senate.

The committee met to-day, and speaking for it and for a majority of the membership, I am sure, has passed resolutions that we will resist adjournment until a complete, constructive, effective relief measure is passed by the House and sufficient time thereafter has elapsed for Congress to exercise its prerogatives in the event of a presidential veto. [Applause.]

ANALYSIS OF IMPORTANT MATTERS BEFORE CONGRESS

Mr. WITHROW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection?

Mr. WITHROW. Mr. Speaker, that the people of my district in Wisconsin may have direct information about the important matters acted upon by this Congress up to this time, I have prepared the following brief summary or analysis of some of the more important questions which have been considered by the House.

HOOVER MORATORIUM

The nations of Europe have given their solemn word to repay their war loans. Neither President Hoover nor any other international spokesman has the right to encourage these nations to repudiate their just debts. These debts are assets of the people of the United States. They are all that we have to show for the $29,000,000,000 we sunk in 1917-18 to make the world safe for democracy. If European nations do not pay these debts, they will have to be paid by the taxpayers of the United States.

I am opposed to going to war to collect this money, but no self-respecting nation will force us to such an extremity. Let these European nations meet their debts, and pay them as fast as they are able. That is what our American farmers, workers, and business men have to do. Many of our citizens have lost their farms, homes, and business because they were unable to get extensions of time on their debts. There should be no further moratoriums and no cancellation of the foreign debt. It is for these foreign nations to decide if they want to assume the odium of repudiation.

Our country has already been exceedingly generous with our European debtors. These countries were ready to pay their interest last December. They had $252,000,000 in gold in New York with which to do it when President Hoover, by conference and by telegram, tied Congress's hands, and bigheartedly told our foreign debtors to keep our money. This move, of course, was popular with the New York bankers, because it meant that this $252,000,000, which rightfully belonged to the Treasury of the United States could be used to pay off private foreign loans to the New York banks.

Mr. Speaker, I will bitterly oppose any further moratoriums or debt reductions unless our American farmers and other citizens can be granted moratoriums and reductions on their debts as well.

THE RECONSTRUCTION FINANCE CORPORATION

The Reconstruction Finance Corporation was authorized by a bill which provided that $500,000,000 in cash should be taken directly out of the Treasury for this purpose, with the provision that an additional $1,500,000,000 could be raised by the sale of debenture bonds. This organization may have helped a few big banks and railroads, but it has done little for the country as a whole. The handful of seed loans which have been doled out to farmers has been the crust which has been thrown to the farmer disguised as aid and has served only to put him farther into debt.

No permanent relief can ever be achieved by forcing our people farther into debt. The depression can not be solved by slashing wages of the workers or by coaxing farmers to borrow more money. Permanent relief must come by giving the worker a job at which he can earn a living, and by giving the farmer an increase of price for farm products which will enable him to live and pay some of the debts he now

THE TAX BILL

The Mellon tax bills of 1924, 1926, and 1928 are directly responsible for the financial crisis with which the Treasury is faced to-day. The Mellon bills reduced the individual and corporation income taxes and surtaxes; these taxes during that era were not burdensome. Had the income taxes been allowed to stand, the public debt would now be reduced to around $10,000,000,000, instead of nearly $20,000,000,000 which we owe to-day. If those taxes had been allowed to stand the national Budget would balance itself.

I wish to point out, Mr. Speaker, that the deficit with which the Treasury is now faced has not been accumulated during this one year. It is the result of years of shortsighted policy on the part of the Treasury Department. By a policy of income-tax reduction during periods of prosperity Mr. Mellon cut down the revenue of the Government to such an extent that there has been a deficit for the past several years. Last year that deficit amounted to $903,000,-000 and this amount has been added to the expense of Government operation this year. To force our already overburdened people to make up this deficit which has accumulated over a period of years by a terrifically hightax schedule during this terribly hard year is the height of folly, gentlemen. Just as this deficit has been accumulated over a period of years, so it should be made up over a period of years, and the tax program should include individual and corporation income taxes and surtaxes which will continue in prosperous years so that our public debt can be reduced. This program will reduce the fixed costs of our Government by doing away with the public debt and interest payments and will later make it possible to have permanently reduced taxes.

ECONOMY MEASURES

I have been whole-heartedly in favor of every true economy measure which has been considered by this body, and I have fought just as hard against the proposals which have been brought before this body under the false colors of economy. The vested interests have taken advantage of our desperate need for economy to strike at the very heart of our democracy—our educational system and our standard of living.

It is well for Congress to economize in Government expenses. Every needless employee and Government activity should be dispensed with, and every possible consolidation of Government activity should be made; but this should be done in an orderly, businesslike way. Our national income has been declining steadily during the past few years, from $85,000,000,000 in 1929 to about $45,000,000,000 at the present time. Yet during this period when our income has been declining the cost of local, State, and Federal government has increased from $12,000,000,000 per year to about $14,000,000,000 per year. Government departments have been unduly expanded and useless and wasteful commissions have been authorized by Congress and the administration.

Much of this waste can and should be eliminated by the heads of the departments themselves, in a businesslike way. I would like to know why the War and Navy Departments have not been consolidated—this consolidation alone would save from $50.000.000 to $100.000.000 annually.

Extra expense has been saddled onto the taxpayer this year by the administration by the donation of $252,000,000 to foreign countries in the form of the moratorium and the donation of $500,000,000 or more to the railroads and big banking houses by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

I opposed the authorization of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and at the time this legislation was passed I pointed out to you gentlemen that every cent of it would have to be paid by the American farmer and workingman.

Certainly these expenditures should be reduced; they never should have been made in the first place. The administration has supported every one of these colossal wastes of money but has not been willing to cut department expenditures except to reduce the funds to be available for educational purposes. Even in the President's own household, the White House, the expenses have been increased from $260,000 in 1922 to $690,000 this year, all of which has to be paid by the farmer and workingman who can barely find food enough for his wife and children.

I have been in favor of every reasonable economy in Government operation, and I have fought with every facility at my command to place the burden of taxation on the shoulders of those who are best able to bear it—in the form of an income tax. Practically every day efforts have been made in this body to saddle the entire burden of Government expense onto the farmer and the workingman. The farmer and workingman have already been taxed beyond endurance. One out of every twelve farms has already been taken because farmers have not been able to pay their taxes. Gentlemen, our basic industry—agriculture—has been ruined by taxation, and I will continue to fight any measure which proposes to place one more cent of taxes on the farmer.

FARM LEGISLATION

I believe that the sincere efforts which have been made by those of us who represent agricultural districts has been rewarded to some extent. It is true that much remains to be done, but the legislation which has already been enacted by this body, if properly and sympathetically administered, will help to relieve the agricultural situation.

Our agricultural program should include the following

First. The price which the farmer receives for his product must be returned to normal. At present the farmer is getting practically nothing for the products he sells and consequently can not pay his interest and other expenses.

Second. The prices of farm implements, fertilizer, explosives, and other supplies needed on the farm must be reduced to correspond with the price the farmer receives for his products. At present the prices of machinery and equipment are still maintained at war-time levels, so that farmers are unable to buy the equipment which they very badly need.

Third. Agriculture must be relieved of its heavy burden of taxation. Under no circumstances should a general sales tax be levied, because this tax must be paid entirely by the farmer and the workingman. Genuine economy must be practiced by the Federal Government, and then the expenses of the Government must be paid through an equitable system of income taxes.

Fourth. Other industries are protected, therefore the Agricultural industry, which is basic, must also be protected from the competition of cheap and unwholesome substitutes and products produced at home and abroad.

"HONEST DOLLAR" BILL

The Goldsborough "honest dollar" bill which has been passed by this body, provides that the Federal reserve system shall so control the supply of currency in circulation so that commodity prices will be maintained at a normal level on a basis computed on the average prices for 1921–1929, a normal period. This measure, if properly administered, will mean that the farmer will be able to pay his debts with a dollar having the same value as the dollar he borrowed. Under our present system a farmer must pay back almost $2 for every $1 he borrowed several years ago. It is no wonder that the farmer can not make both ends meet under circumstances of this kind.

My proposal (H. Res. 272), which is still pending before this body, provides for an investigation and revision of the high prices of farm machinery. Records show that these prices have been maintained at war-time levels, although all other prices have been reduced. This highway robbery can only be carried out through monopolist control of the industry. My resolution provides that this monopoly shall be broken up so that prices on farm implements will return to pormal

I have introduced a bill, H. R. 7896, which provides that all oleomargarine and other substitutes for butter manufactured in the United States shall be taxed at a rate exactly the same as the tax on these substitutes in the State of Wisconsin. Despite the efforts I have made in favor of this bill, powerful interests have been able to prevent its consideration.

PHILIPPINE INDEPENDENCE

I supported the bill granting the Philippine Islands their independence because I believe the Government should redeem its promise made to the Philippine people by Admiral Dewey in 1898 when the Filipinos joined the American forces in Manila and helped drive the Spanish soldiers from the islands. It is against the principles upon which this Government was founded for one people to control another without their consent.

The independence of the Philippines will have a threefold wholesome effect on this country. Every day we retain control of these islands brings us that much nearer the time when we will have to defend them at great expense and loss of life. The independence of the islands will remove the expense of their government from the shoulders of the American taxpayer.

The greatest importance of the Philippine independence to the people of my district, which is one of the finest dairying districts in this country, is the fact that by giving these islands their independence it will be possible by tariff and other restrictions to bar or reduce importations of cheap vegetable oils used in the manufacture of oleomargarine, and this will be an important step in the protection of our dairy industry.

VETERANS' ADJUSTED COMPENSATION

The bill providing for the immediate cash payment of the adjusted compensation is scheduled to be voted on by this body next week. It has only been by the combined efforts of Members who are friendly to the veterans and the veterans themselves that it has been possible to secure a vote on this worthy proposition.

I have been promised an opportunity to discuss this measure more fully at the time when this bill is to be voted on by the House so that I will make only a very brief statement on this subject at this time.

The payment of the adjusted compensation at this time provides a means of paying this just and honest obligation of the Government to its veterans, and in addition to that it provides an opportunity of providing a direct form of badly needed relief which will be equally and directly distributed all over the country. The plan which will be submitted provides for the issuance of currency, backed by bonds of the Federal Government; and the plan provides a means by which our currency will be moderately expanded under strict control. This will have the effect of raising the level of commodity prices, and the effect on the entire country will certainly be wholesome.

The plan has been bitterly opposed by interests who control the purse strings of this country, but the fact remains that the plan is sound because the gold reserve now on hand in our Treasury is adequate to warrant the issuing of this currency. Not only is the plan sound and just but it can be carried out without costing the taxpayers one additional cent. At the present time money is being set aside each year to meet this debt, which would normally be due in 1945, and under this plan the debt will be automatically retired in 1945 at no extra cost to the taxpayer.

PROHIBITION

The Beck-Linthicum resolution calling a constitutional convention to amend the eighteenth amendment was defeated in the House by a vote of 227 to 187.

Another measure, the O'Connor-Hull bill, modifying the Volstead Act so as to permit the legal manufacture of 2.75 per cent beer, on which it was proposed to place a tax of 3 cents per pint, which would have produced over $500,000,000 in taxes annually, was defeated by practically the same vote.

Notwithstanding the fact that Congress refused to legalize beer in order to levy a tax on it, there is a provision in the present revenue bill taxing wort at 15 cents per gallon, and wort is used exclusively in making home-brew, or illegal beer.

To me it seems inconsistent to recognize that there is an illegal liquor traffic and to tax this illegal traffic and then refuse to legalize the manufacture and sale of a moderate brew under strict Government supervision, especially when the tax on the legal brew would lighten the tax burden of the farmer and workingman by $500,000,000 annually.

ADJOURNMENT

I wish to point out to the Members of this body that this summary of the activities of Congress is being made several weeks before we are to adjourn. You are all aware that powerful interests are working to have Congress adjourn before action can be taken on measures which are of greatest importance to our agricultural industry. The Frazier bill is one of the measures important to the farmer which should be considered before this session ends, and I and a small group of my colleagues are determined that this body shall remain in session until these important measures have been bills which we have passed.

It is important that we stay in session until the President has signed these important measures, so that if he should attempt to prevent the enactment of these bills by means of the veto or the "pocket veto" our organization will still be intact and in position to carry out the will of the people by passing the legislation over his veto.

RELIEF LEGISLATION

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for one minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. MEAD. I wish to supplement the remarks of the gentleman from New York [Mr. LaGuardia] by saying that our committee of 15, representing Democrats, Republicans, and Progressives of the House who are interested in passing relief legislation before adjournment have been meeting and studying this all-important question. We do not care to see a bill that applies to but one phase of the relief question adopted and sent to the President and then have an adjournment resolution presented to the House.

Until such time as we have accomplished the complete task it is our duty, as we see it, to remain here on the job until we have passed a comprehensive bill that will actually give relief. We can not desert our job leaving 10,000,000 of our fellow citizens jobless. [Applause.]

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes to make an announcement.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. UNDERHILL. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement.

J. P. BUCHANAN,
JOHN N. SANDLIN,
ROBT. G. SIMMONS,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker-

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Texas vield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I yield.
Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman explain to the House the ultimate saving that has been accomplished in the conference report over the bill as it passed the House? I noticed in going over the respective amendments that the House conferees receded and agreed to most of the cuts recommended by the Senate. Has the gentleman any information as to what that total amount is?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I have it here in the form of a statement of the totals.

The appropriation for this fiscal year was $235,664,694, plus $54,260,000 carried in the first deficiency act of this session. The Budget estimate for the next fiscal year was $188,693,405.

The House bill as it passed the House making appropriations for the next fiscal year was $175,408,814.

The Senate bill as it passed the Senate was $177,424,768.

This makes a reduction under last year's appropriation of

The total of the bill, if this conference report is agreed to and the Senate amendments in disagreement are rejected, will be $175.671.665.

Mr. STAFFORD. Then, deducting the $1,000,000 that was not carried in the House bill for the Chicago exposition, the total carried in this bill will be $174,671,665, or a difference of some seven hundred-odd thousand dollars lower than the amount carried by the House bill?

Mr. BUCHANAN. That is correct. I will insert in the RECORD a tabular statement showing the final result as it passed the House and as it passed the Senate, the appropriations for 1932, and the Budget estimates for 1933.

1 Conference report computation based on figures which will eventuate if House rejects Senate amendments listed in conference report as still in disagreement. 2 Includes $50,000,000 for Federal-aid highways and $4,200,000 for fighting and preventing forest fires.

Mr. STAFFORD. Then I take it the Senate has reduced | the agricultural appropriation bill to the extent to which the House conferees have agreed to it, over $700,000?

Mr. BUCHANAN. The Senate has actually increased the bill by $2,015,954.

Mr. STAFFORD. But there are some items as to which the Senate receded, although on most of them the House receded in accordance with the McKellar amendment.

Mr. BUCHANAN. The House receded on all the McKellar

Mr. STAFFORD. I know there are several instances where the Senate receded from the reductions.

Mr. BUCHANAN. The Senate receded on all the McKellar reductions.

Mr. ARENTZ. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Yes.

Mr. ARENTZ. Will the gentleman please tell the House what the net result would be if the House agrees to all the amendments that the Senate has insisted upon. Is the net result a loss to the House or a gain to the House?

Mr. BUCHANAN. It would be lower than the House bill if you subtract the new authorization that the Senate put in.

Mr. ARENTZ. In dollars and cents what does that amount to?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I would have to figure that up for the gentleman, which I will be pleased to do later.

Mr. ARENTZ. I think that would be interesting not only to the Members of the House but to the country at large. If we are trying to economize, what has the Senate done toward such economy?

Mr. BUCHANAN. If the House should agree to all of the Senate amendments, the total would be $2,015,954 in excess of the bill as it passed the House. From this sum should be deducted the $1,000,000 amendment of the Senate for the Chicago World's Fair, since this item was authorized by both the House and the Senate subsequent to the passage in the House of the agricultural appropriation bill. So that the net increase in the Senate bill over the House bill is

Mr. JONES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Yes.

Mr. JONES. The net result is that we reduce the appropriation $58,000,000 below last year's appropriation.

Mr. BUCHANAN. That would be approximately true were it not for the fact that the first deficiency act for 1932, enacted by this session of the Congress, carries an additional sum of $54,260,000 for the department for 1932. So that the total of the present bill for 1933 is actually $114,253,029 less than the total appropriations for 1932.

Mr. PARSONS. And how much below the Budget esti-

Mr. BUCHANAN. Thirteen million twenty-one thousand seven hundred and forty dollars.

Mr. PARSONS. The Senate is not insisting upon its 10 per cent reduction on this bill as it did on the Interior bill? Mr. BUCHANAN. No; the Senate receded from that Mr. CLARKE of New York. What is the reduction in the appropriations for the next fiscal year as compared with the year before?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Over $114,253,029.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the House insist on all amendments in disagreement with the Senate except amendments Nos. 6, 61, 76, 77, 16, and 22.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. 'Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I suggest that the gentleman ask that the amendments referred to may be read and then we can take action upon them.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all the amendments, except those I have just mentioned, may be read and considered en bloc.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. SIMMONS. Does the gentleman want to include the total of the bill in the amendments now?

Mr. BUCHANAN. That involves the total of the bill as it now is.

Mr. SIMMONS. I thought we could save that one item in conference if we left it out.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House insist on its amendments that have just been read.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the first amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the rst amendment in disagreement.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment 16: Page 31, line 6, strike out "$648,068" and insert "$655,133."

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House insist on its disagreement to this amendment. In this connection I ask unanimous consent to consider this amendment and Senate amendment 22 together, and I ask the Clerk to read it, because they relate to the same subject and the same station.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 35, line 13, strike out "$242,260" and insert "$262,040."

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. WILLIAMSON].

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the two Senate amendments. Nos. 16 and 22.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from South Dakota makes a preferential motion to recede and concur in both amendments.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. WILLIAMSON].

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Mr. Speaker, the matters involved in these two amendments were quite fully discussed in the House at the time we had the agricultural appropriation bill under consideration. Amendment No. 16 involves an item of $7,065 for the continuation of the dairy experimental work at the Ardmore Experiment Station in South Dakota. As I explained then, the proposal by the Agricultural Department is to transfer this dairy herd from Ardmore, S. Dak., to Mandan, N. Dak., and to maintain it there. think I showed then conclusively, and the facts are, that it would cost us more for the next fiscal year to move these cattle from Ardmore to Mandan and to keep them there than it would cost at Ardmore, where they are now. There is no economy involved in this item. On the other hand. I am confident that it will be an additional expense. We built a barn at Ardmore only a year ago at an expense of $5,000 to house these cattle. There is not sufficient barn room at Mandan in which to keep them, and the Government will have to provide additional facilities. If economy is to control, the cattle will have to be left where they are.

The other item involves dry-land farming experimental work at Ardmore. We are going to retain the station for animal husbandry. I would like to know how the department is going to take care of the beef herd without continuing the dry-land farming operations to provide the necessary feed. The dry-farming experimental work has not only been of great value in itself but is essential to the economical conduct of the animal-husbandry work. It seems to me clear, if we are going to keep this station, that the dry-farming experimental work ought to be maintained.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Yes.

Mr. BYRNS. If this is so important, why did not the President and the Budget ask Congress to make an appropriation for it? It is not in the Budget, and I am not sure that even the Department of Agriculture recommended it. The department cut it out. If it was so important, why was that done?

Mr. WILLIAMSON. The department may have cut it out, but they did it without any consideration of what the results would be from an economy standpoint. The gentleman knows that his own subcommittee put the items back in the bill and that they were taken out by reason of the gentleman's insistence that no item be put in the bill that was not provided for in the Budget.

Mr. BYRNS. I was in favor of its being taken out for the reason that the Secretary of Agriculture and the Budget and the President of the United States told Congress it was not necessary.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Oh, the gentleman knows it was never called to the attention of the Budget by the Department of Agriculture and that the President knew nothing about it. The Department of Agriculture simply left the item out and it was not considered at all. That is the fact. What is the use of trying to fool this House?

Mr. BYRNS. I am not trying to fool the House. The gentleman admits the Department of Agriculture did not recommend it.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. And they never gave the Budget a chance to pass upon the items upon their merits.

Mr. BYRNS. Of course they did not, when it was never sent to the Budget.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. WILLIAMSON. Yes.

Mr. SIMMONS. No matter what may have happened in the Budget Bureau or the Department of Agriculture, five of us on the subcommittee put it in the bill, and it was taken out at the insistence of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Byrnsl.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. That is a fact. The facts in support of these two items were fully presented to the subcommittee, and the subcommittee, after due consideration, put them in the bill. Later, they were taken out by the full committee at the insistence of the gentleman from Tennessee, but were restored by the Senate.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, the department itself considers it an economy to discontinue this station, that the work performed at this station could be well done at other stations, that there was a scarcity of water supply at this station, and if it was continued we would have to make a considerable appropriation to endeavor to find water for this station. Doctor Taylor sent me a letter which I put in the RECORD, stating that fact, and he thought it advisable to let the station go, that it had served its purpose.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. BUCHANAN. Yes. Mr. STAFFORD. I understand it is the position of the Secretary of Agriculture that this station can be abandoned and that economy will result to the extent of thousands of Mr. BUCHANAN. Absolutely.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. The gentleman knows that South Dakota last year passed through the greatest drought in its history. It is the only year that there has ever been any shortage of water at Ardmore. They provided for water last year. This year there is an abundance of water there, and there probably will be for all time to come. There is no shortage of water there now, and the Department of Agriculture put that forward as an excuse and to save some chair warmers in Washington. It was not the work of the Secretary but of subordinates.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from South Dakota to recede and concur in amendments numbered 16 and 22.

The motion was rejected.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Does the vote now recur on the motion to further insist?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The effect of the vote on the motion to recede and concur is to insist on the disagreement of the House to the Senate amendments. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 61: Page 65, line 25, insert a colon and the following:

"Provided, That hereafter in the administration of the Federal
"Provided, That hereafter in the administration of the Federal highway act and acts amendatory thereof or supplementary thereto, the first paragraph of section 9 of the act of November 9, 1921, shall not apply to publicly owned toll bridges or approaches thereto constructed and operated by the highway department of

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur with an amendment which I have sent to the desk. The Clerk read as follows:

Moved by Mr. Buchanan: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 61, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"Provided, That the act entitled 'An act to permit the granting "Provided, That the act entitled 'An act to permit the granting of Federal aid in respect of certain roads and bridges,' approved March 3, 1927 (44 Stat. 1398), is hereby amended to read as follows: 'That notwithstanding any provision of the act entitled "An act to provide that the United States shall aid the States in the construction of rural post roads, and for other purposes," approved July 11, 1916, or of the Federal-aid highway act, the Secretary of Agriculture may extend on the same basis and in the Secretary of Agriculture may extend, on the same basis and in the same manner as in the construction of any free bridge, Federal aid under such acts, in the construction of any toll bridge and approaches thereto, and of any highway leading thereto, by any State or States, or political subdivision or subdivisions thereof, upon the condition that such bridge is owned and operated by such State or States, or political subdivision or subdivisions thereof, and that all tolls received from the operation thereof, less the actual cost of operation and maintenance, are applied to the repayment to the State or States, or political subdivision or subdivisions thereof, of its or their part of the cost of construction or acquisition of such bridge, and upon the further condition that when the amount contributed by such State or States, or political subdivision or subdivisions thereof, in the construction or acquisition of such bridge, shall have been repaid from the tolls, the collection of tolls for the use of such bridge shall thereafter cease, and the same shall be maintained and operated as a free bridge." cretary of Agriculture may extend, on the same basis and in the

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Speaker, I reserve a point of order. I will make the point of order unless I understand it a little different than the reading would indicate; but I reserve the point of order for the present.

May I inquire just how this amendment is intended to amend the Federal aid highway act?

Mr. BUCHANAN. It amends the Federal highway act by the addition of seven words. All of that amendment that was read is in the highway act, except seven words, and is now the law. Those seven words consist of "and of any highway leading thereto" and the word "acquisition."

Mr. DOWELL. That may be, but it might change the entire meaning of the act.

Mr. BUCHANAN. The meaning of it is that if the State constructs a bridge and charges tolls on that bridge it can get no Federal aid on any road leading thereto. If it charges toll for the actual cost of construction, then any highway leading to that bridge can not receive Federal aid.

Mr. DOWELL. That is what I assumed was contained in the amendment.

Mr. BUCHANAN. The purpose of this amendment is to permit the State to charge tolls until the actual cost of the construction of a bridge has been repaid, and then the tolls

Mr. SIMMONS. And to permit Federal aid on the roads leading to the bridge.

Mr. BUCHANAN. To permit Federal aid on the roads leading to the bridge. I hope the gentleman will remember that where a State has constructed a bridge and issued and sold bonds to get the money, and charges toll to repay that bond issue, then no road leading to that bridge can receive Federal aid. That would be unjust, because there might be a dozen public roads leading to that bridge.

Mr. DOWELL. I want to say a few words on the subject. For the purpose of protecting the department on the expenditure of Federal-aid funds, the funds are not permitted, under the law, to be paid on any road collecting a toll. That is a general provision of the Federal aid law. It was made for the purpose of giving to the public free access to the roads on which they paid Federal aid. I do not know how far this amendment goes, but there has been an effort for a number of years to take off this provision and to permit the Government to pay Federal aid on roads that lead to toll bridges. The Roads Committee, so far as I know, has refused to adopt amendments for that purpose. I do not know whether the chairman of the Committee on Roads of the House is present to-day or not, but as far as the committee is concerned, it never has entertained the idea that the Government should expend money on roads leading to toll bridges. I dislike very much to insist upon the point of order, but it seems to me that this is of such importance it ought to come from the Committee on Roads and not from the Appropriations Committee. There can be no special reason for this being done at this time, and as it is a matter of importance, the Committee on Roads should give it full consideration, and then the House should consider it as a separate proposition. I see no reason why it should be done at this time. If the gentleman can show any reason or any special emergency for this, I would be glad to consider it, but I see no emergency whereby this legislation should be passed on an appropriation bill.

I make the point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Iowa insist on the point of order?

Mr. DOWELL. I insist on the point of order, Mr. Speaker. The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Texas desire to be heard?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Yes, Mr. Speaker. A point of order can not lie to this amendment. This was a Senate amend-

Mr. DOWELL. This happens to be a House amendment. I mean the amendment that the gentleman is offering is a House amendment.

Mr. BUCHANAN. It is a motion to concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment, covering exactly the same subject that the Senate amendment covers. The only difference is the Senate amendment did not limit the time that tolls could be charged to when the bridge was paid for, and I would not agree to permit tolls to be charged forever on any bridge that a public road crosses.

I did not think it was too much of a concession to let them charge a toll until the actual expense of the bridge was paid, and there is not any provision in the Federal aid act covering it. There may be a dozen roads leading to this bridge that is already constructed, and tolls are being

Mr. MICHENER. The question is simply one of germaneness, as to whether the amendment is germane to the subject matter.

Mr. BUCHANAN. That is all there is to the point of

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I yield.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. A Senate amendment is not subject to a point of order in the House on the ground that it is legislation

Mr. BUCHANAN. The gentleman is correct.
Mr. CHINDBLOM. But when an amendment originating in the House is offered to a Senate amendment it is subject to the question of germaneness. So it is for the gentleman to show that the amendment which he has offered as a substitute to the Senate amendment is germane to the Senate amendment.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I think that is correct. It is up to the other side to show it is not germane.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I say, frankly, having read the amendment, it is going to take a little while for anybody to determine whether it is germane to the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks the amendment is not germane. The point of order is sustained. Mr. STAFFORD. If that is the case, what action does the gentleman from Texas wish to take on the amendment? Mr. BUCHANAN. I move that the House insist on its disagreement to the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 76: Page 86, line 22, insert:

"AGRICULTURAL-CREDIT CORPORATIONS

"For carrying into effect the provisions of Public Resolution No. 11, Seventy-second Congress, approved March 5, 1932, there is hereby reappropriated $10,000,000, to be immediately available, of which amount not to exceed 2 per cent shall be available for expenses of administration, including the employment of persons and means in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, printing purchase of law books and books of reference, and other necessary expenses."

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment with an amend-

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. Buchanan moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 76, and agree the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"AGRICULTURAL CREDIT CORPORATIONS

"For carrying into effect the provisions of Public Resolution No. 11, entitled 'Joint resolution to authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to aid in the establishment of agricultural credit corporations, and for other purposes,' approved March 3, 1932, $10,000,000 of the combined unexpended balances and repayments $10,000,000 of the combined unexpended balances and repayments thereto of the appropriations contained in Public Resolution No. 114, approved January 15, 1931, and in the Interior Department appropriation act for the fiscal year 1932, approved February 14, 1931, to carry out the provisions of Public Resolution No. 112, approved December 20, 1931, as amended (46 Stat. 1032, 1160, 1167), is hereby made immediately available as a revolving fund, as authorized by section 4 of said Public Resolution No. 11, of which fund not to exceed 2 per cent shall be available for the expenses of administration, including the employment of persons and means in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, printing and binding, purchase of law books and books of reference, and other necessary expenses: Provided, That the unobligated balances remaining in such appropriations (together with repayments credited thereto), not otherwise appropriated, shall be covered into the Treasury at the close of the fiscal year 1932 as miscellaneous receipts."

Mr. STAFFORD. For the time being, Mr. Speaker, I reserve a point of order so as to give the gentleman an opportunity to explain not only the purpose of his amendment but the Senate amendment also, as it appropriates $10,000,-000, quite a nice item even in a pork barrel.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I will say to my colleague, the gentleman from Wisconsin, that this appropriation is made in direct response to an act of the House authorizing appropriations for the purpose of organizing livestock and agricultural credit corporations.

Mr. SIMMONS. Will the gentleman yield right there? Mr. BUCHANAN. I yield.

Mr. SIMMONS. Which act was passed at this session of Congress?

Mr. BUCHANAN. It was passed at this session of Congress.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am fully aware of that fact. Mr. BUCHANAN. The reason the House conferees disagreed to the Senate amendment was because the Senate amendment was not sufficiently guarded and did not provide for the balance to be paid into the Treasury, and so forth. So we concluded to write an amendment to the Senate amendment so it would be complete and protect the interests of the Government as well as make the appropriation.

Mr. JONES. The amendment simply protects the Treas-

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the reservation of the point of order as the point that I had in mind has been attained.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Texas that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 77: Page 87, line 7, insert: "GRASSHOPPER CONTROL

"For the application of such methods of control of grasshoppers For the application of such methods of control of grasshoppers as, in the judgment of the Secretary of Agriculture, may be necessary, in cooperation with such authorities of the States concerned, organizations, or individuals as the Secretary may deem necessary to accomplish such purposes, including the employment of persons and means in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, printing, rent outside of the District of Columbia, and for other expenses, to be immediately available, $1,450,000, of which not to exceed $3,000 may be expended for personal services in the District of Columbia: Provided, That, except for general administration and supervision, in the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture, expenditures under this appropriation shall be limited to the expenditures under this appropriation shall be inhited to the purchase and transportation of poisoned bait, or materials for its manufacture, and that the cooperating States shall be responsible for the local distribution and utilization of such bait, including full labor costs: Provided further, That in the discretion of the

Mr. GARBER. Mr. Speaker, I reserve a point of order. Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House insist on its disagreement to the Senate amendment.

Mr. GARBER. Will the gentleman yield for an inquiry?

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. Speaker, I offer a preferential motion to recede and concur in the Senate amendment with Mr. GARBER. Mr. Speaker, I reserve a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. STAFFORD. I would like to inquire of the gentleman what his point of order is.

Mr. GARBER. Will the gentleman from Texas permit a question as to the responsibility of the Government under this amendment?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Let the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SIMMONS] submit his preferential motion first.

Mr. GARBER. The language reads, "No part of this appropriation shall be used to pay the cost or value of farm animals, farm crops, or other property injured or destroyed." Is this sufficient to safeguard the Government against liability for damages?

Mr. BUCHANAN. It was just as far as we could go in safeguarding the Government.

Mr. GARBER. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the reservation of the point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentlemen from Nebraska [Mr. Simmons] offers a preferential motion which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. Simmons moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate (Amendment No. 77) and agree to the same with the following amendment:

"In lieu of the sum of $1,450,000 proposed in such amendment, insert the sum of $750,000."

Mr. SIMMONS. Will the gentleman from Texas yield me some time so that I may yield to others?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman from Nebraska 30 minutes.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. CLAGUE].

Mr. BUCHANAN. Will the gentleman object to my asking that a letter from the Secretary of Agriculture be read at this time?

Mr. CLAGUE. If it is not taken out of my time.

Mr. BUCHANAN. It will not be taken out of the gentleman's time.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a letter from the Secretary of Agriculture, which I send to the desk, be read at this time for the information of the House, not to be taken out of the time of the gentleman from Minnesota.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

BUREAU OF ENTOMOLOGY, June 10, 1932.

Hon. James P. Buchanan, House of Representatives.

Dear Mr. Buchanan: This is to confirm my verbal statement made at our conference of yesterday, that it is now too late for the department to carry on an effective control campaign against grasshoppers as provided in the estimate for an appropriation for this purpose.

The essential feature of any control campaign against grass-hoppers is to poison the young locusts as they first emerge from the egg beds and before they have any opportunity to migrate from such areas into the fields. The grasshoppers have now hatched in practically all parts of the areas where heavy infestations were anticipated and a large portion of them have moved from the hatching areas. Since this dispersion has taken place, and because of the delays incident to the organization of a Federal campaign and the securing of the necessary supplies and materials, the opportunity for effective control under Federal direction is now lost. The essential feature of any control campaign against grass-

It will be recalled that the original estimate submitted under date of February 4 pointed out that the campaign should be carried on in the spring. This fact was also explained at the time this item was discussed before the Senate committee on February 13. The need of prompt action was stressed on May 2 in connection with the hearing on the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 377) before the House Committee on Agriculture. It was further emphasized in my letter to Congressman Marvin Jones of May 7, at which time I stated: "If, therefore, the moneys under consideration were now available, even under the most favorable circumstances of completing contracts and securing of supplies * * there is obviously a risk that this delay would materially lessen the success of the effort." The need of prompt action was further stressed on May 14 when, accompanied by Doctor Marlatt, Chief of the Bureau of Entomology, I discussed this question with a group of Representatives and Senators at a conference called by Congressman Simmons. The decisive action regarding the appropriation for grasshopper control taken by the House on May 16 appeared to close the door to any Federal appropriation for grasshopper control, and accordingly on May 18 I sent letters to the governors of various States suggesting that the States, counties, and persons in interest prepare to carry on the necessary control campaigns.

Sincerely. campaigns.

Sincerely.

ARTHUR M. HYDE, Secretary.

Mr. CLAGUE. Mr. Speaker, I differ entirely from the statement of the Secretary of Agriculture. I will admit that if we had had this appropriation a month or six weeks ago, we could have done much more effective work, but the representatives here from the Northwestern States know that last year in the Dakotas, and I dare say also in Montana, Minnesota, and Nebraska, practically none of the damage had been done by grasshoppers until after July 1. The grasshoppers are now hatching, and will continue hatching until after August 1.

Considerable damage was done in my district last year. We had no idea we had any grasshoppers there until late in July. The telegrams and letters I am receiving now are to the effect that grasshoppers are commencing to hatch, and many of them are now hatched, and we are in need of this appropriation at once.

The State of Minnesota has appropriated considerable money to carry on this campaign. We have all the material necessary in our State; we have the organization, and all we are asking the Federal Government is to appropriate some money to help carry on this campaign, and in my judgment the most effective time to do this work is from now

It was late in July when the damage was realized last year. Grasshoppers do not simply eat fresh growing wheat or corn. Last year grown corn and nearly matured grain crops were destroyed in my district in the latter part of July and the first part of August. Little damage was done until after the middle of July.

Grasshoppers do not know any State lines. They will attack even the stalks of corn after the corn is practically grown, and the same thing is true of grain crops. Whole fields of wheat were destroyed in my section just about a week before it was ready to cut, and at this time in my section the grasshoppers are just commencing to hatch. Very effective work can be done to combat this plague if we can get this appropriation.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Will the gentleman vield?

Mr. CLAGUE. Yes.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Will the gentleman give us a picture of the damage that was really done?

Mr. CLAGUE. I dare say that in three-fourths of South Dakota last year the fields were simply swept clean. I remember between the 15th and 20th of July driving through 15 or 20 counties of South Dakota adjoining the Minnesota line and there was scarcely a spear of grass to be found. I remember going into the western part of my district about the first part of July when everything was fine and we did not know there were any grasshoppers in the country. A week from that time the fields were swept

Mr. KVALE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLAGUE. Yes.

though the grasshoppers are not hatched now in our section of the country, prevailing winds will blow them over there, and it is not a State matter.

Mr. CLAGUE. They are carried long distances by the wind and in one season will be carried many miles.

The appropriation asked for is $750,000 and if that is granted a great amount of good can be done in destroying this pest, and if something is not done now, we will have much more to appropriate next year.

Mr. ANDRESEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLAGUE. Yes.

Mr. ANDRESEN. In the area where we are asking for this fund to be spent, the Government has lent over $50,-000,000 to provide for seed for this year's crop. It is the duty of the Government to go ahead and appropriate this small amount to protect its interests there, because they have a first-mortgage security on the growing crop; and if the growing crop is destroyed, they will never collect a penny of that money.

Mr. CLAGUE. That is correct. Over $22,000,000 has already been loaned by the Government to the farmers of that section of the country to produce a crop. If it is wiped out this year, those farmers will not have a single dollar to pay back what they now owe to the Government.

Mr. CHRISTGAU. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLAGUE. Yes.

Mr. CHRISTGAU. Does the gentleman know that last year Minnesota spent $21,000 for grasshopper control and the State entomologist estimated that for every dollar spent the State saved $100 in crop value. So it is a saving as well.

Mr. CLAGUE. Yes. The Government now has an investment in the growing crops of the Northwest of over $20,000,000. This investment should be protected. All we are asking is for the Government to purchase the material to be used in poisoning the hoppers; our people are organized to perform the labor free of charge. It is not too late to do effective work in destroying this terrible pest.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. CHRISTOPHERSON].

Mr. CHRISTOPHERSON. Mr. Speaker, I know that this item, an appropriation with which to combat the grasshopper, has been subjected to some jests and jokes from time to time; but let me say to you that if you could have been out in my State last summer and beheld the devastation that was wrought by the grasshoppers, you would realize that it is not a joking matter.

Mr. Speaker, if I could depict to you and the Members of this House the true picture of destruction by the grasshoppers last summer, if you could have seen the broad fields of grain entirely consumed, corn sheared to the very ground, leaving the impression that the field had been summer-fallowed, pastures with the appearance of having been burned and the leaves of the trees partially consumed, I am sure there would be no question about the immediate passage of

Could you behold the scene of desolation and destruction wrought by the invasion of these pests last summer, as I observed it, extending over the greater part of my State and adjoining States, you would realize the necessity for action without delay. You would comprehend the danger involved and that this is not a local problem, but one that threatens the entire agricultural area of our land.

It is urged that the areas affected should meet the cost of extermination. As to that let me say, in my State the counties invaded went the limit in their warfare, borrowing to the limit of credit, and can not this year repeat the battle without help. Grasshoppers have no respect for State lines. They migrate from one State to another and multiply at an unbelievable rate.

Members of the entomology department of our State college took a square foot of earth, 2 inches deep, from an infected area, placed the earth in a glass jar, and in four days there were more than 6,400 live hoppers in the jar and many eggs still unhatched.

Recently the Hon. C. W. Pugsley, president of the South Dakota College of Agriculture and Mechanic Arts and Mr. KVALE. Will the gentleman explain that even former Assistant Secretary of the United States Department of Agriculture, sent to me a handful of earth, which I placed in a jar. This I left standing on my desk at the office, and in less than a week the jar was a hive of live grasshoppers. I brought this jar to the floor of the House a few weeks back, and some of you saw the live pests. I wish I had it here to-day, but the fact is they hatched so rapidly that the jar was all too small, so I disposed of the exhibit.

> Tests have shown that a square foot of earth will produce from ten to twelve thousand grasshoppers, hence it can be readily realized that this is a menace so serious that one not acquainted with the destructive force of the pests can scarcely comprehend the result.

> I have many letters and telegrams urging the necessity for Government aid in this warfare.

> As stated by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. CLAGUE], the Government has loaned millions of dollars to the farmers in these States for seed and crop production. Now, it stands to reason if the crops are devoured by the grasshoppers, they will be unable to repay these loans. But if the crops are protected and saved, they will be able to repay these loans. Therefore, it means that this sum with which to combat the grasshoppers is only a reasonable insurance, a sound and sensible step for the Government to take in safeguarding the money it has already loaned. Give us this aid in overcoming this menace, for if allowed to develop these destructive pests will extend over the entire Mississippi and Missouri Valleys. [Applause.]

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LARSEN].

Mr. LARSEN. Mr. Speaker, this item for appropriation to fight grasshopper infestation in certain of the Northwestern States was before the House some time ago on motion for suspension of the rules. I regret that we then refused to even consider the proposition, and, as it were, kicked it out of doors. I heard the evidence of those who appeared before the committee in behalf of the proposal.

Conditions which then existed and have since developed were and are such that no man, I do not care where he lives, if he has a bona fide desire or intention of helping suffering humanity, can fail to take notice.

These insects not only clean up the crops, but they eat every vestige of vegetable life that comes in their way. They do not stop at anything. They actually eat holes in the stockings of the women who stand in their path. [Laughter.] If the farm hands stick down pitchforks and go to dinner, when they return the insects have eaten holes in the handles, so that they have to sandpaper the handles before they can use them.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LARSEN. Yes.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. The gentleman says that they eat holes in the stockings of the women; the gentleman from Missouri, sitting by me, says that they even eat holes in the handles of the tools.

Mr. LARSEN. That is just what I say, and they have to sandpaper them before they can use them again. [Laughter.] But, gentlemen, this is nothing at which to laugh.

In the South we have had the boll weevil, the cotton-boll pink worm, and other pests. We have destroyed the pink worm and some other insects. You gentlemen know what that means. The boll weevil does not eat anything but the cotton; it does not destroy everything. It does not bother corn, and so forth, but with these grasshoppers, conditions are not the same; when they get through there is nothing left.

The local communities are not able to take care of the situation, and it is our duty now to make an appropriation that will carry the benefits of scientific aid to them.

Mr. BYRNS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LARSEN. I will.
Mr. BYRNS. Does the gentleman think we ought to make this appropriation to be used by the Secretary of Agriculture when he tells us that it is too late for him to use it?

Mr. LARSEN. Oh, the Secretary of Agriculture is a political-minded gentleman that you do not regard so highly wisdom of the Senate? That body has approved this item.

Gentlemen, our own Government has already loaned many millions of dollars to farmers in this territory; how are you going to collect it? We expect to collect it from first mortgages, which the Government now holds on the crops. Do you think it is good judgment to sit down and let the grasshoppers eat up the crops that we have a mortgage on?

Mr. CHRISTGAU. Dr. A. G. Ruggles, State entomologist of Minnesota, stated to me last week that it is not too late. He said they can use this up to the middle of July with a great deal of effectiveness, that many grasshoppers are still hatching.

Mr. LARSEN. There is expert testimony for you, against political testimony of the Secretary of Agriculture. I believe in the wisdom of the Senate and what the expert says about it.

Mr. CLARKE of New York. Is not this man Marlatt, whose name is mentioned in the letter of the Secretary of Agriculture, the same gentleman who discovered the Mediterranean fruit fly in Florida that nobody else has up to this time ever seen?

Mr. LARSEN. I do not know; but I would like to say something about that.

Mr. BYRNS. And we spent millions of dollars on that

Mr. LARSEN. There was great injury to fruit, if not devastation, in Florida. I went there and looked at it myself. I went into the laboratory and saw specimens. I talked to experts. That is all poppy-cock you hear as to no infestation in Florida. That is some of the rot peddled around and that some of you gentlemen pay attention to up here. I have never been called upon to make any statement about the matter, but I went to Florida and I investigated it at Orlando when it first showed up; but let that be as it may, we now have a duty to perform in behalf of the Government and in behalf of suffering humanity somewhere else, not in Florida, but in the Northwest. If the Lord does not send a heavy supply of rain, the people out there will have everything eaten up by grasshoppers unless we make this appropriation and enable them to fight. We would better spend a small sum of money now to protect the people and enable them to live and to repay the money loaned them by the Government than lose this money and perhaps have to support them at the public expense next winter.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to my colleague from Texas [Mr. Blanton].

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, every time there is an attempt to retrench and stop public expenditure of money the part of the country where the money is to be spent rises up through its Representatives and demands that you still keep on spending it. How are you going to stop?

I mentioned yesterday a telegram which in one day in Houston, Tex., where I was born, was signed by 7,770 citizens, demanding of the Texas delegation that they retrench expenditures of public money in the Congress and get through with business, adjourn sine die, and go home.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. No; please excuse me. I have only five minutes. I know the gentleman comes from a part of the country that has had more hand-outs from the Federal Treasury than any other part of the United States.

Here is a Senate proposal in June, if you please, after the grasshoppers have been hatched and have migrated and are ready to die natural deaths, to spend $1,450,000 out of the Treasury on grasshopper control.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. BLANTON. No; I regret that I can not. I have only a few minutes. I will handle my side of it. I ask that the gentleman sit down.

Mr. CLARKE of New York. Mr. Speaker, the Chair should protect the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. I can protect myself even from Bob Sim-that you want to take his statements in preference to the | you protect yourself from him, when he wants some money out of the Public Treasury.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. Speaker—— Mr. BLANTON. I do not yield, and the gentleman ought to understand that. This is a Senate amendment here which proposes to take $1,450,000 out of the Public Treasury.

The gentleman from Nebraska knows that he can not do that, and so he proposes by his amendment to cut it down to $750,000.

Mr. BURTNESS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. BLANTON. No; I do not yield to another gentleman whose State and sister State have had more hand-outs than any other State in the Union, except Idaho.

You are not going to put anything in my speech when I do not vield.

Mr. CLARKE of New York. I insist, Mr. Speaker, that the gentleman from Texas be protected.

Mr. BLANTON. I do not need any protection. I will protect myself.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will suspend. The gentleman from Texas declines to yield, and the Chair will protect the gentleman in his time.

Mr. BLANTON. I ask the Speaker to see to it that these explosive eruptions from North and South Dakota and Idaho and Nebraska not be taken out of my time. I know they want to spend this money out there. They want to do it right in the face of the contrary judgment of the Secretary of Agriculture; they want to do it against the judgment of their President, who just recently has begun to preach economy; and they want to do it against the judgment of their President's Budget Bureau. They care little for reason or excuse. They want the money. Yes; they are clamoring to have it spent out of the Public Treasury.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. BLANTON. No; I do not yield. I have not the time.

Will the gentleman yield to me? Mr. SIMMONS.

Mr. BLANTON. In just a moment. I am going to yield to my good friend the able gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SIMMONS! when I conclude what I have to say, but I am going to say what I want to say before I yield. They had grasshopper plagues in Pharaoh's time, and we have had them ever since, and we are going to have them when Bob SIMMONS'S great-grandchildren have great-grandchildren; and this $1,450,000 that the Senate tried to throw away out of the Public Treasury, and the $750,000 that Bob SIMMONS, of Nebraska, hitherto the economist of the country, is trying to throw away, will be wasted if we appropriate it; and we must save it. If it is granted, appropriated, it will be spent by overhead here in Washington, and not a cent of benefit will be accomplished for the people of the United States anywhere

Some gentleman mentioned that sums of money had been spent to eradicate tick fever in aid of the cattle industry. That is in no way an analogous case at all. Tick fever affected cattle in every portion of the United States. The losses from it extended into the many thousands every year. It affected every person in the United States in that it vitally affected the price of beef and veal, used universally everywhere. The stockmen spent huge sums of money out their own pockets to solve the problem. Our good friend and colleague the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KLEBERG] has spent enough money on his big King ranch in Texas during the past 36 years to eradicate tick fever, and has suffered losses from the disease, to make any of us here rich and independent. Naturally the scientists of the Government assisted stockmen in arranging their dipping vats, in formulating the proper receipe for poison, and in planning the proper dripping pens. And twice each year the cattlemen have gone to the expense of gathering their cattle on their big ranches, driving them to the dipping vats, dipping them, and then returning them to the respective pastures to which they belonged.

Some one mentioned boll worm and boll weevil. In my honest judgment the money which the Department of Agriculture has spent on these pests has been wasted. I do mons, and God knows you are doing a mighty good job when 'not believe that any real, lasting good whatever has been accomplished. The pests are still with us. The money is gone. And we are taxing the people in almost every manner the ingenuity of the human mind can conjure up to raise money to pay the deficits in the Treasury.

I know something about the ravages of grasshoppers. They inflict Texas just as they do the Western States. I have seen them destroy crop after crop. But the Federal Government can never stop them with the tax money wrung from its already overburdened taxpayers. There is not a chance of this money doing any good. Spending it will not save a crop. This is a problem that the farmers, and their localities, and their county, and their State, must combat and solve.

Now, why not save $75,000 and this $1,450,000? chairman of this subcommittee, my colleague from Texas, Judge Buchanan, who has done earnest work on this bill, has been working and grinding day and night to try to get out a proper bill. He deserves the thanks of the entire Nation. The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Byrns], and other members of his committee have worked hard and have tried to bring in a proper bill. I am one who is going to back them up 100 per cent, even though we have some grasshoppers in Texas. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. CAMPBELL].

Mr. CAMPBELL of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I do not know that I can say anything in addition to what has already been said. I do want to say that the funds of Iowa have been used to the limit for the purpose of destroying the grasshopper. I received a telegram from our secretary of agriculture saying that they had done all they could and that they wanted additional help. I received a telegram the other day from the county agent of one of our counties saying exactly the same thing. I say to you, Mr. Speaker, that this has become so large in its devastation that it is, in a way, a national calamity; and when the gentleman from Texas takes the floor and speaks with regard to grasshoppers, I think the gentleman forgets something like $11,000,000 that has been appropriated in his good State for the eradication of the boll weevil or the tick, or whatever

Mr. BURTNESS. To be exact, over $13,000,000 for the pink bollworm and almost as large an item for the tick.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Iowa. When the Members of this House from the State of Iowa see devastation like that in Texas we are willing to help. We have helped all along the line. We have helped in connection with fires in Massachusetts and with everything that the South wanted along that line, where they are not able to take care of it themselves. Now we come to you, where the destruction has been, as it has in South Dakota and Iowa and some eight States, and we ask for a little help. It is very, very small as compared with what the other States have had.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, for the first time we have found it necessary to come to the Federal Government for aid to help eradicate grasshoppers in Idaho. When the invasion of these pests was brought to our attention about 10 days ago, we took the matter up with the Commissioner of Indian Affairs because of the fact that they appeared first on the Fort Hall Indian Reservation. He telegraphed to the superintendent of the reservation for a report, and I wish to read the superintendent's reply to the commissioner's inquiry, showing the immediate need of additional help to eradicate these grasshoppers, or crickets, as they are known in Idaho.

Campaign must be carried on strenuously for indefinite time. Most urgent, wire additional funds.

The Commissioner of Indian Affairs at once authorized an expenditure of $500 for cooperative work, and duplicated that amount the next day because of the urgency of the situation.

I have also a telegram from the mayor of Pocatello, a city of about 20,000, which is just at the edge of the reservation. He says in this telegram:

Attention is also called to the following statement from Dr. C. L. Marlatt, Chief, Bureau of Entomology, Department of Agriculture, of the expenditures in past years and the value of crops saved through the campaign of eradication.

There are no estimates available as to the total amount of damage done by grasshoppers over the whole of the United States. Over a 10-year period, 1913-1922, inclusive, estimates are available, covering the Mississippi Valley and westward, on the amount of saving made by the use of poisoned-bran mash as a grasshopper control. This estimate was made in cooperation with the entomologists of the States concerned, and indicates, covering this mologists of the States concerned, and indicates, covering this 10-year period, a saving of $65,000,000 for the period, or approximately $6,500,000 per year. Damage to this amount was prevented by the use of poisoned-bran bait, which cost approximately $1,600,000 for the 10-year period, or $160,000 per year. It is safe to say that, covering the United States as a whole for this same 10-year period, the damage which was not prevented will represent an equal or very likely a much larger amount. It is interesting to note that Canadian officials have estimated an even greater annual saving than that indicated above in Canada from similar use of bran bait. In Kansas alone, in 1919, at a cost of $122,000, an estimated damage of $25,000,000 was prevented. $122,000, an estimated damage of $25,000,000 was prevented.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Idaho has expired.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HART].

Mr. HART. Mr. Speaker, I see my friends on the Republican side of the aisle are willing to repudiate their Secretary of Agriculture. So far as his political statements are concerned, I would be willing to repudiate him also, but his statements with reference to this grasshopper amendment are backed up by the Bureau of Entomology. For the Bureau of Entomology we have appropriated $2,481,700. If we are not to accept their statements as experts along this line, then we ought to cancel that appropriation and get

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HART. I yield.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. The information contained in the telegram I have just read is direct from the seat of war, and certainly ought to be more convincing than the information furnished by the representatives of the department, who are not apparently fully advised.

Mr. HART. It is always possible to get a demand for an appropriation from the seat of war. There is no trouble about that. The people in any district are always willing for the Federal Government to appropriate, because they do not have to pay the money.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. HART. I yield.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Does the gentleman mean to insinuate that the people out there are more eager to have a few dollars expended there than they are to save their crops?

Mr. HART. Well, we have grasshoppers in Michigan. Mr. RICH. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. HART. I yield.

Mr. RICH. Why is it that we were asked a few days ago for $1,000,000 for this same purpose and now they come in and want $1,450,000 for the same purpose?

Mr. HART. Election time is much nearer.

Mr. SIMMONS. The gentleman does not know what is going on. We are only asking for $750,000.

Mr. HART. Please do not consume all my time.

Mr. BLANTON. But the Senate amendment provides for $1,450,000.

Mr. HART. We voted down this very item. The appropriation called for in this bill was voted down in the House. Then they went over in the Senate and put it back in this bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. Howard].

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, in the two minutes allotted to me I want to make the most urgent plea I know how to make to this House to take its eyes away from a picture of comedy, and let them rest upon a picture of the sublimest tragedy I have ever seen.

Mr. Speaker, could the Members of the House have gone with me to South Dakota, Nebraska, and northwestern Iowa and witnessed the scenes of devastation I have witnessed there I am sure they would dismiss their sentiment of levity and turn to a desire to do something to avert further tragedy.

I had hoped that my people-and I speak correctly when I say my people—I had hoped that my people of the Southland in their splendid usual sympathy for humanity would come to the rescue of our people up there in time of need. Always I shall bless the name of Buchanan, of Texas-a true Texan in the best sense of the term. His love for humanity is his guiding star, and neither his known devotion to his committee chairman nor his loyalty to an "economy" program could swerve him away from the promptings of his good heart of sympathy with and for our distressed people in the zones of the grasshopper scourge.

Oh, gentlemen, I plead for no other action on your part than that you take your eyes away from this shameful picture of comedy which some persons have thrown here before you and let your eyes rest upon the true picture of tragedy as a result of the devastation of our country out there by the grasshopper. If you will do that, I am sure you will vote this appropriation. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. Fuller].

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Speaker, I have seen grasshoppers carry away an entire crop.

They say the Secretary of Agriculture has said it is too late. If it is too late, then they are not going to use this

We have done less to help agriculture in the great needs confronting us than anything else in this country. I think it comes with the poorest of grace for a man who lives south of the Mason and Dixon line and who went through the drought like we did and came to Congress and asked for aid not to assist these farmers.

We appealed to the people of the United States and they came to our rescue through the Red Cross and otherwise. We have an opportunity to extend a helping hand to the farmers of the great Northwest, and we should not turn a deaf ear to them. [Applause.]

I think this relief should be granted, and I would be ashamed of the Democracy of the South if it were to let politics enter into a grave concern like this. If it is not necessary and the Secretary of Agriculture says it is not necessary, then he is not going to expend this money. I join in the sentiment that Secretary Hyde is not very friendly to agriculture. I think it would be poor policy for this Congress, when they have an opportunity to render relief to these people, not to vote funds to take care of the scourge that is upon them. We may say in a jocular way that possibly this scourge has been sent upon them because they have been voting the Republican ticket, but, notwithstanding that, I know that that great country on all matters of relief has stood with this side of the House, and it is nothing more than right and proper that we ought to assist them and reciprocate by giving this needed relief to the agriculture of the great Northwest. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KVALE].

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Speaker, I hope the House will listen to this plea.

If the Members of the House could go into the infested territory and see these hordes of hoppers eating everything which is green, even to the trees; if they could see every service station carry a broom as standard equipment to sweep the hoppers out of the radiators of automobiles; could see the ruin that is wrought in pasturage and in growing crops; if the Members of the House could envision the loss the Government itself sustains by virtue of the fact it has invested millions of dollars in these farmers in loans to raise crops and purchase seed, I think it would at once become evident that this comparatively paltry sum of $750,000 is but a good investment to protect what already it has invested in this country for the restoration, in a small way, of agriculture.

Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of Agriculture has stated that this fund comes too late. Entomologists, agriculturists, and experts have given us testimony ample to prove the fact that this fund does not come too late. It comes too late to be fully effective, but not too late to be partially effective, and we must have it. I ask the House to approve this item.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Montana [Mr. LEAVITT].

Mr. LEAVITT. Mr. Speaker, in various parts of the northwestern country there has been not only one year but in some cases two or three years of continued drought. One of the results of this continued drought has been the threat of a grasshopper infestation this year such as has scarcely been known in the past. We now have the promise of crops in some of the sections that have been dried out, that have been so thoroughly dried out that it was necessary for the Red Cross to go in and take care of the people. But as a result of this drought there comes now this grasshopper infestation.

Regardless of what is said by the Secretary of Agriculture, in many of these sections it is not too late to do a great deal of good in controlling this infestation. It is true that it can not be done as effectively now as it could have been done a month ago, but we are not asking for the amount of money that was asked for a month ago. The amendment now before the House reduces the request to $750,000, recognizing that through dilatory tactics here we have let much of the time go by.

Do not say to me that this bill was before the House and that it has been voted down. It was brought before the House, Mr. Speaker, under a suspension of the rules, and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Byrns] opposed the granting of a second and cut off all debate. So there was no opportunity to discuss the matter. It was one of the most unfair things that has been done in this House since I have been a Member of it. I never saw it done before. In order to prevent us from presenting this case, the gentleman opposed the granting of a second, and it was not possible to present the matter.

Mr. BYRNS. The gentleman will admit that I could not have done that unless a majority of the House had joined with me.

Mr. LEAVITT. They did that through ignorance, as a result of the gentleman's tactics, not knowing what was the situation.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Christgau].

Mr. CHRISTGAU. Mr. Chairman, I believe in that old saying that an ounce of prevention is better than a pound of cure. I was out in Minnesota last week and personally observed the grasshopper situation there. I also discussed it with the State entomologist, a specialist in insect control work, and he advised me that 50 counties of the State were organized to fight the pest. He emphasized the fact that there will be a great many more people in great need next winter than there were last winter if a widespread destruction of farm crops by grasshoppers is not prevented.

The executive council of the State of Minnesota has provided $50,000 to take care of the immediate emergency. The State entomologist told me that that amount would not take care of one-fifth of the expense of combating the pest in the State of Minnesota. Under ordinary circumstances we would not be here pleading for assistance. But after 10 years of adversity in the agricultural industry the farmers everywhere, and especially those in the grasshopper-infested regions, are now in great financial distress. Unfortunately, they can not combat this destructive foe alone and unassisted. We ought not expect them to do it. The Congress of the United States certainly ought to provide this small amount for relief, especially when all concerned have demonstrated a desire to cooperate. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, out in the Northwest we feel that the grasshopper plague is much more of a Federal problem than much of the insect-control work for which Congress has so generously appropriated in the past. Mistakes that may have been made in the past should not prevent us from doing the right thing in this emergency.

Minnesota spent about $27,000 in fighting the grasshoppers last year. The State entomologist estimated that for every dollar spent for poisoned bran bait $100 worth of crops were saved. The thousands of acres of crops that were destroyed in the infested States last year should be sufficient testimony to overcome the partisanship and sectionalism that have delayed favorable action on this appropriation thus far.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Strong].

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I hate to disagree with my own Secretary of Agriculture, but I happen to have had a little experience in the middle of last summer with grasshoppers, and I know it is not too late to stop the terrible plague of grasshoppers and much of the damage they do.

I went out to my own farm in the middle of last summer, and my nephew told me that the grasshoppers were entering our alfalfa and had just come into the corner of a 70-acre field. He sent to the county agent, got the poison, mixed up the ration of bran and molasses and poison, spread it over the acre and a half involved and ahead of the advancing line of hoppers, and stopped them from going farther into that field. I know it is not too late to do much to relieve farmers from much of the damage grasshoppers do.

This House has voted for practically everything of this kind. We voted for funds to destroy the Mediterranean fruit fly; we voted for funds to destroy the Texas cattle tick; we voted for funds to prevent the spread of the boll weevil; we have voted for funds for practically every request to eradicate pests that have come to any part of this country, and now they are asking for this relief in the States now afflicted by grasshoppers. My State has not been very much afflicted as yet, but I know if they keep on increasing in Nebraska and in the Dakotas they are coming into the other States, and I think the small amount that is now asked for ought to be appropriated in order to stop this pest of grasshoppers that is absolutely eating up the sustenance of the people in the States asking for this relief.

I hope you men will be generous enough to grant the States afflicted this small amount of money to help them out in this emergency. [Applause.]

in this emergency. [Applause.]

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. Johnson].

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I think one question with reference to this appropriation has not been brought out, which is the fact that it is really good business for the Government to protect the investment which it has. I know that to the man who lives in the city or who lives in a part of the country where there are no grasshoppers and who has never seen what a horde of them can do, this whole business looks silly. It must look as silly to a man from the South or from New England as the appropriation for the eradication of the boll weevil, for instance, looked to me when I came here, and yet we of the Northwest joined with the men from the South for that appropriation Anyone who knows anything about Biblical history knows what a horde of grasshoppers can do. In 1931, in South Dakota, in 23 counties there was no more crop raised than there was grown on this floor of the House in that year.

Mr. GREEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. For a short question.

Mr. GREEN. I have followed pretty well the statement of the gentleman, and my sympathies are all with him. We had a similar thing in my State, where insects destroyed our groves and our fruit. The gentleman from Nebraska and others on that side of the aisle are standing obstacles in the way of remunerating us for the damage done by the Mediterranean fruit fly.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. My sympathies are with the gentleman.

Now, the real fact is that this Government has loaned $22,000,000 to the farmers in this area for the crops this year. If the grasshoppers are allowed to destroy the crops, there will be no crops, and the Government can not recover the $22,000,000 of the investment that it has made. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. Burtness].

Mr. BURTNESS. Mr. Speaker, I want to put this matter up to you as a business proposition, and as one entitled to fair treatment on the part of the membership of the House generally.

The Government in many of the States menaced by grass-hoppers is in exactly the same position as a local banker would be holding liens upon the crops in that territory, for the Government holds mortgages on the growing crops in an amount of almost the total value of such crops, assuming normal yields, at the prices now existing, deducting, first, the cash expenditures that must be paid out for harvesting, threshing, and marketing the crops.

already $36,000,000 invested in such crops, what would you do if a scourge of grasshoppers was upon you, and the scientists of the country advised and practical experience showed that with the expenditure of a modest amount of money the greater portion of those crops could be saved?

There is no question as to what you would do-you would advance the money in order to safeguard your investment. That is the business proposition before this House to-day, and the chairman of the Appropriations Committee and others can prate about economy, but the economical thing for the Government Treasury to do is to step in and help save the crops, and thus help to insure the repayment of the loans already made by the Government, secured by crop

You now talk about more money that has to be loaned to the States in this country to relieve distress. How much more money will have to be loaned to the eight States that are seriously affected now if their crops are going to be destroyed by the grasshoppers? Why save a dime now and pay out a dollar or more later?

Reference has been made to a letter from the Secretary of Agriculture, claiming it is now too late to do any good, but I would rather take the word of the entomologists of our agricultural colleges and of our farmers and responsible officials than the word of the Secretary of Agriculture on that question. Demands for assistance are reaching us every day. The hoppers are just now hatching out in my

Let me tell you this-I have personally poisoned grasshoppers to save growing, maturing crops of flax as late as in August. Only now the last of the sugar beets are coming out of the ground in our country. Young grasshoppers are beginning to eat them. The beet acreage is relatively small in area, but sugar beets constitute the one crop as to which, under present prices, the farmers hope to get the cost of production.

This is a crop that can be saved by poisoning, not once or twice but time and again, until the beets mature in the fall. From my own personal and practical experience I know that this appropriation will still help a great deal, although I admit that it will not result in as effective work as if it had become available a few weeks ago. We can not hope to kill all the grasshoppers or to save 100 per cent of the crops. But do help us to minimize the terrible hazard confronting us. If we save half a crop, that is better than to save none. When the department finds expenditures will be wasted for being too late the money will not be spent. In the meantime much good will be accomplished.

I am surprised to hear a man like my good friend from Texas [Mr. Blanton] get up here and oppose this. Of course, he was afraid to yield to us for questions because he knew if he yielded attention would be called to the fact that the Government has expended during the last 25 years a total of almost $12,000,000 to eradicate tick in cattle, causing a fever known by the name of his own State, the Texas fever, for which annual appropriations are now about $450,000. He knows also that the Government in recent years had expended a total of more than $13,000,000 in the eradication of the pink bollworm for the protection of the cotton crop. So much for the South. You people of the East from this territory know that millions of dollars have likewise been expended in connection with the eradication of the gypsy moth and the Japanese beetle and other pests. We appeal also to the corn States, where the Government has spent $18,000,000 during the last 12 years to eradicate the corn borer. We are asking in our emergency to be treated only as fairly as you have been treated.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SIMMONS].

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. Speaker, last February the President of the United States sent to the Congress a request for $1,450,000 with which the Secretary of Agriculture might fight an anticipated, and a now actually realized, invasion of grasshoppers. Due to one situation and another we have been prevented in the House from considering that item.

Now, if you were that banker holding those liens and had | The proposal now before the House is not to appropriate $1,450,000 that the President asked for, but to appropriate $750,000 in order to meet the situation as it now exists. It is true that the Secretary of Agriculture has said that if this money is appropriated now an "effective" control campaign can not be carried on, but it does not mean for one minute that work can not be done that will check in part the ravages of these pests that now infest some 12 States in the great Northwest region, States that are in need of aid. The saddest news that has gone out to those people from this Congress was that news that went out of here about a month ago when the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Byrns] blocked even a discussion of this item on the floor of this House, and those people were told that the Federal Government would give them no aid. They have used their own funds, they have pledged the credit of counties and cities and States to get all of the money they can, and they are asking now in the fight that will go on in the grasshopper regions from now until the frost next fall that the Federal Government come along and do what it can. That is the situation. Had we had this money two months ago, more effective work could have been done then than now. Had we had it two months ago, we could have done more work with less money than now, but effective work can be done now, and every man who lives in the grasshopperinfested region knows that it can be done. It is a Federal problem. South Dakota and Nebraska both have the same infestations sweeping across parts of our States.

I know what is going to happen. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS], the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, is going to get up and plead for economy. He sat on the floor of this House and never raised his voice in protest, did not even vote against the bill, when the Congress authorized $130,000,000 to build roads. He supported the proposal the other day to fasten a $200,000,000 charge on the Treasury in order that we might buy land down in the Mississippi flood region. He voted the other day for $2,-300,000,000 in the Garner bill, and now in the name of economy he comes in and says that the President's Budget should not give aid to these people.

Oh, it is a fine thing, after he has blocked the consideration in this House of this matter, when by every means he. more than anybody else, is responsible for the delay and the prevention of action on the part of the Congress, to now come before you and plead and sob for our grasshopper people and say it is too late. The responsibility in this House for the delay in the consideration of this appropriation rests with the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Byrns], and he has voted more charges on the Federal Treasury this Congress than practically any other Member in this body. The Secretary of Agriculture did not reach the conclusion that it was too late for "effective control" until the gentleman from Tennessee blocked consideration of this bill a month ago. The gentleman hides now behind the results of his own actions.

We almost had an explosion the other day, and that was the time when the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] voted in favor of the Garner bill and the news of it went to Texas, and the telegram from Houston came back telling him to vote against it. Yesterday and to-day he has been trying to put into the Congressional Record evidence that the Garner bill is a fine thing for the country. Tom, if your speeches ever come together in Texas, there will be an explosion down there that will shake the whole Southwest.

Mr. BLANTON rose.

Mr. SIMMONS. No; I can not yield; the gentleman would not yield to me. And what will you say when you get back to your Texas farmers, for whom we have given every help Texas has ever asked?

Mr. BLANTON. And every bit of it has been wasted. The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Nebraska has expired.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members who have spoken on this matter have five legislative days within which to extend their remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? There was no objection.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 12½ minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Byrns].

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, it is not a pleasant thing to oppose an appropriation in which some of your colleagues are interested. I have never gotten to the point where it is a pleasure for me to oppose anything that some of my colleagues want. You may think otherwise from my actions, because I have almost been in a state of constant opposition and eruption since this Congress started. But let us talk about this matter; let us see whether or not we ought to vote this $750,000 upon the people, upon your Treasury and mine. It seems to me that the Secretary of Agriculture has already answered that question for you and for me.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. BYRNS. Please let me get through, and then I shall yield in a few minutes. I do not want my line of argument disturbed. I want to be courteous, and I shall yield to the gentleman directly.

The Secretary of Agriculture is to administer this fund. He is the man who will take charge of it and who will have to administer it. What does he say? He says it is too late to do any good, and his letter is in the Record. He says that the time is past when the expenditure of this money will exercise any effective control; and yet gentlemen for whom I have the highest regard and admiration, representing their districts and wanting some of this money spent in their districts, tell you that they know more about it than the Secretary of Agriculture. You and I are representing the people of the United States. We balanced the Budget, so the President told us.

Mr. PITTENGER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS. I can not yield now.

Now, they want us to unbalance the Budget to the extent of $750,000, merely because two or three clever gentlemen from the West ask us to do it, in face of the fact that the Secretary of Agriculture tells us we ought not to do it.

Gentlemen have talked about the boll weevil. They talk about matters in the South and elsewhere. There is no politics in this; not a bit. It is said that nearly every dollar you appropriated down in Florida was wasted, but is that any excuse for wasting more money? We have had some examples. Let us quit. Let us stop. Let us think about the people back home. This House has voted on this matter once or twice. It came up on a motion to suspend the rules. The gentleman said it was unfair because I refused to agree to unanimous consent for a second to be ordered. That has been done many times. I was only exercising my right under the rules. There was not a line of debate, of course, but a majority of this House, an overwhelming majority, passed between the tellers on that occasion and refused a second, without any debate either pro or con. You voted on it. How many times are you going to have this matter considered? I was told by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. Simmons] as far back as last March when he asked me to bring in a special resolution, that if they did not get the money immediately it would not be of any avail. Here it is the middle of June. It will take two or three or four weeks for the Secretary of Agriculture to get his material and make application of the funds. He says in his letter, which has been read from the desk, that on May 18 he considered the matter closed and he wrote to the governors and other public officials there and told them that the matter was closed and that they should take steps locally to look after it.

Now, what does the Secretary of Agriculture say? If you are not going to follow the Secretary of Agriculture on a matter of this sort, if we are going to say that he does not know anything about it and somebody else does, then you had better tell the President of the United States to get another Secretary. This is what he tells you:

The essential features of any control campaign against grass-hoppers is to poison the young locusts as they first emerge from the egg bed, and before they have any opportunity to migrate from such areas into the fields. The grasshoppers have now hatched in practically all parts of the areas where heavy infesta-tations were anticipated, and a large portion of it has been moved from the hatching areas. Since this dispersion has taken place and because of the delays incident to the organization of the Federal campaign and the securing of the necessary supplies and materials, the opportunity for effective control under Federal direction is now lost.

In the face of that, are you going to vote to take $750,000 out of the Treasury? I do not believe it. I am sure you are not going to do it. It is not any pleasure for me to stand here and fight this proposition, but you and I have duties that we owe to the people and to the Treasury. Certainly, when we have a great deficit, certainly when next week you will be called upon to reduce the salaries of everybody who works for the Government, including your own, certainly when our condition is such that we have to resort to that, you are not going to vote $750,000 out of the Treasury to be administered by the Secretary of Agriculture who tells you it is too late for him to do any good with it.

Mr. GLOVER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS. I am sorry, but I do not have time. Mr. LEAVITT. Will the gentleman yield to me? Mr. BYRNS. I only have a few minutes. I am sorry.

Now, as the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. Simmons] has said, I have talked many times with reference to economy. I am not any more anxious that we should exercise economy than you gentlemen. I want to say to this House, as I showed day before yesterday in some tables which I submitted for the RECORD, that the House has made one of the most remarkable records ever made by any House of Representatives in the history of the country, in so far as reduction of expenditures is concerned. I said then and I say now, credit is due to the gentlemen on both sides of the aisle, but we are not going to maintain that record if here to-day, without rhyme or reason, in spite of what the Secretary of Agriculture has said, we vote $750,000 out of the Treasury of the United States. If we start that sort of business, where is this balanced Budget that some of you thought was so important? Many of you thought it was more important than I did at the time, but if you are going to balance the Budget, let us keep the Budget balanced.

My friend from Arkansas said that if it was not needed it would not be used, but you add to the charge upon the Treasury when you make the appropriation. You must make provision for it in the Budget. So that is no reason for making the appropriation.

I beg this House, in the interest of economy, to vote down this motion, and let us dispose of it.

Now, my friend, the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. Simmons] is a very wise man. Let me tell you a little secret.

He knows the Secretary of Agriculture is correct; and he knows that if this item is put in the bill this year that next year they will be asking for $10,000,000. It will be as it was with reference to many other appropriations—put the nose of the camel under the tent and you will be asked to make it ten times as much the next year, and you will be 50 years, probably, getting rid of it, as is true of a number of useless appropriations carried in this agricultural appropriation bill. There is no bill which is reported to the House—and I say this as a friend of agriculture—that has more useless appropriations in it and more appropriations that should have been dropped out years ago than this very agricultural bill. Let us not add another one to it. [Applause.]

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks, and in that extension I want to place an analysis of this bill as compared with last year's appropriation, as the House passed the bill, as it passed the Senate, and the effect of the conference report on it. I shall then move the previous question.

Mr. JONES. As to amendment 76, I want to be sure it is understood that the $10,000,000 is a revolving fund and that the proviso has no reference to the $10,000,000.

Mr. BUCHANAN. It is the understanding of both the Senate and the House conferees that the $10,000,000 for the livestock and agricultural credit association is a permanent revolving fund.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the preferential motion of the gentleman from Nebraska to recede and concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. SIMMONS and Mr. Howard) there were-ayes 71, noes 60.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 124, nays 215; not voting 92, as follows:

The motion was agreed to.

REPRESENTATIVE BUCHANAN

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I shall not object, I am compelled to leave the city this afternoon on some business to which I have been elected by the people of the State, and would like to discuss for five minutes some legislation coming up next week, and I would like to join in the request of the gentleman from Tennessee and ask that I be allowed to proceed out of order for seven minutes, because I can not be here the first part of next week.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman from South Dakota tell us what he is going to talk on? Is it on the bonus?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Yes.

Mr. CONNERY. I shall not object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate this courtesy very much. You have been compelled to listen to me so many times when I had the right to take the floor that it is exceedingly gracious of you to permit me to proceed by unanimous consent on this occasion.

We have now practically finished consideration of the agricultural appropriation bill. There are some amendments which are still in dispute, but I think it is the understanding of the conferees that it will not be necessary to bring this bill again to the House for its consideration. Since this is true I have felt that it is not only entirely proper but that it is appropriate that I should say a few words of tribute to the great work and the splendid service the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Buchanan], the chairman of the subcommittee having charge of this bill, has performed during this and preceding sessions. [Applause.]

I have served on the Committee on Appropriations with the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Buchanan] for many years. I have had every opportunity in the committee room, as well as upon the floor of the House, to realize his ability and to know something of the careful, close scrutiny which he has given every proposal for an appropriation, the work he has done, and the great service he has rendered not only to the people of his district but the people of the entire Nation. There is not a Member of Congress on either side of this Chamber who has rendered greater service in his own quiet but effective way than our good friend from Texas [Mr. BUCHANANI

It is impossible to estimate just how much money he has, by his own individual efforts, saved the people of the United States, particularly during this session. But it will amount into the millions. He has sat in the committee, participating in the hearings, and then when we have come to mark up the bill we have always found my friend from Texas present with one idea, principally, in his mind, and that is to serve the people of this country by conserving their money just as much as it is possible to do so, consistent with proper functioning of our Government.

You know I sometimes wonder whether those back home fully appreciate a service such as he has rendered. I sometimes wonder if they do not think that our service is to be measured simply by what is said upon the floor and what they read in the newspapers. They do not always appreciate the fact that the membership of this House has committee work and that the real, effective service that is performed by every Member of the House is really rendered in committee, behind closed doors and away from all the glamor of publicity. I am pleased to stand here and pay this just tribute to the great worth and services of the gentleman from Texas at the conclusion of the consideration of this great appropriation bill, which was proposed by the subcommittee of which he is chairman. Mr. Buchanan has served on that subcommittee for many years. No one understands the agricultural appropriation bill so well as he does, or is more familiar and sympathetic with agricultural problems. The farmers never had a better friend in Congress. [Ap-

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nebraska?

There was no objection.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. Speaker, after the smoke of battle is cleared away, it is a pleasure to get this five minutes from the House in order to express my complete accord with the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Byrns] in the tribute he paid to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Buchanan]. [Applause.1

The gentleman from Tennessee spoke as a Democrat, praising the work of a Democrat. I now speak as a Republican, giving that same praise to a Democratic Member of this House. I do not know how many years he has served on the subcommittee handling the agricultural appropriation bill, but for two years I was there with him, under the chairmanship of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. Dickinson]. This year I have been on that committee under the chairmanship of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Buchanan]. He has been fair, he has been honest, he has been industrious, he has been loyal to the agricultural interests of the people in this Union. The agricultural interests of the United States need Mr. Buchanan. It is unthinkable to me that there should be any possibility that his people in the State of Texas would make the mistake of supplanting his services in this body. We need him here for many years yet to come. [Applause.]

Mr. WOODRUM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIMMONS. I yield. Mr. WOODRUM. I would like to say, as a member of the Appropriations Committee of the House, that I heartily concur in everything the gentleman from Tennessee and the gentleman from Nebraska have said as to the splendid services of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Buchanan]. [Applause.]

Mr. PURNELL. Will the gentleman from Nebraska yield?

Mr. SIMMONS. I will be glad to.
Mr. PURNELL. I want to interrupt the gentleman long enough to say that, as a member of the Committee on Agriculture for many years, I have had many opportunities to know of the faithful services of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Buchanan]. I want to join in this tribute to this faithful friend of American agriculture. [Applause.]

Mr. SIMMONS. I think I may say that on both sides of the House we wish for the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BUCHANAN] in the years yet ahead a long, faithful, and continued service in this Congress in the interest of American agriculture. [Applause.]

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes on the splendid services of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Buchanan].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, when I was a young man I had occasion to live for seven years in one county situated in Judge Buchanan's district. I have many relatives there. I am well acquainted with the people there. I know that the people in that county already know of his sterling worth and ability, and that they have the highest regard and respect for him.

When I was a young man I hunted many times in his home county of Washington and around his home city of Brenham. I camped on the old Yegua Creek many times and picked muscadine grapes from the vines that intertwined the trees along its banks. I have killed deer there on many happy occasions. I know many of the people of Washington County and in the city of Brenham, Tex., where I once played off a tennis tournament when I was a college student. They are all splendid people, and I know that they appreciate already, regardless of what is said here, the valuable service of their Congressman, and realize that no new man could fill his place here to any advantage of the people.

I have friends scattered all over Williamson County, in Taylor, and in Georgetown, and I want to ask every friend I have in all of these counties to give him their hearty support and to vote to send Judge Buchanan back here. His absence here would be a distinct loss, not only to his district but to the State of Texas and to the Nation. [Applause.]

I serve with Judge Buchanan on the Committee on Appropriations, and I know of the hard work he performs there.

We need his services here, and we use this moment to publicly testify concerning his loyal, faithful, valuable work for the people of this country. [Applause.]

SOLDIERS' BONUS

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I am compelled to leave the city, and I ask unanimous consent to proceed out of order for six minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Reserving the right to object—and I shall not object to the request of the gentleman from South Dakota, under the circumstances he has stated. But we are extremely anxious to finish another conference report and to make such headway in the further consideration of the home loan bank bill that I shall object to any request for time after this.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I have procured this extra minute of time, making in all my request six minutes, instead of five, because I would not wish to be present in the House when a really great Member of Congress, Mr. Buchanan, of Texas, was being discussed without joining in some statement concerning him. For 17 years I have served in this House with him. He is fearless, courageous, and we on the Republican side are glad to be with him, and we are proud to say that we respect his judgment and his integrity. [Applause] and his integrity. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I did not rise to discuss Mr. Buchanan, as much as I like him. I shall be compelled to go to Chicago to the National Republican Convention and will not be able to be here on Monday next when the bill for the full payment of adjusted compensation comes before the House. I am paired with the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. Hastings], who would have been here, if it were necessary, so that no vote is lost either way. I would not want to leave the city, however, without expressing myself distinctly and clearly upon the question of the payment of the bonus.

These veterans are here, and there are some great soldiers among them-I know many of them-and there are some who are not great soldiers, but they are like the mine run of any group of men that you will find, in Congress or anywhere else. They certainly have the right of petition guaranteed to them in the Constitution, and I think they have always the right to exercise it, but sometimes they do not realize that their distress is just the same as the distress of every other group in the United States, including the 30,000,000 boys and girls who have become of age in this country since the World War. I do not believe some of them realize, and they ought to be told this distinctly, that this bill will not be a law. I told them that on the radio over two different broadcasting chains some two months ago, and I think every person in this body who has had any experience knows it. That bill will not be enacted, and therefore it is unjust to them that they should be here when there is no chance of it. There is no use of bunking the service men. They are just as smart as any other person, and smarter than many. It is a shame that this march or migration has happened to this country, because 1 suicide has come from this migration, 8 or 10 deaths have come from it, and 25 or 30 men are in the hospital as the result of bad automobile injury. The danger is that because of this migration there will be disease and pestilence over this part of the United States. If this group | be kept.

of men, half an army division, in war time, had been gathered together we would need a large base hospital and many doctors and nurses to take care of them.

Eventually they must be taken care of. They ought to know that it is foolish to be here, and they ought not to take the chance of their own health and the chance of injury to the health of the people of the country when they can go home to their own States and when the Government, in my judgment, would transport them to their own States, where, under the provisions of the $300,000,000 reconstruction finance relief bill in their own States, on the action of their own governors, they can secure the food they need just the same as every other citizen in the United States can secure necessary food. I believe in the service men's preference. It is a rule in this country and in all countries, but that preference does not mean that one group must be picked out and exclude all the others, no matter how good that group is. When this help for distress comes, it must come to the old, who could not be in the war; it must come to those who were physically disabled and could not be in the war; and it must come to these 30,000,000 of young people who have come of age since the World War; and no group-Catholic, Protestant, Gentile, Hebrew, jewelry or hardware men, lawyers or service men-is going to be selected for a straight-out cash gratuity. That is all that the adjusted compensation is, because the adjusted compensation is not due under the law that was passed.

I have been its friend. In 1922 I drew the Republican caucus call and got the 50 signatures necessary to have the caucus and was defeated. In 1923 I drew it up again, and was one of the first four who signed it with Everett Sanders, Bert Vestal, and FRED PURNELL, and others. We were defeated again. I drew it up again in 1924, and we passed this bonus bill over the opposition of many people, and passed it as an adjusted compensation, and the promise was made at that time that full payment would not be requested until due. I know many men do not know this, but if they will read the certificate itself, they will see that the certificate is not due; and a donation will not be made by this Congress unless a donation is made to every class and group in the United States. I know we have a lot of exhibitionists in the United States who have dragged these men in here. One great organization of which at one time I was national judge advocate general, the Veterans of Foreign Wars, is partially responsible for this migration. They are not trying to move them out, but they helped to get them in. When this petition was filed on the floor of this House that helped bring them in here, and the men who started that have their share of responsibility.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Yes.

Mr. CONNERY. The gentleman made one point that I would like to bring out. Did the gentlemen say they promised they would not ask for this? Who promised?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. The people who secured the passage of that law.

Mr. CONNERY. Those men did not have the right to promise for 4,000,000 other men in the United States.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from South Dakota has expired.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes more in which to answer the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I have great respect for the gentleman from Massachusetts and for his military record. We secured the passage of that bill after a 5-year fight. We who secured its passage before the gentleman came to Congress were compelled to make that promise.

Mr. CONNERY. Oh, no. The first bonus bill was passed during my first term in Congress.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. And we had to make promises in order to secure it, and promises made ought to be kept.

If this group of men does not go home, this is going to be the hottest part of the United States. Medical facilities The people who come from the Northwest and the northern part of the country are taking their lives in their hands. In addition to the suicide, in addition to the dozens of deaths, in addition to the 25 people who have been injured and those who are now sick, there will be man after man who will die because of the hot weather that comes Therefore we ought to quickly secure this vote. We ought to do what is going to be done anyway; see that the vote is taken. The bill will be defeated. The bill will not be enacted into law; and then, as good citizens, those men can be given their transportation home where they can secure from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation by the action of the governors of their own States the same relief that will be given to every individual in the United

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. If they do not do that, they are taking upon themselves a responsibility that I do not want, and I absolve myself from any responsibility for suicides, deaths, or pestilence, and I do want them to know the truth.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from South Dakota has again expired.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman have one additional minute to answer my question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I yield.

Mr. BLANTON. Does the gentleman not believe that the soldiers who carried that flag to France and brought it home with victory have just as much right to come to Washington and stay here as long as they want to as do the pampered, slick-bellied lobbyists who are sometimes entertained in the White House? [Applause.]

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. They certainly have, and if the alleged pampered, big-bellied lobbyists, to whom the gentleman refers, would come to Washington in groups of 10,000 after a bill had been defeated, the enactment of which they could not secure, and run the risk of their own lives and endanger the lives of everyone else around this section of the country, I think they ought to be told that they ought to go home. [Applause.]

Mr. BLANTON. Well, I am here to tell our ex-service men that they have a right to come here and to stay here just as long as they want to, for it is the Capital of all Americans.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from South Dakota has again expired.

> JOHN N. SANDLIN, Louis Luplow. GUY U. HARDY, Managers on the part of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the conference report.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, do I understand a motion has been made to adopt the conference report? May I ask, Is that limited to the legislative bill alone or to the entire conference report?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The amendments with reference to the economy portion of the bill are still in dis-

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I desire to offer a motion to instruct the conferees with an amendment.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is not in order at this time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Such motion is not in order at the present time.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Will the gentleman yield me some

Mr. SANDLIN. Does the gentleman desire some time?

Mr. RAMSEYER. I would like to have some time.

Mr. SANDLIN. How much?

Mr. RAMSEYER. Five or ten minutes.

Mr. BYRNS. Would not the gentleman agree to adopting the report, which pertains only to the legislative provisions, and then have discussion on the amendments?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. That is satisfactory. Mr. RAMSEYER. That is, the motion is to adopt the report, which will adopt the part agreed on—the legislative appropriation, and Part II is in disagreement, and that will be up for discussion? Is that correct?

Mr. SANDLIN. Yes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

Mr. SANDLIN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to make this statement: Part I of the legislative appropriation bill, which makes appropriations for the next fiscal year and was prepared by a subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations, has been completed. The conference report on the disagreeing items has been accepted by the House. There were 45 amendments involved. Part II, the economy portion, has 123 amendments, which are reported here in disagreement and still remain to be settled.

This procedure may be a little unusual, but the placing of this economy bill as a rider on the legislative appropriation bill was also unusual. It was one not sought by the members of the Appropriation Subcommittee. Mr. Speaker, I am going to ask that when a further conference is held on the economy part of this bill, and one likely will be held, that the conferees be selected from the Special Economy Committee which prepared the economy bill. I think that is fair to the House, fair to the Economy Committee, and fair to the legislative subcommittee of the Appropriations Committee. I therefore make that request.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will appoint conferees at the proper time.

Mr. SANDLIN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House further insist on its disagreement to Senate amendments 46 to 168, inclusive, to Part II of the bill (H. R. 11267), and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

Mr. RAMSEYER. And upon that will the gentleman yield me some time?

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman five minutes.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Will the gentleman not yield me 10 minutes, because I want some understanding about this economy proposition?

Mr. McDUFFIE. I had hoped we might go back into conference and do some work this afternoon.

Mr. RAMSEYER. The House has a right to know the status of the economy provisions and know what the present status is. They will know better what to expect when it comes back. The gentleman knows that I do not waste a great deal of time on the floor of the House.

There are some matters here that I think the House ought to know about.

Mr. McDUFFIE. If the gentleman thinks the House is uninformed as to the details of what the Senate did, I yield him 10 minutes.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Mr. Speaker, I do not want to delay the House in the consideration of important business, but I do not know of anything more important than the economy provisions of this bill, and I should like to have the attention of the chairman of the Economy Committee, because I intend to ask him some questions.

The chairman of the legislative subcommittee has already told you that the economy bill was attached to the legislative appropriation bill. The legislative appropriation bill (H. R. 11267) consists of Part I, which carries for the next fiscal year the appropriations for the legislative branch of the Government, and Part II, the economy bill reported by the Economy Committee.

We finished consideration of the economy bill on May 3 in the House of Representatives. One of the most controverted provisions of that bill was in regard to Federal salaries. There were two plans presented. One was the paycut plan, as sponsored by the chairman of the Economy Committee, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. McDuffie], and the other was the furlough plan, which was sponsored by me.

As it passed the House we had a greatly modified paycut plan. The original pay-cut plan would have saved $67,000,000. It was reduced to $9,000,000. The furlough plan was rejected. The furlough plan as originally presented to the House would have saved $83,000,000.

Now, this bill comes back from the Senate and has the furlough plan exactly as it was originally presented to the House by me. It begins on page 49. The exemption is $1,200 and the saving on Federal salaries would be the same as it was when I offered it—that is, $83,000,000.

Now, as to the status of the two plans. The conferees, of course, will have one of two plans to adopt, either the furlough plan that the Senate agreed to or some kind of a paycut plan.

There has been considerable debate in the Senate, the House, and throughout the country as to the merits of these two plans. More and more employees and heads of large labor organizations have come around to approve the furlough plan, and I would like to know from the chairman of the Economy Committee and others who are likely to be on the conference committee from the House whether it is their purpose to bring the bill back in order to give the House an opportunity to choose between the pay-cut plan and the furlough plan? If the conferees should agree on every item in the bill and come back with a completed conference report agreed to, the only way the House could get a separate vote would be by first voting down the conference report. Now, I should like to know how the chairman of the Economy Committee feels about that and whether he does not believe the House should have an opportunity to choose in case the conferees do not agree to the furlough plan? As the gentleman knows, the original bill contained some 10 or 11 titles. Several of the titles have been cut out and I think there are 7 or 8 left. Title I is the furlough plan. How does the gentleman feel on giving the House an opportunity to a separate vote on the furlough plan, provided, of course, the conferees should agree on the pay-cut

Mr. McDUFFIE. The gentleman knows very well how I feel about the furlough plan. I think the gentleman will admit that the savings under the furlough plan are highly speculative. No one will deny that.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Oh, Mr. Speaker, I deny that. The savings will be $83,000,000. There can be no question about that.

Mr. McDUFFIE. The gentleman from Iowa has asked me to express my opinion. I can not speak for all the conferees. The gentleman should not expect me to attempt to bind anybody, or even myself, before we go to conference and pass judgment as a conference on 122 amendments, including this one. I hope the gentleman will not press me to bind myself as to what might be done as to this particular amendment.

I want the House to express itself. The House did express itself nearly 2 to 1 against the furlough plan, and the gentleman knows that. But we will not go into that feature. I do not know what the conferees are going to do, because I have not seen some of them; and, as a matter of fact, I have not been appointed as a conferee.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Well, now, the gentleman knows he is going to be appointed as a conferee.

The action of the House, as the gentleman well knows, did not approve either the furlough plan or the pay-cut plan. The furlough plan was rejected, and the other plan was rejected almost 90 per cent.

I know the gentleman from Alabama prefers the pay-cut plan. I did not ask him which plan he prefers. I simply attempted to ask him whether he did not think that as a matter of right before the conference report was agreed to the House should be given an opportunity to express its choice as between the pay-cut plan on the one hand and the furlough plan on the other. That is all there was to my question. I am not asking the gentleman to bind even himself, but I should like to know whether he does not think that my request of the conferees that they give the House the opportunity to concur with the Senate amendment on the furlough plan is a fair request to make? That is all that is involved in my question.

Mr. MEAD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSEYER. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. MEAD. When the bill was discussed in the House, if I recall the record, the gentleman's plan, known as the furlough plan, was rejected by approximately the same vote as the pay-cut plan of the gentleman from Alabama was rejected. Therefore the Record now indicates that both the furlough plan and the pay-cut plan, as originally proposed, were rejected.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Yes.

Mr. MEAD. Now, it is only fair to the gentleman that if the original pay-cut plan should come back to us, that we have the same opportunity to express our views with regard to the gentleman's plan; but on the other hand, if the Senate plan comes to us, we probably would not have the same rights. If the conferees bring in the original pay-cut plan that was overwhelmingly defeated by the House, then the House ought to have another opportunity to express itself.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania and Mr. BLANTON rose.

Mr. RAMSEYER. I yield first to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I think the gentleman from Iowa is quite correct in stating it is highly important that we have a chance now to vote under changed conditions. A great many Members of the House, like myself, voted against the furlough plan because there was a $2,500 exemption as the alternative. If the conferees should come back with the bill as originally brought in by the House committee or as originally brought in by the Senate committee, we should certainly prefer the furlough plan to any such pay cut. I therefore hope the gentleman will get some assurance that when the conferees report, we will have that alternative before us for a vote in the House.

Mr. RAMSEYER. I want to state to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. McDuffie] that, so far as I am concerned, there will be no motions made by me to-day to instruct the conferees to agree to any of the Senate amendments, but I do want the gentleman to seriously consider, and favorably consider, my suggestion to give the House an opportunity to vote on the furlough plan if the conferees are disposed to recommend the pay-cut plan.

Mr. McDUFFIE. I shall certainly give the matter every consideration, and the gentleman knows that under the rules of the House we have a right to vote on every amendment that is brought in here.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Not if there is a complete agreement in conference unless we vote down the conference report first.

Mr. McDUFFIE. The gentleman knows—at least, I hope the gentleman knows—I would not be disposed to shut off any rights the House may have, even if I had such powers, and the gentleman is parliamentarian enough to know that I could not do it.

Mr. RAMSEYER. I appreciate the assurance which the gentleman from Alabama has given the House.

Mr. McDUFFIE. I am sure the gentleman understands my position, and I hope the gentleman will permit us to proceed.

Mr. RAMSEYER. I am through. I want the gentleman to know that there are a large number of Members of this House who will insist on an opportunity to vote for the furlough plan.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the motion of the gentleman from Louisiana.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the motion.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. That is hardly fair.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Louisiana that the House insist on its disagreement to Senate amendments numbered 46 to 168, inclusive, to Part II of the bill H. R. 11267, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair appoints the following conferees: Messrs. McDuffie, Douglas of Arizona, and Wood of Indiana.

FEDERAL-HOME LOAN BANKS

Mr. REILLY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 12280) to create Federal home-loan banks, to provide for the supervision thereof, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 12280), with Mr. Celler in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will report the pending amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendments proposed by Mr. Goldsborough:
Page 5, line 21, strike out all after the word "shall" down to line 5, page 6, and insert "on subjecting itself to such inspection and regulation as the board shall prescribe be eligible to become

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Chairman, the first thing I will have to do is to ask unanimous consent to modify that part of the amendment following the word "association" on page 5, line 16, which now reads, "or similar institutions," and substitute the language "savings and loan associations, cooperative banks, homestead associations, or savings banks." My reason for making the request is that some Members are afraid that the language "similar associations" might let in some organization not contemplated by the act. I ask unanimous consent that I may modify my amendment to that extent.

Mr. STAFFORD. Let the amendment be reported as modified.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 5, at the end of line 16, insert "savings and loan associations, cooperative banks, homestead associations, or savings banks."

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Chairman, unless there is objection, I shall make no further statement.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, this bill must be considered with all the care and caution of a banking bill. It is just that. We must be very careful in the amendments, because the committee has given a great deal of thought and study to it, and no amendment should be adopted which would open the door to any institution that is not controlled or supervised by the banking department of the State in which it is located.

I am glad the gentleman from Maryland has modified his original amendment. In my State it would have permitted finance corporations organized under the stock corporation law and not under the banking law. As now proposed, the provision would read, "Notwithstanding the provisions of clause 2 of subsection (a) of this section requiring inspection and regulation under law as a condition with respect to eligibility for membership any building-and-loan association, cooperative bank, homestead association, or savings bank which would be eligible to become a member of the Federal home-loan bank, except for the fact that it is not subject to inspection and regulation under the banking laws or similar laws of the States," etc.

I submit, gentlemen, that we should not permit membership of any association or institution which is not under the supervision of the banking department or the insurance department of the State in which it is created or doing business.

Mr. LUCE. May I ask the gentleman if "et cetera" is in there?

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Oh, no; I did not complete the quotation and I said "et cetera" to so indicate. It is not in the bill: of course not.

Now, these institutions may be included in any given State not under the supervision of State banking departments. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts agree to this amendment?

Mr. LUCE. I prefer the original text, but I suppose an explanation can be made by the gentleman from Maryland to justify it. But I do not share the apprehension of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. I am very apprehensive about it.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Yes.

Mr. GOSS. I notice lines 10 and 11, page 4, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. Goldsborough] excludes insurance companies, trust companies, or State banks. I am wondering if the gentleman has any idea why those were left out?

Mr. LaGUARDIA. In my State, for instance, insurance companies are under proper supervision. Insurance companies in my State may lend money on mortgages. They have behaved well. As far as New York State is concerned, they should not be included. Trust companies are under the supervision of the banking department. Now, savings banks in my State are savings banks in the real sense of the word. Savings banks in New York are not stock banks. They are not operated for profit. There are no shares. Surely as far as New York and New England are concerned, savings banks should be retained in this bill.

Mr. GOSS. Building and loan associations are also in many States.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. They ought to be in all States; and if they are not under supervision, they should not be admitted into an association of this kind, because it is a very delicate arrangement and one which must be well supervised. The funds must be under proper regulation, or it can readily be seen how any chain of institutions in a State could destroy the solvency of the whole association.

Mr. REILLY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Yes.

Mr. REILLY. The board has absolute supervision regarding what institutions shall come in. The board has the right to inspect them, and to provide for an inspection. There is absolutely no possibility of any shaky financial institution getting in under this bill.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. How about the right of visitation after they join the association?

Mr. REILLY. They have permission to fire them out.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. At any time?

Mr. REILLY. At any time.

subjecting them to such inspection and regulation as the board shall prescribe.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I am fearful lest the occasion should arise where the board would want to put out an institution from membership that it could resort to court proceeding and resist such expulsion.

Mr. REILLY. Oh, no.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I think the gentleman is correct.

I do feel that every possible safeguard should be written into the bill. Then I feel that the intent and purpose of the bill should be so clear as to leave no doubt that the individual home owner will get prompt and complete relief. As I see and construe this bill, its sole and main purpose is for the relief of the home owner. We want to free the home owner from the clutches of the loan shark. We want to eliminate bonuses on renewals. We want to eliminate commissions and exorbitant charges; we want to relieve the home owner from the curse of usury. Now, I hope before the bill leaves the house all of these purposes will be clearly contained in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I invite the close scrutiny of the Members to the bill as introduced and the devastating effect the proposed amendment will have to the whole theory of the bill as recommended by the committee. A mere reading of section 4 will show that it is the purpose of the framers of this bill to limit the membership to building and loan associations, savings and loan associations, cooperative banks, homestead associations, and others enumerated in the bill, and that they shall be eligible to become members, and so forth, if such institutions, first are duly organized under the laws of any State or of the United States; second, are subject to inspection and regulation under the banking laws or under similar laws of the State or of the United States; and, third, make such home-mortgage loans as in the judgment of the board are long-term loans. Then in clause (c) it provides that the membership may be extended only to institutions which have not been recognized by State charter or national law, loan associations which would become eligible to become members-except for the fact that it is not subject to inspection and regulation under the banking laws or similar laws of the State in which such association is organized (and which) shall for the period of 42 months after the enactment of this act be eligible to become a member of the Federal home-loan bank.

What is the idea of the framers of this law? It is predicated upon the idea that they will extend the privilege of membership to building and loan associations which are not organized under State law as provided for the period of 42 months. What is the wrecking amendment, the gutting amendment, if you will permit me to use that word, of the gentleman from Maryland? He would not only allow building and loan associations that have not been organized under State law, but he would extend it to all building and loan associations and all savings banks, cooperative banks, homestead associations, and savings banks which have not been organized under any law whatsoever, provided they have the approval of the home-loan bank board. You are going counter to the fundamental principles of the bill. The framers of this law wanted to extend the privilege of membership to building and loan associations in States without supervision, and they granted 42 months to bring them under State supervision. Now the gentleman wishes to change that requirement and say that every conceivable kind of this form of organization, regardless of whether organized under State or National law, shall have the benefit, regardless of time, provided they are approved by the board.

Mr. REILLY. The gentleman does not want to misrepresent the amendment. Savings and loan associations, cooperative associations, homestead associations, are all building and loan associations. They have different names in different States. This proposed amendment only permits, and it was designedly drawn to only permit, the building and loan associations to have the privilege of coming in

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. The amendment provides for | where they are not required to be inspected under special inspection of the board.

Mr. STAFFORD. But for the period of 42 months they are privileged to come in, and now you are changing that so as to allow them to come in carte blanche, subject to the regulation of the board itself, violative of the principles on which this section has been written.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Chairman, this apparent excitement is due entirely to misapprehension. It happens that in the State of Maryland and in the State of South Carolina, and those two States only, the banking commissioners do not have jurisdiction over the building and loan associations. This amendment allows the States of Maryland and South Carolina to get the benefit of the provisions of this act, and that is all it does.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield in that particular?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Just one moment, please, because I have not finished my statement.

As a matter of fact, they would be under the entire control of the board. It would be in the discretion of the board as to whether or not the Maryland and South Carolina organizations should come in at all; and if they were permitted to come in, they would be under the supervision and inspection and regulation of the board. So that there is no possibility of this amendment creating any difficulty in the operation of the act. I hope it will be amended.

Mr. LUCE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I yield.

Mr. LUCE. When this proposed change was submitted to me it read simply "building and loan associations." Can the gentleman say why it was thought wise to add the other institutions?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. There is no reason in the world. Mr. LUCE. Will the gentleman consent to withdraw the other language?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. If that will satisfy the gentleman from Wisconsin-

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, no. I am basing my opposition to the latter part.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Well, I do not yield for that

Mr. STAFFORD. Well, the gentleman was asking me.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I beg the gentleman's pardon. Will the gentleman proceed?

Mr. STAFFORD. I am basing my opposition to the second substitute part of the amendment, whereby these other organizations are allowed to have the privilege of running along carte blanche. The bill, as written, is that they shall have the benefits of this act for 42 months, until the legislatures may act to put them under State supervision.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I do not know what the action of the Legislature of Maryland might be, and it is not fair to say to the building and loan associations of Maryland that they shall be compelled to force the policy of Maryland contrary to what the State thinks it should be. They can not do that.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I yield.

Mr. STAFFORD. Does not the gentleman think it is the proper function of the National Government to say that these associations shall continue to have the benefit after 42 months, if they have State supervision, just like all other organizations have?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. They can not have State supervision, because there is no law in Maryland which grants State supervision.

Mr. STAFFORD. There should be the same law, just as in Wisconsin, where building and loan associations are under State supervision.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I know that is the situation in Wisconsin.

Mr. STAFFORD. No. I am not opposing this part which grants this privilege to building and loan associations, even if they do not have State supervision, for a period of 42 months, so as to compel them in that period to have State legislation that will bring them under State supervision.

Mr. LUCE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I yield.

Mr. LUCE. I will say that the gentleman, in perfecting his amendment, has aroused questions all over the country in the matter with reference to savings banks.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Does the gentleman suggest that we strike out savings banks?

Mr. LUCE. If the gentleman will confine himself to building and loan associations, I think he will so nearly meet the situation that he will escape criticism to a large degree

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I think the criticism is entirely captious and may be very unjust to the organizations in the State of Maryland which are doing exactly the same sort of business.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Maryland has expired.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOUSER. Will the gentleman yield for a question? Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I yield.

Mr. MOUSER. I would like to ask the gentleman if it is true that in Maryland there is no State law at the present time pertaining to the legal requirements and conditions that must be met to organize a building and loan association? In other words, does a building and loan association organize in Maryland as any private business, without any State supervision?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. It has to take out a charter, of course, but it has no supervision by the banking department.

Mr. MOUSER. In other words, there is no inspection of the accounts and books to determine whether they are operating their business in a way to safeguard the interests of the stockholders?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. No; but the board does that. Mr. MOUSER. Just along that line—I do not want to take the gentleman's time, because he is giving us some interesting information on the matter that he is advancing—but will it be possible for this board to exercise the necessary supervision to determine that the money which will be advanced by the Government will be safe?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. The supervision of the board will be absolute. It will be much more drastic, much more uniform, than the supervision of the Comptroller of Currency over the national banks.

Mr. MOUSER. I think all States should come in, but I do think we should put the proper safeguards there, to see that the loans are not made without the proper financial set-up.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. The building and loan associations can not come in unless the board decides that the set-up is proper, and they can not remain in unless the inspection by the board justifies the board in allowing them to remain.

Mr. MOUSER. How much liability does the stockholder of a building and loan association have in Maryland? Is it just the amount of the stock?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Yes. There is no double liability in Maryland.

Now, I hope this amendment will not be objected to. We are here on Saturday afternoon and a little excited.

Institutions which come within the purview of this amendment are only a part of the institutions which are eligible to come under the act. The amendment is necessary because the Legislature of the State of Maryland has not seen fit to put building and loan associations under the supervision of the banking department.

Now, I want to assure the gentlemen of the committee that this matter has been considered carefully by the full Banking and Currency Committee and has been considered.

carefully by the subcommittee and that there is absolutely no danger in it.

I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. McFADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I yield.

Mr. McFADDEN. I would like to ask the gentleman what supervision there is over building and loan associations in Maryland.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. None except the same supervision there is over all other corporations.

Mr. LUCE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I yield.

Mr. LUCE. Do I understand the gentleman is willing to strike out all except building and loan associations?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. No; I am willing to strike out savings banks if the gentleman wants them stricken out.

Mr. LUCE. Will the gentleman read the list again?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Yes; "building and loan association, savings and loan association, cooperative bank, homestead association, or savings bank."

Mr. LUCE. Are there any savings and loan associations in Maryland about which any question would be raised?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. No; as far as I know, there are not. I am not an expert in the building and loan business, and I do not live in Baltimore City. I do not want any of them that are entitled to come in left out. I am assured by the legislative expert and by the chairman of the subcommittee that this language "savings and loan association, cooperative bank, homestead association" is simply intended to cover occasions when that language is used instead of "building and loan associations." That is what they told me.

Mr. LUCE. The gentleman was not on the subcommittee, and so probably is not informed of the fact that we were a good deal perplexed by the names of some of the financial organizations in various parts of the country.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. LUCE. Here and there will be found various organizations that are not incorporated.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I am told by my colleague the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. Cole] that the language "building and loan associations" will cover the situation in Baltimore City. That being so, it is perfectly agreeable to me that the balance be stricken out.

Mr. LUCE. That will remove all objection.

Mr. REILLY. I would suggest to the gentleman from Maryland that he also withdraw the first part of his amendment, just leaving the language "building and loan associations" in it.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the original amendment—that is, on page 5, at the end of line 16—be stricken out.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland asks unanimous consent that his amendment be modified as indicated. The Clerk will report the amendment, as modified.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Goldsborough: Page 5, line 21, strike out all after "shall" down through line 5, on page 6, and insert "upon subjecting itself to such inspection and regulation as the board shall prescribe be eligible to become a member." Strike out the first part of the amendment offered by Mr. Goldsborough.

Mr. MOUSER. Will the gentleman yield?

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MOUSER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Maryland be given five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOUSER. I wish to ask the gentleman a further question. There is no doubt under this amendment as the gentleman has modified it, according to the suggestion of the gentleman from Massachusetts, that it is made necessary for the State to regulate building and loan associations according to the provisions of the act. In other words, the State will have to act within the period of time prescribed.

Mr. STAFFORD. No; the very purpose of the gentle-man's amendment is to eliminate that entirely, to give them carte blanche.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. That is to be regulated by the board.

Mr. STAFFORD. They are to come in and have the privileges of the act without any State supervision.

Mr. MOUSER. Now I shall ask the gentleman from Maryland to yield for me to ask a question of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I yield.

Mr. MOUSER. Does the gentleman think with this provision in the bill the institutions in Maryland will have proper safeguards thrown around them to make them eligible under this act the same as other building and loan associations that are regulated by States?

Mr. LUCE. I think so. The State of Maryland is near at hand. The board will be here in Washington and we are giving the board exceptionally broad powers in the supervision of building and loan associations.

Mr. MOUSER. Does not the gentleman think there ought to be a provision in here that the State shall prescribe laws within a certain period of time to make the provisions of this act applicable?

Mr. LUCE. I thought so, and I believe so still, but it was not a matter that seemed to me of sufficient consequence to imperil the passage of the bill or even to arouse controversy when so many more important particulars are at stake

Mr. JENKINS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I yield.

Mr. JENKINS. Let me ask the gentleman from Massachusetts if this bill provides a sufficient organization to pass on the qualifications of the building associations in these two States?

Mr. LUCE. The bill gives such broad powers, I am sure that question will not arise.

Mr. MOUSER. Has the board power to provide for examiners, may I ask the gentleman from Maryland, and will these examiners or agents of the board who want to make investigations as to whether the building and loan association qualifies, have the right to go into the books of the company, and will the company be compelled to permit the looking over of the books if it does not desire to do so? In other words, what powers are given the agents and employees of this board?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. They must subject themselves to such inspection as the regulations of the board may prescribe. The board has absolute control over the institution. It has control as to whether the institution shall be admitted, first, and then after the institution gets in, it has to adhere to every rule and regulation with respect to inspection that the board shall prescribe in order to stay in.

Mr. SPARKS. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. MOUSER. Yes.

Mr. SPARKS. If this amendment should be adopted, it would impose an additional burden upon the board in the expense of investigating the building and loan associations in Maryland, which would be quite different from what the expense would be in other States.

Mr. MOUSER. I want to take just another moment. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me we are creating a board here that is going to require an almost unlimited number of employees. I have been of the opinion that these loans should be under the supervision and control of the Finance Corporation.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MOUSER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one additional minute.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MOUSER. I think the committee ought to bear in mind that by passing an amendment of this nature we are liable to create many additional positions in this board, because we all know that State banking departments must have many inspectors and examiners who qualify under the civil service as employees competent to make proper examination of building and loan associations and banks. I think we ought to go slowly before we open up the field for many new employees at a time like this, when we are trying to economize. [Applause.]

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, it seems to me this amendment goes to the fundamentals of this particular legislation. You are creating an institution here which is going to create securities which are intended to be sold to the public. Every safeguard should surround these to be issued securities. You are permitting, under this amendment, the admission of building and loan associations and institutions that can come in under the law, other than building and loan associations, in those States which do not provide for supervision of the assets of such corporations. This is wrong.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFADDEN. I yield.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I think the gentleman was in the committee and agreed to this amendment.

Mr. McFADDEN. I have not agreed to anything in connection with this bill that I know of.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. It was adopted unanimously in the committee as a committee amendment, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania was present and did not object.

Mr. McFADDEN. I reserved the right to oppose this bill on the floor of the House, and I want to state here that you are creating an institution, I am told, that, if they can get the money, wants $1,800,000,000 this year. That is the amount that is immediately needed. Five hundred million dollars of these funds that are to be received through this agency that you are setting up to-day is to go to the payment of depositors in building and loan associations to take care of already matured certificates.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. The gentleman, of course, is not now referring to Maryland.

Mr. McFADDEN. No; not to Maryland. I am referring to what this bill is intended to do generally throughout this

The next service that is to be rendered, I understand, is to advance seven or eight hundred million dollars to be used to refund existing mortgages which are held by these people. The balance, up to $1,800,000,000, is to be used to finance new loans for the purpose of building new homes in a country that is now overbuilt.

I also want to call your attention to the fact that this relief goes to existing institutions, and there is every reason why, after the experience we have had with the Federal farm-loan system, these institutions that have the right to rediscount their securities with this national institution, should be sound and should be properly examined. We do not want a repetition of the joint-stock land bank situation where owners of their bonds have suffered such losses.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFADDEN. I am sorry, but I have only five minutes.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Pennsylvania. I will try to get the gentleman more time.

Mr. McFADDEN. Then I yield.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman tell the conditions under which these advances will be made to these institutions?

Mr. McFADDEN. I understand 50 per cent on the mortgages can be advanced.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Pennsylvania. Not the percentage, but they lend not to exceed 40 per cent of the property on which the mortgage is issued after appraisal.

Mr. McFADDEN. I understand that. I think that is pretty generally known.

There is another thing in this bill. Insurance companies are permitted to come in. Insurance companies that can qualify can get 50 per cent of their mortgages in cash from this organization, as can savings banks. Of course, we know that insurance companies and savings banks do not lend the full value on properties, many of them 50 or 60 per cent. In the present situation it is extremely hard to determine correct values on any kind of property and particularly upon real estate or houses and lots.

Last week we passed a bill guaranteeing deposits in the banks of this country, and we authorized and appropriated, directly and indirectly, funds to the extent of $800,000,000. We are going farther in this bill, and we are saying to depositors in building and loan associations who hold matured certificates to the extent of at least $500,000,000, who are exactly in the same position as are depositors in the banks, "We are not going to guarantee your deposits, but we are going to pay you in cash for your deposits."

Now, I submit that in the creation of this and all of the other agencies that we have created at this session of the Congress we are going a long way in dipping into the investment funds of this country and into the Public Treasury. Many people may say we can go into the market and sell these securities. The needs of the Public Treasury are such at this time that the Public Treasury is not going to let this institution go into the market and absorb the loanable funds or the investment funds of this country, because I call your attention to the fact that over and above the amount provided for in the tax bill, the Treasury has a deficit of $2,700,-000,000, and this money has got to be borrowed, and besides great other burdens are being put upon the Treasury by this Congress.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. CAMPBELL of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania may be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Pennsylvania. The requirements of the Public Treasury are so great apparently at this time that for the funds necessary to carry on the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, they are not letting the Reconstruction Finance Corporation go into the money market, but the Treasury itself furnishes the funds and takes over their securities.

In order to provide for that we have enlarged the opportunity of the Federal reserve system to inflate-you have passed the Steagall-Glass bill-the Federal Reserve Board is pouring out hundreds of millions of dollars' worth of funds into the market to inflate, and providing the method of financing the Government in this need and providing for the gold that is daily being shipped out of the country.

The question arises where all this money is coming from. The public debt has been increased to $19,000,000,000 during the present session, and unless I am mistaken, we are going to have an increase in the neighborhood of seven or eight billion dollars of the public debt by the time the Treasury gets through its financing which this Congress made necessary.

You say this is not a Government institution. You are creating an institution to serve the building and loan associations, mortgage associations, and this group eligible, insurance companies, with some kind of service.

Now, you are giving relief to insurance mortgage-loan companies, whereas the Federal farm loan gives it direct to the farm borrower.

I would point out that there is little assurance in any part of this legislation that you are going to give direct relief to home owners. It is very indirect. And then only to those who happen to or can do business through one of the existing institutions provided for in this bill. It seems to me also that the emergency is not made very clear for this legislation, and it is urged because of an emergency.

You are creating a Government agency for existing organizations. The plan is general in its application, and does not establish a standard for building and loan association systems of the United States.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. McFADDEN. I yield.
Mr. STAFFORD. Wherein does the relief of building and loan associations under this bill differ from the relief under the Reconstruction Finance Corporation?

Mr. McFADDEN. It is a little different, but practically the same thing.

Now, I am disturbed in the creation of all the various Government institutions we are creating in this session as to where all the money is coming from. In the committee I tried to find whether or not the Federal Reserve Board and the Reconstruction Finance Board approved this legislation.

I insert here their replies to my inquiry. They speak for themselves, as follows:

> FEDERAL RESERVE BOARD Washington, May 23, 1932.

Hon. Louis T. McFappen.

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Dear Sir: Receipt is acknowledged of your letter of May 14, 1932, in which you request an expression of opinion by the Federal Reserve Board as to H. R. 7620, a bill to create Federal homeloan banks.

In view of the fact that this bill provides for a system of banks entirely distinct from, and having no direct relation to, the Fedentirely distinct from, and having no direct relation to, the Federal reserve banks and is designed to provide a type of credit essentially different from that provided by the Federal reserve banks, the Federal Reserve Board would not be in a position to express an opinion on the matter without making a detailed analysis of the provisions of the bill and an extensive study of the questions involved.

In these circumstances, and in view of the numerous important matters within its province which require the board's consideration, the board does not feel justified at this time in undertaking to comply with your request.

to comply with your request. Very truly yours,

CHESTER MORRILL. Secretary.

RECONSTRUCTION FINANCE CORPORATION, Washington, May 19, 1932.

Hon. L. T. McFadden,

Hon. L. T. McFadden,

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Dear Sie: Your letter of the 14th of May, inclosing a copy of the bill (H. R. 7620) to create Federal home-loan banks, to provide for the supervision thereof, and for other purposes, and requesting, as a member of the House Committee on Banking and Currency, an official expression of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation in respect to the provisions and terms of the proposed measure, has been received and considered by the board of directors of the corporation. While this corporation is authorized to provide emergency financing facilities for some of the classes of institutions which the Federal home-loan banks would provide in a permanent way, the board feels that it is beyond its province to express an opinion upon the bill, and, furthermore, because of the exceedingly great pressure under which this corporation is working in order to discharge its large responsibilities, the board feels compelled to take the position that it can not undertake to analyze the provisions and terms of bills introduced in the Congress and report thereon except at the request of committees havgress and report thereon except at the request of committees having them in charge.

Respectfully,

G. R. COOKSEY, Secretary.

Mr. REILLY. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Pennsylvania, a member of the Banking and Currency Committee, has been opposed to this legislation from the start.

The gentleman says in one breath that the bill will take $1,800,000,000 from somewhere, and in the next breath he says that there is no demand for more mortgage money, and no demand for this bill. If there is no demand for more money to finance the home-mortgage institutions, there will be no money taken from anywhere.

The gentleman says there is no difference between the operation of this bill in administering to the financial necessity of the home-mortgage institution, and the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. Under the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, the most money that these institutions could possibly get would be about $150,000,000. This bill will put no added burden on the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. At the present time that organization has loaned $30,000,000 to a few building and loan associations. It has applications on file for probably $30,000,000 more, and it is altogether probable that if we do not pass this legislation the Reconstruction Finance Corporation will be required to pay out to building and loan associations the minimum of at least $125,000,000 that is provided in this bill. The difference between this bill and the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is that these home-mortgage banks can take the $125,000,000, which the Government advances to it, and sell its debentures and get at least twelve times that sum for the relief of its members. That is the difference.

Mr. MOUSER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REILLY. I yield.

Mr. MOUSER. Why not let the Reconstruction Finance Corporation handle this? They have the machinery set up. Why create a new board?

Mr. REILLY. For the simple reason that the mortgage banks are intended to be permanent institutions, while the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is a temporary insti-

Mr. MICHENER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REILLY. I yield.

Mr. MICHENER. As a matter of fact, all loans made through the Reconstruction Finance Corporation are limited to six months.

Mr. REILLY. Short-term loans. They are not adaptable to the use of the mortgage home-loan institutions.

Mr. MICHENER. It will be of very little value to the building and loan associations.

Mr. MOUSER. Why could they not handle it during their life of 10 years?

Mr. REILLY. Because, as I have stated, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is only a temporary institution.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. We hope so.

Mr. BRIGGS. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. REILLY. I yield.
Mr. BRIGGS. Does the Reconstruction Finance Corporation concern itself only to the extent that the banks themselves make loans to the building and loan associations?

Mr. REILLY. That is the relation in which they stand to-day. But the point is that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation can not meet the demands of the institutions aided by this bill. General Dawes appeared before our committee and stated emphatically that he wanted this bill passed.

Mr. MOUSER. How many employees does the gentleman think will be required?

Mr. REILLY. I do not care how many employees are required. The institutions are bound to pay the cost. The only sum that this can cost the Government is the cost of operation for the first year. Then it becomes a charge upon all the members of the different associations which become Federal home-loan banks.

Mr. MOUSER. That is figured in the carrying charge. Is that true?

Mr. REILLY. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. REILLY. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this section close in five minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I am under the impression that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McFadden] is unduly alarmed as to the provisions of the bill, though if I am not mistaken, one of the provisions to which he objected will be amended, for the committee proposes to offer an amendment striking out insurance companies, savings banks, and trust companies.

Mr. REILLY. There will be an amendment offered, I understand, but not a committee amendment.

Mr. STEVENSON. I expect to offer an amendment to that effect.

Mr. SABATH. And I hope that it will pass.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. The amendment would not be offered as against savings banks, would it?

Mr. STEVENSON. Not against savings banks, but banks and insurance companies.

Mr. SABATH. So that it will really apply to the building and loan associations and the mutual building and loan associations.

Now, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McFadden] is also alarmed as to where the money will come from. The gentleman knows that in 1929 there was forthcoming a credit of $8,400,000,000 for gambling purposes. Now, if we could raise $8,400,000,000 for gambling purposes, I do not know of any reason why this amount, which will be required to aid the home owners of America, will not be forthcoming.

This bill only provides for an original investment by the Government of $125,000,000; the other amount will be subscribed by the building and loan associations.

As to the query of the gentleman why the Reconstruction Finance Corporation could not handle the proposition, it seems to me that the officers do not understand nor have they men who understand the principles of the building and loan associations. I have endeavored for the last two and a half months to have the Reconstruction Finance Corporation make loans to the building and loan associations; but, unfortunately, up to this time, only a very few loans have been made to the building and loan associations, at least to those in the section of the country which I represent.

I find that the methods which are employed result in so much red tape that it takes a Philadelphia lawyer to comply with all of the requisites and fill out all of the blanks which are submitted to the building and loan associations.

Under this plan the men themselves who are operating the building and loan associations and who are familiar with their operation and problems will conduct and manage it, and will only come to the board for a loan through their officers; and therefore the general application and operation of the building and loan association will remain intact, in the hands of the building and loan associations themselves.

For that reason I feel that the bill should be amended as I suggested, so that it will only apply to the building and loan associations, and I hope that prompt action will be taken on it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. Goldsborough].

The question was taken, and on a division (demanded by Mr. Goldsborough) there were—ayes 50, noes 30.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Stevenson: Page 4, section 4, line 10, strike out the words "insurance company."

Page 4, lines 10, 11, and 12, strike out the words "trust company, state bank, or other banking organization except a national bank," and insert the word "and" after "savings bank."

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, I do not know that it is necessary to discuss this amendment. I do not think there will be very much opposition to it. It is not a committee amendment. The committee was equally divided when we originally voted on it in the committee.

My objections to those clauses are two or three fold. First, if you put banks, insurance companies, and trust companies in the bill it will take all the cash you will be able to raise to finance them. No institution can borrow more than twelve times its capital stock held in the bank.

Suppose the New York Mutual Life Insurance Co., with two hundred or three hundred millions dollars of capital should make application; it could absorb the whole thing, because it is known that it has a tremendous lot of real estate of different kinds, and it must take 1 per cent of its capital in the stock of the bank and to then borrow twelve times that.

The banks are loaded up to-day with frozen mortgage real-estate loans. They will be here. They will amortize and renew these loans, and they will be here to the extent of a billion dollars and the building and loan associations will be absolutely shut out. The building and loan associations will be in the same fix they are with the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. The demands of the others are going to be so much more insistent and so much more necessary that we will find they will absorb the funds.

Another fundamental objection I have is this: These loans to get preference must be long-time amortized mortgage loans. An amortized mortgage loan is a loan running not over eight years with amortization payments annually or semiannually. No bank doing a commercial business has any business putting its capital into 8-year loans, or 5-year loans on real estate. Therefore, it is a dangerous proposition to induce them and authorize them and impel them into doing that kind of thing, and you will find it will be a disastrous thing for them if you let them in.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEVENSON. I yield.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. The gentleman's amendment simply means that these loans will be confined to building and loan

Mr. STEVENSON. And savings banks.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. I think the gentleman is right.

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes; I think everybody thinks I am right, but there was a good deal of insistence that it should

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Does not the gentleman's 8-year-loan argument apply to savings banks as well as to other parties?

Mr. STEVENSON. I understand that savings banks are not commercial banks and are engaged in making realestate loans, and sometimes of great length, frequently amortized, and that they will come legitimately within the provisions of the bill.

Now, there is another thing about the bill; State banks, because we have taken out national banks-on my motion that was stricken out in the committee and you will see it is excepted everywhere-State banks will get their funds tied up. They will go to the association. They can only borrow 60 per cent of all land mortgages they put up as collateral, and they can not borrow more than 40 per cent of the value of the land that is covered. I am not inclined to think that it will help the banks anyway, but you open the door to these institutions and induce banks to engage in practices that are not sound banking practices. We have had a demonstration as far as insurance companies are concerned; and the banks and insurance companies have a right to apply to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

I desire to register my protest. I desire to say that I have been in sympathy with this bill. The members of the committee will accede to my statement that I have been as helpful as possible in endeavoring to put the bill into shape, and I want to support it. But with that provision in there it is an utterly vicious bill in my judgment and I will not support the bill with that in it.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, possibly I am laboring under a misapprehension. I had thought it was practically understood that an amendment would be agreed to by the committee eliminating deposit banks from the operation of this bill, and I have gone along supporting the bill with reservations assuming that such an amendment would be adopted. With that understanding, at least on my own part. I aided in reporting the bill and in obtaining a rule to give an opportunity for its consideration in the House.

Mr. Chairman, this is to be a piece of permanent legislation. If it can be made to work, it will be the law when all of us in this House shall have passed away. It is a permanent home-loan bank rediscount plan. It should not be looked upon as a mere emergency bill.

One of the great difficulties in which we find ourselves in this country at this very hour arises out of the practice of deposit banks in loading down their portfolios with longterm real estate unliquid loans. Strange as it may seem, the Banking and Currency Committee of this House and the Congress, at the instance of the large bankers and the men upon whom we should have the right to look for leadership in banking legislation, passed a bill to liberalize the provisions of the national banking law for loans by national banks on real estate. I could call the names of the men who besieged our committee and urged us to pass that legislation who are now crying for relief from the difficulties arising from their own follies and mistakes.

We have set up, as the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. Stevenson] so well has pointed out, temporary machinery for emergency relief for banks that find themselves embarrassed on account of real-estate loans. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation has ample facilities and ample machinery to afford relief to any bank in the country that finds itself in an unliquid condition on account of realestate leans, and the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is rendering this service. I think they are doing effective service in that connection.

Recently the Congress passed what is known as the Glass-Steagall bill, which enlarged the loaning privileges of the Federal reserve banks on real-estate securities carried by member banks, and those securities may find their way into the Federal reserve banks not alone through loans to member banks of the Federal reserve system but any bank that is a member of the Federal reserve system that has made loans to nonmember banks on such securities may, in turn, use such real-estate securities for relief at the Federal reserve banks under the temporary loaning plans set up in the Glass-Steagall bill.

We have afforded all the machinery that anybody could suggest, ask, or that I think could be desired for temporary relief of banks that find themselves in difficulties on account of real-estate loans. We ought not to invite the banks of deposits in this country to tie up the money of their depositors in long-term real-estate loans. They should not be permitted to do it. We have gone further on that line already than we should have done. It has brought about enough difficulties already.

Mr. McFADDEN. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. STEAGALL. I yield to my colleague.

Mr. McFADDEN. The gentleman is aware that in some of the States building and loan associations are doing a banking business.

Mr. STEAGALL. I have no objection to any real estate lending agency in the country that sets itself up as such and deals with the public as such having access to the facilities of the system that we are undertaking to inaugurate by the adoption of this bill and any relief that may be afforded. But no bank that takes the deposits of the public ought to be permitted to tie up those deposits in unliquid real-estate loans, and we ought not to invite them to do it by this legislation. The committee eliminated a provision embracing national banks. But there can be no difference in the principle involved, whether applied to State or national banks. Besides, we should not discriminate against either.

I want to be frank with the House. I had thought there was at least a tacit understanding that we were going to strike from this bill the provisions that permit deposit banks to become members of these home-loan banks, thus inviting them to enter into a general home-loan or real-estate business. Such a provision would only be calculated to destroy still further the confidence in banks that is new lacking on the part of the public who furnish the deposits of our banks. If this provision is to remain in the bill, I shall feel inclined to withhold my continued support in accordance with reservations which I made known to the committee when the bill was reported.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, this is the most important amendment that will be offered to this bill. It deserves more time than all the other amendments I forsee, put together, should require; and so if it gets more than the usual debate, that will only meet the needs of the occasion. It is an amendment upon which I confess I am myself in grave doubt, and I ask the attention of every Member within the Chamber while I try to present both sides of the question that we may have informed judgment and wise con-

When this bill was conceived, it was meant to help the home interests of the country, and, to that end, was so drawn that it might reach the whole home-mortgage field.

This may be shown by the fact that when the Department of Commerce sent out a questionnaire, it included national banks, State banks, savings banks, both mutual and stock, and all other classes of institutions having home mortgages. Replies were received from a total of about 6,600 national banks, State banks, and loan and trust companies, of which about three-fourths approved the purpose of the bill-not the details, because it had not then been perfected, but the purpose of the bill. About three-fourths responding felt they needed a mortgage rediscount institution, and that if it had been in existence it would have been of help in this crisis, 4,593 saying such a system would | fought that in committee as hard as we could. I fought "help to relieve the dangers of foreclosures on urban homes and farms," with 1.555 thinking otherwise.

Mark you, therefore, at the start it was contemplated reaching all institutions in the country that have mortgages on homes, the intent being to furnish to the mortgage realestate field the same opportunity for rediscounting and so raising cash that we have given to the commercial field.

Mr. BRIGGS. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LUCE. I yield.

Mr. BRIGGS. I have heard it often discussed on the floor by members of the committee in interpreting the proposed law that it is confined entirely to the urban field, but I notice in the questionnaire which is carried in the report of the committee that reference is made to relief from danger of foreclosure on farms as well as urban homes, and I am wondering whether it is the purpose of this legislation to also be available, to the extent of the limits therein prescribed, for farms as well as urban homes.

Mr. LUCE. That intention was embodied in the inclusion of State and national banks. To illustrate, there are in the neighborhood of my summer home, in one small town, two small national banks serving the country district roundabout as well as the village itself. These banks are the only financial institutions readily reached by the farmers of the region. There is no savings bank at hand, no building and loan association, no other place to borrow. This may bring me to the thing I want to emphasize as an original purpose of the bill. It was recognized that there are thousands of small communities in the United States where the bank furnishes the only instrument of finance—thousands of placesand their banks were far the greater number who responded to this questionnaire, I am sure.

I am confident that much the greater part of the 6,600 and more national and State banks and loan and trust companies that answered the questionnaire were located in the farm districts, therefore if the amendment should prevail you will have taken away the proposed resource from all the smaller communities that have no savings banks nor building and loan associations and have brought little if any relief in the field to which the gentleman from Texas has just referred. This is the crux of the problem you are now to decide.

It may be further pointed out that at the time of the latest figures within my reach the national banks had 17,-638.087 savings deposits evidenced by pass books. (By the way, when I used these figures yesterday "pass book" somehow got into the Record as "past loans." This may serve as a correction.) The figure is, of course, swollen by the number of persons having more than one deposit, but even taking this into account there are undoubtedly more depositors in national banks than there are members in the building and loan associations, who at last accounts numbered 12,350,928. I have not at command the number of savings depositors in State banks and trust companies, but there are surely many millions. All told, it is computed that there are more than 50,000,000 savings deposit accounts in the United States outside the building and loan associations. Taking duplications into account there must be thirty or forty million savers whose money when invested by banks in mortgages would be shut out from the benefits to be brought indirectly by the proposed home-loan bank system if the pending amendment should prevail.

Such being the main reasons why the amendment should be rejected, now let me give you reasons why it should

I have shared the views expressed by my colleague, the chairman of the committee. For my part, if within my power I would cleave a sharp line between commercial and investment banking and allow no institution to cross that line. I think it has been a disaster to this country that we have allowed commercial banks to engage in security and real-estate business. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, five years ago the so-called McFadden bill became a law. That bill doubled the capacity of banks to lend money on real estate. With a few other Members I it also on the floor of the House, but we were defeated.

Remember, that was in the days when we were at the flood tide of prosperity, when business was booming, and nobody dreamed disaster would come so speedily and in such terrible shape.

My protest fell on deaf ears, and now I am able to say those most ungracious words of all language, "I told you so." I told you this thing was going to happen.

No one would listen except a few who shared my apprehension

The chief source of all our trouble to-day is that the funds of the people are so largely tied up in frozen assets. This appeared first in the small banks of the country. The distressing failures that have followed-failures by the hundreds; yes, by the thousands-have been due in large part to the very thing some of us tried to check, the expansion of mortgage loans on real estate that within a few months lost so large a part of what had been presumed to be its value.

Therefore I have much sympathy with the arguments presented by the gentleman from South Carolina and the gentleman from Georgia, who insist that the banks shall not have further opportunity and temptation to tie up the funds of the people in this fashion.

But this is a pragmatic world. Legislation must face existing conditions. It is altogether improbable that the big banks and the large insurance companies will make use of the system. If you adopt the amendment, you will not hamper them, but you will deprive thousands of small banks in the communities that have no other financial resource of any opportunity of raising money on their present assets, getting the cash with which to resume their normal functions, the cash needed so badly in these communities.

Mr. JENKINS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCE. Let me finish stating the problem, if you will. To sum it up, my wish is that every Member shall contribute of his judgment as to whether it is better to accept conditions as they are and give the opportunities of this system to the little communities of the country, or whether it is better at last to act on principle, and say that we will set our faces sternly against helping any further the combination of all kinds of banking that ought to be kept entirely separate. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. REILLY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, in writing this bill the committee was up against a condition and not a theory. The subcommittee included national banks. The full committee struck out national banks because their inclusion would require the amendment of the national banking law, and we thought that ought to be left to Congress itself in another bill, if it wanted to do so.

Now, the committee was informed, as the gentleman from Massachusetts has ably said, that a great many small banks-in fact, a great many small national banks-have been doing a home-loan mortgage business. If this bill is going to relieve the whole situation, it ought to allow such institutions, banks or otherwise, as are engaged in the home-loan mortgage business to have an opportunity to get the benefits of the workings of this system. If the States want to permit their banks to engage in home-mortgage loans, that is the business of the States and not the business of Congress; but at the present time a great many State banks and other banks have the right and have a great many home-loan mortgages in their portfolios.

There is another reason: If we strike out these institutions, we will handicap, to a certain extent, the functioning of these banks. A great many of the home-mortgage institutions or home-building associations that will come into the banks will not put up cash. They are going to put up securities. That will give them the right to become nonborrowing members, and the money that those banks will furnish, if they come in, and those trust companies, if they come in, will help to make the institution function.

One more point: When they sent out the first questionnaire, of which the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Lucel has spoken, they left out the insurance companies. They did not think the insurance companies were at all interested in this bill. The facts are that the small insurance companies want the bill. The big ones do not appear to want it; and when they finally sent out another questionnaire a great majority of the small insurance companies signified their desire to have this bill.

While personally I think the big insurance companies will not take advantage of it, if there are any small insurance companies that have been doing a home-loan mortgage business, they ought to be allowed to have the privilege of this institution. I think it is a mistake to adopt the sweeping amendment offered by my colleague the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. SEIBERLING. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

As a matter of fact, I oppose taking national banks out of the bill. The statement is made that this is permanent legislation. If we are to have permanent legislation, why do we narrow it down so that only a few institutions of the country can have the benefit of the legislation? If it is to be permanent, we ought to broaden it so that all institutions which can meet the requirements of the law can have the benefit of the legislation.

In our State we have hundreds of small national banks that are loaning money on real estate. They are authorized by law to do so. They should have the benefit of this bill, just the same as State banks, trust companies, and building and loan associations.

I want to call your attention to the fact that this legislation is enacted for the purpose of helping the small home owner. What difference does it make whether that small home owner is doing business with a trust company, a savings bank, or a national bank, or a building and loan association? It is the small home owners that we want to help. These people are loaning their money on mortgages, and they are authorized to do it under the laws of the States where they are doing business, and I contend that we ought to broaden this bill instead of narrow it, in view of the fact that it is permanent legislation.

State banks, savings banks, and trust companies in my State are loaning millions of dollars upon small homes, assisting workingmen and all kinds of people in building homes. They are taking mortgages on properties worth less than $20,000, and they have loans that qualify for rediscount under this bill. It seems to me that the logic of the situation is that if we are to pass this permanent legislation, we should broaden it so that every small home owner can have the benefits of the legislation.

Mr. JENKINS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SEIBERLING. I yield.

Mr. JENKINS. I think in our State of Ohio we probably engage in the building and loan business as extensively as any State. What effect does the gentleman think this would have on the small banks? Could they not come in under the Reconstruction Finance Corporation rules now and be taken care of?

Mr. SEIBERLING. That is a temporary affair.

Mr. JENKINS. Does it not meet that requirement?

Mr. SEIBERLING. I do not think it does. Mr. STEVENSON. I would like to ask the gentleman if the Reconstruction Finance Corporation can loan, under the terms of the act, for five years?

Mr. SEIBERLING. That is not long enough; this is a permanent thing.

Mr. STEVENSON. Then it is not wound up for 10 years. To be sure, the gentleman does not expect this condition is going to exist for 10 years, does he?

Mr. SEIBERLING. No; but I say that the small home owners, no matter where they be, should have the benefits of this law, and I do not think we should undertake to discipline the banking institutions in this country. I think we should carry out the purpose of the bill.

If Congress objects to banks of deposit making mortgage loans, then it seems to me that Congress should proceed at York, and the use of these funds is directed in New York.

once and set an example by amending the national banking act, so that national banks can not loan money on real estate. If the gentleman from South Carolina and the gentleman from Pennsylvania are desirous of correcting this situation, we should start with the banking system over which we have control.

Mr. SABATH. But we should protect them. Mr. JENKINS. As I understand, however, the objection made by the gentleman from South Carolina to this bill was that some of the banks might, to use a common expression, "hog up" all this money. Does not the gentleman think that since those questions pass through the Reconstruction Finance Corporation that that corporation would see to it that the big banks would make their request under the Reconstruction Finance Corporation privileges and not come under the privileges of this bill and "hog up" everything provided by the bill?

Mr. SEIBERLING. I think that we can trust this board with unlimited discretion to do the best thing for all the institutions of the country.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Chairman, my colleague on the committee the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Luce] has referred to the mixing of long with short time money in banks. I agree with the gentleman from Massachusetts as to the evils of that situation. It is something that some of these days we have got to deal with in the banking law of this country.

The intermingling of short and long time credits has been one of the great evils in this country. It is the thing that broke the Bank of England recently. The fact that the Bank of England was taking short-time money from all over the world and making long-time loans in Germany caused a great portion of the trouble in England and in Europe. We have had the same thing existing here in the past few years, where under high pressure of reorganization and modern methods of distribution of investment securities short and long time money have been intermingled.

In the building and loan business we have two classes of business, really. We have some building and loan associations receiving deposits which are short-time deposits, and then we have them taking long-time money, and they are making long-time loans. Practically all of the loans of building and loan associations are long-time loans, and we have got to recognize the fact that short-time funds are payable on demand.

This situation has developed here, which is one of the reasons why we are considering this legislation. There are $500,000,000 of deposits in these building and loan associations in the United States represented by maturing building and loan certificates new due. That is one of the reasons why we are passing this legislation, to take care of the demands of these unfortunate people, the depositors who have trusted their money to building and loan associations. and who now, in the hour of their dire distress, are coming to the Federal Government for assistance, because the building and loan associations can not meet the demand of their depositors, the certificate holders.

Mr. MORTON D. HULL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFADDEN. I yield.

Mr. MORTON D. HULL. In order to accomplish the purpose the gentleman has in mind, we practically have got to legislate State banking out of existence; we have got to adopt a uniform system of national banking and dispose of State banking.

Mr. McFADDEN. No; I would not agree to that. I would not want to go that far with State banks; I would not want to go that far with national banks. I would like to keep them independent units. Under the domination and control of the Federal reserve system we have taken independence from them. We have got to consider that matter some of these days if we want to preserve independent units in the country. These little financial institutions are now a part of the big machine, the Federal reserve. These funds are sucked from the byways and hedges of the country through these banks into this great maelstrom that is headed in New

Mr. STEVENSON. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. McFADDEN. I yield.

Mr. STEVENSON. Does the gentleman think it will help the situation to bring the banks into this controversy?

Mr. McFADDEN. No; I do not. I am entirely in accord with the gentleman's amendment.

PAYMENT OF ADJUSTED-SERVICE CERTIFICATES

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to speak out of order for three minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Chairman, I desire to place in the RECORD at this point, for the information of the membership of the House, copy of a bill which I have introduced to-day that affects the adjusted service compensation law, and I am asking each Member of the House to thoroughly study this bill. I think in the end they will see that it is the least objectionable of any of the bills that have been proposed at this session of the Congress.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

FEDERAL HOME-LOAN BANKS

Mr. REILLY. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on the pending amendment and all amendments thereto be closed in five minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. STEVENSON].

When we commenced our hearings on this bill, it was my best judgment that its benefits should be extended only to those institutions which were engaged in a bona fide effort to aid home ownership.

I heartily indorse what our Chairman, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STEAGALL] has said, and also what the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. Stevenson] has said | and for the life of me I do not see why you do not have your with respect to this amendment.

I do not believe the insurance companies, the trust companies, or the banks should be admitted. Certainly, if we are going to exclude national banks we should exclude other similar deposit banks. There should be no discrimination.

We know that the building and loan associations, cooperative associations, homestead associations, and savings banks are the institutions which undertake sincerely to aid in low-cost, long-time financing. I agree with the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Luce] that the time has come in this country when we need a different central credit agency that will extend long-time financing to those who desire to own homes, and I have risen here to-day to say that it is my best thought and my best judgment that we should confine the benefits of this bill to those institutions that are primarily engaged in an effort to aid home financing and home ownership, and I hope the committee will support the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina. This Congress has already in several substantial ways made provision to extend all necessary relief and assistance to these institutions which Mr. Stevenson's amendment would exclude from the provisions of this act. Though it is true that the smaller banks in like communities could, perhaps, use beneficially this credit facility, nothing could prevent organizing a building and loan association, and through it the same relief could be extended the community and in a better way. In my judgment, mixing the two banking systems with the short and long term credits is unsound and might eventually encourage a condition in the deposit bank which would be dangerous and unhealthy.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I offer a substitute amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Eaton of Colorado as a substitute for the amendment offered by Mr. STEVENSON: On page 4, strike out lines 8 to 11, and the word "bank" on line 12, and insert "any association of persons or corporations organized and authorized to make home mortgages and regularly carrying on the business incident thereto."

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, first I ask the gentlemen on my right to give me unanimous consent to have at least five minutes to explain this amendment.

Mr. REILLY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Colorado may be given five minutes to discuss his amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. Stevenson] seeks to amend the first four lines of section 4. Yesterday I directed your attention to the definition in section 2 which defines the word "member." Here you are also defining the word "member." You are saying what institution or what organization or what corporation shall be eligible for membership.

I have listened to the argument on both sides, and it seems to me you are agreed that any institution, small or large, that is in the business of making home loans should have the benefit of this home loan board. We look in your bill and we find out what a home mortgage is, as defined in paragraph 6 of section 2.

So if you make your words of definition "any association of persons or corporation authorized to make home mortgages and regularly carrying on the business incident thereto," then you look to the balance of your paragraph to see who comes in and who they are. They are set out in the subdivisions 1, 2, and 3, of section 4, in your printed text: First, those that are organized under the laws of any State or of the United States; second, those that are subject to inspection and regulation under the banking laws, or under similar laws of the State or of the United States; and, third, those that make such home-mortgage loans as, in the judgment of the board, are long-term loans, and so forth. This is all printed in the section, and I take it from what I have heard on both sides that this is what you are agreed upon, definition in the bill say just what you mean.

Of course, when you begin to limit this by setting out building and loan associations, some are under banking laws and some are under special laws, and you also name savings and loan associations, cooperative banks, homestead associations, and savings banks. You have not included mutual banks, although you have included homestead associations and savings banks, and, therefore, you ought to have your general words refer to the institutions that are organized and are regularly engaged in the business of making home loans. These are the people you are trying to serve, and you should so cover it in the bill.

Mr. STEAGALL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EATON of Colorado. I yield.

Mr. STEAGALL. Do I understand the gentleman to be sympathetic with the purpose of the amendment of the gentleman from South Carolina in so far as it relates to banks?

Mr. EATON of Colorado. In so far as it relates to the institutions that are to-day regularly in the business of making home loans.

Mr. STEAGALL. I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that under the broad language of his amendment it would probably result in restoring to the bill the very institutions which the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina desires to eliminate, so if the gentleman is in sympathy with the amendment of the gentleman from South Carolina I suggest the gentleman rearrange his amendment so as to make it clear and to present the matter, as the gentleman has referred to it, so his amendment would not cover banks or mortgage brokers. They are organized and authorized to make these loans, and a great many of them are regularly making such loans.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. No doubt the gentleman from Alabama is right; the mortgage broker might come under it now if he conforms to conditions 1, 2, and 3 of the bill.

I have submitted the text of this amendment to the gentleman from South Carolina and the gentleman from Wisconsin. I do not claim it is perfect, but I have tried to meet the situation. The people you are trying to benefit are not particularly the insurance companies or any banks, but whatever institutions are regularly in the home-loan business, and they are the ones you want to help-not the loan sharks or the mortgage brokers.

Mr. STEAGALL. Some of us are desirous of eliminating from the bill the banks that carry deposits of the public. The people have lost confidence in their ability to give back the deposits in their banks.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. That may be easily met by amending the proposed substitute by adding words excepting banks of deposit, State and National, and have the amendment read: "Any association of persons or corporations authorized to make home mortgages and regularly carrying en the business incident thereto, except banks of deposit, State and National."

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the substitute offered by the gentleman from Colorado for the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina.

The question was taken, and the substitute amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Hogg and Mr. HARLAN) there were 33 ayes and 39 noes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point that there is no quorum present.

Mr. REILLY. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and Mr. Bankhead having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. Celler, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 12280) to create Federal home-loan banks, and to provide for the supervision thereof, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution present 2-year restriction for holding certificates before

LEAVE OF ARSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as

To Mr. Rogers of New Hampshire (at the request of Mr. Wason), indefinitely, on account of illness in his family.

To Mrs. Kahn, for one week, on account of illness.

To Mr. LEAVITT, for four days, on account of being delegate to the National Republican Convention.

SOUNTERS' RONTIS

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed out of order for four minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Reserving the right to object-and I shall not object-I do not know what the gentleman is going to speak about, but it may be possible that I may want two minutes at the conclusion of his remarks to make

The regular order was called for.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. I shall not object, for I think every Member ought to have a chance to speak.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Mr. Speaker, on yesterday morning, immediately after we convened, I made what I realized was an unusual request, that the House immediately consider the motion to discharge the committee and consider the so-called soldiers' bonus bill.

Had there been no objection, I would have explained my point of view on this measure. I did this in the thought that the sooner this matter is settled the better it will be for the

I understand that the gentleman from Texas, my good friend Mr. Blanton, made some reference to my action later on in the day.

For the benefit of my constituency, I would like to explain here exactly what my position on the bonus is, although most of them do understand it. I want to read a very short letter which I have sent to all of the ex-service men who have written to me in regard to the bonus.

For your information, I make it a practice to answer every communication sent to me by constituents of our district. I had hoped that some reasonable way might be found to make it possible for the Government to advance the balance of the 50 per cent of the 1945 bonus value to veterans in need; but, as I understand the situation, this could not be done without making the present situation worse, and were it done it would discriminate against every unemployed person who is not a veteran.

This might have been possible had Congress been willing to act for the repeal of the eighteenth amendment, or had Congress passed the sales-tax provisions in the revenue bill. I voted for both of these in the hope of being able to reduce taxation otherwise, but both were defeated.

The most important situation confronting the country to-day is relief for the unemployed. I mean all of the unemployed; and a bill for this purpose has as yet to be agreed upon. It is my intention to support a general relief bill wherein the Federal Government will come to the assistance of the various States and municipalities requiring it. The veterans, according to reliable statistics, comprise only 15 per cent of the unemployed, and no veteran who served during the World War under the selective draft act can be over 50 years of age. Statistics also show that a majority of those unemployed are beyond this age, and therefore in greater need of relief than are the veterans.

In so far as the veterans are concerned, I have stood by all of the promises made in my campaign and any statement which I have ever uttered. I have voted for reasonable veterans' legislation for compensation; I have voted in favor of a current bill granting pensions to widows and orphans of World War veterans, which passed the House: and I have done everything within my power to assist each veteran who has brought compensation difficulties to my attention. I also favor the passage of a bill which would reduce the interest on veterans' loans and wipe out the loans may be granted. In view of the very serious condition existing within the country, and what I have said to you above, I will vote against the payment of the full bonus at the present time.

In spite of my action there is a good chance that the bill will pass the House. At any rate, you will know-and I want you to know-exactly where I stand in the matter.

Mr. BLANTON. Then I did not misquote the gentleman, did T?

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. No.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one minute more.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. There was some further reference to the attitude of the President of the United States. I believe the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Blanton] realizes, as does practically every other Member of the House, that the President of the United States has gone on record with the statement that he would veto the bonus bill.

Mr. BLANTON. I knew that, because the gentleman was the President's manager in Erie County in 1928.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Mr. Speaker, I say to the gentleman as a new Member that I have admired above everything else the gentleman's frankness in debate. He is fearless and uncompromising in his statements. I admire any man in high position who is willing to make his position on various questions known, and I think it would be of great interest to everyone in the country to-day, and I know good Democrats in my district would like to know. where the gentleman's colleague, the Speaker of the House, stands on the bonus question and the prohibition question.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, the Speaker of the House is quite able to answer for himself whenever he gets ready to do so. [Laughter.]

PROCEEDINGS IN UNVEILING STATUE OF GEN. JOHN SEVIER

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Speaker, from the Committee on Printing I report favorably (H. Rept. No. 1610) the following privileged resolution, Senate Concurrent Resolution 7. which I send to the desk and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Is this the usual resolution?

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes; this is the usual resolution for the publication of 5,000 copies of the proceedings in Statuary Hall on the unveiling of the statue of Gen. John Sevier.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

PROCEEDINGS IN UNVEILING STATUES OF JUNIPERO SERRA AND THOMAS STARR KING

Mr. STEVENSON. From the same committee, I report (H. Rept. 1611) the following Senate Concurrent Resolution No. 21, which I send to the desk and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate Concurrent Resolution 21

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed with illustrations and bound 5,000 copies of the proceedings in Congress, together with the proceedings held at the unveiling in Statuary Hall, upon the acceptance of the statues of Junipero Serra and Thomas Starr King, presented by the State of California, of which 1,000 shall be for the use of the Senate and 2,500 for the use of the House of Representatives, and the remaining 1,500 copies shall be for the use and distribution of the Senators and Representatives in Congress from the State of California from the State of California.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

PROCEEDINGS AT THE UNVEILING OF THE STATUES OF JEFFERSON DAVIS AND JAMES Z. GEORGE

Mr. STEVENSON. From the same committee I report (H. Rept. 1612) the following Senate Concurrent Resolution No. 24, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate Concurrent Resolution 24

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concur Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed with illustrations and bound 15,000 copies of the proceedings in Congress, together with the proceedings held at the unveiling in Statuary Hall, upon the acceptance of the statues of Jefferson Davis and James Z. George, presented by the State of Mississippi, of which 1,000 shall be for the Senate and 2,300 for the use of the House of Representatives, and the remaining 11,700 copies shall be for the use and distribution of the Senators and Representatives in Congress from the State of Mississippi.

The Joint Committee on Printing is hereby authorized to have the copy prepared for the Public Printer and shall procure suitable illustrations to be published with these preceedings.

Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes.

Mr. ARENTZ. I understand that the gentleman introduced a resolution which passed the House a few days ago providing for the elimination or withdrawal from the document room of hundreds of thousands, if not millions, of documents that have not been taken out by Members of the House.

Mr. STEVENSON. That is correct.

Mr. ARENTZ. Will not some of these documents be placed in that same category, and then will not some other gentleman in years to come, 5 or 10 years, come forth with a similar resolution, that some of these very documents shall go to the waste-paper basket?

Mr. STEVENSON. Probably there will be some, but in the matter of these documents there is a tremendous demand for them. I do not think any of these that are under consideration to-day will be left there.

Mr. ARENTZ. Let us hope that the gentleman will see that none of them are placed in the catacombs of the House of Representatives.

Mr. STEVENSON. There will be only one there for the gentleman from Nevada, and if he will not go and get it, it will be sure to get away.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Is it not always the case throughout history that there are certain individuals who do not avail themselves of their opportunities?

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes; and frequently they do not know what their opportunities are.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. STEVENSON. Yes.

Mr. MICHENER. How many copies does this resolution

Mr. STEVENSON. The first two resolutions provided for 5,000 copies each. The last resolution, now under consideration, came to us from the Senate in its present shape, providing for 15,000 copies. That is what was done in the case of Senator La Follette. There is an extra demand, and the Senate always asks for them.

Mr. MICHENER. It seems to me that 5,000 copies of these memorials is enough. Of course, I appreciate the gentleman has a privileged resolution, and it is not a matter of unanimous consent, or I should object. In these times I think it would be best to follow the minimum. What will be the cost of 5,000 copies?

Mr. STEVENSON. Five thousand would cost $1,800; 15,000 will cost $4,200.

Mr. MICHENER. In other words, for memorials for two States we are spending $3,600 and for the other State we are spending $4,200. It seems to me that we ought to treat all alike.

Mr. STEVENSON. I might just as well state the entire situation. The resolution with reference to those for Mississippi provides for two. The resolution embracing the one from Tennessee provides for only one. One of those two is a character that I am informed will cause great demand for this volume, and I do not hesitate to say that I do not think there should be any objection to it. It was passed by the Senate in that way. It provides for the proceedings in connection with the statues of J. Z. George and Jefferson Davis, and that is the reason the Senate put it up in that way. Had it come from my committee originally, it would have been 5,000. I do not hesitate to say that.

Mr. MICHENER. I am sure that the gentleman does not want, and would not advise at this time, an additional expenditure, and I am going to ask him to treat the State of Mississippi exactly as he treats the State of California.

Mr. STEVENSON. I have no objection to it myself, but the State of Mississippi and various Senators will object. They were asking about it.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEVENSON. I yield.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I trust the gentleman from Michigan will not press the matter. There was no objection when the request was made for printing 10,000 copies in the case of Senator La Follette and in other cases. In this particular case there are requests and demands for these proceedings covering the statue of Jefferson Davis, and I trust that if an exception was made in the case of Senator La Follette there will be no objection made to this. I think we are justified in asking for this.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BANKHEAB). The question is on the adoption of the concurrent resolution.

The Senate joint resolution was agreed to.

MIGRATORY WILD FOWL

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw from the files the bill (H. R. 10604) to secure the increase of migratory wild fowl and other game. to provide revenue for accomplishing the purpose of this act, and for other purposes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. McCORMACK. I yield.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Has the bill been referred to a committee?

Mr. McCORMACK. Yes; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. The reference to the committee should be vacated so as to get the bill back to the House.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the reference of the bill H. R. 10604 to the Committee on Ways and Means be vacated, and then I will ask unanimous consent to withdraw the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Reserving the right to object, the bill can not be withdrawn. It can be laid on the table, and there will be no further action on it, but physically the bill is here and the bill can not be withdrawn.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the request.

STREAM POLLUTION

Mr. THATCHER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD concerning the subject of stream pollution and to include therewith an address delivered by me before a meeting of the health officials of the United States and Canada in this city recently.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

Mr. THATCHER. Mr. Speaker, for some time I have been making a study of the subject of stream pollution. study I have made with special reference to the authority pollution of streams and waterways of interstate character. I have believed that there is vested in the Congress this power; and if I found that existing Federal law is not sufficient to meet the problem involved by the pollution and poisoning of these sources of water supply for the personal needs of our people, it has been my intention to prepare and introduce in the Congress such measure or measures as might be necessary to accomplish this most important Modern industry, lining the shores of our navigable rivers and lakes, employing the scientific processes of the day, discharge into these waters great volumes of acid-bearing fluids and material deleterious to health, and of a character calculated to render these waters foul and nondrinkable. In addition, our rivers, under modern improvement systems. are, in low-water stages, segmented into sedimentation pools, lying between the various lock-and-dam units, with the result that in such stages these waters become especially foul and polluted, and of nonpotable character, not to say, in many instances, dangerous to life and health. This condition has persisted in many cases, even though scientific renovation of such waters, before human consumption, has eliminated all health-destroying possibilities. Thus in the terrible drought of 1930 the Ohio River sank to the lowest levels, and the fifty-odd pools, under its completed canalization, became basins of sediment, with but little circulation or flowage. The resulting water conditions were of an unusually putrid and offensive character. The great industrial plants on the stream's upper reaches discharged into it their polluted wastes, and also the large industrial cities, and the many towns, along its course, discharged into it their sewage; and lack of rainfall and circulation gave to these waters a stench which no renovation or treatment, under modern scientific methods, could relieve; although, technically the water may have been rendered safe for consumption in the affected cities which possessed modern purification plants.

What was thus true of the Ohio River during this drought period was true, in varying degree, of the other streams of the country where drought conditions prevailed. Then, in a general way, though usually in smaller measure, there have obtained the same conditions of pollution in our streams and lakes, and other sources of the Nation's water supply. With the tremendous multiplication of our industrial activities and the vast growth of our urban communities within the past generation the problem of keeping pure the sources of our supplies of water for human consumption has come to be greatly vital. The utmost care, coupled with the most exacting scientific treatment of the water thus used, has become necessary. Otherwise typhoid and other dangerous diseases will prevail in an alarming degree. The health of the entire Nation is thus involved. Cities like Louisville, which is in my district, are vitally affected by these conditions.

For these reasons I have been making the indicated study of existing laws and practices as regards the subject, and I have given especial attention to the power of the Congress to deal therewith so far as the aspects of interstate commerce and navigable waterways are concerned. It has been my intention to prepare, introduce, and to press for enactment any measure or measures which might as a result of such study seem necessary or desirable to bring about adequate action of the United States Government in the premises.

One of the world's greatest agencies engaged in the betterment of health and sanitary conditions is the United States Public Health Service. As this service is the effective right arm of the Federal Government in dealing with the Government's general activities throughout the Nation, with all questions affecting the health and sanitary welfare of our people, I got into touch with Gen. Hugh S. Cumming, the able head of the United States Public Health, and his efficient staff. I discussed the situation with them and inquired as to what powers they had to deal with the subject. I knew that they had already done much valuable work in aiding in the bringing about of agreements between the the power to issue and maintain any regulations necessary of the Congress to enact legislation designed to prevent the | State health and other officials along the Ohio River, and perhaps other streams, touching this problem; and that much good had thereby been achieved.

On December 16, 1931, following up verbal discussions, I addressed a formal communication to General Cumming on the subject. After a thorough study by himself and associates, aided by the counsel of the Solicitor of the Treasury Department, on March 3, 1932, General Cumming advised me by formal letter that it was found that existing Federal law on the subject of quarantine was believed to be adequate to meet the situation from the standpoint of the National Government. I now quote from that communication, as it sets forth the situation very clearly and more concisely than I might state it in my own language, as

Following receipt of your letter of December 16, relative to control of stream pollution, considerable study was given to the feasibility of bringing about more direct control by the Federal Government through existing laws or through additional legis-

Bearing in mind your ideas as to character of legislation and its subsequent enforcement, I considered the possibility that the present quarantine law might apply. If this were the case, regulations governing the permissible limits of pollution could be promulgated by the Secretary of the Treasury.

That section of the law which might be considered applicable reads as follows:

"United States Statutes at Large volume 27 chapter 114 page.

reads as follows:

"United States Statutes at Large, volume 27, chapter 114, page 449, approved February 15, 1893. '* * the Secretary of the Treasury shall, if in his judgment it is necessary and proper, make such additional rules and regulations as are necessary to prevent the introduction of such diseases (communicable) into the United States from foreign countries, or into one State or Territory or the District of Columbia from another State or Territory or the District of Columbia, and when said rules and regulations have been made, they shall be promulgated by the Secretary of the Treasury, and enforced by the sanitary authorities of the State and municipalities where the State and municipal health authorities will undertake to execute and enforce them: but if the State or will undertake to execute and enforce them; but if the State or municipal authorities shall fail or refuse to enforce said rules and regulations, the President shall execute and enforce the same and adopt such measures as in his judgment shall be necessary to prevent the introduction or spread of such diseases * * *."

prevent the introduction or spread of such diseases * * *."

Our present control over drinking-water supplies used by common carriers and shellfish sanitation carried on in cooperation with the State health authorities is based on this section of the law. There appeared to be no reason why control over stream pollution should not be equally successful if the control activities were carried on in the same manner.

The Solictor of the Treasury Department, R. J. Mawhinney, was requested by the Secretary to give an opinion "* * as to whether the quarantine act can be considered as covering the prevention of the interstate spread of communicable diseases through regulations governing the amount of dangerous pollution allowable in an interstate navigable stream used as a source of allowable in an interstate navigable stream used as a source of water supply in another State. If the answer is in the affirmative, would the Secretary of the Treasury have authority to issue regulations limiting the amount of dangerous pollution in such a stream to that which may be properly taken care of by well-operated water-treatment plants?"

The Selicitor's convice is as follows:

The Solicitor's opinion is as follows:

"(1) That I am of the opinion that the 'quarantine act can be considered as covering the prevention of the interstate spread of communicable diseases through regulations governing the amount of dangerous pollution allowable in an interstate navigable stream used as a source of water supply in another State."— providing the pollution referred to is the means whereby such communicable diseases may and are likely to be introduced—"'Into one State or Territory or the District of Columbia from another State or Territory or the District of Columbia.

"'(2) The Secretary of the Treasury has authority to issue regulations limiting the amount of dangerous pellution in such a stream to that which may be properly taken care of by well-operated water-treatment plants."

This opinion is supported by several pages of discussion and references

From the foregoing it is apparent that we already have necessary legislation for instituting and carrying on, in cooperation with the State health authorities, stream pollution control measures.

Since any control work can best be carried out with the full cooperation of the State health officials I will plan to have the subject brought before these officials at my conference with them early in June, with a view to working out regulations which will meet the approval and receive the whole-hearted support of all parties concerned.

It was thus very gratifying to learn that existing law appeared to be in fact sufficient to authorize any needed Federal treatment of this most important problem, and that under existing law the Secretary of the Treasury has to prevent such pollution of our interstate navigable waterways as may be dangerous or prejudicial to the life and health of our people.

On the 2d and 3d of this month, here in the Nation's Capital, there was held the annual convention of State and provincial health authorities of North America. From the various States of our country, as well as from Canada, public health officials were present to represent their respective jurisdictions. Many illuminating papers were read and many interesting discussions were had. An especially fine paper was presented by Dr. Theodore B. Appel, secretary of health of Pennsylvania. The paper was devoted to this question of stream pollution and its prevention. By him it was pointed out how the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, through its public health agencies, with the splendid cooperation of industries within the State, and chiefly at the expense of the affected industries, had embarked on a policy of treatment of industrial waste as regard to the Ohio River and its tributaries; how, also, Pennsylvania had cooperated with other contiguous States in the treatment of other interstate streams flowing through and out of Pennsylvania.

Attention was called to the execution of formal compacts between various States of the East dealing with the subject of pollution of harbor and coastal waters of metropolitan areas. The cooperation of the United States Public Health Service in regard to these matters was indicated by Doctor Appel. I wish that there were opportunity to present in this connection more of the very important facts and data thus set forth by this distinguished sanitarian.

In this general connection I would also refer to the very excellent work which has been performed in this general connection by the State board of health of my own State in dealing with this subject. Especial praise should be given to the services thus rendered by the highly efficient secretary of the Kentucky board and State health officer, Dr. A. T. McCormack.

The officials of Pennsylvania and the other States which have cooperated in inaugurating certain phases of this work are to be commended in the highest terms, and also the industrial enterprises involved. It is fine that they have entered upon the indicated policy without asking for congressional appropriations. Thus the work of the Federal Government in the premises is rendered far easier and less burdensome than it might otherwise have been. The Federal activity can be accordingly limited in character to one of general supervision touching the interstate navigable waters of the country. This work may therefore in large measure be prescriptive and advisory in character, and should involve but little expense. This had been my thought from the outset in regard to any legislation which I might have proposed.

It is to be hoped that other States of the Union will approach the subject of stream pollution in the same commendable way in which Pennsylvania and other contiguous States have approached it, and that the Secretary of the Treasury may now issue, as suggested by General Cumming, under existing law the necessary regulations to permit, on the part of the Federal Government, the proper discharge of its duties and obligations in regard to the subject.

Mr. Speaker, under leave accorded, I include as part of my remarks an informal address delivered by me before the indicated annual convention of health officials in Washington on June 3.

ADDRESS OF HON. MAURICE H. THATCHER, A REPRESENTATIVE IN CON-GRESS FROM THE STATE OF KENTUCKY, BEFORE THE ANNUAL CONFER-ENCE OF STATE AND PROVINCIAL HEALTH AUTHORITIES OF NORTH AMERICA

Mr. Thatcher. Mr. Chairman and distinguished members, and General Cumming, I will speak briefly. I thank you, Doctor McCormack, for your very kind introductory speech, and I am glad of the opportunity for opening the discussion on Doctor Appel's most excellent paper. I wish I more thoroughly deserved what you had to say.

had to say.

So far as Congress is concerned, of course, it has its problems. With 435 Members in the House and 96 Members in the Senate, and with many large groups representing every angle of controversy, naturally the Congress makes haste rather slowly; and we get out of patience with ourselves, I assure you, from time to time. But the job is a hard one, and I hope that out of the present welter of discussion and controversy the country may escape, and that we may be on the road to normal conditions again very soon. It looks like we may, after all, balance the Federal Budget, or at least measurably balance it. This is a subject which has been much discussed; and I, for one, believe it is very important, indeed, that the Budget be balanced.

I am glad to be here this morning, my friends. I have always been deeply interested in public-health work, and particularly the preventive side. It was my distinguished honor to serve several years as a member of the Isthmian Canal Commission, during the construction days of the Panana Canal to charge there of the years as a member of the istimian Canal Commission, during the construction days of the Panama Canal, in charge there of the civil affairs of the Canal Zone; and I counted it a great privilege to serve there with a distinguished member of your profession. Gen. William Crawford Gorgas, who was the member of the commission in charge of sanitary affairs. One of my duties there was to represent the commission in all of its relationships with the Republic of Panama concentrate metters which affected the the Republic of Panama concerning matters which affected the construction of the canal and the sanitation and government of the Canal Zone, and thus I conducted the negotiations with the Republic of Panama concerning these matters. General Gorgas would formulate the program as to what Panama should do to would formulate the program as to what Panama should do to aid in our health and sanitation work, and it became my duty to present it, usually with his assistance and cooperation. The Republic of Panama was always fully responsive and showed a thoroughgoing spirit of cooperation. There, as in no other place in the world, was shown the capacity on the part of the medical profession to make a virtue of necessity; and so it was that health conditions were brought about there that were, perhaps, unsurpassed anywhere else. Doctor McCormack himself served there for a time as health officer during the World War, and rendered his valuable contribution to the work.

Now, concerning this study of stream pollution. I have been

Now, concerning this study of stream pollution, I have been Now, concerning this study of stream pollution, I have been very much interested in the subject, especially as a member of the subcommittee making up the appropriations for the Public Health Service; and I may say, that I have had more "scraps" about rural sanitation than anything else in Congress, with some of my best friends and coworkers in Congress, who felt that the Federal Government was going a little too far in extending aid and cooperation to the States in this important work. It has seemed to me always that if we could spend sureld millions of and cooperation to the States in this important work. It has seemed to me always that if we could spend untold millions of dollars to protect the livestock of the country, we could spend a few million dollars to protect the human creatures of the land. [Applause.] My attention was particularly called to this question of stream pollution because of the great drought occurring a few years ago, when you felt that you had to wear a gas mask to drink the water down at Louisville, although that water, through scientific treatment, was supposed to be noninjurious. Because of the improvement of the Ohio River, and the reduction of the stream to these great pools of sediment at low-water stages, there is brought about a very unsatisfactory condition, so far as drinkis brought about a very unsatisfactory condition, so far as drinking water is concerned.

Some months ago, realizing the importance of this question, I took up with the distinguished Chief of the Public Health Service, General Cumming, the question as to whether or not the Congress, in the exercise of its interstate powers under the Constitution, could or should get into the picture; whether any legislation might be necessary on the part of the Congress to cooperate with the States in reducing to the minimum this very serious condition of be necessary on the part of the Congress to cooperate with the States in reducing to the minimum this very serious condition of affairs, so far as stream pollution is concerned. General Cumming thereupon made a careful study of it, he and his staff, with the result that he advised me that under existing Federal law as construed by the legal authorities of the Government having the power to give advisory opinions, the law is sufficient to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury, under his general powers in regard to the prevention of the introduction of disease from one to another State, or into the country at large, now has general authority to make regulations dealing with this question of stream pollution so as to prevent such communication of disease. That being true, it does not seem necessary, at least at this juncture, to introduce any legislation on the subject.

I was very much struck with the reading of this splendid paper just now by Doctor Appel, and I have been very much struck, also, with the splendid spirit of cooperation on the part of States like Pennsylvania, Ohio, and New York, and some of the New England States, and Delaware, and so forth, in dealing in a cooperative way with this great problem. It is rather refreshing to a Member of Congress to see work of this sort being carried on in such an effective fashion by the States themselves, and largely at the cost of private enterprise; because, ordinarily—and I think the practice has come to be all too common in these modern days—the tendency has been to bring to Congress almost every problem of State government. It think this greatice has gone too far in many in-has come to be all too common in these modern days—the tend-ency has been to bring to Congress almost every problem of State government. I think this practice has gone too far in many in-stances; and it has led to the expenditure of large sums of money in many activities which should not, as I believe, be cared for by the Federal Government. So it is refreshing, I say, to note what has been done in Pennsylvania and these other States, upon their own initiative and through their own agencies, and with the help of affected industries, to reduce, in large measure, the evils that of affected industries, to reduce, in large measure, the evils that arise from stream pollution.

Of course, with our existing industrial conditions, with the modern methods of river improvement, the question is a major one. I believe, if I may say it, that it would be well for the Secretary of the Treasury without delay to formulate the necessary regulations on this subject, which may prove cooperative with those that have been formulated by the States which have already come into the picture and with those also which may hereafter be proposed and adopted by other States of the Union having the same problems. This I say because I feel that there are certain factors involved in the equation which the Federal Government should and must handle. And with this power vested in the Secretary of the Treasury under the present law to formulate these regulations, the Federal cost should be small, because, under the present practices, the States themselves will bear (or cause to be borne by the offending parties) the major cost of eliminating or reducing pollution in the streams. So it is a great, complex problem, and as such it must be met.

It seems that under modern conditions, nearly every feature of life is being evolutionized and revolutionized: modern trans-of life is being evolutionized and revolutionized; modern transportation, modern communication, everything of the sort, seems to change; and we no longer live in the old horse-and-buggy age that even some of us who live to-day knew when we were in our youth. We live in an era of different and advanced conditions; and this question of stream pollution, affecting as it does the health and lives of practically all our people, is a very important one; and you gentlemen have already accomplished much in dealing with it.

I am glad to be here this morning. I feel somewhat at home in I am glad to be here this morning. I feel somewhat at home in your midst. I want to assure you that, so far as the power within me lies to cooperate with you in your great problems, I shall be very happy, so long as I may continue as a member of the legislative branch of our Government, to give such cooperation, to cooperate, not only with the Public Health Service and the other activities of the National Government, but, as well with the State and local health authorities. I am indeed greatly honored to be with you and to have this opportunity to speak to you. I thank you. [Applause.]

you. I thank you. [Applause.]

HOUSE RESOLUTION 220

Mr. WOLVERTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the bill H. R. 220.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOLVERTON. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, I shall vote in favor of the motion to discharge the Rules Committee of the House from further consideration of House Resolution 220, introduced by Mr. PATMAN. I do so in order that the question of payment of adjusted-service certificates to World War veterans may be decided upon the floor of the House and by direct vote of the entire membership of the House instead of by a vote of a few Members of the House constituting the Rules Committee.

The times in which we are living, with the unusual conditions that confront us, and the vital character of the problems that call for solution, demand and require not only clear thinking and honesty of purpose, but, in addition, a willingness to meet every question relating to our national welfare, especially when it directly affects any considerable number of our people, in an open and frank manner upon the floor of the House rather than behind the closed doors of a committee room.

If I correctly interpret the will of our people, there is an insistent demand that the decision of Congress on all matters of national concern shall be determined by our votes, and not by parliamentary tactics that prevent honest and direct expression of conviction.

There has been throughout this entire session too often a determined effort to substitute committee action in place of open discussion and decision by the House; and this applies not alone to the immediate question of whether or not payment should be made at this time of adjusted-service certificates, but also to many other important questions in the solution of which our citizenship is vitally interested.

The presence in Washington to-day and for more than a week past of thousands of veterans from all parts of the country represents more than an expression of their personal interest in the particular legislation that affects them. It is evidence of a country-wide demand and desire that public questions of great national interest and concern shall be faced in the open and decided in the open. It is a protest against any procedure, parliamentary or otherwise, that permits the consideration of any matter to be "stifled" without full, free, and frank discussion of the same, or "smothered" without direct action and vote of the House.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, my vote shall be cast in favor of the motion to discharge, because I firmly believe in the principle that Members of Congress should be willing to give, and should have the opportunity of giving by direct vote, expression to their convictions on all public questions of nation-wide interest pending before Congress; and in the event that the motion to discharge the committee shall pre- | we have been unable to reestablish the even flow of credit vail, thereby bringing the proposed legislation to the floor of the House for consideration, then my vote upon the question of adoption or rejection of the bill will be determined by what, if any, amendments are made and in what form the bill shall finally come before the House for its determination and decision.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS-BANK GUARANTY BILL

Mr. LARRABEE. Mr. Speaker, I supported and voted for the bank guaranty bill, only after most careful consideration had been given to both the views of the opponents and the proponents of the measure. Such a measure as this commands most careful deliberation.

In view of the fact that this measure will have some effect on every man, woman, and child in my district, and in view of the fact that there has been some strong opposition to the measure, I believe it well to set out clearly the reasons why I believe this bill should have been passed.

The monetary system of this Nation rests entirely upon the power and authority granted to Congress by the Constitution. It is the full right, power, and duty of Congress to control and direct the monetary system in the interest of all the people. We have not any right to permit any special interests or group to use or profit by that system, except that such use and profit may be subservient to the best interests of the whole people.

The banking system is the best way we have been able to devise to extend credit to individuals, to business, commerce, and industry, and in times of need to the very Government itself.

To enjoy the privileges granted to banks under the law it is incumbent on the beneficiaries that all comply both in spirit and in letter to the law. These banking laws are drawn up around the idea that the banking system is and must continue to be the servant of the people, and profit in banking should be a secondary consideration to service to the people.

Realizing that banking is a service belonging to the people, it becomes incumbent upon us to be ever watchful and observant of the accomplishments of and the service of, our banking system and to strengthen and protect this service in the interests of the people as well as in the interests of the banks themselves.

We must be ever diligent and observant of mistakes and abuses of banking and bankers, that these be corrected and the people be given adequate protection in the future against any mistakes or abuses of the past.

We must realize fully that our banking system as a whole is the key to our entire industrial, commercial, and economic system. It is not a part of it, as is other business. It is, and must continue to be, the servant of all business, and must not be permitted to become the controller or director of it.

The control of our monetary system must never be permitted to escape from control by the Government, although we have seen in the past few years a trend in this direction. The banking system is only that agency set up by the Government for administering the monetary system, and it is for that reason that private control must never be permitted. Profit, of course, is required by the banks, but their profit must be incidental and remain incidental to the profit of the whole people through use of the banks.

Thus, the banks are in fact the licensed trustee of the Government for handling the money belonging to the individuals who make up the Government. The people's money, collectively, handled by the banks as trustees, is necessarily a national matter, and not a private one.

Since money, and the credit based upon money, is the very lifeblood of all industry, the servant of all labor, of agricultural activity, and the keystone of the entire structure of business, the establishment and maintenance of the flow of credits evenly through our banks is of vital necessity. Without unmolested flow of credit there can be neither successful business nor successful banking.

This Nation has just had one impressive lesson in the danger of the breaking of the flow of credit, in the stockmarket panic and the following crash. Since that sad event and, worse than that, have seen further breaking up of the system and serious weakening of its great power for service.

It is mandatory that we immediately reestablish the national credit system and that the even flow of credit be fully revived and carefully protected in the future.

Successful banking must depend entirely on the interest realized from reloaning the money placed in trust in the banks by the depositors. It therefore is quite apparent that without depositors no credit can be made by the banks. We now know full well that lack of deposits is the cause of our present banking paralysis.

Actual figures show that from late in October, 1929, until the 1st of May, this year, there have been 4,341 bank failures in this Nation. With one bank out of every four failing, it is not hard to understand why people are not only refusing to deposit but are taking out the deposits they have in banks throughout the Nation. Millions of people have suffered losses through these failures. This has resulted in the remaining banks losing many billions in deposits.

Through the losses of these depositors, numbering well into the millions, the rest of the people have suffered to a sufficient extent to justify guaranteeing against such loss in the future, and there should be no hesitancy in giving that guaranty.

A review of events of the past two years will indicate clearly the result of withdrawal of deposits and loss of money through bank failures. The stock-market crash crushed securities into insignificance. Extreme disaster resulted to security prices, and bank deposits were seriously affected. The loss to the banks on the stocks and the bonds which the small banks had been induced or compelled to buy soon became known, and it was clear that many would face grave danger unless some new means could be found to carry them through. The big banks that unloaded these bonds on the smaller banks took no action to protect the smaller institutions they had made their victims.

If deposits could have been maintained, most of the banks that have failed could and would have come through, but an alarmed public rushed to withdraw their deposits and refused to further intrust their money to the keeping of the banks they felt were now in danger of closing. Such a run on any bank is fatal. When one crumbles, others are suspected of being in danger. When many have been reduced to ruin, the entire banking structure is affected and the security of the national monetary system is gravely endangered.

If the few weak, incompetently or dishonestly managed banks had failed, and their depositors had immediately been paid in full, the public mind would not have been affected by loss of confidence. Withdrawal of deposits would not have continued to spread and grow. By retaining the deposits the banks of the Nation would have found it comparatively easy to go ahead furnishing credit required to carry on legitimate business. If then, at the same time, the Federal reserve system had announced that it stood ready to supply the banks of the Nation with the currency required to restore any credit losses which the Nation's business had sustained, the prices of bonds of legitimate concerns would have reacted and the deliberate robberies that had been effected by the gigantic banks and affiliates would have gradually been absorbed by the country and greater distress of the panic could and would have been prevented.

When we consider that deposits in banks that have failed during the panic amounted to $2,928,000,000, we get a clear picture of just what could have been avoided had the guaranty plan been in effect before the panic. The deposits in national banks that failed amounted to $708,000,000; State member banks, $534,000,000; and State nonmember banks, $1,685,000,000. These figures are the deposits on hand at the time the banks closed.

In addition to this the banks themselves lost $367,592,000. Of this amount the national banks lost $82,592,000, the State member banks lost $70,324,000, and the State non-member banks lost $214,392,000.

Financial men and bankers tell us that the actual total loss, after closed banks are liquidated, averages about 50 cents on the dollar, which made a total net loss of a billion and a half dollars to depositors alone.

But the losses did not stop there. Losses through the shrinkage of property values, through resultant unemployment, deterioration through idleness of factories, mines, merchantile houses, banks, and even the farms, is variously estimated to have been from $175,000,000,000 to $225,000,000,000.

Guaranty of deposits, had such a plan been in effect before the crash, would have saved all this and would have prevented a billion and a half dollars' loss to depositors. The only loss that would have resulted would have been through the forcing by big banks of the poor stocks on the little banks, with the aid and the encouragement of various departments of the Federal Government, which are in a large measure to blame for the dumping of the almost worthless securities into the local communities just prior to the crash.

The principal objection to the bank-deposit guaranty legislation, as far as I have been able to ascertain, is the statement that "the good, honest, conservative banker—whose bank is still operating successfully—should not be compelled to aid in carrying the burdens of the incompetent or dishonest banker."

In answering this I again declare that the banks are not primarily for the purpose of making money or profit for the banker but are intended, under our form of government, for the service of the people whose money they accept as trustees. Banking is not considered a competitive business into which all may enter without reputation, ability, or standing in his own community. Certain other requirements have already been exacted, and others are to follow most surely in the future.

Further than that, the dishonest and incompetent banker will be almost entirely eliminated by the more stringent rules and requirements set up by this bill.

Then, too, it must be remembered that most of the bankers who saw their institutions fail were not dishonest or incompetent but were carried under by the wave of distrust that swept in with the public knowledge that there was no guaranty for their funds in the banks, resulting in runs, withdrawals, and refusals to further deposit. The guaranty law works both ways—it protects the honest banker just as surely as it protects the depositor.

It is our everlasting disgrace that most of the banks which have failed did so through no dishonesty or lack of competency of the bankers, but purely through lack of adequate safeguards such as the bill provides.

Some opponents say the bill places a further expense on banking, adding to the interest rate and further retarding business

To answer that, we have but to comprehend the losses that have occurred through our negligence in not having provided this guaranty four or five years ago, or even earlier. These losses so far overshadow any that the enactment of the bill could possibly incur that there is no comparison. It is not necessary to add that business can not, through increasing interest rates, ever be retarded in comparison to the destructive setback it has suffered through closing of the banks.

Our lesson has been disastrously expensive, and I for one am more than ready to profit by the sad experience.
